The confirmation of a will by a codicil does not revive a legacy adeemed in the interval between the will and codicil. Ib.

2. A testator gave a legacy to his adopted daughter, to be paid to her on her marriage. She married in his lifetime, and the testator gave sums of money from time to time after the marriage to the husband, to advance him in his business:—Held, that the sums so advanced were an ademption pro tanto of the legacy. Ferris v. Goodburn, 4 Jur., N. S., 847; 27 L. J., Ch., 574; 6 W. R. 485.

3. A gift of a share of residue to a child:—Held, pro tanto, satisfied by a provision made by the testator on her marriage after the date of the will. Beckton v. Barton, 27 Beav. 99; 5 Jur., N. S., 349; 28 L. J., Ch., 673.

4. A bequest of a share of residue for the benefit of the testator's son and his family may be adeemed wholly or partially by a subsequent advance by way of settlement on the son's marriage, and such a settlement may, having regard to the provisions of the will, so operate, rather than as an ademption of an absolute pecuniary legacy. Montefiore v. Guedalla, 1 De G. F. & J. 93; 6 Jur., N. S., 329; 29 L. J., Ch., 65.

A testator, by will, made in 1829, bequeathed to each of his three children, H., M., and G., 3,000*l.* The will recited that he had already advanced 3,000*l.* to H., and to M., his second son, 3,000*l.*, and that he had also settled, upon the marriage of M., 2,000*l.* stock; and it directed that, in calculating his residue, these sums so advanced should be brought into hotchpot. The testator bequeathed the residue to trustees, upon trust, as to one-third part, to H. for life, or until he should assign the same, and after his decease, to his children, and in default of issue, to his next of kin; and made similar bequests of the remaining two-thirds of the residue in favour of his other children. H., subsequently to the date of the will, married, and on his marriage his father settled 2,000*l.* stock upon trust for the wife for life, with remainder to the husband for life, with remainder to the children of the marriage; and in default of issue, to the next of kin of H.:—Held, that the one-third share of the residue bequeathed to H. must be adeemed by the portion settled on his marriage. Ib.

5. A testator, by will, made an equal division of his real and personal estate among his children; in the course of fifteen years afterwards he made advances of large sums to some of his daughters on their marriage, and to some of his sons on establishing them in business; to others trifling sums only:—Held, that the small sums were intended as free gifts, but that the larger sums, being for permanent advancements, were in part satisfaction of the benefits given to them by the will. Schofield v. Heap, 28 L. J., Ch., 104; 27 Beav. 93; 4 Jur., N. S., 1067.

6. Bequest by a father of 7,000*l.* in remainder after the death of his widow, in trust for his daughter for life, with remainder to her children of any marriage:—Held, adeemed by a subsequent gift in possession of 19,000 rupees, Indian Stock, made by the father on the marriage of his daughter, and settled on her husband for life, with remainder to herself for life, with remainder to the children of that marriage. Phillips v. Phillips, 34 Beav. 19.

7. A father by will gave his daughter a legacy of 700*l.* Two subsequent codicils contained no reference to the legacy. The daughter then became engaged to be married, and her father thereupon gave her 100*l.*, which she used for her outfit. After the marriage the father gave the husband of the daughter 400*l.* On neither occasion was any reference made to the will of the testator's intended testamentary dispositions. Afterwards he executed a further codicil to his will, which contained no reference to the 700*l.* legacy, and expressly confirmed the will:—Held, first, that the 100*l.* was a gift and not an advancement, nor a substitution total or partial of the 700*l.* legacy. Ravenscroft v. Jones, 4 De G. J. & S. 224; 33 L. J., Ch., 482; 12 W. R. 362; 9 L. T., N. S., 818. Affirming 32 Beav. 669.

Held, secondly, that the same was the case as to the 400*l.* Ib.

8. A testator bequeathed to his daughter 500*l.*, in case she should marry, to be paid to her on the day of marriage. Subsequently to the date of the will, the daughter married in her father's lifetime, and thereupon the father gave 400*l.* to her husband towards paying for the furnishing of their house. He afterwards promised the husband 600*l.* more for the same purpose, but died without having fulfilled his promise:—Held, that notwithstanding the unfulfilled promise of further help, the gift of 400*l.* was pro tanto an ademption of the legacy of 500*l.* Nevin v. Drysdale, 36 L. J., Ch., 662; 15 W. R. 980.

9. A father, after directing his debts to be paid, gave a share of his residuary estate upon trust for one of his daughters for life, with remainder to her children as tenants in common, with remainders over in favour of the other children of the testator. Subsequently to the date of the will the daughter married, and upon the occasion of the marriage a settlement was executed to which the testator was a party, by which, after a recital of an agreement by the testator to give his daughter a portion of 5,000*l.*, whereof 1,000*l.* was to be paid to the husband, and 4,000*l.* to be a provision for the daughter, her husband, and their issue, the testator covenanted to pay 4,000*l.* to the trustees in his lifetime, or within two years after his death, to be held upon trusts for the benefit of the husband and wife and their children, and in case of there being no issue of the marriage who should attain twenty-one as the testator should appoint, and in default of appointment for his next of kin. The sum of 1,000*l.* was paid to the husband, who died leaving his wife surviving him. No child of the marriage lived to take a vested interest under the settlement:—Held, that the gift of residue in favour of the daughter was adeemed to the extent of the 4,000*l.* covenanted to be paid by the testator; but that there was no ademption as to the 1,000*l.* given to the husband absolutely. Cooper v. Macdonald, 16 L. R., Eq., 258; 28 L. T., N. S., 693; 42 L. J., Ch., 533.

1. Legacy at twenty-one, the interest for maintenance; the debt is not satisfied by advancements, during minority, for the infant's benefit, nor by a legacy larger, but of a different nature, received under the will of the executor, there being no positive relinquishment, though no demand for ten years. Lee v. Brown, 4 Ves. 362.

2. A testator divided his residuary estate among his children, and provided that if any child should die in his lifetime, its issue should "stand in the place" of it, and be entitled to the share which the parent would have taken. He afterwards lent a sum of money to a son greater than the share to which the latter would have been entitled; and the son died in his lifetime indebted to the testator, leaving issue:—Held, that there was no satisfaction as regarded the issue, although the parent could have got nothing. Rose v. Rogers, 39 L. J., Ch., 791.

3. A legacy may be adeemed by a gift, although not made on marriage or any other special occasion with reference to the donee. Leighton v. Leighton, 18 L. R., Eq., 458; 43 L. J., Ch., 594; 22 W. R. 727.

By a marriage settlement an estate was limited to trustees for a term of years to raise 12,000*l.* for the portions of younger children of the settlor as he should appoint. Two of the younger children, on their marriages, being paid certain sums, released their shares. The settlor, by his will in 1866, devised the estate to trustees for a lesser term of years, and subject thereto to his eldest son in strict settlement, the trusts of the term being to raise and pay, within three months of his death, to two other younger children, C. and M., 4,000*l.* and 6,000*l.*, the same to be accepted by them in full satisfaction and discharge of their shares of the 12,000*l.* The testator also gave C. and M. annuities for life, or until marriage, charged upon the same estates, and other annuities charged upon another estate, which he devised to his younger son in satisfaction and discharge of his share of the sum mentioned in the settlement. Between the dates of his will and his death, and also before the date of the will, the settlor gave to C. and M. sums of money, and transferred to them certain stocks:—Held, that the legacies were adeemed pro tanto by the gifts of stock made after the date of the will. Ib.

The daughters of A. were each entitled to a charge on real estate under his marriage settlement. By his will, in 1866, he bequeathed to them legacies and annuities, the same to be in satisfaction of their rights under the settlement. He afterwards, at various times, transferred to them railway stock and other securities. He died in 1871:—Held, that the transfers were in satisfaction or ademption of the gifts by will. In order to raise a presumption that satisfaction was intended it was necessary only to prove that the transfers were made, without showing on what occasion. Ib.

4. There is no presumption of law that the payment of a sum of money to a child (even by a father) before the date of his will, is to go against a legacy bequeathed by the will to that child. Taylor v. Cartwright, 41 L. J., Ch., 529; 20 W. R. 603; 14 L. R., Eq., 167; 26 L. T. 571.

Mrs. M., by her will, dated March 30th, 1848, bequeathed her residuary personalty to her two sons, E. and T., upon trust for them, and her son J., and her married daughter A. T., equally. A. T.'s share was left to her for her life, for her separate use, with a restraint on anticipation, and on her death to her children. The testatrix died on March 31st, 1848. In 1850 a family arrangement was entered into by two deeds, one a declaration of trust, the other a release, for the division of testatrix's property among her children. The release was executed by the daughter, but not by her husband, and it contained a recital that "the testatrix during her lifetime advanced to A., the wife of T., with his privity and consent, 400*l.*, in part of, and to be deducted out of, any money which the testatrix might leave by will to A. T., or her issue. The division of the property was made on the assumption that that recital was true; and it was said that T. had had his share, less a like sum of 400*l.* The trustees of the will had both since died, and their legal personal representatives were defendants. A. T. died in 1870, leaving her husband and six children. The children filed a bill against the defendants to compel them to make A. T.'s share of the property good, by the addition to it of the 400*l.*, deducted in 1850:—Held, that the recital was not binding on A. T. in her lifetime, and therefore not effectual as against the children; that there was no such presumption in law as that above stated; that Mr. Taylor was not bound by the recital; and that the defendants must pay the 400*l.* or other the proper sum to the children, with interest at 4*l.* per cent. from their mother's death. Ib.

5. A father on the marriage of his daughter covenanted to settle 8,500*l.*, and he advanced 2,000*l.* to purchase a share in a business for his son; by his will he gave the residue of his property equally between his daughter and his son:—Held, that these advances were both pro tanto in satisfaction of his children's shares. Stevenson v. Mason, 43 L. J., Ch., 134; 22 W. R. 150; 17 L. R., Eq., 78.

3. Illegitimate Children.

6. Presumption of satisfaction of a legacy by a portion from a parent or person in loco parentis, not applied to an illegitimate child, no relationship existing in law nor recognised expressly or by inference by the testator, neither a legal parent nor assuming the parental character, nor discharging parental duties, and nothing in the nature or manner of the legacy indicating that it was given as a portion by a father for his child. Wetherby v. Dixon, 19 Ves. 407; Coop. 279.

1. A father, by will, gives the residue to his three natural children equally; he afterwards gives two of them (daughters) marriage portions; they shall not be held to be a satisfaction pro tanto. Smith v. Strong, 4 Bro C. C. 493.

2. The value of a beneficial lease granted to a natural son, held not to be a satisfaction pro tanto of a legacy to the son in the father's will. Grave v. Salisbury, 1 Bro. C. C. 425.

3. The presumption of intention to satisfy a legacy by a portion to a child, from a parent or a person placing himself in loco parentis, not raised upon a legacy not described as a portion, the legatee reported to be the testator's natural daughter, described not so, but as the daughter of another man. Exp. Pye, 18 Ves. 140.

The law does not acknowledge the relation of a natural child, who is therefore considered as a stranger within the rules of satisfaction of a legacy primâ facie by an advance of money. Id. 147

III. SATISFACTION OF PORTIONS BY SUBSEQUENT DEED.

4. A power upon marriage was reserved to the father to appoint 1,000*l.*, charged upon certain lands, amongst the younger children of the marriage. Upon his second marriage, he charged other lands with 5,000*l.* for the younger children (naming them) of the first marriage. These portions are not accumulative, and the latter only to be raised. A younger son, though named as one to take part of the 5,000*l.*, afterwards becoming the eldest before the portions raised, and as heir taking the estate charged, not entitled to any part of the charge. Savage v. Carroll, 1 Ball & B. 265.

In cases of portions, courts of equity lean against double provisions moving from the father to the same persons, and for the same purposes. Id. 276.

Every appointment to a younger son is under a condition that he become not the eldest son and heir. Ib.

5. W. J., by a settlement made upon his first marriage, covenanted, that upon the death of his intended wife he would provide a sum of 100*l.* to be paid to or amongst the children of the marriage, in equal shares, upon their severally attaining twenty-one, with interest in the meantime for their maintenance. The wife died in the lifetime of W. J., leaving seven children, and W. J., in contemplation of a second marriage, conveyed land to trustees upon trust after his death, or in his lifetime, if he should think fit, to raise 600*l.*, in trust for the six younger children of the first marriage, in equal shares, to be vested in them at twenty-one. The children attained their ages and received their portions under the second settlement:—Held, that such portions were a satisfaction of their portions under the first settlement. Jones v. Morgan, 2 Y. & Coll. 403.

6. Portions for younger children under a settlement, father provides otherwise for one; intending 10,000*l.* apiece for the rest; they are confined to that, and not also to claim an equivalent for the other's share out of provision made; otherwise, if they had other satisfaction. Bridgwater (Duke) v. Egerton, 2 Ves. 123.

7. By a marriage settlement a term for years, expectant on failure of issue male, is raised for securing 3,000*l.*, portions for daughters, not preferred in the life of the father, payable at eighteen or marriage; there are a son and two daughters. The father in his lifetime, by a sale of part of his estate, raises 1,800*l.* for his daughters, which by another deed was made payable at twenty-one or marriage, and dies, leaving also a son by a former marriage, who dies an infant, without issue. This 1,800*l.*, though payable at a different time, and though not intended to go as part of the portion (there being a son then living), shall be taken as part of the 3,000*l.* portion. Jesson v. Jesson, 2 Vern. 255.

8. A fund was settled upon the settlor for life, and after his death to be divided among his children, with power to the trustee, at the request of the settlor, to make advances to the children in the settlor's lifetime. Advances were accordingly made to some of the children, and the settlor made further advances to two of his daughters out of his own moneys:—Held, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that these advances were not a satisfaction pro tanto of the daughter's shares under the settlement. Samuel v. Ward, 2 Jur., N. S., 962; 4 W. R. 540; 22 Beav. 347.

9. Where annuities were granted to seven persons, to commence from the death of the grantor, and secured by a demise of land to trustees for a term, and by a subsequent deed annuities of different amounts were granted to five of the same annuitants, to commence from the same period, but secured by the personal covenant only of the grantor:—Held, that no presumption against double portions appeared upon the face of the second deed, and therefore that parol evidence was inadmissible to prove the intention of the grantor. Palmer v. Newell, 1 Jur., N. S., 929; 3 W. R. 333; 24 L. J., Ch., 424. Affirmed 4 W. R. 346; 24 L. J., Ch., 461; 2 Jur., N. S., 268.

10. A devise to a child, of a legal rent charge, will not be satisfied by a subsequent gift, by deed, by way of advancement, of a rent charge equal in amount. Preston v. Gormanstown (Lord), 13 Ir. Ch. R. 329.

11. T. L. bound himself by a bond to pay his reputed son 10,000*l.* on the 30th April, 1872. On the 22nd March, 1872, he took the son into partnership, and by the articles of partnership, after a recital that T. L., in consideration of his love and affection for his reputed son, was desirous of giving him 19,000*l.* absolutely, it was provided that 19,000*l.*, part of the capital brought into the firm by T. L., should be considered to belong to the son, being absolutely and irrevocably given to him by T. L. for his own use and benefit, and it was stated that that amount was then standing to the separate credit of the son in the partnership books, as representing his capital in the concern. T. L. also gave the son by a separate deed the lease of the business premises:—Held, that T. L., standing in loco parentis to the reputed son, the rule against double portions applied, that the presumption of the later gift being given in satisfaction of the earlier gift was not rebutted, and that the son could not claim the 10,000*l.* on the bond as well as the 19,000*l.* under the articles, and the business premises under the deed of gift. Re Lawes, Lawes v. Lawes, 20 L. R., Ch. D., 61; 45 L. T. 453; 30 W. R. 33. Affirming 45 L. T. 273.

IV. EXPRESS PROVISO FOR DEDUCTION OF ADVANCES.

1. Declaration in the deed providing portions for daughters, that if any lands should come from the father they should be taken as part of the portions; an estate tail being devised, it is to be considered as part satisfaction, according to the value of it. Watson v. Lincoln, Ambl. 328.

2. In a settlement made on the second marriage of S. was a proviso, that "if any estate of inheritance shall descend from the father to the daughters (of the marriage) of as great value (to be sold) as their portions, then the trust terms (created to raise such portions) shall cease for the benefit of the person who shall be entitled to the settled lands as next in remainder." S., the father, being seised of other lands in fee, devised them to his daughters in tail:—Held, this not such an estate of inheritance as will be a satisfaction of the portions for the daughters of S., by his second wife, because the daughters claim those lands by purchase, and the proviso in the marriage settlement restrains the satisfaction to lands coming to the daughters by descent from their father. Saville v. Saville, 2 Atk. 458; Sel. Ch. Ca. 32.

Held, also, that the valuation of lands descending from the father to the daughters, and which would have to go in satisfaction of the portions, must be made according to the value of the lands at the time of the descent; for till valuation made, it could not be known whether they were a full or a partial satisfaction. S. C. 2 Atk. 461.

Lands descended to the daughter in tail are not such an estate of inheritance as is within the meaning of the proviso, for such an inheritance was intended as is of certain value, as an inheritance in fee simple. Ib.

Reversions in tail, expectant on the death of others, are not such estates of inheritance descended from the father as are within the intent of the proviso. Id. 463.

Tenant for life shall keep down interest by rents and profits; but portions or principal money due on any other incumbrance, shall be borne by the whole estate; therefore, tenant for life shall not account for rents, or value of timber cut down, in order that they might be applied towards raising portions. Ib.

3. Although no time is specified for payment of a legacy given as a portion, subject to a contingency, provision to go over if legatee die before twenty-one, raises a necessary implication, that it is payable at twenty-one. Legacies to A. and B., and "in case the said A. and B., or either of them, shall become entitled to the said lands (real estate settled in remainder, on the event of C. dying without issue), my intention is, that she or they so becoming entitled shall not have, possess, or enjoy any part of my property; but in case A. and B. shall not become entitled to the settled estate, I leave each of them 300*l.*," with other provisions in the event of dying before twenty-one, or marriage with consent, that the legacies should go over. A. having attained twenty-one, and married with consent:—Held, that her legacy became absolutely vested not liable to be devested, notwithstanding the devolution of the settled estate by the subsequent happening of the event. Colhoun v. Thompson, 2 Moll. 281.

4. In a settlement a term was raised for daughters' portions, viz., 10,000*l.*, with a proviso that if the father, by deed or will, should give or leave the sum of 10,000*l.* to his said daughters, it should be a satisfaction; the father leaves land to the daughters of the value of 10,000*l.*: this no satisfaction. Chaplin v. Chaplin, 3 P. W. 245.

5. Portions by settlements, for the children living at the death of the survivor of the parents, with a proviso that advancements should be in satisfaction, unless the contrary is declared; the father by will, desiring the settlement may be punctually complied with, made a residuary disposition of real and personal estates among the younger children, directing, that what they may have received in his life shall be brought into the account, so as to make them all equal. Construction upon the whole, that advancement in marriage or otherwise, though not the grammatical construction, is within the proviso; and equality being the object, an arrangement was made upon that principle. One of the younger children having become the eldest, and therefore owner of the estate, between the death of parents, after advances received in satisfaction of the portion in the former character, is to be considered a younger child in the account. Leake v. Leake, 10 Ves. 477.

Provision by will considered as an advancement in life of testator. Id. 489.

6. A provision by marriage settlement with a proviso that sums advanced should go in satisfaction, unless otherwise declared: 4,000*l.* left by will, subject to the life of the mother, and the residue of the personal estate, being given by the will to a child entitled to the provision under the settlement, must go in satisfaction of that provision. Bickman v. Morgan, 1 Bro. C. C. 63.

7. In 1779, S. L., in contemplation of his marriage with A. V., covenanted for the payment of 3,000*l.* within three months after his decease, for the benefit of the children of the marriage. In 1815, upon the marriage of Emma, one of his daughters by A. V., he executed a deed, which recited that it had been agreed, that by way of additional portion for Emma, he should enter into a covenant, that she should have an equal share at least with his other children of the real and personal estate which he should be entitled to at his decease, after payment of his debts; and that any money, or other estate and effects which any of the children might receive in the lifetime of S. L., or might become entitled to under or by virtue of any gift or disposition by will, or otherwise made or to be made by A. V., the mother, or otherwise howsoever under her, should be deemed an advancement within the meaning of the indenture. This recital was followed by a covenant, that his heirs, etc., should, within three months after his death, convey to the trustees of Emma's settlement a share of his real and personal estate, equal to the share which any other of his children should have had or be entitled to; and afterwards came a proviso, that any money and other estate and effects which might afterwards be conveyed or advanced by S. L. to any of his children, and also that certain copyholds, of which A. V. was tenant in tail, whose interest, it was stated, was forthwith intended to be barred; and further, that any money, or other estate and effects, which any of the children might receive by the gift, bequest, or other disposition by will or otherwise to A. V., or under the Statute of Distributions in case of her intestacy, or which any of them should derive by, from, or under, by any ways or means, should be deemed an advancement within the meaning of the covenant. No act was done to bar the estate tail of A. V. in the copyholds; and on her death, and the death of S. L., the eldest son and customary heir became entitled to the copyholds, under the limitations in the surrender, which created the estate tail:—Held, that these copyholds were to be considered as an advancement to the eldest son, within the meaning of the covenant: that the 3,000*l.* due under the covenant of 1779 was to be paid, before any part of the assets could be applied in satisfying the covenant contained in the deed of 1815. Bailey v. Lloyd, 5 Russ. 330; 7 L. J., Ch., 98.

1. Trust term by will of grandfather for raising portions, provided, among other events, that if the children should be by their father in his lifetime advanced and preferred, with portions as good, or greater, to cease. Personal property under intestacy of father, held no satisfaction. Twisden v. Twisden, 9 Ves. 413.

2. Portion by settlement vested at twenty-one or marriage of daughters, to be paid at the death of the surviving partner; if the parents, or either, should, in their or either of their lifetime, settle, give, or advance money, land, etc., on marriage, or otherwise, such advancement to be taken as part or the whole of the portion, unless the contrary declared in writing. A legacy payable at twenty-one, a satisfaction pro tanto. Onslow v. Mitchell, 18 Ves. 490.

Rule as to satisfaction of portion by a legacy, that there must be some express evidence, or at least a strong presumption, that it was intended as such, slight variation in the time of payment, between twenty-one and twenty-one or marriage, immaterial. Ib.

Share of personal property until father's intestacy, not considered in advancement by him in his life. Id. 494.

Provision by will considered as an advancement in the lifetime. Ib.

3. Where money is expressed to be given in part of a portion, though of small amount, yet it is an advancement, and must be brought into hotchpot. Morris v. Burroughs, 1 Atk. 403.

4. Where A. B. invested some of the funds, subject to the trusts of his settlement, in the purchase of real estate, and added some money of his own:—Held, that it was an advancement to the parties entitled under the settlement. Ouseley v. Anstruther, 10 Beav. 461.

5. By a marriage settlement, a term of years was created for raising portions for younger children, which were to vest at the usual periods, but were not to be paid till after the father's death. And there were the usual clauses for survivorship and maintenance, and also a proviso, that any advance of money made by the father, in his lifetime, to the children, should be a satisfaction, pro tanto, of their portions, unless the father should, in writing, direct the contrary. The father devised all his real estates, not in settlement, to trustees, in trust, to sell and pay his debts, etc., and to pay the surplus equally amongst all his children (except his eldest son), at the usual times; and if any of them died under twenty-one, leaving issue, their shares were to go to their issue; but if they left no issue, then to the survivors; and the will contained a clause for the advancement of the children, but was silent with respect to the provision being a satisfaction of the portions. The eldest son filed a bill, insisting that the provision by the will was intended to be a satisfaction of the portions. Some of the younger children demurred. The Court was of opinion that the provision by the will, although it was to arise from the sale of lands, and although the will contained no declaration on the subject, might be a satisfaction of the portions; but the demurrer was overruled, as it could not appear until the hearing, whether there would be any fund that might be a satisfaction. Fazakerley v. Gillibrand, 6 Sim. 591.

6. Estates were settled on A. for life, remainder to trustees for 1,000 years to raise 5,000*l.* for the portions of his daughters and younger sons, and subject thereto, to A. in fee; provided that if A. in his lifetime, or by his will, should give to any of his children entitled to portions under the trusts of the term any sum of money, etc., for or towards their advancement in marriage or otherwise, the same should be taken in part or in full satisfaction (according to its amount) of the portion thereby provided for that child, unless A. should by writing under his hand declare to the contrary. A. had eight daughters and two younger sons. By his will, after reciting the trusts of the settlement as regarded the portions, he devises this estate, "subject to the 5,000*l.* charged thereon as aforesaid," and also other estates, to trustees, in trust by sale or mortgage to raise money to supply the deficiency of his personal estate for payment of his debts and legacies, and, in the next place, to pay 2,000*l.* to each of his younger sons; and he declared, that after the payment of his debts and legacies and the sums of 2,000*l.*, the estates, or such part thereof as should remain unsold for any of the purposes aforesaid (subject, nevertheless, to any mortgage or mortgages which should be made by the trustees in pursuance of the power thereinbefore given to them for that purpose), should go to his eldest son:—Held, that the will did not contain anything that was equivalent to a declaration that the legacies of 2,000*l.* should not be a satisfaction for the portions of the two younger sons, and, consequently, that they were not entitled to their legacies, and, also, to their shares of the 5,000*l.* Papillon v. Papillon, 11 Sim. 642; 10 L. J., N. S., Ch., 186.

1. A legacy given by a father's will is such an advancement of younger children, in lifetime of father, as will be accounted in equity a satisfaction pro tanto of portions to be raised for them under the testator's marriage settlement; if it contains a clause providing that advancement shall be a satisfaction so far; the will being silent in that respect is not per se equivalent to a declaration, that a legacy shall not be towards such satisfaction. Golding v. Haverfield, 18 Price 593; M'Clel. 345.

2. By a settlement of trust funds for the benefit of a husband and wife for their lives, with remainder to the children of the marriage equally, it was provided that if the husband should, during his life, advance or pay any moneys for or on account of the advancement or preferment in life of any child of the marriage, or in case any lands or tenements, moneys, goods, or chattels should descend or come by or from him unto or for the benefit of any such child, then such moneys, goods, and chattels, and the value of such lands or tenements, should be accounted as part or in full of the portion provided by the settlement, unless the husband should by writing declare the contrary:—Held, that the advances and payments referred to in the first part of the provision should be construed advances and payments made inter vivos, perfected in the lifetime of the husband, and that the lands, tenements, moneys, goods, or chattels, in the second part of the clause, should be confined to matters not perfected, or not having effect until after his death; that property which, during the coverture, accrued to the husband and wife, in right of the wife, and by a settlement, to which the husband and wife were parties, was settled upon them for their lives, with remainder to their children, as they or the survivor of them should appoint (but which was not otherwise received or reduced into possession by the husband), was not property to be accounted for as part of their portion, by the children to whom the husband and wife, or the survivor of them, afterwards appointed it; that the value of a leasehold house, assigned by the husband in his lifetime to one of the children of the marriage, for his more comfortable maintenance and support, did not affect the share of such child of the trust fund; that an advance by the husband in his lifetime to one of his daughters of a sum of money for the purpose of apprenticing her son,—the share of such daughter of the trust fund having been settled upon herself and her husband, with remainder to her children,—did not affect the share of such daughter of the trust fund. Douglas v. Willes, 7 Hare 318.

3. By will, dated in 1827, the testator bequeathed to C. (to whom he stood in loco parentis) a particular legacy of 12,000*l.* charged on a family estate, and also made him residuary legatee. In 1832 C. married, and the testator on his marriage settlement covenanted that his executors should, within six months of his decease, pay 10,000*l.* to the trustees of the settlement, upon usual marriage settlement trusts, for the benefit of C., his wife and issue: and it was provided that any gift inter vivos or by will by the testator to C., for his own benefit, should be taken to be a satisfaction of the covenant pro tanto, and should not be subject to the trusts of the settlement. By a codicil in 1833 the testator confirmed his will in other respects, but he directed that 5,000*l.* out of the 12,000*l.* charged on the family estate, and 5,000*l.* out of his general residue, should be given in satisfaction of his covenant; and he again appointed C. his sole residuary legatee. By a second codicil the testator confirmed all previous gifts and arrangements, but gave his residuary estate to C. and H. equally, declaring at the same time that the two sums of 5,000*l.* and 5,000*l.* were to be in satisfaction of the covenant:—Held, that notwithstanding the proviso in the settlement, that gifts to C. by the testator for his own benefit should be in satisfaction of the covenant pro tanto and should not be subject to the trusts of the settlement, yet that here the testator had sufficiently declared his mind that the gifts to C. were not to be in satisfaction of the covenant, but that the 5,000*l.* and 5,000*l.* were to be paid to the trustees on the trusts of the settlement. Milligan v. Hardwicke (Earl), 1 Jur., N. S., 793.

4. A father devised real estates upon trust for his daughter E. for life, with remainder to her husband W. for life, with remainder to trustees for 1,000 years, to raise 30,000*l.* for portions for younger children, with remainder to E.'s eldest son for life, with remainders over. And he directed that if E. or W., or either of them, should at any time during their joint lives or the life of the survivor of them advance or pay any sum or sums of money for the use or benefit of any younger child or children for whom portions were provided, then and in such case, unless the contrary should be directed by E. and W., or the survivor of them, by deed or writing to be sealed and delivered in the presence of one or more witnesses, the sum or sums so advanced should be taken in satisfaction pro tanto of the portion or portions of such child or children. E. had several children, one of whom, J., was of weak mind; and while she was still under age W. and E., and their eldest and second sons, executed a deed whereby they covenanted that if the share of J. devolved upon them, or any of them, they would divide it among the other younger children. J. attained twenty-one and died, and her share thus devolved on her father W. and became subject to his covenant. W., having survived his wife, made a will, whereby he gave legacies to his younger children, and gave the residue of his personal estate for the benefit of two of them:—Held, that none of the gifts under W.'s will were to be taken towards satisfaction of the portions of the younger children. Cooper v. Cooper, 8 L. R., Ch., 813; 21 W. R. 921; 29 L. T., N. S., 321; 43 L. J., Ch., 158. Varying 21 W. R. 501; 28 L. T., N. S., 87.

Held, also, that the division of the share of

J. was not to be taken towards satisfaction of the portions of the younger children. Ib.

Hotchpot Clauses and Deduction of Advances in general between Parent and Child.] See PARENT AND CHILD, II. 1.

V. PAYMENT OF AND PURCHASE OF CHILD'S INTEREST.

1. Father, under marriage settlement, with power to appoint shares, in which his younger children were to take a sum to be raised for their portion, having exercised that power by will, afterwards advances one daughter, took release from her of her portion, and by codicil revoked his appointment by will as to her:—Held, her portion was to go to the other children. Noel v. Walsingham (Lord), 2 Sim. & S. 99; 3 L. J., Ch., 12.

2. Where a power is given to appoint a fund among the children as the parent shall direct, and one of the children is advanced by the parent, out of his own funds, a portion equivalent to the share which such child would have taken in the settled fund, if no appointment had been made, the effect of it is to increase the shares of the other children, and not to make the advanced child's share part of the parent's assets. Brownlow v. Meath (Earl), 2 Ir. Eq. R. 383; 2 Dr. & Wal. 674.

3. Power to appoint to or among one or more younger children; in default of appointment, equally. One of two objects being removed by effect of express satisfaction by way of advancement, the other takes the whole, as in the case of death, by analogy to customs of York and London. Folkes v. Western, 9 Ves. 456.

4. A. settled property upon himself for life, with remainder to his children, with power, at his request, to advance any part thereof in his lifetime. Some advances were made to the children expressly under the power, besides which, on the marriage of two of his daughters, he advanced to them certain sums out of his own moneys, but there was no evidence of an intention to purchase their shares:—Held, that the latter advances were not to be treated as a satisfaction, pro tanto, of the daughters' shares under the settlement. Samuel v. Ward, 22 Beav. 347; 2 Jur., N. S., 962; 4 W. R. 540.

Satisfaction can only arise where the person who makes the payment is himself the party bound to pay, or is the owner of the estate charged with the payment. Ib.

5. By settlement in 1790 a power of appointment amongst the children of the marriage was reserved to the father, and, in default of appointment, equally between the children as tenants in common in tail. Upon the marriage of E. M., one of the two children of the marriage, her father advances 6,000*l.* as her portion, to be taken by her in lieu, bar, and full satisfaction of all and every sum and sums, legal and beneficial estates and interests, to which she was then, or might thereafter be, entitled under the settlement of 1790:—Held, 1st, that the 6,000*l.* advanced to the daughter was in satisfaction of her entire interest under the settlement of 1790, and that she was absolutely barred therefrom. 2ndly, that the will of 1831 operated as an appointment of the daughter's interest in favour of the son, and that, consequently, the whole interest under the settlement of 1790 became vested in the son, as the only other object of the power, as tenant in tail. 3rdly, that the advancement by the father did not constitute him a purchaser of his daughter's share under the settlement of 1790. Where an intention is declared that an advancement to a child, one of the objects of a power, shall be regarded in lieu and satisfaction of the share of such child, such share shall, in the absence of evidence of intention to the contrary, be presumed to be, not for the benefit of the parent making the advancement, but of the other children entitled to the remainder of the fund. The principle upon which Folkes v. Western (9 Ves. 456) was decided upheld, as consistent with the decision in Pitt v. Jackson (2 Bro. C. C. 51), although the reasons assigned for that decision in Folkes v. Western may not be satisfactory. Lee v. Head, 3 Eq. Rep. 1046; 1 Kay & J. 620; 1 Jur., N. S., 722; 3 W. R. 591.

6. Where a father pays a portion simpliciter, by way of advancement for one of the objects of a settlement, the presumption is, that the payment is for the benefit of the other children entitled under the settlement. Ford v. Tynte, Re Cooper, 10 Jur., N. S., 1193; 11 L. T., N. S. 367; 5 N. R. 73.

To rebut this presumption, no specific declaration by the father is necessary, but all the circumstances at the time of the advance will be looked at, evidence not being admitted of subsequent transactions. Ib.

A father and mother entitled for life under a settlement of real estate, with power of appointing amongst their younger children a sum to be raised for their portions, and which sum, in default of appointment, was to be divided equally, appointed an equal fourth share (there being four younger children) to each of two daughters on her marriage. No other appointment was made, but on the marriage of the third daughter, the father advanced, out of his own moneys, to the trustees of her settlement, a sum equal to another fourth share of the trust funds. The correspondence at the time showed that the motive of the father for so doing was to raise the money at once, the intended husband being anxious to invest at a higher rate of interest:—Held, that this was a purchase by the father of the share of the daughter so advanced for his own benefit, and not a payment for the benefit of the other objects of the settlement. Ib.

VI. ADMISSIBILITY OF PAROL EVIDENCE.

7. In the cases of satisfaction of legacies, parol declarations have always been admitted. Shudal v. Jekyll, 2 Atk. 518.

8. Portions for the children by the will of the parent presumed a satisfaction of a prior provision by settlement, unless clearly not so intended; the presumption is not rebutted by slight circumstances: accounts in the testator's handwriting were admitted as evidence of the circumstances under which he made his will, but not to explain the will. Hinchliffe v. Hinchliffe, 3 Ves. 516.

1. Portions for the children by the will of the parent held a satisfaction of a provision by settlement, upon the intention; slight circumstances of difference that would repel the presumption of satisfaction between strangers, are not sufficient in the case of parent and child. Sparkes v. Cator, 3 Ves. 530.

2. Distinction between a legacy and a residuary bequest as to a presumed satisfaction by the advancement of a portion. The presumption from the former does not arise from the latter, and parol evidence of an intention to satisfy cannot be admitted originally, as it may where first introduced to repel a presumption. Freemantle v. Bankes, 5 Ves. 79.

3. Presumed satisfaction of legacy by a portion, the evidence not being sufficient to rebut the presumption, but parol evidence admissible to rebut the presumption, without regard to the nature of it. Trimmer v. Bayne, 7 Ves. 508.

4. Satisfaction of a legacy by a parent to a child by a portion of the same amount, though with some circumstances of difference. Whether parol evidence can be admitted originally of an intention to substitute the one provision for the other, or only where it is first offered against the presumption, it is clearly admissible to show that the father was the author of the portion, viz., by stipulating or joining in the marriage settlement of his eldest son for a charge, and giving wife interests in consideration of it. Hartopp v. Hartopp, 17 Ves. 184.

5. Where a testator made bequests to his two daughters, and afterwards settled portions upon them:—Held, that the evidence of one daughter was not admissible to prove that the testator did not intend to adeem the legacy given to the other daughter, it being likewise in evidence that the testator intended to provide for his two daughters equally. Davys v. Boucher, 3 Y. & Coll. 39; 3 Jur. 674.

6. By the marriage settlement of T. G., portions were provided, out of settled real estate, for his younger children, to be paid after his decease, or before, if he should direct; and it was provided, that any advances by T. G. in his lifetime should be considered as in satisfaction pro tanto of the portions of the children to whom advances should be made, unless T. G. should declare a contrary intention by writing under his hand:—Held, that the evidence of the wife to prove that a gift in the will of T. G. of his personalty not under settlement in favour of his younger children, was not meant to be in satisfaction of the portions, was not admissible. Fazakerley v. Gillibrand, 1 Jur. 656.

7. Where a legacy is given for a particular purpose, as a portion, and another bounty is afterwards given to the same purpose, it is considered as implying an intention in the testator to satisfy the legacy. But this, being only a presumption, may be rebutted by evidence showing a contrary intention. Debeze v. Mant, 1 Cox 346; 2 Bro. C. C. 165. Affirmed id. 519.

8. Legacy to a feme covert, and afterwards a note given to the husband for the same amount, and proof admitted that the one was intended in lieu of the legacy, and thereupon decreed to be taken in satisfaction. Chapman v. Salt, 2 Vern. 646.

9. B., by will, gave all his real and personal estate equally among his children, and at the conclusion of his will, he directed his executors to lay out a sum not exceeding 300*l.* in putting out defendant, his son, apprentice. B. in his lifetime laid out 200*l.* in placing his son as a clerk in the navy office, and died without revoking his will. Evidence was allowed to be read of testator's declarations, that this advancement should be an ademption of the legacy. Rosewell v. Bennett, 3 Atk. 77.

10. Presumed satisfaction of legacy by a portion, the evidence not being sufficient to rebut the presumption. But parol evidence admissible to rebut the presumption, without regard to the nature of it. Trimmer v. Bayne, 7 Ves. 508.

11. Gift of 500*l.* by father to daughter held not a satisfaction in part of legacy of 1,000*l.* by previous will, the presumption against double portions in case of parent and child being repelled by circumstances, the gift not being by way of portion, but after marriage, and from a particular motive appearing by declaration of testator to wife, which she proved. Robinson v. Whitley, 9 Ves. 577.

12. Portion held a satisfaction of a legacy from the father, to the same amount; the evidence not being sufficient to repel the presumption. Ellison v. Cookson, 1 Ves. J. 100.

13. Gift by testator in lifetime to legatees after a will making them such, held part satisfaction on evidence of testator's intention to that effect. Thellusson v. Woodford, 4 Madd. 420.

14. Parol evidence is admissible to prove that a person did mean to put himself in loco parentis towards a child, so far as relates to the child's future provision; and evidence of the declarations, as well as the acts, of such a person are admissible for that purpose. Powys v. Mansfield, 3 Myl. & C. 359; 7 L. J., N. S., Ch., 9; 1 Jur 861. Affirming on this point 6 Sim. 521; 5 L. J., N. S., Ch., 153.

If the presumption of law against double portions, provided by a person in loco parentis, be attempted to be rebutted by parol evidence, it may be supported by evidence of the same kind. Ib.

Declarations of a person in loco parentis are admissible in evidence upon the question of his intention as to providing a double portion for a child to whom he stands in that relation. Ib.

15. The testator, upon the marriage of a daughter, entered into a bond for the payment of 5,000*l.* within six months after his decease to the trustees of his daughter's settlement, the interest to be paid to the husband for life; and after his decease, if the wife survived him, and there were children of the marriage, 1,000*l.* part of the 5,000*l.* to be paid to the wife, and the remainder to be applied for the use of the children of the marriage; but if there were no children, 2,000*l.* to be paid to the wife, and the remainder of the 5,000*l.* to be paid to the executors and administrators of the husband; and in case the husband survived the wife, and there were no children, then the whole of the 5,000*l.* to the husband. The testator afterwards made his will, and gave his daughter 5,000*l.*, stating it to be in addition to what he had secured upon her marriage. About five years afterwards he executed a deed, whereby he covenanted that his executors should pay to the trustees, within six months after his death, the sum of 5,000*l.* upon the trusts of the settlement. Parol evidence of the declarations of the testator was admitted to prove that he did not intend a double portion. Lloyd v. Harvey, 2 Russ. & M. 310.

1. Declarations of the parent referring to his intention at the time of making his will, whether made at the time, or before, or after, are admissible evidence to prove that he did not mean to give a double provision. A paper written some time after the date of his will, and showing the state of his property, but having no reference to this intention, is not admissible for that purpose. Weall v. Rice, 2 Russ. & M. 251; 9 L. J., Ch., 116.

2. A testator who has contributed to the maintenance and education of a female infant nearly related to him, from the time of her father's death, and who has been treated by her as the person whose consent was necessary to her marriage, and who has also taken upon himself the obligation to make a provision for her in that event, is as to the question of a double provision by will and settlement to be considered in loco parentis, and the presumption against a double provision which would arise in the case of a father will apply to such a case. In such a case, parol evidence may be adduced to prove the intention against a double provision, as well as on the question whether the testator was in loco parentis. Quære, whether, if the testator was not to be considered in loco parentis, parol evidence of his intention not to make a double provision by will and settlement would be admissible. It being proved by parol evidence that testator intended the provision made by the settlement to be in lieu of a legacy given by the will, the settlement was held to be a satisfaction of the legacy, though the two provisions differed so much from each other that they could not be considered substantially the same. The legacy was not set up by a codicil, made after the settlement, ratifying and confirming the will, and all the devises and bequests therein contained. Booker v. Allen, 2 Russ. & M. 270; 9 L. J., Ch., 130.

3. A testator, by his will, made in 1838, devised his real estates at M. to his nephew, and bequeathed legacies amounting to 8,000*l.* to other persons, which legacies were primarily charged upon the moneys which might be in bank to the credit of the testator at his death. In 1839, the nephew, in compliance with the express desire of the testator, became the purchaser of real estates at C. The testator, out of moneys standing to his credit in the bank, lent the purchase money to the nephew, who shortly afterwards repaid it in part, but a balance of 7,700*l.* still remained due to the testator. By a codicil made in 1840, the testator, reciting that he had by his will devised certain real estates to his nephew, charged the same with a sum of 8,000*l.*, with interest at the rate of 5 per cent. from his decease, and directed that sum of 8000*l.* and interest to be paid to his executors within six months from his decease, for the purpose of paying off certain legacies named in his will: —Held, that parol evidence was admissible of facts showing that the testator stood in loco parentis to the nephew, and also to show the above-mentioned circumstances attendant upon the purchase of the estates at C.; and that the nephew being unable to pay the balance of 7,700*l.*, the testator refused to accept a security from him for it, but instead thereof had directed his own solicitors to prepare a codicil, charging 8,000*l.* upon the estates at M., which sum was to be applied towards the purposes to which he had by his will directed a similar sum formerly in cash at bank to be applied; in consequence of which direction, the codicil executed by him in 1840 was preferred. Hedges v. Aldworth, 13 Ir. Eq. R. 406.

The Court admitted the parol evidence, not for the purpose of construing the will or codicil, but in order to ascertain whether or not the 7,700*l.* was a debt due to the testator at the time of his death. Ib.

4. The testator bequeathed a sum of 3,000*l.* to his daughter for her separate use, for life, with remainder to her children as she should appoint; and in default of appointment, to her children equally, with provisions for survivorship, advancement, and for the substitution of their issue; and, subject to an annuity and to his debts, he devised and bequeathed all the residue of his real and personal estate (naming securities for money) unto his son absolutely. After the date of the will, the testator gave to his daughter and her husband a promissory note for 500*l.*, then due to the testator. In a suit by the children of the daughter against the son, claiming to have the legacy of 3,000*l.* invested and secured for their benefit, the defendant tendered parol evidence that after the date of the will the testator was requested by his daughter to confer some benefit on her husband, and that, thereupon, the testator gave her the promissory note, declaring that it was to be in part satisfaction of the legacy of 3,000*l.*; and that the testator was advised by his solicitor, that it was not necessary to alter his will to give it that effect: —Held, that this evidence was admissible, as constituting an essential part of a transaction subsequent to, and independent of, the will, of which subsequent transaction there was no evidence in writing. Kirk v. Eddowes, 3 Hare 509; 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 402; 8 Jur. 530.

Held, also, that the parol evidence was not received as evidence of revocation or alteration of any part of the will, but as evidence of a transaction whereby the legatee had received part of her legacy by anticipation. Ib.

5. When the donor of a benefit which is claimed to be satisfied by subsequent benefits stands in the place of a parent, the presumption against double portions arises, and evidence is admissible for the purpose of rebutting or sustaining it. In the case of a stranger, the presumption against double portions does not arise, and it is solely a question of construction, whether the donor intended that his benefits should be diminished or adeemed by benefits derived from any other source. Cooper v. Cooper, 21 W. R. 501; 28 L. T., N. S., 87. And see 29 L. T., N. S., 321; 8 L. R., Ch., 813; 43 L. J., Ch., 158.

6. When a parent, or one standing in loco parentis, bequeaths a legacy to his child, and afterwards advances a like or greater sum on the marriage of the legatee, the law presumes the legacy adeemed; but the presumption may be rebutted by evidence of a contrary intention. Curtin v. Evans, 9 Ir. R., Eq., 533.

Parol evidence alone will rebut the presumption, though the advancement be by settlement and as a marriage portion. But the evidence must be clear to show the real intention of the parent in reference to the very advancement which primâ facie has adeemed the legacy. Ib.

A testator, who, prior to his will, had made a present to his step-daughter of bank shares, bequeathed to her, in addition to the bank shares, 5,000*l.* On her marriage, a few months after the will, she, at the testator's request, transferred the shares to her brother, and by her marriage settlement, to which the testator was a party, he advanced, as a marriage portion, 5,000*l.*, which was paid to the trustees to be applied by them to the payment of incumbrances on the husband's estate, on which an adequate jointure was secured to her:—Held, that the presumption of ademption was rebutted by parol evidence of contemporaneous declarations of the testator showing his intention that the legacy should not be adeemed by the marriage portion. Ib.

1. Whether a settlement by a father, on the marriage of his child, is an ademption of a legacy, previously given in a will, which will is subsequently confirmed by a codicil, is a matter in which the presumption against double portions may be rebutted by evidence. Hopwood v. Hopwood, 5 Jur., N. S., 897; 29 L. J., Ch., 747; 7 H. L. Ca. 728. And see S. C. 26 L. J., Ch., 292; 3 Jur., N. S., 549; 5 W. R. 331; 2 Jur., N. S., 747; 22 Beav. 488.

2. Parol evidence, though inadmissible to raise, is admissible to rebut the presumption of the satisfaction by one instrument of an obligation created by another instrument. Re Tussaud, Tussaud v. Tussaud, 39 L. T., N. S., 113; 47 L. J., Ch., 849; 26 W. R. 874; 9 L. R., Ch. D., 363.

XII. Other Matters.

3. Portions by will, governed by rules from the civil law, not applicable to a deed. Hubert v. Parsons, 2 Ves. 261.

4. Marriage portions recovered at common law, and reversed in Exchequer, and holpen in Chancery. Cutting v. ——, Cary 8.

5. Construction of a trust; surplus rents, etc., not included in the term "portion." Vane v. Vane, 1 Ves. 57.

6. Portion not only implies a fortune out of the father's estate, but may also relate to what the wife brings with her in marriage, and answers to the Latin word dos. Wood v. Briant, 2 Atk. 522.

7. The Court will supply a defective conveyance in favour of children. But there is no case where the Court could decree satisfaction out of assets, if the father had no title to the thing he conveys to his child. Salter v. Melhuish, Ambl. 251.

8. Power to charge portions not inconsistent with an estate tail. Jervoise v. Northumberland (Duke), 1 Jac. & Walk. 575.

9. Where Court has at instance of eldest son ordered trustees to join in destroying contingent remainders, it has sometimes imposed conditions on the son as a provision for a sister. Frewin v. Charleton, 1 Eq. Abr. 386.

10. Upon the construction of an instrument creating a power of raising portions:—Held, that the donee had a right to distribute portions unequally. Cotgreave v. Cotgreave, 1 De G. & Sm. 38; 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 145; 11 Jur. 51.

11. A. lent B. and C. 260*l.* and took their bond for 800*l.*, payable on the marriage of either, or on the death of either's father; B.'s father died, and C. married, but his portion was invested in trustees: equity would not subject this portion to the payment of C.'s bond. Rich v. Sydenham, 3 Ch. Rep. 75.

12. One, by his will, gives 3,000*l.* to his younger children, which was secured by mortgage from A., and declares that, if his eldest son does not pay this 3,000*l.*, then his lands shall go to the younger children. A. brings a bill to redeem his mortgage, and to pay in his mortgage money, and pays it pursuant to the decree; and the Master puts it out upon a security that proves ill. The eldest son shall not be compelled to pay it over again to his younger brothers. Oldfield v. Oldfield, 1 Vern. 336.

13. Devise to A. until B. shall attain forty years. B. dies before forty, A.'s estate ceases. Secus, if the devise to A. be made a fund to pay debts or portions which cannot be raised until B. shall have attained his age of forty, in which case the word "shall" is taken for "should." Lomax v. Holmeden, 8 P. W. 176.

14. Under a power for raising portions for younger children, an appointment by a charge, confined to the particular event of four or more, was not extended by implication from general words in a subsequent part of the deed, providing for the case of no appointment. Mosley v. Mosley, 5 Ves. 249.

15. H. T., on his marriage, covenanted to settle certain lands upon certain trusts, under which portions were to be secured to his younger children; he afterwards sold the lands, and levied a fine to the purchaser: the fine was held to have no operation in equity to protect the purchaser:—Held, also, that H. T. was a trustee for his children, and that the fine could not give to the purchaser a benefit which the father himself could not take. Thompson v. Simpson, 1 Dr. & War. 459.

16. A., tenant for life, remainder to his son B. in tail, A. and B. execute a deed, whereby, after reciting an agreement between them, that A. should grant to B. and his assigns an annuity of 100*l.*, chargeable upon the lands, payable during the lives of A. and B., and the survivor of them; and that in consideration thereof A. should have power to charge said lands with 1,000*l.*, with interest from his death, for his own benefit, but not to be raised or paid till two years after his death. A. and B. declared the uses of a recovery suffered by them to be, that B. and his assigns should, during the lives of A. and B., and the survivor of them, receive thereout an annuity of 100*l.*, with the usual powers of distress and entry in case of non-payment thereof; and subject thereto, to the use of A. for life, and after his decease to the use of B. in tail: and A. was thereby empowered to charge the lands with 1,000*l.*, with interest from his death, to be disposed of as he should appoint amongst his younger children. A. died, having exercised his power, leaving B. and several younger children surviving:—Held, that the 1,000*l.* was a charge on the lands in priority to B.'s annuity. Mills v. Mills, 3 J. & L. 242; 9 Ir. Eq. R. 299.

1. Trustees appointed for raising and paying a portion of 500*l.* to A. Trustee enters and gives judgment to A. for paying the 500*l.* to A. when raised: the trustee raises the 500*l.* and more, and becomes insolvent; whether the land is discharged, quære. Harrison v. Cage, 2 Vern. 85.

2. An estate was devised to the eldest son of the testator, in fee, charged with four portions of 5,000*l.* each, for younger children. The eldest son, on his marriage, settled the estate to the use of his intended wife after his decease, for her life, if she should survive him, with remainder to himself in fee, and covenanted within six months to pay off the four sums of 5,000*l.*, and release the estate therefrom. He paid off one sum of 5,000*l.*, and died intestate:—Held, that the husband was not a purchaser under the settlement, and that the covenant in the settlement could not be taken to have been for indemnity only, but that, so far as the wife and younger children were concerned, the husband had adopted the portions as his own debt, and that he had also made them his debt as between his real and personal representatives. Barham v. Clarendon (Earl), 10 Hare 126; 17 Jur. 336; 22 L. J., Ch., 1057.

3. By a marriage settlement a father gave to his son an annuity during his own life, charged upon certain lands of which the father was tenant for life, with remainder to the son for life; and he conveyed certain other lands held for lives renewable for ever, to which he was absolutely entitled, to trustees, upon trust to permit him, and his heirs and assigns, to receive the rents during his son's life, and subject thereto to secure a jointure to the son's intended wife, and portions for his younger children, and subject thereto for the father absolutely; and it was declared that the portions should be payable to the younger children at twenty-one or marriage, if such events should happen after the death of the son, and if before then in three months after his death, "and not sooner, unless with the consent of the father if living, and if dead of the son":—Held, that this enabled the son, after the death of the father, to charge the lands with a portion for a younger child of his, who had attained twenty-one, and to make it payable immediately. Keily v. Keily, 5 Ir. Eq. R. 435; 4 Dr. & War. 38.

4. The custom of the manor of D. was, that each tenant should have an estate tail, with reversion to the lord, in fee, and that he might with the license of the lord alien by deed to any other person, to hold to him and the heirs of his body, with remainder to the lord in fee. In 1792 T. H., who was a tenant according to such custom, executed marriage articles by which 2,000*l.* was to be raised for the younger children of the marriage. No settlement was ever made in pursuance of these articles. In 1794 T. H. procured an enfranchisement from the lord of the manor to himself in fee. In 1828 the same lands were conveyed to trustees after the death of T. H. and his wife, in trust for F. H. (the eldest son of T. H.) for life, remainder to his wife for her life, with remainder upon the ordinary trusts of a marriage settlement in favour of F. H. and his wife: and by such settlement F. H. covenanted to settle any after-acquired property of his wife. T. H. died in 1844, and his wife in 1850. F. H. became bankrupt in 1849, having previously mortgaged all his property to the trustees of his settlement to secure the repayment of a sum of 2,000*l.*, which he had received in right of his wife since marriage; neither the wife of F. H. nor the trustees had heard of the articles of 1792 till 1854. Upon a bill filed by the younger children of the marriage of 1792, to have their sums of 2,000*l.* raised according to the articles:—Held, first, that the lands were not within the operation of the Statute de Donis; and, secondly, that the trustees of the marriage of F. H. were entitled to have the sum of 2,000*l.* raised first of all, inasmuch as they were purchasers for value without notice; and, thirdly, that the younger children were entitled to have their portions raised according to the articles of 1792, in preference to F. H. or his assignees. Cresswell v. Hawkins, 3 Jur., N. S., 407.

5. Upon a sale in the Incumbered Estates Court of Irish property, charged with portions for younger children raisable at death of tenant for life, 25,000*l.* was set apart by the Commissioners to answer these portions, and invested in consols. The dividends were received from them by the tenant for life, who died on the 1st July 1857:—Held, that the portioners were only entitled to that portion of the half year's dividend due upon the 5th July which had accrued since the 1st July, the tenant for life being entitled under the Incumbered Estates Act to receive the income upon the fund set apart for portions, and not distributable during his lifetime, as if it had remained unconverted. Wellesley v. Mornington (Lord), 6 W. R. 177; 27 L. J., Ch., 150; 4 Jur., N. S., 6.

I. GENERAL RIGHTS OF, 5698.
II. RENTS AND PROFITS, 5698.

I. GENERAL RIGHTS OF.

1. A child en ventre sa mere may be vouched, may be an executor, may take under the Statute of Distributions by devise, under a charge for portions, may have an injunction and a guardian. Thellusson v. Woodford, 4 Ves. 322. Affirmed 11 Ves. 112.

2. A child en ventre sa mere may be vouched, is capable of taking; the mother may detain charters on behalf of such child; a suit may be brought on behalf of such child; and the Court will grant an injunction to stay waste, and hæredibus de corpore procreatis and procreandis are the same. Musgrave v. Parry, 2 Vern. 710.

3. A child en ventre sa mere is in rerum natura, and is as much one as if born in the father's lifetime. Wallis v. Hodson, 2 Atk. 117.

The Court will grant an injunction to stay waste in favour of an infant en ventre sa mere. Id. Sed quære.

The civil law makes a difference between a child en ventre sa mere in esse at the father's death, and only conceived. S. C. 1 Atk. 118.

A parent's duty to provide for all his children will extend to posthumous ones. S. C. 2 Atk. 114.

4. Testator gave his estate to trustees, to apply the profits for the use of the child with which his wife was then pregnant, during infancy, and at twenty-five to the child in fee; but in case the child should die before twenty-five, without issue, remainder over; the child was still-born. Afterwards testator made a codicil affirming his will, and died without issue. Forty-three weeks after his death, his widow was brought to bed of a son; this son cannot take the estate, though found to be legitimate, but it shall go to the devisees over. Foster v. Cook, 3 Bro. C. C. 347.

5. The description of children of A. does not extend to a child in ventre sa mere. Pierson v. Garnet, 2 Bro. C. C. 38; Pre. Ch. 201; id. 226.

6. Bequest to all children "born in the lifetime of testator," includes child of which the feme was enciente at death of testator. Trower v. Butts, 1 Sim. & S. 181; L. J., Ch., 115.

7. The law is clear that a devise to an infant en ventre sa mere is good, though he be born after the death of the testator, and he shall take by way of executory devise when he is born. Anon., 1 Freem. 293. S. P. Taylor v. Bydall, id. 243.

8. One devises, in case he have no son at the time of his death, to S. The testator dies, leaving his wife privement enciente with a son; this posthumous son is a son living at the testator's death, and S. not entitled. Burdet v. Hopegood, 1 P. W. 486.

9. Distinction between privement and grossment enciente. Nurse v. Yerworth, 3 Swan. 620.

An infant en ventre sa mere, under a devise to heirs of the body of the devisee begotten and to be begotten, cannot take, by purchase, the legal fee; the terms of description not amounting to a legal designation of him; but is entitled in equity, by virtue of the apparent intention, to the trust of a term attendant on the inheritance, though merged at law. Id. 608.

10. A. gave a bond to pay 900*l.* to his daughter, in case he should have no son living at his death; A. died, leaving his wife enciente with a son; the daughter shall not have this 900*l.* Gibson v. Gibson, 2 Freem. 223.

11. Power to charge lands for portions for younger children living at the father's death; a child en ventre sa mere is a child within the power. Beale v. Beale, 1 P. W. 246.

12. A posthumous child within a provision in marriage articles, for such children of the marriage as should be living at the death of the father or mother. Millar v. Turner, 1 Ves. 85.

13. A. conveys a term for years, in trust to raise 1,500*l.* for such child or children as should be living at his death. A posthumous child held a child living at his death, to take within the meaning of that trust, which was not to be construed so strictly as a limitation at law. Hale v. Hale, Pre. Ch. 50.

14. Lands by marriage settlement are limited to the son in tail male, remainder to A., the husband in fee; provided if A. and his wife, or either of them, die without issue male living at the time of his or her death leaving only one daughter unmarried, the trustees to stand seised till they have raised 1,500*l.* for such daughter; and if more daughters unmarried at the death of A. and his wife, or either of them, and no issue male being begotten between them, then 3,000*l.* for such daughters. A. dies, leaving daughters, and his wife enciente of a son, who is afterwards born: quære, whether the daughters are entitled to the 3,000*l.* Palmer v. Cracroft, 2 Vern. 578.

15. The fiction of the law which treats an unborn child as actually born, applies only for the purpose of enabling the unborn child to take a benefit which, if born, it would be entitled to. Blasson v. Blasson, 10 Jur., N. S., 1113; 34 L. J., Ch., 18; 13 W. R. 113; 11 L. T., N. S., 353; 5 N. R. 65; 2 De G. & S. 665.

II. RENTS AND PROFITS.

16. A posthumous child, born after the next rent-day, and since the death of the father, is entitled, under 10 & 11 Will. 3, c. 16, to the intermediate profits of the lands settled, as well as the lands themselves, and the Court will consider an uncle as a receiver or a trustee for an after-born son, though the point at law be against him. The profits of an estate descended belong to a posthumous child from his birth only. Basset v. Basset, 3 Atk. 203, 206, 207. And see Goodtitle v. Newman, 3 Wils. 526. It is evident that all skilful conveyancers have considered that the statute carries the intermediate profits as well as the estate, for before that statute, and before the case of Reeve v. Long, 3 Lev. 408, they always inserted a limitation to preserve contingent remainders to posthumous children, but since that time they have omitted it. Basset v. Basset, supra. And see Robinson v. Robinson, 2 Ves. 231.

1. Testator gave to each and every of his children born or thereafter to be born, and who should be living at the time of his death, 5,000*l.* apiece, to be paid at their ages of twenty-one, etc., with interest from the day of his death. A child en ventre sa mere is entitled to a legacy of 5,000*l.*, but the interest is to be computed only from the birth. Rawlins v. Rawlins, 2 Cox 425.

2. Devise to trustees to the use of the first and other sons of M. in tail male, with a residuary devise. Three months after the testator's death the first son of M. was born:—Held, that the residuary devisees were entitled to intermediate rents from the testator's death to the birth of the tenant in tail. Re Mowlem, 18 L. R., Eq., 9; 43 L. J., Ch., 353; 22 W. R. 398.

Posthumous Heir.] 3. A posthumous heir is entitled to the rents of a descended estate only from the date of his birth, whether the prior rents have been actually received or not. Richards v. Richards, 1 Johns. 754; 6 Jur., N. S., 1145; 29 L. J., Ch., 836.

An estate, which, by virtue of settlement, devolves on a posthumous heir as tenant in tail by descent, is not a settled estate within the operation of 10 & 11 Will. 3, c. 16. Ib.

4. A. being seised of real estate, died, leaving his sisters his presumptive co-heirs, his wife being enciente of a son, born subsequently. The rents, from the ancestor's death, remaining unreceived by the co-heirs:—Held, that their seisin being gone, on the birth of the posthumous child, they were not entitled to so much of the intermediate rents as they had not received before the birth of the heir. Goodale v. Gawthorne, 2 Sm. & G. 375; 18 Jur. 927; 23 L. J., Ch., 878; 2 W. R. 680; 2 Eq. Rep. 936.

5. By the terms of the articles of agreement usually entered into between the postmaster-general and the persons supplying horses for the mail coaches, the postmaster-general cannot exercise the power of nominating a new party to perform neglected duty, for which provision is made in the articles, without notice to all the parties to the agreement who have the option of performing the neglected duty themselves. A bill for an account by a substituted party, of whose nomination the postmaster-general had given no notice to one of the defendants, an original contracting party, who was entitled to the option of performing the neglected duty himself, was therefore dismissed at the original hearing; but the decision was reversed upon appeal, upon the ground that, although no notice had been given by the postmaster-general, the defendant knew of the nomination of the plaintiff, and that his conduct was equivalent to a waiver of the option. Lovegrove v. Nelson, 3 Myl. & K. 1.

6. Upon forfeiture of a bond to the Crown for conveyance of the mails by a railway company, a plea, that the company was prevented from performing their obligation by the neglect or default of a servant of the post-office, would be a good defence. Att.-Gen. v. London & North-Western Railway Co., Johns. 28.

Therefore, under the 1 & 2 Vict., c. 98, s. 13, a railway company was ordered to execute a bond without any proviso protecting them against such an event. Ib.

Form of bond to be given by railway companies under that section. Ib.

7. A plaintiff had been manager of a company, but had quitted their service, and opened a place for business in a similar trade to the company. Advertisements had been published, calling attention to the fact of his being no longer manager of the company. Letters, some of which were admitted to have been intended for the company, were addressed to him at his new place of residence as manager. Others were addressed to him at the place of business of the company, which were about his own private affairs. Some of these had been opened by the company, the servants of the General Post-office delivering there all letters addressed to the place of business of the company. Motion by the plaintiff to restrain the postmaster-general from delivering letters directed to plaintiff at the company's place of business was refused with costs. Stapleton v. Foreign Vineyard Association, 12 W. R. 976; 11 L. T., N. S., 77.

It was also sought to restrain the company from receiving and opening letters addressed to the plaintiff at the company's place of business, and having no external indication that they were intended for the company:—Held, that the company should give an undertaking, until the hearing, not to open, except in the plaintiff's presence, letters addressed to him at the company's place of buisness, unless, after due notice, the plaintiff did not attend there for the purpose by a specified hour. Ib.

I. General Principles.

1. Power of appointment does not prevent the fee vesting, subject to being devested by execution of the power. Such a power is a mode which the owner of the estate reserves to himself, or gives to another, through the medium of the Statute of Uses, of raising and passing an estate. Maundrell v. Maundrell, 10 Ves. 265, 266.

A general power of appointment over the whole estate may subsist in the same person who has the fee simple. Id. 10 Ves. 247, overthrowing the principle of Cross v. Hudson, 3 Bro. C. C. 30. See note there.

2. Distinction between a power and absolute property. A power, unless executed, not assets for debts. Holmes v. Coghill, 12 Ves. 206.

3. Where a person has an absolute and general power of appointing a fund, as well in his lifetime as at his death, and there is no gift over, yet if no appointment be made his administrator cannot claim the fund, and even creditors will not be entitled to the benefit of it without some steps taken towards an appointment; though where any such appointment be made, the Court will arrest the fund in transitu for the benefit of creditors. Harrington v. Harte, 1 Cox 131.

4. There is a diversity between a naked power and a power which flows from an interest, for where a bare power is given to a feme by will to sell lands, though she afterwards marries, she may sell the lands, and may sell to her husband; but where a feme, upon a settlement of her own estate, reserves a power which flows from an interest, that power ought to be executed by the feme whilst sole, and yet it is said such powers ought to be taken liberally, though formerly they were taken strictly. Antrim (Marquis) v. Buckingham (Duke), 1 Ch. Ca. 17; 3 Salk. 276; 2 Freem. 168.

Where a reversioner, upon an estate for life made a settlement on herself for life, with power for her, being sole, to make leases for three lives in possession, and she and her husband, in the lifetime of the tenant for life, made a lease for twenty-one years, habendum, from the date, it was held not pursuant to her power; for, by the marriage, she put herself under the control of her husband. S. C. 1 Ch. Ca. 17. In this case, Lord K. took a diversity between a naked power and a power which flows from an interest.

5. Naked powers construed strictly; powers coupled with an interest liberally. Marlborough (Duke) v. Godolphin, 2 Ves. 61.

6. A deed in exercise of a power of appointment divesting vested estates must be construed strictly. Re Kingston's Estate, 5 L. R., Ir., 169.

7. A., the tenant for life under a settlement, dated in 1794, of estates comprised in such settlement, had under the same settlement a general and unrestricted power of appointing the fee by deed or will, subject, however, to her life estate. In 1830, A., by deed, duly executed the power fully, but reserving to herself thereby a power to revoke and newly appoint, such power only to be exercised by deed. In 1833 A. duly exercised the power reserved by the deed of 1830 fully, so as, with respect both to revocation and new appointment, to exhaust the power; but she, by the deed of 1833, reserved to herself a power to revoke and newly appoint, to be exercisable only by deed. In 1835 A. exercised duly and fully the power reserved to her by the deed of 1833, so as to exhaust it with respect both to revocation and new appointment; but she reserved to herself, by the deed of 1835, a power exercisable by deed only, enabling her to revoke and newly appoint. In 1836 A. duly and fully revoked the uses declared by the deed of 1835, but did not by that deed of 1836, or by any other subsequent deed, re-appoint:—Held, that the power to appoint by will, reserved to A. by the settlement of 1794, remained unaffected by the various deeds of appointment subsequently executed by her, and that it was duly executed by her will, dated in 1848, and purporting to be made in exercise of that power. Evans v. Saunders, Evans v. Evans, 1 Jur., N. S., 265; 24 L. J., Ch., 609; 6 De G. M. & G. 654; 3 W. R. 323; 3 Eq. Rep. 462. Affirmed sub nom. Saunders v. Evans, Sanders v. Price, 8 H. L. Ca. 721; 31 L. J., Ch., 233; 7 Jur., N. S., 1293; 9 W. R. 501; 5 L. T., N. S., 129. Reversing 18 Jur. 256; 1 Drew. 415, 654; 22 L. J., Ch., 471, 1024; 1 W. R. 220; 1 Eq. Rep. 444.

By law, a power which, in any mode and to any extent whatever, has been exercised revocably, and the revocable appointment made under which has been revoked, without being operated upon, is generally, if not universally, of the same force, and exercisable in the same manner, as if the revoked appointment had not existed; and a power cannot be necessarily exhausted by a revocable act, although exercising otherwise the power to the utmost, more than by a conditional act, or by an act of merely partial execution, i.e., of execution in no sense and in no possibility full and complete. Ib.

A power to appoint by deed or will does not constitute two separate and distinct powers, but is a single power, with a restriction on its exercise, requiring it to be exercised by one or other of those two instruments, but leaving to the donee the option, within the limits of that restriction, to choose which instrument e will use in exercising the power. Ib.

Where, by the terms of the reservation of powers of revocation and new appointment, the donee is authorised to exercise them, at his option, either by the same or by different deeds, if he first exercises by deed the power of revocation, the power of new appointment continues to subsist as a valid operative power, capable of being exercised by a subsequent deed; and admitting that it is as competent to the donee of such powers, exercising only the power of revocation, to release, extinguish, or destroy the power of appointment which was reserved to him, yet the mere exercise of the power of revocation as above will not per se have any such effect. Ib.

Where a person has a general power of appointment by deed, whether it is a primary power (i.e. a power preceding the uses declared in default of appointment), or a power of appointment connected with a power of revocation, and following the uses declared by the instrument creating the power, and exercises that power of appointment, and by the deed exercising that power reserves to himself a new power of appointment, whether such new power be reserved as a primary power or as connected with a power of revocation, such power so reserved is to all intents and purposes a new power, newly created by him, and is not the old power, which he has exercised; and it is equally a new power, whatever the kind or degree of restriction which he has thought fit to impose on its exercise, i.e., whether such restriction be precisely the same in kind and degree as that imposed on the old power, or be greater or less in kind or degree. Ib.

A general power of appointment over the fee will not be exhausted by an appointment to uses exhausting the fee, but reserving a power of revocation. Ib.

Where a general power of appointment by deed or will has been exercised by an appointment by deed, reserving a power of revocation and appointment to new uses to be exercised by deed only, the creation of this last power to appoint by deed only cannot, without clear evidence of intention, be taken as operating to destroy the original power to appoint by deed or will; and semble, that if it is to be taken as at all affecting such original power, it is to be considered merely as in substitution of that branch of the original power which it purports to replace, namely, the power to appoint by deed. Ib.

Semble, that two general powers of appointment in fee can exist in the same person at the same time. Ib.

What Law governs Construction.] 1. Where a power of appointment was created by a Scotch deed over a sum of money charged on estates in Scotland, the Court of Chancery in England declined to decide the validity of appointments made under it without first ascertaining the law of Scotland on the subject; and for that purpose directed a case to be stated for the opinion of the Court of Session, pursuant to 22 & 23 Vict., c. 63. Topham v. Portland (Duke), 32 L. J., Ch., 257; 11 W. R. 507; 8 L. T., N. S., 180.

I. IN GENERAL.

2. A bequest of property to be at the disposal of testator's wife "for herself and children":—Held, not to give her a power of appointment. Crockett v. Crockett, 5 Hare 326.

3. Held, from the recitals contained in a codicil, that a power to appoint was thereby given, although the words used by the testator were those only of substantive bequest. Hopkinson v. Phipps, 7 L. J., N. S., Ch., 255.

4. A gift to A. by will of an equitable estate for life, in real and personal estate, and after the death of A. a gift of the property to her heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, gives A. an absolute general power of appointment; and in default of appointment an estate to her heirs by way of purchase in the realty, and an absolute interest in the personalty, to her personal representatives. Quested v. Mitchell, 3 Eq. Rep. 1014.

5. A., on his marriage, conveys his land to a trustee to the use of himself for life, remainder to his wife for life, remainder to the heirs of their two bodies, remainder to A. in fee. Proviso, that in default of issue of the marriage, the trustees shall convey to such uses as the survivor shall appoint. Although the husband devises the land, and dies first without issue, yet the wife has a good power of disposing of the estate by her appointment. Oxon (Bishop) v. Leighton, 2 Vern. 376.

6. Where there is a gift to A. for life, remainder to all or such one or more of his children as he shall appoint, it is a power, and not an estate; but where it is in such manner as he may be pleased to appoint, that merely points out the quantum, and not the mode. A covenant to settle money to be paid in twelve months after decease of settlor is a satisfaction of all claims under an appointment where the appointee joins in conveying to a purchaser, and the Statute of Limitations is not a bar to the covenant. Hardingham v. Thomas, 2 W. R. 547; 2 Drew. 353; 23 L. J., Ch., 910.

7. In a partnership deed it was stipulated, that the testator's interest in the partnership concern, after his death, and during the term of the partnership, should go to such persons as he should by will name or appoint, and in default of appointment that it should devolve to his wife; in case of her death to his children in equal shares; and in case of the death of all his children, to his executors or administrators:—Held, that the true construction of this is, not to create a technical power of appointment, but to reserve to the testator an absolute power of disposition by will. The testator made a will, not containing any allusion to the power, by which he gave all his estate and effects to one of his children:—Held, that his interest in the partnership passed by this bequest. Ponton v. Dunn, 1 Russ. & M. 402.

8. By the contract for sale it was agreed that 600*l.*, part of the purchase money, should be paid after the vendor's death to such uses as she should direct, for the benefit of J. B. and her children. By the conveyance, that sum was made payable to the executors, etc., of the vendor, or as she should appoint by her will; she appointed it to J. B. absolutely:—Held, that the settlement, being execu-and also subject to all such sums as he might think fit to charge, in the whole not exceeding 4,000*l.* Shortly after the execution of the settlement, the settlor executed the power, and charged the said lands with a sum of 4,000*l.* in favour of the children of his former marriage, and subsequently made his will, and thereby devised certain estates, of which he was seised, to the defendant, who was the only son of the second marriage then living, and reciting "that by his settlement he was empowered to charge the settled lands with 4,000*l.*, and that he had accordingly charged them, etc.," and further declaring that "inasmuch as he had, by the deed of 3rd September 1819, fully provided for the sons of his first marriage, he left the residue of his real and personal estate to his son by his second marriage." A bill having been filed by the assignee of the share of one of the children of the first marriage:—Held, that the power of charging could not be exercised, save in favour of the children of the second marriage; also, that it was not an absolute power, but a power dependent upon the event of there being more sons than one of that marriage, and any one of such sons being preferred to the settled lands according to the terms of the primary power. Cooke v. Briscoe, 1 Dr. & Wal. 596.

1. A testator devised an estate upon the same trusts as his wife, by her will, should declare "with respect to the disposition of her residuary personal estate." The widow bequeathed the estate to A., and her residue to B., C., and D.:—Held, that the widow had an absolute, and not a restricted power, and that the estate did not pass with the widow's residue, but belonged to A. Bristow v. Skirrow, 27 Beav. 585.

2. A voluntary settlement in favour of several persons contained a power, authorising the tenant for life (a volunteer) to revoke the trusts of the property, and again re-settle the same upon such trusts as to her should seem meet:—Held, that this general power could not be controlled, and that an appointment of the property to herself absolutely, to the exclusion of the other persons entitled under the settlement, was a good execution of the power. Meade King v. Warren, 32 Beav. 111.

3. There is no rule of construction of marriage settlements, that a power professing to give either parent the right to deal with the property settled, to the disinheriting of the children of the marriage, shall be construed as a power of appointment for the benefit of the children. Peover v. Hassell, 1 John. & H. 341; 7 Jur., N. S., 406; 30 L. J., Ch., 314; 9 W. R. 399; 4 L. T., N. S., 113.

Therefore, where, by a marriage settlement, real estate was settled, after the death of the husband and wife, in case there should be any issue living of the marriage, to such uses generally as the husband should appoint, and in default of appointment to the use of all the children equally, and in default of such issue to such uses as the wife should appoint, and in default of appointment to the use of the right heirs; and there was issue of the marriage:—Held, that the husband had a general power of appointment, and not merely a power of appointment amongst the issue. Ib.

4. By a marriage settlement, reciting only the intended marriage, and that it had been agreed that the lady's property should be settled and assured to the uses after mentioned, freeholds were conveyed to the use of the wife for life, remainder to the husband for life, remainder to such uses and upon such trusts as the wife should appoint, and in default of appointment to uses in favour of the issue of the marriage. The wife covenanted to surrender her copyholds "to the uses hereinbefore expressed," concerning the freeholds:—Held, that the power of appointment was general, and could not be restricted to a power to appoint to issue. Minton v. Kirwood, 3 L. R., Ch., 614; 37 L. J., Ch., 606.

Held, also, that the covenant to surrender the copyholds to the same uses as the freeholds made the copyholds subject in equity to the same power of appointment as the freeholds, though powers were not expressly referred to in the covenant. Ib.

An appointee under the power was admitted to the copyholds, and obtained an enfranchisement to himself:—Held, that the concurrence of the customary heir of the settlor was a question of conveyance, and not of title, for that the heir clearly had no beneficial interest. Ib.

5. A feme sole, by a settlement made three years before her coverture, declared the trusts of a fund, which she had previously transferred into the names of trustees, to be for such person or persons and for such uses as she should by deed appoint, and in default of such appointment, for herself so long as she should continue sole and unmarried, and in the event of her marriage, for herself for life for her separate use, without power of anticipation, with remainder for all or any one or more of her children, grandchildren, or other issue, as she should by deed or will appoint, with remainder, in default of such appointment, for her children equally, with remainder in default of children who should obtain a vested interest for her next of kin as therein mentioned:—Held, that, upon the marriage of the settlor, her ability to exercise the general power of appointment reserved in the settlement became suspended, the trust declared of the fund in the event of marriage being inconsistent with the continuance of a general power of appointment in the settlor over the fund. Gould v. Gould, 2 Jur., N. S., 484; 25 L. J., Ch., 642.

6. A father gave his residuary estate to trustees upon trust for his daughter for life, and after her death amongst her children, grandchildren, or other issue, as she should by deed or will appoint, and in default of appointment as she should by deed or will generally appoint, and in default of appointment under that power to her nearest of kin, according to the Statute of Distributions. The daughter made a testamentary appointment under the general power in favour of her husband, reciting, as the fact was, that she had then no children. She afterwards had children, but died without revoking the appointment:—Held, first, that there was an implied gift to the objects of the first power in default of appointment. Re Jeffrey, 14 L. R., Eq., 136; 26 L. T., N. S., 821.

Held, secondly, that if not, the appointment was conditional on there being no children, and they took as nearest of kin as in default of appointment. Ib.

1. A general power of appointment was given to a feme sole under a settlement of her property, with subsequent trusts, in default of appointment, for herself and any future husband, and a power of appointment among children, and with a provision that her after acquired property should be subject to the same trusts:—Held, that the power could be exercised during coverture, and that an appointment made in exercise of it after marriage in favour of the donee of the power and her husband was valid. Wood v. Wood, 10 L. R., Eq., 220; 39 L. J., Ch., 790; 18 W. R. 819; 23 L. T., N. S., 295.

2. Where, in a deed, a power is given to appoint among issue, followed by a limitation over in their favour, and then it is declared that the children shall take in equal shares, the word "children" does not cut down the strict technical meaning of the word "issue." Harrison v. Symons, 14 W. R. 959.

3. By marriage articles a reversionary interest in a fund was agreed to be settled on the husband for life, remainder to the wife for life, and after the death of the survivor on the issue of the marriage living at the death of such survivor, in equal shares if more than one, and if but one, then the whole to such only child; and if there should be no issue of the marriage living at the death of the survivor, then as the husband should appoint. The only child of the marriage died in the father's lifetime, leaving a child:—Held, that the word issue was to be construed child, and that an appointment made by the father to himself was valid. Swift v. Swift, 8 Sim. 168; 5 L. J. N. S., Ch., 376.

III. PROPERTY OR POWER.

1. Gift to be at the Disposal of a Person (Absolute Interests), 5709.
2. Gift of Absolute Interest with Power Superadded, 5711.
3. Express Gift of Life Interest with Power Superadded, 5712.

1. Gift to be at the Disposal of a Person (Absolute Interests).

4. Bequest of 3,000*l.* to A. to dispose of by will:—Held, an absolute interest in A. Maskelyne v. Maskelyne, Ambl. 750.

5. A gift of personalty to trustees to pay the interest to A., with a power to dispose of the fund by will as he pleased, and without any other words of limitation, is an absolute gift of the principal. Elton v. Sheppard, 1 Bro. C. C. 532.

6. A., by will, devises his land to B. in fee, paying 400*l.*, whereof 200*l.* to be at the disposal of his wife, by her will, to whom she should think fit; the wife dies intestate; her administrator shall have this 200*l.*, the property thereof being absolutely vested in the wife. Robinson v. Dusgate, 2 Vern. 181.

7. Bequest to the testator's wife of 60*l.* a year for life, and the sum of 300*l.* to be disposed of as she thinks proper, to be paid after her death, and a leasehold house and furniture for life; an absolute interest in the 300*l.* transmissible to the administrator; not a mere power of appointment. Will not construed by reference to a settlement, the provisions differing in some respects, though a substitution was intended. Hixon v. Oliver, 13 Ves. 108.

8. Testator bequeathed the remainder of his property to his sister, A. B., to dispose of amongst her children as she might think proper:—Held, that A. B. took no interest in the residue. Blakeney v. Blakeney, 6 Sim. 52.

9. Testator expressing his will and desire that one-third of the principal of his estate and effects be left entirely to the disposal of his wife among such of her relations as she may think proper, after the death of his sisters: a trust for her next of kin at the time of her death, having made no disposition. Birch v. Wade, 3 Ves. & B. 198.

10. Testator bequeathed the whole of his property to his wife for her life, and directed that upon her death one-third should devolve on his daughter, and that the other two-thirds should be at the sole and entire disposal of his wife, trusting that, should she not marry again, and have other children, her affection for their daughter would induce her to make the daughter her principal heir. The widow died unmarried:—Held, that she took an absolute interest in the two-thirds under the will. Hoy v. Master, 6 Sim. 568.

11. Under a bequest "in trust, for the use of my father, to be disposed of by him, share and share alike, as he by will or deed may appoint, among my brothers H. & J., and the daughter or daughters of S.":—Held, that the father took a life estate, and that H. and J., and the daughters of S., were each entitled equally in default of appointment. Acheson v. Fair, 2 Con. & L. 208; 3 Dr. & War. 512.

12. J. gives the residue of his estate to his daughter C., to dispose of as she shall think fit; but if she should die unmarried, or intestate, then what was left to her should go to his brother's children. C. possessed this residue, and disposed of it in making purchases, and taking securities in her own name. She afterwards died intestate and unmarried:—Held, that all her personal estate belonged to her next of kin; and that no part of it could be considered as the specific personal estate of her father, or go to his brother's children. Lightburne v. Gill, 3 Bro. P. C. 250.

13. A wife during coverture appoints by deed poll 300*l.* to be paid to her husband, to be employed by him to such charitable uses, or other purposes and intents, as he should think fit:—Held, that the husband had the complete ownership of the 300*l.*, and notwithstanding other directions in his will, it might be applied to satisfy the debts. Hinton v. Toye, 1 Atk. 465.

14. "I give to A. C. 500*l.*, and it is my will and desire that A. C. may dispose of the same amongst her relations, as she by will may think proper":—Held, a trust for the relations of A. C., and the 500*l.* well bequeathed by the will of A. C. to her sister, and her sister's children, though made without reference to the will of the first testator. Forbes v. Ball, 3 Meriv. 437.

1. A testator directed his property to be placed in the funds, and the income to be paid to his wife for her life. After her death he bequeathed two legacies of 6,000*l.* and 1,000*l.* The remainder of his property he left "at the disposal" of his wife, if she remained a widow. If she should marry she was to have no control over his property, but the executors were to pay her an annuity during her life; and the remainder of the testator's property, after paying the above legacies, was to be divided among his nephews and nieces:—Held, that the widow, who did not marry again, took the capital of the residue, subject to the legacies. Nowlan v. Walsh, 4 De G. & S. 584.

2. A testator gave the interest of 10,000*l.* to his son for his life; and in case of his death, leaving issue, the capital to be divided among his children equally; but if he should die without lawful issue, then he gave a moiety of the capital to be disposed of as his son should think proper. The son died without having had any issue:—Held, that he took an absolute interest in the moiety of the 10,000*l.* Re Maxwell, 3 Jur., N. S., 902; 26 L. J., Ch., 854; 24 Beav. 246.

3. A., after particularising his real and personal estate, bequeathed the residue to his children living at his death, share and share alike, the share of his daughters to be paid to them on their marriage, provided a settlement, with the approbation of his executors, was executed on the marriage of each, and in case such settlement was not made, each of his daughters should be entitled to the interest of her share for life only, with a gift over; and he declared, that in case any of his daughters should die unmarried, "she shall have power and liberty to dispose of, by will or otherwise, 500*l.* of her share, and the remainder of her share is to be divided, share and share alike, amongst all my other children then living, except those who may have married without the settlement aforesaid." C., one of his daughters, died intestate and unmarried:—Held, that she took an absolute interest in her share, to the extent of 500*l.*, which was to be considered as a gross sum of money, taken out of her share, and not as an aliquot part of her share; and that it was to be considered as personalty in C., and not as partly real and partly personal. Re M'Donnell, 13 Ir. Ch. R. 268.

4. If a testator leaves a legacy absolutely as regards his estate, but restricts the mode of the legatee's enjoyment of it to secure certain objects for the benefit of the legatee, upon failure of such objects the absolute gift prevails. Kellett v. Kellett, 3 L. R., H. L., 160.

5. A. having been indebted to the estate of B. in a sum of money, but from which he had been discharged under a commission of bankruptcy, voluntarily executed to C., the widow of B., a bond for the payment of part of such debt, for the use of herself and children, but at her disposal. Two years afterwards, A. executed to C. another bond for the payment of the remainder of such debt, for the use and benefit of herself and children only, in what proportions among the latter she may think proper to direct, but for no other use, purpose, or interest whatsoever:—Held, that the widow took a life interest in the money secured by the bonds, and that the principal, after her decease, became payable among the children, in such manner, and in such proportions, as she should direct; and the widow having made an exclusive appointment in favour of two of her children, it was held that such appointment was void, and that all the children took as tenants in common. Though, generally speaking, an instrument must be construed by the provisions contained in it, and not by anything dehors, yet, under the circumstances of this case, held, that the Court might call the language of the second bond into aid in construing the effect of the first. Where there is a general power of appointment among children, and the appointment from any circumstance becomes void, the children take as tenants in common. Fowler v. Hunter, 3 Y. & J. 506.

6. A testator, in his will, gave to G., then unmarried, 2,000*l.* for life, whom failing, to her children at her death; whom failing, to P. Some years afterwards, G. having been married, but having no children or the prospect of any, the testator, by codicil, said: "I reverse that clause, and commit to G.'s discretion the sole and ultimate disposal of the 2,000*l.*":—Held, though if G. had been sui juris, this would have amounted to an absolute gift to her of the 2,000*l.*, yet as she was a married woman, and the sole object of the codicil was to meet the case of her want of issue, she had merely a power of appointment of that sum. Pursell v. Elder, 13 L. T., N. S., 203.

7. A testator gave to his wife all his copyhold, freehold, and personal estate for her absolute fee for ever and ever, and to her heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, also all his personal, leasehold, and general possession, to and for her use, and for the use of his children, and authorised her to appropriate any part for her immediate use, and for that of her children:—Held, that the wife and children were joint tenants, with a power to the wife to appropriate the property on the testator's death for a pressing exigency. Curtis v. Graham, 12 W. R. 993; 10 L. T., N. S., 734.

8. Under a bequest of personal property to a married woman for her own proper use and benefit for ever for her separate use, and the proceeds to be applied in the bringing up and maintenance of her children, there is no trust. Mackett v. Mackett, 41 L. J., Ch., 704; 14 L. R., Eq., 49; 20 W. R. 860.

9. A husband devised a freehold house to his wife, to be at her will and disposal in any way she might think best for the benefit of herself and family:—Held, that the widow took the fee simple of the house unfettered by any trust. Lambe v. Eames, 40 L. J., Ch., 15. Affirmed 40 L. J., Ch., 447; 6 L. R., Ch., 597; 25 L. T., N. S., 175; 19 W. R. 659.

10. A testator gave all his property to his wife absolutely with full power for her to dispose of the same as she may think fit for the benefit of my family, having full confidence that she will do so:—Held, that the wife took absolutely. Re Hutchinson, 8 L. R., Ch. D 540; 39 L. T., N. S., 86; 26 W. R. 904.

2. Gift of Absolute Interest with Power Superadded.

1. Where a sum of money is bequeathed in terms that give an absolute interest to the legatee, the mere addition, by subsequent words, of a power to dispose of the legacy by will during the continuance of a prior life interest in the money, does not by implication exclude the right of the legatee to dispose of it by deed inter vivos during the same period. Comber v. Graham, 1 Russ. & M. 450.

2. Testator gave 1,000*l.* stock to a married woman for her separate use, and whenever she should die to be absolutely in her own power to dispose of by will, or writing purporting to be her will, to any person or persons, purpose or purposes, she should then think proper; but in case of failure of any such disposition or appointment, to go over. This is not a power but an absolute gift, qualified only to exclude the husband upon the death of his wife; therefore it passed by general words in her will. Hales v. Margerum, 3 Ves. 299.

3. Bequest of personal property in trust for A. (a married woman), for her separate use: with a power of disposing by will (except to particular persons). "And in case she dies without a will, I give all that may remain at her decease to B.," followed by a gift of "all the rest and residue" to A., who is appointed executrix. A. takes the absolute interest in the property, not a power of disposing merely. And the gift to B., of "all that may remain at her decease," is void for uncertainty. Bull v. Kingston, 1 Meriv. 314.

4. S. G. granted and devised to trustees certain freehold property for the term of ninety-nine years, at a peppercorn rent, upon trust to permit his wife and such persons as she should by will bequeath the same to, to take to his, her, or their own use and benefit the rents, etc., of the said lands for the said term of ninety-nine years, exclusively of any husband of his said wife. The wife, after her husband's death, conveyed her interest in the property to certain persons represented by the defendant, and subsequently made her will, giving the property to the plaintiff:—Held, that the wife of S. G. took the property for the whole term of ninety-nine years, and not merely a life estate, with remainder to such persons as she should appoint by will; and that she had conveyed away all her interest to the defendant. Glover v. Hall, 16 Sim. 568; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 305.

5. By a codicil the testator, reciting that by a previous codicil he had given to A. R. 3,000*l.* 3 per cent. annuities, revoked the said bequest, and gave her the sum of 3,000*l.* 3 per cent. consols for her separate use during her life, with power to dispose of the same by her last will:—Held, that the power did not cut down the preceding gift to a life estate. Reuddock v. Poole, 1 Jur. 980.

6. A testator gave and bequeathed all his personal estate and effects to his daughter, the same to be always considered as vested in her, upon her attaining twenty-one, and to be subject to her disposition thereof; and the testator further directed that in case his daughter should happen to depart this life without attaining twenty-one, or without disposing by her will of the property bequeathed to her, then the same to be subject to the disposition by will of his wife. The testator's daughter married under twenty-one, and by articles previously to her marriage the husband covenanted to settle all the property left her by the testator upon his wife and himself for life, and then for the benefit of the children of the marriage:—Held, that the daughter took the property not absolutely but for life only, with power to dispose of it by will, and that her husband not having reduced it into possession, the articles were not binding upon the wife. Borton v. Borton, 16 Sim. 552; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 219; 13 Jur. 247.

7. Bequest to a woman of the dividends of a sum of stock for her separate use, with a direction that at her death she might leave it to her children, or whom she might choose:—Held, an absolute gift, and that she was entitled to payment. Southouse v. Bate, 16 Beav. 132.

8. Bequest to two persons "in two equal parts, each for his and her sole use and benefit, and to be disposed of as each of them pleases, at their death, or if not so disposed of, to be equally divided at their deaths between their children":—Held, an absolute gift of the principal. Re Mortlock, 3 Kay & J. 456; 26 L. J., Ch., 671; 5 W. R. 748.

9. Gift of residuary real and personal estate to the testator's wife, with power to her to dispose of the same unto and amongst all the testator's children, or to any one or more of them, for such estate, either in fee simple or in tail, term of life, or other interest, temporary or lasting, or in such other shares, proportions, or interest as his wife should, in her discretion, see most fitting and proper:—Held, to be an absolute gift to the wife. Howarth v. Dewell, 6 Jur., N. S., 1360; 9 W. R. 27; 29 Beav. 18.

10. Devise of copyholds to a married woman to be her sole and separate property, and with power to her to appoint the same to her children and her husband, in such way and in such proportions as she may think fit:—Held, that she was devisee in fee, and that the execution of the power was not made a duty, and therefore no trust in favour of the husband and children. Brook v. Brook, 3 Sm. & G. 280.

11. A testator made an indefinite bequest of the interest of his residue to a class of children equally, with a declaration that they should have the right to will away their shares on their deaths. There was a gift over, if they should omit to make their wills:—Held, that they took absolute vested interests, and not a life interest, with a power to bequeath, and that the gift over was void for repugnancy. Weale v. Ollive, 32 Beav. 421.

12. A testator gave all his property to his wife absolutely "and to be by her willed to any or either of my children, in any manner suitable to her wishes." The wife devised the real estate to one of the sons, in liquidation of a debt due to him from the testator, and afterwards entered into an agreement with him and another son to the same effect, stipulating that they should contribute a certain sum towards her maintenance:—Held, that there was a trust engrafted on the estate given to the wife in favour of those children who should survive her, with power to her if she chose, to bequeath it to any of them; that the will and agreement were not an exercise of the power, they being in consideration of benefits to be derived by herself. Evans v. Evans, 12 W. R. 508; 10 L. T., N. S., 59; 33 L. J., Ch., 662.

3. Express Gift of Life Interest with Power Superadded.

1. Devise to A., the testator's wife, for life, and then to be at her disposal provided it be to any of his children, gives an estate for life with power to dispose of the fee. Tomlinson v. Dighton, 1 P. W. 149.

2. Investment of stock directed in trust to pay the dividends to testator's son for life, and, after his death, to transfer part of the capital according to his appointment, gives an interest for life only, with a power. Nannock v. Horton, 7 Ves. 391.

3. An express estate for life, with a power to dispose by will, does not give an absolute interest, so as to preclude the necessity of executing the power. Reid v. Shergold, 10 Ves. 370.

4. Bequest of all money, stock, etc., and all other personal estate, to the sole use of the testator's wife for life, to be at her full, free, and absolute disposal during her life, without being liable to any account, and, after her decease, certain articles specified, and 500*l*., according to her appointment by will, in default of appointment to fall into the residue, which was disposed of. An interest for life only, with a limited power of disposition. Bradly v. Westcott, 13 Ves. 445.

5. Devise of property to be sold, and the proceeds invested in the Bank of England, and the interest to be paid to testator's daughter for her life, and the principal wholly at her disposal at her death:—Held, not to give the daughter an absolute interest, so that she could dispose of it during her life. Simpson v. Forester, 1 Knapp 241.

6. A gift of personal estate to the wife for life, with a direction that after her death one moiety thereof shall be at her entire disposal, either by will or otherwise, amounts only to an estate for life in the wife, with a power of appointment. Reith v. Seymour, 4 Russ. 263; 6 L. J., Ch., 97.

7. Bequest of household goods, etc., after payment of debts, etc., to testator's wife for her life or widowhood, with power to her to sell same as she should think proper for her own benefit, and the maintenance of the testator's nephew, etc., during their minority, with a bequest over, upon the death or second marriage of the wife, of the same or so much as should then remain to such nephew, etc.:—Held, that widow was entitled to residue for her life or widowhood, with power to apply any part of the capital for her own benefit, proper maintenance of nephew, etc., during minorities, and that, on death or marriage of widow, remainder of capital unapplied was well limited over. Surman v. Surman, 5 Madd. 123.

8. "I bequeath to my wife all the household furniture and movable goods and chattels in and belonging to my dwelling-house, except my books; I bequeath to her the use of my plate, with power to dispose of such portion thereof as she shall think proper":—Held, that the wife took a life interest only in the plate, and that, as she had not disposed of it during her life, it fell into the residue. Espinasse v. Luffingham, 3 J. & L. 186; 8 Ir. Eq. R. 129.

9. Bequest to a lady of a sum of stock, "to be transferred to her for her sole and entire use during her life, that she shall not alienate it, but enjoy the interest of it during her said life, and, at her decease, she may dispose of it as she thinks fit":—Held, to give a life interest, with a power of appointment by will. Archibald v. Wright, 9 Sim. 161; 7 L. J., N. S., Ch., 120; 2 Jur. 759.

10. Moneys secured by judgments, the property of the wife, were, by an ante-nuptial settlement, assigned to trustees upon trust for her during her life, and in case there should be issue of the marriage upon certain trusts for their benefit, and in case there should not be any such issue then upon trust, to permit the wife to dispose of the moneys to such persons as she, whether sole or married, by any deed or writing, with or without power of revocation, to be by her sealed and delivered in the presence of, or attested by, two or more witnesses, should appoint, or in default of such appointment, gift, or devise to her next of kin, under the Statute of Distributions. There was not any issue of the marriage. The surviving trustee received a portion of the moneys secured by the judgments, and paid a part thereof to the husband during his lifetime, and the remaining part to the wife after his death. No appointment by deed or writing was executed by the wife:—Held, that the wife took only a life estate, with a general power of appointment; and that as she never had exercised that power with the solemnities specified in the settlement, the payments to her and to her husband were invalid, and, accordingly, the trustee was bound to replace the fund for the benefit of the next of kin of the wife. Reid v. Thompson, 2 Ir. Ch. R. 26.

11. Devise and bequest of real and personal estate, in trust, to pay the rents, dividends, etc., to the separate use of a married woman for life, and after her decease to convey, etc., according to her appointment by deed or will, with a limitation over in case of her death in the life of testatrix or in default of appointment. Absolute property, notwithstanding the said indication of an intention that the estate should remain in the trustee for her life, with powers inconsistent in a degree with the supposition of her having or being able to acquire the absolute interest. Barford v. Street, 16 Ves. 135.

12. A bequest to a feme sole "to be by her possessed and enjoyed absolutely during the term of her natural life, and to be disposed of as she shall think fit at her death":—Held, to entitle the legatee to payment of the whole fund. Re David, 1 Johns. 495.

13. A testator gave a fund to A. for life, and afterwards to his surviving children, but if he died without any, he gave one half of it to be disposed of as A. should think proper. The son never married:—Held, that he took an absolute interest in the one-half, and not a life interest, with a power of appointment. Re

Maxwell, 24 Beav. 246; 3 Jur., N. S., 902; 26 L. J., Ch., 854.

1. Settlement by a feme sole in contemplation of marriage, of part of her fortune in trust to pay the dividends to herself for her separate use for life, and after her death for her intended husband, and after the death of the survivor, to transfer the capital, according to her appointment by will, and in case she should die without appointment, and he should be then dead, in trust for her next of kin, their executors, etc., according to the Statute of Distributions; an interest for life only in the widow, with a power of disposition by will. Anderson v. Dawson, 15 Ves. 532.

2. Testator, having by his will made his daughter tenant for life of his general real estates, and of lands to be purchased, both with his personal estates, and with the profits arising from sale of timber, devises his collieries, etc., upon trust to dispose and convey the same in such manner as she, whether sole or covert, should direct and appoint, and in default of appointment to apply the money produced by the collieries, after paying the expenses, to the same uses as the residue of his personal estate; the testator then, after declaring that, though his meaning was to give his daughter the absolute disposal of the said collieries, etc., to prevent the expense and trouble that must attend the management of affairs of such a nature, under the direction of the Court of Chancery, requested her to direct the money arising therefrom to be applied in such manner as he had directed the same in default of appointment:—Held, that from the general frame and intent of the will, the daughter had not the absolute disposal of this property, but that her interest was confined to a disposition by sale. Bute (Earl) v. Stuart, 2 Eden 88; 1 Bro. P. C. 476.

3. Devise to testator's widow for life, to be by her divided among such of testator's children and their issue as should be surviving at her death. The power well executed by a will appointing a share to each of the surviving children of the testator, or, in case of their deaths, to their children respectively, and another share to the children of a deceased child. Exp. Williams, 1 Jac. & Walk. 89.

4. Legacy in trust to be laid out in stock, the dividends as they came due to A. for life; and after her decease, to pay the principal according to her appointment by will or otherwise, with power to her to purchase with it an annuity with the approbation of the trustees, but not to sell it. A. has an absolute power of disposition, and her will was held a sufficient indication of her intention to take the whole, making a formal appointment or writing unnecessary. Irwin v. Farrar, 19 Ves. 86.

5. Bequests to females, some of whom were married and some single, for their separate use for their respective lives, and after their decease to such persons as they should respectively appoint, and in default of appointment to their respective executors, administrators, and assigns:—Held, that the legatees, whether married or unmarried women, were each entitled upon petition, without executing any formal appointment, to an immediate transfer or payment to themselves of the corpus of their shares of the fund. Holloway v. Clarkson, 2 Hare 521; 6 Jur. 923.

6. Money in court stood limited to a widow for life, and afterwards as she should by deed or will appoint. The Court directed payment to her, without requiring an appointment. Cambridge v. Rous, 25 Beav. 574.

7. A. bequeathed the income of his residue to his widow for life, but desired "that in case anything should occur that her income is not sufficient, she shall be at liberty to go to the principal." He gave the residue to his brothers. The residue only produced 30*l.* a year, and the widow claimed the whole capital:—Held, that she was only entitled to so much of the capital as, with the income, would afford her a maintenance suitable to her station in life. Re Pedrotti, 27 Beav. 583.

8. A husband left his real and personal property to his wife for her life, with power to dispose of all the property, both real and personal, as she might judge best and wisest, he relying with confidence on her discretion, and that she would make such a distribution or disposal of it as would thoroughly accord with his wishes on the subject, with all of which she was perfectly acquainted. There was some evidence of the testator having communicated some wishes to his wife, but none as to what they were:—Held, that the terms of the gift to the wife did not amount to a precatory trust, and that she took the property, both real and personal, absolutely. Reid v. Atkinson, 5 Ir. R., Eq., 373.

9. The property of a married woman, settled by an ante-nuptial settlement for her separate use for life, with remainder as she should by deed or will appoint, with remainder in failure of appointment to her executors or administrators, is an absolute settlement for her sole and separate use, without restraint on anticipation, and vests in equity the entire corpus in her for all purposes. London Chartered Bank of Australia v. Lemprière, 4 L. R., P. C., 572; 42 L. J., P. C., 49; 29 L. T. 186; 21 W. R. 513; 9 Moo. P. C., N. S., 426.

10. Bequest to two persons "in two equal parts, each for his and her sole use and benefit, and to be disposed of as each of them pleases, at their death, or if not so disposed of, to be equally divided at their deaths between their children":—Held, an absolute gift of the principal. Re Mortlock, 3 Kay & J. 456; 26 L. J., Ch., 671.

11. A wife by will appointed real estate to her husband upon trust for his own use for life, "with power to take and apply the whole or any part of the capital arising therefrom to and for his own benefit." After his death "subject as aforesaid" over to other persons. The husband died without exercising the power:—Held, that he had only a life estate, and that the property went to the persons to whom it was given in remainder after his death. Pennock v. Pennock, 41 L. J., Ch., 141; 13 L. R., Eq., 144; 25 L. T., N. S., 691; 20 W. R. 141.

12. A testator gave all his property to his wife for life, and directed her to pay his debts, and, "at her decease, to make such a distribution and disposal of his then remaining property among his children as might seem just and equitable, according to her discretion":—Held, a power to the wife, exer-

1. Devise and bequest to a widow for the term of her natural life, "and to be distributed to the testator's family at her decease as she might think proper":—Held, that the power of distribution was not testamentary only, but was exercisable by deed, and that, under the word "family," an illegitimate child whom the testator had treated and recognised as a child, was included as an object of the power. Humble v. Bowman, 47 L. J., Ch., 62.

2. A gift by will to A. for life, and "at," or "after," his decease to such persons as he shall appoint, gives A. a life interest with a power of appointment either by instrument inter vivos or by will; there being no rule of construction under which a gift in such terms, unless controlled by the context, can be held to confer a testamentary power only. Bequest of residue to A. for life, "the whole principal at her death to be divided amongst her children, if she has any, in such proportions as she shall think proper; and if she dies without leaving children," then over. A. died without having exercised her power of appointment, and having had three children, of whom one only survived her:—Held, that the three children took vested interests liable to be divested by the exercise, either by instrument inter vivos or by will, of A.'s power of appointment: and accordingly that on A.'s death the residue became divisible in equal thirds between the surviving child and the representatives of the two deceased children. Re Jackson's Will, 13 L. R., Ch. D., 189; 49 L. J., Ch., 82; 28 W. R. 209; 41 L. T. 499.

3. A bequest of residue to trustees, upon trust to permit the testator's wife to receive the annual produce for her life, with power to apply to her own use such parts of the capital as she should think proper; and after her decease, upon trust, as to such portions as should remain after such application of any part thereof by his wife, for such persons as she should by will appoint; and in default of and subject to any such appointment, in trust for certain persons named:—Held, that the widow took a life interest only in the residue, with power of disposition of the capital, and of appointment by will. Scott v. Josselyn, 26 Beav. 174; 5 Jur., N. S., 560; 28 L. J., Ch., 297.

4. A testator gave and devised to his brother all his real and personal estate and effects whatsoever and wheresoever, with full power to dispose thereof by deed or will, and then provided that if his brother should not dispose thereof the real estate should go to H. for life, with numerous limitations over. He then bequeathed his furniture, etc., to executors, as heirlooms, and gave all the residue of his estate and effects to the executors upon trust, after the decease of the survivor of his brother and himself, to sell and dispose thereof, and invest in other real estates to be settled to the same uses as he had declared concerning the real estates devised by his will, with powers of investment in the meantime. The brother died before the testator. On the death of the testator in 1803 H. entered into possession, and held the estates till his death in 1869. On the death of H. the persons entitled under his will took possession of the property, which was then claimed by the persons entitled under the limitations in the will of the original testator:—Held, that though the first clause in the will amounted to an absolute gift, the whole will showed a clear intention to give the testator's brother an estate for life only with a power of appointment, and that as that power of appointment had not been exercised, the limitations over took effect. Re Stringer, Shaw v. Ford, 46 L. J., Ch., 633; 6 L. R., Ch. D., 1; 37 L. T., N. S., 233; 25 W. R. 815.

Semble, that if no such intention had appeared on the will, the limitations over would have taken effect, as the brother died in the lifetime of the testator. Ib.

5. A testator gave his residuary estate to be equally divided amongst his children. He afterwards gave the dividends for the use of each of his children during their respective lives, and if they had children, then the principal to be at the disposal of the parent to such children:—Held, that the children took their respective shares for their lives, and had power to appoint to their respective children, if any. Butler v. Gray, 5 L. R., Ch., 26; 39 L. J., Ch., 291.

6. A testator by his will gave realty and personalty to his widow "for the term of her natural life to be disposed of as she may think proper for her own use and benefit according to the nature and quality thereof," and "in the event of her decease should there be anything remaining of the said property or any part thereof," he gave "said part or parts thereof" to certain persons:—Held, that the widow of the testator took a life interest with an absolute power of disposition exercisable by her during her lifetime, but not by testamentary instrument. Re Thomson's Estate, Herring v. Barrow, 13 L. R., Ch. D., 144; 49 L. J., Ch., 16. S. C. on appeal, 14 L. R., Ch. D., 263; 49 L. J., Ch., 622; 43 L. T. 35; 28 W. R. 802.

IV. IMPLIED GIFT OF LIFE ESTATE, WITH POWER SUPERADDED.

7. A bequest to a person "to and for her own absolute use and benefit, in the fullest confidence that she will dispose of the same for the benefit of her children, according to the best of her judgment, and as family circumstances may require at her hands," gives to her a life interest, with a power of appointment among her children. Shovelton v. Shovelton, 1 N. R. 226; 32 Beav. 143.

8. A testator gave all his property (subject to his debts) to his wife, "her heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns, to and for her sole use and benefit, in full confidence that she will, in every respect, appropriate and apply the same unto and for the benefit of all my children;" and the testator appointed his wife executrix. The testator, by a codicil, after alluding to having built two houses, desired that his property in that estate should be disposed of to his wife for the same intents and purposes as in his will his other property was directed to be applied to:—Held, that the widow took a life interest in the property, with power of appointment among the children, and, in default of appointment, the children took as joint tenants absolutely. Wace or Ware v. Mallard, 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 355; 16 Jur. 492.

1. Under a bequest "in trust, for the use of my father, to be disposed of by him, share and share alike, as he by will or deed may appoint, among my brothers H. and J., and the daughter or daughters of S.":—Held, that the father took a life estate, and that H. and J., and the daughters of S., were each entitled equally in default of appointment. Acheson v. Fair, 2 Con. & L. 208; 3 Dr. & War. 512.

2. N. devises to his wife all his estate, leases, and interest in his house in A., and all the goods and furniture therein at the time of his death, and also all his plate, jewels, etc., but desired her, at or before her death, to give such leases, etc., unto such of his own relations as she should think most deserving. The wife did not give, at or before her death, the goods in the said house, or her husband's jewels, to his relations:—Held, that the wife took beneficially only during her life, and that so much of the household goods in A. not disposed of by her according to the power given her by the will of N., in case the same remains in specie, or the value thereof, ought to be divided equally among such of the relations as were his next of kin at the time of his death. Harding v. Glyn, 1 Atk. 469.

3. A testator gave his residuary real and personal estate to his widow, "to and for her own sole use and benefit for ever, feeling assured and having every confidence that she will hereafter dispose of the same fairly, justly, and equitably, amongst my two daughters and their children;" and he appointed her sole executrix and residuary legatee:—Held, that the widow took beneficially for life, with remainder to the two daughters and their children, as she should appoint; but the Court refrained from declaring how the property would devolve in default of appointment. Gully v. Cregoe, 24 Beav. 185.

4. Devise to A., the testator's wife, and then to be at her disposal, provided it be to any of his children, gives an estate for life with a power to dispose of the fee. And where such devisee with an after-taken husband did, by lease and release and fine, convey the premises to a trustee and his heir, to the use of the wife for life without impeachment of waste, remainder to her daughter by her first husband and the heirs of her body, remainder to the son by the first husband and his heirs: this adjudged a good execution of the power. Tomlinson v. Dighton, 1 P. W. 149; Salk. 239; 10 Mod. 31; Com. 194.

5. Upon a bequest by a testatrix of a fund for the separate use of her daughter for life, and afterwards for her executors and administrators, for their own absolute use and benefit, the daughter being separated from her husband made a will, appointing the stock, but the will was not proved, and the husband took out administration:—Held, that the daughter took for life only, had no power to appoint the fund, and the husband was entitled to the stock. Wallis v. Taylor, 8 Sim. 241.

6. Bequest of residuary personal estate after decease of testator's widow, or her marriage in his daughter's lifetime, to his "daughter, the same to be always considered as vested in her upon her attaining the age of twenty-one years, and to be subject to her disposition thereof;" and in case his daughter should die "without attaining twenty-one, or without disposing by her will of the property," then over:—Held, upon the context, that the daughter took for life, with a testamentary power of disposition. Borton v. Borton, 16 Sim. 552; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 219; 13 Jur. 247.

7. Bequest to E. and W. (nephews) and G. (niece), if they should survive testator and attain twenty-one, when the legacies to nephews were "to be paid." In case of the death of either of the nephews or niece, leaving issue, such issue to take the parent's legacy as by his or her will directed; if no will, equally; but in case of the death of either, before his or her legacy payable, his or her legacy to go to survivor during minority; to apply income for maintenance; and the testator directed that G.'s legacy should be settled. E. and W. attained twenty-one:—Held, that they only took a life interest, with power of appointment among their children, and if no children then absolutely. Martineau v. Rogers, 4 W. R. 502; 25 L. J., Ch., 398.

8. A testator gave all his realty and personalty to trustees upon trust, as to one-sixth, in trust during the life of L. M., subject to certain payments thereout, to pay the clear rents to L. M. or her assigns not by way of anticipation during her life, and from and immediately after her decease upon trust for the heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns of the said L. M., according to the several natures and qualities thereof. There are then gifts of two other sixths in the same terms:—Held, that both in the realty and personalty L. M. and the donees of the two other sixths took life estates, with absolute powers of appointment by deed. Quested v. Michell, 5 W. R. 834.

9. Bequest of the testator's property to his wife to bring up and educate his children, and when they should come of age, to settle on them what she should deem prudent, reserving to herself a sufficient maintenance; and, at her death, the property remaining to be equally divided amongst his children; with a gift to trustees for the children, in case of the marriage of his widow:—Held, that the widow took a life interest in the property, with a power to settle or appoint the same on or to the children of the testator, but not on or to his grandchildren; and that the children took vested interests in the property at the testator's death, liable to be divested by such appointment. Kennerley v. Kennerley, 10 Hare 160; 16 Jur. 649.

10. A father bequeathed to each of the persons thereinafter named, including a married niece, for his or her own absolute use, 10,000*l.*, "except as hereinafter limited." After bequeathing annuities to three ladies, he directed that the legacies to his nieces were to be invested, and the interest therefrom, together with the annuities, were to be in trust for their separate use, and in case any one of the three annuitants, or either of his nieces, should become bankrupt or insolvent, or sell, mortgage, or dispose of the annual sum or interest bequeathed to her, then the same should cease and become part of his residuary estate as though dead, except in respect of his married niece, whose legacy was to go to her children according to her appointment, and in default to them equally. Upon the death of the married niece:—Held, that she took the legacy for her life only, with remainder to her children as she should appoint, and in default to them equally, and that therefore her husband ought not, in respect of it, to take out administration to her. Re Ware, 25 L. T., N. S., 737; 20 W. R. 142.

1. L. directed by his will all his property to be equally divided, share and share alike, among all his children. He then directed the children's shares to be invested in the names of the children respectively and of two trustees, and the dividends to be paid to the children respectively during their lives, and that if any of his children should die leaving children, the shares of the respective parents were to be at their disposal among their children respectively; but should any of his children die without leaving children, the shares of such children were to go to the others:—Held, that each child of L. took a life interest only under his will, with a power to appoint among his or her children. Butler v. Gray, 18 W. R. 193.

2. A husband appointed his wife sole executrix, and left to her all his property, landed and personal, of every description, for her sole use and benefit, in the full confidence that she would so dispose of it amongst all their children, during her lifetime and at her decease, doing equal justice to all of them:—Held, that the wife took a life interest, with a power of appointment amongst the children as she might think fit. Curnick v. Tucker, 17 L. R., Eq., 320.

3. Gift to the testator's wife of all property whatsoever that he might die possessed of "for her sole use and benefit, in the full confidence that she will so bestow it on her death to my children in a just and equitable spirit, and in such manner and way as she feels would meet with my full approval":—Held, that the widow took a life interest, with a power of disposition amongst the children, the actual extent of which must be determined at the hearing of the cause. Le Marchant v. Le Marchant, 18 L. R., Eq., 414; 22 W. R. 839.

4. A testator died leaving a widow and seven children (all of whom were minors except one), and by a will dated in November 1837 he bequeathed to his wife all his property "for the benefit of herself and my children;" if she married she was to get 100*l.*, and the remainder of his property to be divided, share and share alike, among his children or their survivor. He appointed her to execute the will according to its real meaning and spirit, and recommended her to be guided by the Rev. H. H. in all matters relating to the disposal of his property and the education and advancement of his children:—Held, that the children took no interest in possession, but that the wife was, during her widowhood, tenant for life, with a power of appointment amongst the children. Mill v. Mill, 9 Ir. R., Eq., 104. Affirmed 11 Ir. R., Eq., 158.

Precatory Trusts in General.] See WILL.

V. BY REFERENCE.

5. A father, who had power to appoint to his children and their issue born in his life, appointed 5,000*l.* to his daughter O., who, on the next day, settled it on herself, her husband, and her children generally. Afterwards, by a deed, stating the appointment of 5,000*l.* to O., for her separate use, with power to appoint it, the father appointed another fund to O. "and her children, upon the trusts and subject to the same provisions as are hereinbefore declared of and concerning the sum of 5,000*l.* hereinbefore appointed unto and for the benefit of O., or as near thereto as circumstances will admit:—Held, that O. took the second fund for her separate use, with power to appoint it, and that the children took nothing. Hanbury v. Tyrell, 21 Beav. 322.

6. A testator devised his residuary estate to trustees, upon trust, as to one moiety, for A. for life, with remainder in trust for her children; and in case A. had no children, then, as to one-half of the moiety, upon trust for such persons as A. should appoint; and as to the other half of such moiety, upon the same trusts as were declared of the other moiety of the residuary estate; and he then declared the trusts of the other moiety precisely in the same manner, substituting B. only for A. Neither A. nor B. had any children:—Held, that each had power to appoint one-half of the residuary estate. Atkinson v. Jones, 1 Johns. 246; 28 L. J., Ch., 753.

7. By deed, 10,000*l.* was settled on A. B. for life, with power to appoint to her children or their issue, and in default in trust for her children; power was also given to A. B. to appoint a life interest to her husband. Afterwards, by will, the settlor gave a similar sum, "to be laid out for the sole benefit of C. D. in the same manner as nearly as might be as the 10,000*l.*" secured for A. B. by the deed:—Held, that C. D. was entitled to powers of appointment in favour of her children, their issue, and her husband, but that the children took nothing except through the power. Berchtoldt (Countess) v. Hertford (Marquis), 7 Beav. 172; 8 Jur. 50.

8. A testator by his will had given certain property to his daughter absolutely, and over other property a power. She dies in his lifetime without executing it. By a codicil he gives the property which he gave to the daughter to her husband according to the nature and quality thereof, and directs that he should stand in the same situation with her:—Held, the husband took the power. Hopkinson v. Phipps, 2 Jur. 639.

9. A trust created by reference to other trusts ought not, generally speaking, to be so read as to create a duplication of charges. Hindle v. Taylor, 5 De G. M. & G. 577.

10. A testator gave a legacy to his daughter L., and gave to her and her husband a similar power and control over it as was given by the settlement of her sister. And he directed that if L. should die without issue, her legacy should revert to his surviving children. The settlement of the other daughter gave to her and her husband a joint power; and in default of appointment to the surviving husband, a separate power to appoint to their children; and in default of children, a separate power to the daughter to appoint the fund to any one by will:—Held, that as there was an inconsistency the will must be read strictly, and that L. had no power of testamentary appointment, but only a joint power with her husband to appoint to children. Crossman v. Bevan, 27 Beav. 502; 5 Jur., N. S., 1145; 29 L. J., Ch., 77; 1 L. T., N. S., 120.

1. Testatrix, by her will, declared that every person thereby made tenant for life should have such and the like powers of leasing, selling, and exchanging any part of the devised estate as were by her father's will given to the tenants for life and in tail mentioned in his will, or to the trustees thereof. It appeared that the father's will did not give a tenant for life or in tail any power of leasing, selling, or exchanging, but gave trustees full power to sell and exchange the hereditaments therein comprised, and to give receipts for the purchase money:—Held, that tenant for life in possession of the estate devised by the testatrix had the same powers of selling and exchanging that estate as were by the father's will given to the trustees; but that such powers did not extend to giving receipts; and, semble, that the difficulties which might be met with in exercising such power of sale, in the absence of a power to give receipts, might be removed by paying the money into court under the Trustee Relief Act, stat 10 & 11 Vict., c. 96, and that upon such payment the purchaser might safely complete. Cox v. Cox, 1 Kay & J. 251.

2. A., tenant for life in possession, joined with B., the next heir, in the settlement of certain estates. The settlement contained a power for B., in case of the death of his first wife and his marrying again, to charge the settled estates with portions for the younger children of his second marriage, the amounts being regulated with reference to the number of children that might be born of the first marriage. The deed contained a proviso that if the brothers of B. should, respectively, come into possession of the settled estates, "either before or after their marriage with any woman or women," they might charge all or any part of the estates with "the like sum or sums of money for the portion or portions of their child or children (other than an eldest or only son) as B. is entitled to do before or after his marriage with any woman or women after the decease of his first taken wife by virtue of the provision hereinbefore contained":—Held, that this was an absolute power, which, with reference to a younger brother of B. succeeding to the settled estates, was not subject to the restrictions and contingencies which applied to B. himself in making a charge for the children of his second marriage. Harrington (Earl) v. Harrington, 3 L. R., H. L., 295; 37 L. J., Ch., 858.

3. When the intention of a settlement appears from the recitals to be to secure a provision for children, it is a question of the actual circumstances in each particular case whether a power in the settlement which is in terms general must be cut down to a particular power in favour of children only. There is no general principle governing all such cases. Minton v. Kirwood, 37 L. J., Ch., 606; 18 L. T., N. S., 781; 16 W. R. 991; 3 L. R., Ch., 614.

4. A testator gave real and leasehold property to E. for life, and empowered him to appoint the rents after his death to his wife for life. The testator bequeathed his residuary personalty upon "the like trusts for the benefit of E. and his issue as was thereinbefore declared concerning the real and leasehold estates":—Held, that E. took a power to appoint the income of the residuary personalty to his wife for life. Edwards v. Thompson, 38 L. J., Ch., 65.

5. A father by will gave specific estates to trustees for each of his children for life, remainder to their issue in tail with cross-remainders. He gave each tenant for life power to appoint an annuity not exceeding one-third of the estates specifically devised to him or her to a husband or wife surviving. After directing payment of his debts he gave the residue of his real and personal estate to the trustees to divide between his children, and hold on the same trusts as the specifically-devised estates. On the marriage of a daughter subsequent in date to his will, he by the marriage settlement covenanted to pay to the trustees 4,000*l.* to be held upon trusts as to half for the wife for life, half for the husband for life, the whole for the survivor with remainder to the children of the marriage, and in default for the settlor absolutely. At the same time he made a gift of 1,000*l.* to the husband absolutely, which was recited in the marriage settlement as being part of her portion of 5,000*l.*:—Held, that the referential trusts of the residue included all the powers given over the specifically-devised estates, and gave powers to each tenant for life to appoint an annuity of one-third of the income of his or her share of residue, as well as of the specifically-devised estate to a husband or wife surviving. Cooper v. Macdonald, 42 L. J., Ch., 533; 16 L. R., Eq., 258; 28 L. T. 693.

Secus, if the power had been to appoint an annuity of or not exceeding a fixed amount.

Gifts by Reference Generally.] See WILL.

VI. WHETHER SUBSTITUTIONAL OR ACCUMULATIVE.

6. Settlement of two estates in remainder on W. for life, with remainder to his sons in strict settlement, and remainder over to M., with power to tenants for life in possession to charge estates with a jointure of 400*l.*, and power to revoke the uses of the settlement as to one estate, and to appoint new uses. By a subsequent deed, the settlor exercises the power of revocation as to the remainder to M., in lieu of which he appoints that estate to S., and repeats several of the powers contained in the first settlement, and gave power to W. and S. to charge the estate with 400*l.* jointure. W., by separate deeds, executes both powers of jointure:—Held, on bill by his widow for both jointures, that W. had no new power to jointure under the second settlement.

Wigsell v. Smith, 1 Sim. & S. 321; 1 L. J., Ch., 121. Affirmed 5 Russ. 299.

1. A father by will gave specific estates to trustees for each of his children for life, remainder to their issue in tail with cross-remainders. He gave each tenant for life power to appoint an annuity not exceeding one-third of the estates specifically devised to him or her to a husband or wife surviving. After directing payment of his debts he gave the residue of his real and personal estate to the trustees to divide between his children, and hold on the same trusts as the specifically devised estates. On the marriage of a daughter subsequent in date to his will, he by the marriage settlement covenanted to pay to the trustees 4,000*l.*, to be held upon trusts as to half for the wife for life, half for the husband for life, the whole for the survivor with remainder to the children of the marriage, and in default for the settlor absolutely. At the same time he made a gift of 1,000*l.* to the husband absolutely, which was recited in the marriage settlement as being part of her portion of 5,000*l.*:—Held, first, that the referential trusts of the residue included all the powers given over the specifically-devised estates, and gave powers to each tenant for life to appoint an annuity of one-third of the income of his or her share of residue, as well as of the specifically-devised estate to a husband or wife surviving. Cooper v. Macdonald, 42 L. J., Ch., 533; 16 L. R., Eq., 258; 28 L. T., N. S., 693.

Held, also, that the covenant to settle 4,000*l.* was pro tanto an ademption of the share or residue taken by the daughter, but that the 1,000*l.* paid to the husband was not. Ib.

2. A mortgage deed, dated the 15th June 1825, contained a covenant to pay the mortgage debt twelve months after date, with a power of sale in case of default. A transfer of the mortgage, dated the 2nd July 1830, recited that the old power of sale had not been and was not intended to be exercised, and contained a covenant to pay the mortgage debt seven years after that date, with a power of sale in case of default, and also assigned the debt and all powers and remedies for recovering the same and all the benefit of the previous mortgage:—Held, that the old power was not extinguished. Boyd v. Petrie, 41 L. J., Ch., 378; 7 L. R., Ch., 385; 20 W. R. 513; 25 L. T., N. S., 460.

VII. EXTENT OF ESTATE, OR INTEREST GIVEN TO DONEE OF POWER.

3. Under a settlement to the use of a married woman for her life for her separate use, or to the use of such persons as she should appoint, and in default of appointment upon trust for herself for life for her separate use, with remainders over:—Held, that she had no power to appoint beyond her own life. Lewthwaite v. Clarkson, 2 Y & Coll. 372.

4. Testator devised as follows: "I give and devise unto J. C. the lands of D., to hold to him during his natural life; and from and after his decease, I give and devise the same unto the issue male and female of the said J. C., begotten, or to be begotten upon the body of his present wife, C. C., to be divided between and amongst them, in such manner, shares, and proportions as the said J. C. shall by his last will and testament limit and appoint:—Held, that J. C. took an estate for life only. Crozier v. Crozier, 2 Con. & L. 309; 3 Dr. & War. 353; 5 Ir. Eq. R. 415.

5. E., wife of T., being seised of fee-simple lands, E. and T. conveyed them, by fine and deed leading its uses to a trustee and his heirs, to the use of E. and T., and the survivor for life; with remainder to enable E. to devise the lands to and among the issue of E. and T., in such shares as she should appoint, "it being, however, expressly declared that E. is to have power only to devise such shares and proportions in strict settlement upon such child or children, and their lawful issue, whether male or female; but that if such child should die without having such lawful issue, who should attain twenty-one, or be married, that then and in such case the lands should be devised, go to and among the surviving children and their issue who should attain twenty-one, in such shares and proportions as E. should by will appoint;" in default of appointment, to the children, and to such of their lawful issue as should attain twenty-one, or be married, share and share alike. The deed contained a further provision, in case of E. not making a will, that it should be lawful for T., by will, "to give, devise, and bequeath the lands to and among their issue, in the manner aforesaid, in such shares and proportions as he should thereby direct, limit, and appoint;" in default of appointment, to go equally among the said children, and their lawful issue, for ever:—Held, that T. could not appoint greater estates than life estates to his children. Bell v. Bell, 13 Ir. Ch. R. 517.

T. had power to appoint life estates to his children in esse at the date of the deed, with remainders to their issue in strict settlement. Ib.

VIII. PROPERTY WITHIN THE POWER.

6. Where testator gave an annuity to his daughter for life, to be secured by an investment in the funds by the trustees, and after her death he directed the "annuity" to go as she should by will appoint, and in default "the annuity" to be applied to the maintenance, etc., of her children till twenty-one, and then "the principal" to the children, with a gift over "of the said principal sum of money":—Held, that the daughter had the power of appointing the principal sum. Samuda v. Lousada, 7 Beav. 243.

7. A power to appoint the interest of a fund, held to authorise the appointment of the capital, notwithstanding subsequent powers over and limitation of the said "trust moneys, and the interest." Phillips v. Brydon, 26 Beav. 77.

8. By a settlement trustees were directed to be possessed of 1,760*l.* in trust for a daughter, and her sons, at twenty-one, and daughters at twenty-one, or marriage. Like trusts of two other sums of 1,760*l.* were declared for two other daughters and their children. Benefit of survivorship and accruer between the three daughters and their children, in default of children, was declared, with a declaration that the provisions applicable to the original shares should apply to such surviving or accrued shares; and it was provided, that, if either of the three daughters should die without having or leaving any child who should attain a vested interest, she might dispose of any part of "her share," not exceeding one-third, by deed or will. On the death of one of the three daughters, her share accrued among the survivors; one of the survivors then died without a child, and appointed by will "one-third of her share or shares, as well accrued as original, in the said sum of 5,280*l.* The trustees paid so much of the share of the testatrix as had accrued into court, under the Trustee Relief Act:—Held, that the previous provisions of the settlement consolidated the accrued with the original shares, and that the power to appoint overrode the whole share thus consolidated. Re Hutchinson's Settlement, 5 De G. & Sm. 681; 17 Jur. 59.

1. A testator gave his real and personal estate to trustees, but with the consent of his widow, to sell and invest the produce and pay the income therefrom and of his estate unsold to his widow for life, and after her death, he directed that the money to be produced by his estate, sold before her death, should be in trust for such persons as she should by deed or will appoint:—Held, that the widow's power did not extend over real estate not sold during her life. Cross v. Wilks, 35 Beav. 562.

2. Where a settlement gives the wife surviving the husband a power to appoint by will, in default of direction, limitation, or appointment by the husband, the legal effect of such provision is to give the wife a power of appointment in respect of any portion unappointed by the husband or not completely or validly appointed by him. Exp. Bernard, Re Leigh's Trust, 6 Ir. Ch. R. 133.

3. A. had, under her father's will, a power to appoint 10,000*l.* By changes in the investment the fund had increased to 11,495*l.*, of which 10,000*l.* was lent on mortgage to B., and 1,495*l.* on mortgage to A. By her will, after reciting that under her father's will she had power to appoint 10,000*l.*, A., in exercise of her power, appointed "the said sum of 10,000*l.* now secured on mortgage of B.'s estate, and any other moneys representing the same":—Held, that the whole 11,495*l.* was well appointed. Lefevre v. Freeland, 24 Beav. 403.

4. Testator devised all his real estates to the appointment of E. by deed or will, and subject thereto he devised the same to E. for life; and after the decease of E. he directed that his H. estate should be sold, and fall into his general residuary personalty; and he gave all his real estate (including the St. C. estate) upon strict settlement in favour of G. and her issue; and as to his residue, he gave the same to the general appointment of E. by deed or will, and subject thereto, upon trusts for G. and her children. The testator died. By deed-poll E. appointed all the personalty to herself for life, and after her decease, to go according to the will of the testator. Afterwards, by settlement on the marriage of G., E. revoked the deed-poll, except as to her life estate, and appointed the residuary personal estate to the same trustees as those in the testator's will, upon trust to continue the same in its then investment, or to call it in, at their discretion, and hold 20,000*l.*, part thereof, upon such trusts as she should appoint; and as to the residue, upon trust for G. and her children:—Held, that this appointment of the personalty in the marriage settlement extended only to the same subject matter as what had been previously appointed by the deed-poll; and that that did not include the H. estate. Walker v. Banks, 1 Jur., N. S., 606.

After the marriage E. made her will, dated in 1851, by which, after alluding to the will of the testator and the marriage settlement, she devised certain real property of her own as therein mentioned, and gave all the rest of her real estate, except her said hereditaments so devised, to her trustees, upon the trusts of the St. C. estate in the will of the testator, i.e., upon strict settlement:—Held, that under the Wills Act, 1 Vict., c. 26, such general devise operated as an execution of the power in the will of the testator; and that the H. estate, being thus placed in strict settlement, could not be sold by the trustees assuming to act in execution of the direction in the testator's will. Ib.

5. In 1858 C. wrote to his bankers requesting them to purchase 2,000*l.* consols to be added to the sum "now standing in my name," and the dividends to be received by them with this addition as before. C. was tenant for life under his marriage settlement of consols on which the dividends were received by the bankers under a general power of attorney from the trustees. The bankers wrote stating the names in which the consols stood, and asking if the investment was to be made in his name or the trustees'. He thereupon called and endorsed the letter "Make the investment in the trustees' names." The trustees were never informed of this, but the investment was made and the dividends received by C. till his death in 1870. In 1862 he and his wife executed a joint appointment to children under the settlement, of the original sum of consols, not mentioning the addition:—Held, that the 2,000*l.* consols were included in the settlement, and passed as in default of appointment. Re Curteis, 41 L. J., Ch., 631; 14 L. R., Eq., 217; 26 L. T. 863.

IX. POWERS IN NATURE OF TRUSTS.

6. Direction to trustees to cut trees in aid of testator's real and personal estate:—Held, not a trust, but a mere power upon the whole of the will. Gower v. Eyre, Coop. 156.

7. Construction of an obscure will, whether a trust was created or merely a discretionary power. Robinson v. Smith, 6 Madd. 194.

8. Power of appointment in grantee for life, though in favour of particular objects, is not a trust, and may be extinguished by a recovery. Smith v. Death, 5 Madd. 371.

9. Residuary devise and bequest for such of the testator's relations and kindred in such proportions, etc., as his executors should think proper, recommending and advising his said trustees and executors to give the greatest share to such person and persons who in their opinion and judgment should appear to them to be his nearest relations and most deserving, declaring his intention not to control their discretion, but that everything relative to that disposition, who were his relations, and the proportions, should be entirely in the discretion of the said trustees and executors, and the heirs, executors, and administrators of the survivor of them:—Held, a trust and a power: the ground of the power being personal confidence, it is primâ facie limited to the original trustees, not without express words passing to others to whom by legal transmission the same character may happen to belong; and cannot be executed by the devisees and executors, for that specific purpose only, of the surviving trustee; a trust, therefore, executed by the Court for the next of kin at the death of the testator according to the Statute of Distributions. Cole v. Wade, 16 Ves. 27.

1. A. makes two of his daughters executrixes, and directs them to distribute a sum of 400*l.*, and also the residue of his personal estate, among themselves and their brothers and sisters, according to their needs and necessities, as they in their discretion should think fit. The Court restrained the exercise of this power by decreeing a double share to the eldest son and heir, looking upon him as a necessitous person. Warburton v. Warburton, 4 Bro. P. C. 1.

2. On a devise of real estate to trustees, immediately upon the happening of an event, the marriage of either of his nieces, to settle such part thereof as the trustees should think proper, on certain trusts, for the nieces or children, etc., with power of appointing such settled part amongst the children by the mothers, and in default of appointment or of children then to a party and her heirs absolutely:—Held, that such power was not in the nature of a trust, but purely discretionary, and that, in default of its being duly executed by the original trustee having remained inactive, the beneficial interest resulted to the heir-at-law. Lancashire v. Lancashire, 1 De G. & Sm. 288; 11 Jur. 1024. Affirmed 2 Ph. 657.

3. N. devises to his wife all his estate, leases, and interest in his house in A., and all the goods and furniture therein at the time of his death, and also all his plate, jewels, etc., but desired her, at or before her death, to give such leases, etc., unto such of his own relations as she should think most deserving. The wife did not give, at or before her death, the goods in the said house, or her husband's jewels, to his relations:—Held, that the wife took beneficially only during her life, and that so much of the household goods in A. not disposed of by her according to the power given her by the will of N., in case the same remains in specie, or the value thereof, ought to be divided equally among such of the relations as were his next of kin at the time of his death. Harding v. Glyn, 1 Atk. 469.

4. Held, that a gift to J. W. H., F. R. H., and H. M. H., in such manner as W. H. should appoint, gave an absolute discretion to W. H. as to the share to be given to each, but that he must appoint some part to all three. White v. Wilson, 1 W. R. 47; 17 Jur. 15; 1 Drew. 298; 22 L. J., Ch., 62.

5. A testator was possessed of leaseholds of tithes held for three lives, and renewable on the dropping of any of the lives. He was in the habit of effecting insurances on the lives, and out of the moneys payable at a death, he renewed the lease, and effected a fresh policy on the new life inserted. By his will he gave all his real and residuary personal estate to trustees to accumulate the same for twenty-one years, and authorised them thereout to keep up the policies, to renew the leases, and to effect fresh policies on the new lives, "on the plan he himself had adopted," and subject thereto, he gave the estate and its accumulations to B. for life, with remainder to her sons and daughters successively in tail. B. married, and had two daughters only, the elder of whom died an infant in her mother's lifetime. One of the cestuis que vie died, and there was a large surplus of the sum assured after renewing the lease and effecting a new policy:—Held, that, although the will imported a power only to the trustees to renew the lease, etc., it was one which they were bound to exercise, and was consequently equivalent to a trust, and that therefore a competent part of the fund must be retained for those objects; but that, subject thereto, the policies, being part of the personal estate of the testator, vested absolutely in the first tenant in tail, subject to the life estate of the tenant for life under the will, and were payable to her legal personal representative. Meller v. Stanley, 10 L. T., N. S., 512.

6. The trustees of a will were directed to raise by mortgage of the devised property moneys not exceeding in the whole 20,000*l.*, and apply the same towards the liquidation of such of the debts of M. as they should think proper:—Held, that any one of M.'s creditors was entitled to file a bill to have the 20,000*l.* raised and distributed for the benefit of the creditors, who stood in the position of cestuis que trustent of the fund, subject to a power of selection in the trustees. Joel v. Mills, Harvey v. Mills, 3 K. & J. 458.

III. Acceleration.

Of Future Power.] 7. A testator entitled to a reversion in fee after a life estate in A. devised it to trustees for B. for life, with remainders over in tail, and gave to the trustees a power of sale and reinvestment, with consent of the tenant for life or in tail entitled in possession for the time being, under the limitations of his will. A. survived the testator and surrendered her life estate to B.:—Held, that the power was thereby accelerated, and that the trustees with the consent of B. could make a good title. Truell v. Tysson, 4 W. R. 409; 20 Jur. 630.

Of Appointment in Remainder.] 1. Semble, that the remainders after an estate, which is void by reason of its being an excessive execution of a power, are not void, but are accelerated by the extinction of the intermediate void estate. Crozier v. Crozier, 2 Con. & L. 294; 5 Ir. Eq. R. 540; 3 Dr. & War. 373.

2. Preceding limitations under an appointment being void, subsequent limitations, though within the power, cannot be accelerated, and are void also, though the objects of the prior limitations never come in esse. Routledge v. Dorril, 2 Ves. J. 357.

An unborn child of a person in esse may be made tenant for life; if beyond that, the absolute interest is disposed of. Ib.

3. A testator appointed real estate under a power, and devised other real estate, to the use of his wife for life, and after her decease he devised the same estates to his son in fee, with an executory gift over, and with a proviso that if his wife should make or do any matter or thing whereby she should be deprived of the rents and profits so that her receipt alone should not be a good and sufficient discharge, her life estate should cease as on her decease: —Held, that upon her marriage without having settled her life interest, there was a forfeiture, and that the estates in remainder were accelerated. Craven v. Brady, 36 L. J., Ch., 905; 4 L. R., Eq., 209; 15 W. R. 952.

4. An appointment was made to a person not an object of a power, with remainder to an object. The first appointment being void: —Held, that the second was not accelerated, but failed with the first. Reid v. Reid, 25 Beav. 469.

IV. Delegation.

5. A power under a settlement for a husband to dispose of a reversionary interest in an estate, in such proportions as he should think fit, among the issue of the marriage; he, by will, delegates it to his wife in such shares as she pleases, between his son and daughter:— Held, to be like a power of attorney, and not transmissible to a third person, but could be executed by the husband only. Ingram v. Ingram, 2 Atk. 88.

6. On the construction of an appointment, it was held, that an attempt to delegate powers thereby, which the appointor could not transfer, did not invalidate the direction in the same deed, which he had power to give. Hitch v. Leworthy, 2 Hare 200.

7. An administratrix borrowed money, and secured the repayment by a mortgage of the testator's leasehold property, with a power of sale in case of default. The property was sold under the power, and the purchaser refused to complete on the ground that, though the administratrix herself had power to sell or mortgage, she could not delegate that power to another. In a suit by the mortgagee against the purchaser for specific performance:—Held, that the power of sale was valid; that the right to create this power was incidental to the right of the administratrix to mortgage, and that the purchaser was bound to accept the title. Russell v. Plaice, 2 Eq. Rep. 1149; 18 Beav. 21.

8. The donee of a power cannot delegate it, notwithstanding it has been acquired under a voluntary settlement made by himself. Topham (Lady) v. Portland (Duke), 1 N. R. 496; 32 L. J., Ch., 257; 11 W. R. 507; 8 L. T., N. S., 180.

9. When the donee of a power appointed by will a life interest to M., an object of the power, and then delegated to M. a power to appoint a life interest to a stranger to the power, and subject thereto appointed the property to the children of M., who were objects of the power:—Held, that the delegated power was void, but that the subsequent appointment was good. Carr v. Atkinson, 14 L. R., Eq., 397; 41 L. J., Ch., 785; 20 W. R. 620; 26 L. T., N. S., 680.

10. M., having an absolute power of appointment, appointed, by will, to her three children, or their respective executors or administrators, in such manner as her husband should by will appoint. The husband, by will, appointed the whole to two of the children:—Held, that this appointment was bad, and that the three children took in equal shares the will of M. White v. Wilson, 17 Jur. 15; 22 L. J., Ch., 62; 1 Drew. 298.

11. Twenty-five trustees were to meet and to present and elect a clergyman; one dies, the rest are equally divided, half being in favour of A., the rest voting for B. Upon the death of the supporters of the latter, the friends of A. meet and sign a presentation for him. This is void at law, and cannot be supported in equity: there should have been a distinct notice for the meeting of all. A direction that the trustees should meet for such purpose, within "four months" from the death of an incumbent, does not prevent their meeting after that time. Trustees cannot make proxies to vote in such a personal trust as the above; though if a choice were regularly made at a proper meeting, they might for the mere purpose of signing the presentation. Disusage evidence of abandonment by consent, as to part of a constitution which arose from consent. Att.-Gen. v. Scott, 1 Ves. 413.

12. C., a solicitor, and one of three executors and trustees for sale, acted professionally in the management of the personal estate, and, also, by the authority of his co-trustees, conducted an attempted sale by auction of the real estate. A., another of the trustees, hearing that his son was in treaty for the purchase of the estate, wrote to C. to say that he (A.) would not take any interest either directly or indirectly in the matter; C. then, with the concurrence of the co-trustee, contracted to sell the estate by private contract to another person. On a bill filed by the purchaser to compel performance of this contract:—Held, first, that C. had not derived any general authority to sell by private contract, by reason of his employment as solicitor to the trust estate, or as agent to sell by public auction; and, secondly, that he had derived no special authority from A.'s letter to sell to any one but to A.'s son. Bulteel v. Abinger (Lord), 6 Jur. 410.

Semble, under the circumstances, A. could not have delegated to his co-trustees an authority to sell to his son, without reserving to himself a veto upon the contract. Ib.

1. A trustee, resident in England, appointed by the English will of a testator who was resident in England, of lands in British Guiana, may appoint an attorney to act there in the matter of the trust, if the will does not provide to the contrary. Stuart v. Norton, 9 W. R. 320; 3 L. T., N. S., 602.

Quære, whether such trustee may appoint an attorney to act in matters of discretion connected with the trust in such colony or in a foreign country. Ib.

2. An executor is absolute owner of his testator's assets, and may mortgage or sell them, as well to a creditor as to any other person; and a mortgage of the book debts of the testator may contain a power of attorney to collect them. Vane v. Rigden, 39 L. J., Ch., 797; 5 L. R., Ch., 663; 18 W. R. 1092.

An executrix assigned all the book debts, etc., of her testator to the nominal value of 2,000*l.* to a creditor, to secure a debt of 534*l.* due to him from the testator, and also gave him a power of attorney to collect the debts. The property so assigned amounted substantially to the whole of the assets:—Held, that the mortgage was valid. Ib.

3. S. devised and bequeathed his real and personal property upon trust for his wife for her life, and after her death in trust for his children who should be living at her death, and the issue then living of his children, as she should appoint, and in default of appointment, as therein mentioned. The wife having survived her husband, by will appointed two-fifths of the residue of the trust fund in trust for a son, for his life, subject as therein provided, and after his death to his children as he should appoint, so that the benefit of every such appointment should vest before or upon the expiration of twenty-one years from the death of the son; and if there should be no child of his who should acquire a vested interest, then in trust for the son absolutely. Provided that if he should alien or dispose of his share, or should become bankrupt, the trust in his favour should cease and determine, and the property subject to the trust should be held by the trustees for the support, maintenance, or otherwise for the benefit of his wife and children, as the trustees in their discretion should think proper. S. died, and the son became bankrupt. The gift over in the proviso for cesser on his bankruptcy was held void as being in excess of the power, and the prior limitation to his children, as he should appoint, was also held void as being a delegation of a power. Stockbridge v. Story, 19 W. R. 1049.

Held, also, that the shares of the trust fund appointed in favour of the son became his absolutely under the provisions of his mother's will, and consequently went to his assignee on his bankruptcy. Ib.

I. IN GENERAL.

4. Learning as to what powers of appointment are capable of being extinguished or released. West v. Berney, 1 Russ. & M. 431. And see Cunynghame v. Thurlow, Id. 436. n.

5. A tenant for life, with a power of appointing the property by will to all or any of the testator's children, may extinguish the power. Horner v. Swann, T. & R. 430.

6. Power of appointment in tenant for life, subject to condition of her remaining sole and unmarried, which condition was qualified by proviso, that a marriage, with consent of A., B., and C., should not determine that power. Condition held a condition subsequent; and becoming impossible by death of A., B., and C., marriage of tenant for life after their death, without their consent, did not determine the power. Aislabie v. Rice, 3 Madd. 256.

7. F., having an estate which came to her ex parte maternâ, on her marriage conveyed the same to trustees to such uses as she should direct, with remainder to her own right heirs. By will, she directed the estate to be sold, the money to be laid out in the funds, and the trustees to permit the husband to receive the interest for life; then, after the deduction of 3,500*l.*, to uses which vested in the plaintiff A., and after payment of 1,000*l.* to pay the residue of the purchase money to the defendants. By codicil, she gave the plaintiff, her husband, a power of appointing the 3,500*l.* in case A. should marry without his consent. G. died, living the testatrix, before the codicil made, but F., in the codicil, took no notice thereof. First, the 1,000*l.* is real, not personal, and shall not go to the executors of G. (though given to her executors), nor to the personal representative of the testatrix, nor yet to the residuary legatee of the purchase money, but to the heir-at-law ex parte maternâ (the side from which the estate came); secondly, the 3,500*l.* is vested in A., and, the trustees having laid out a larger sum by 17*l.*, with intent to appropriate, it is well appropriated; and, A. having married once with her father's consent, his power is gone, and, he consenting to give up his life interest, it was decreed to be paid to the trustees on her marriage settlement. Hutcheson v. Hammond, 3 Bro. C. C. 128.

8. A sum of stock was held in trust for a lady for life, then for any husband for life in case she should appoint to him, and subject thereto in trust for her children, and in default of children to such uses as she should appoint. The lady, at the age of sixty-eight, having never been married, appointed the fund to herself, and released the power of appointment in favour of her husband and children:—Held, that she was entitled to a transfer of the capital. Miles v. Knight, 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 458; 12 Jur. 656.

1. In 1814 estates were limited to such uses, etc., as A. should appoint, and in default of appointment to him for life, remainder to his son for life, remainder to the son's first and other sons in tail male; and those limitations were followed by powers of leasing, and selling and exchanging, the latter of which was to be exercised during the life of A. and his son, and with their consent. In 1830 A., being desirous of relinquishing his life interest, appointed the estates to his son for life, remainder to the uses, upon the trusts and subject to the powers expressed and contained in the deed of 1814, ulterior to the limitations therein, for the lives of A. and his son:—Held, that though the power of sale and exchange was to operate in derogation of the life estates, it was not destroyed by the deed of 1830. Morgan v. Rutson, 16 Sim. 234; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 419; 12 Jur. 813.

2. The execution of a general power over real estates in settlement not only destroys the existing powers, but also all instruments executed under them. Walker v. Armstrong, 21 Beav. 284; 2 Jur., N. S., 221; 25 L. J., Ch., 402.

A settlement, dated in 1824, gave a power of appointment over lands to A. and B. by deed, and a power of appointment to B. by deed or will. The donees of the power by a deed, dated in 1825, executed for the purpose of rectifying a mistaken omission of certain limitations in the settlement, made an appointment, and reserved a power of revocation, and of new appointment to B. by deed or will. B., by will dated in 1827, exercised the power of appointment in favour of A. After this it was discovered that a mistake had been made in the deed of 1825, by the omission of certain limitations. Instructions were given to a solicitor to prepare a deed to rectify the same, but he was not informed of the existence of the will. A deed was prepared and executed in 1840, which after exercising the power of revocation, contained the limitations omitted in the deed of 1825, and (with the exception of certain limitations to issue rendered needless by the age of the wife of B.) repeated the limitations of the deed in 1824, including among them the power to appoint by will. B. did not republish:—Held (by Romilly, M. R., 21 Beav. 284; 2 Jur., N. S., 221), that the deed of 1840 rendered the appointment by the will of 1827 inoperative. Upon an appeal from this decree, the Lords Justices gave leave to amend the bill, and to produce evidence as to the error in the preparation of the deed of 1840, and ultimately held that the deed of 1840 should be rectified, so far as it went beyond the correction intended, and beyond the intention of the parties, and therefore established the will. S. C. 2 Jur., N. S., 959; 25 L. J., Ch., 738.

3. By the marriage settlement of A. a sum of 8,000*l.* stock was settled upon himself and his intended wife for their joint lives and the life of the survivor, and then for the benefit of their children, and, if no children, in trust for the settlor, his executors, administrators, and assigns. After his marriage, A. made his will, and thereby gave his real estate to P. and his heirs, upon the same trusts as near as could be, as were declared of the stock by the settlement, and after giving certain pecuniary legacies, he bequeathed all the rest of his moneys and property of any kind to P., his executors, administrators, and assigns, upon trust and for the benefit of the objects of his settlement as he might think best. A. died, leaving his widow, but no issue of the marriage. P. declined to take probate of the will:—Held, that whether the course taken by P. had or had not the effect of depriving him of the discretionary power given to him by the will, he could not, in the events that had happened, exercise that power so as to affect the rights of the parties interested under the will and settlement, and that the effect of these instruments was to give a life interest to the widow in the real and residuary personal estate, impeachable of waste as to the real estate, with the remainder as to the real estate to the testator's heirs, and as to the residuary personal estate to his next of kin. Ford v. Ruxton, 1 Colly. 403.

4. When a power, coupled with a duty, is conferred upon trustees to be executed by them at a fixed period, and after they have come to a judgment as to the conduct of the individual to be affected, they cannot divest themselves of the power or execute it until the time appointed. Nor can they enter into any anterior compact respecting it. The fact that the individual to be affected by the execution of the power (a youth of twenty-one), married three years before the time appointed for such execution; the fact that the trustees formally approved of the marriage and were made aware of the settlement thereon including a provision out of the trust estate for the intended wife; and the fact, moreover, that they gave no caution or warning, that they might ultimately be obliged to defeat it;—all these facts made no difference in the result: for it was held to be the duty of the trustees (the husband having, in their judgment, subsequently misconducted himself) to execute the power so as to restrict him to a life interest, although the effect was to defeat the provisions for the wife, as well as the other claim founded on a compact expectation that the marriage settlement would not be disturbed. Per Lord Cranworth, L.C. Did the trustees by consenting to the marriage, and (as I think I may assume) by consenting to the settlement, deprive themselves of this power? My clear opinion is that they did not. Per Lord Chelmsford, All parties knew, or ought to have known, that the provisions of the settlement must depend on the conduct of the son. Weller v. Ker, 1 L. R., H. L. (Sc.), 11.

II. WHERE PURPOSE SATISFIED.

5. Purchaser not compelled to take a doubtful title, viz., by executing a power of sale, introduced under a direction by decree, establishing a will to the Master to approve a proper settlement: the will not authorising the insertion of such a power; nor could it be sustained under a power by a former settlement; which, if not extinct by the failure of the limitations, and the union of the estate for life with the reversion, could not be duly applied to purposes clearly foreign to its original object; and though purchasers are not put to exercise a very nice and critical judgment with regard to the purposes for which powers are created, it could never be intended to refer to a perfectly new set of limitations, in a new settlement, at a long subsequent period, under a disposition by the will of the owner of the fee, to be exercised, not for any purpose in the least degree connected with the settlement, but avowedly as an expedient to supply the want of a valid power in that settlement, and enable those whom he had made only tenants for life to dispose of the estate. Wheate v. Hall, 17 Ves. 80.

1. Where estate is devised in trust for two daughters for life, with remainder in each moiety for their children at twenty-one, and a power of sale is given to trustees, the power of sale subsists, though one daughter is dead, and her children have attained twenty-one. Trower v. Knightley, 6 Madd. 135.

2. Under a power to lend 2,500*l.* of the trust funds to the tenant for life:—Held, that it was not exhausted by one loan, but that, after repayment, the power might be exercised a second time. Versturme v. Gardiner, 17 Beav. 338.

3. A trust to raise by sale of a competent part of 3,389*l.* bank annuities, a sum not exceeding 2,000*l.*, and pay the same to the plaintiff:—Held, not to be exhausted or fully performed by raising 1,391*l.* at the plaintiff's request. Harrold v. Harrold, 3 Giff. 192; 7 Jur., N. S., 1274; 4 L. T., N. S., 699.

4. Where lands were devised on trusts as to one-fifth to the testator's son for life, and on his death to be conveyed, with certain limitations, to his children; and as to another fifth, in trust for his daughter, until she attained twenty-five, or was married, and then to be conveyed and settled to her use as the trustees might think proper:—Held, by the Master of the Rolls, that the events having taken place on which the trusts were to be performed, the trustees having omitted to perform them, the power was at an end by the determination of the trusts as intended by the testator: the trust, although existing, was not a continuance of the trust intended by the will, and reposed in the trustees by the testator: but the Lord Chancellor reversed his decision. Wood v. White, 2 Keen 664; 7 L. J., N. S., Ch., 203. Affirmed 4 Myl. & C. 460; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 209.

5. An estate was devised to trustees for different persons in fifth shares, some of which shares were given to living persons absolutely, and the others to living persons for life, with remainder to their children in fee. An unlimited power of sale over the whole estate was given to trustees:—Held, that this power of sale was valid, and could be exercised over the whole estate, so long as any of the trusts of any of the shares remained to be performed. Taite v. Swinstead, 26 Beav. 525; 5 Jur., N. S., 1019; 7 W. R. 373; 33 L. T. 712.

6. In pursuance of a power contained in a marriage settlement, lands were appointed, subject to life estates, among the five children of A., one-fifth to each of four as tenants in common, and the remaining fifth to E., the other child, for life, with remainder to the first four. E. was of unsound mind, not so found by inquisition:—Held, that a power of sale contained in the settlement was not destroyed by the appointment. Re Brown, 39 L. J., Ch., 845; 10 L. R., Eq., 349; 18 W. R. 945.

III. BY ALIENATION OF ESTATE.

7. Quære, whether a power in the tenant for life to advance children out of the capital is taken away by assignment of the life interest. Whitmarsh v. Robertson, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 715; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 404; 6 Jur. 921.

8. Where a tenant for life of trust moneys, with a power for appointing part for advancing his children, assigned his whole interest, etc., as security for annuity granted by him, he was held to have precluded himself from exercise of power for advancement, though the annuity was of a much less value than the fund. Noel v. Henley, M'Clel. & Y. 303.

9. A. tenant in tail with a leasing power, remainder to B. in tail, executed a disentailing deed whereby he conveyed the estate to the use of A. for life, remainder to the use of B. in fee:—Held, that A.'s leasing power was not extinguished. O'Fay v. Burke, 8 Ir. Ch. R. 225, 511.

10. A testator, having given his daughter a life estate in certain lands, devised them after her death amongst her children as she should by deed or will appoint. It then provided that, in case of alienation or incumbrance by her, her share should go to the persons next in remainder, as if she were actually dead:—Held, that an appointment executed by her was not rendered inoperative by reason of her having previously mortgaged her life estate. Re Stone, 3 Ir. R., Eq., 621. Affirmed 18 W. R. 222.

The donee of the power appointed to one of her sons all the lands and premises except the square yard of ground thereinafter mentioned; and to the other, one square yard of the said lands, in such part thereof as his brother should think fit:—Held, that the power was well executed. Ib.

IV. BY BANKRUPTCY OR INSOLVENCY.

11. There is no equity to compel a bankrupt to execute a general power of appointment for the benefit of his creditors in their favour, or in the favour of a purchaser from them. Thorpe v. Goodall, 1 Rose 40, 270; 17 Ves. 388, 460. But see 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 77.

Therefore, a bankrupt seised for life with a general power of appointment, with remainder in default of appointment to the heirs of his body, cannot be compelled by decree in equity to execute the power for his creditors. Ib.

12. A trader, being seised of an estate for life, with a general power of appointment, with remainder, in default of appointment, to himself in fee, after having committed an act of bankruptcy, upon which he was afterwards declared a bankrupt, executes his appointment in favour of an appointee:—Held, that all his interest having passed to the assignee by the assignment, such appointment was void; and, therefore, that his assignee under the commission had a sufficient legal estate to maintain an ejectment. Doe d. Coleman v. Britain, 2 B. & Ald. 93.

1. Real estate settled on settlor for life, remainder to trustee for a term, to secure jointure to wife, remainder to use of children, as they jointly, or the survivor, should appoint, remainder to the right heirs of the settlor, who became bankrupt, and then he and wife appointed, and after his death, wife appointed in favour of same children:—Held, first appointment, bad; wife's appointment, good. Hole v. Escott, 2 Jur. 1059; 4 Myl. & C. 187; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 83. Reversing 2 Keen 444; 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 355; 1 Jur. 424.

2. Upon a settlement to the use of the joint appointment of husband and wife, and in default to the use of the husband for life, remainder to the use of wife for life, remainder to the use of the sons successively in tail, with remainder to the daughters as tenants in common, with cross-remainders in tail, remainder in fee to the husband; the husband subsequently took the benefit of the Insolvent Act, and assigned all his interests to his assignee, and afterwards, with his wife, executed the joint power of appointment to trustees in fee in trust to sell:—Held, that the power was not extinguished by the assignment to the provisional assignee, and that the appointment vested in the trustee the whole inheritance, except as to the portion of it which was vested in such assignee. Jones v. Winwood, 10 Sim. 150; 10 L. J., N. S., Ch., 165; 5 Jur. 190.

3. Mere power unexecuted in a tenant for life who becomes bankrupt, does not vest in his assignees. Townshend v. Windham, 2 Ves. 3.

4. R. M. made a settlement of real estate to the use of himself for life, with a power to appoint to any one or more of his sons in fee, or otherwise, and in default of appointment, to his first and other sons in tail, with remainder to himself in fee. He became bankrupt, and subsequently to his bankruptcy appointed to his eldest son in fee:—Held, that the appointment could not enure as an appointment of a base fee, determinable on the extinction of the prior estates tail, because such a limitation would have been bad in the settlement creating the power. Quære, whether the power was destroyed by the bankruptcy, the Court considering that the invalidity of the appointment rendered it unnecessary to determine that point. Badham v. Meo, 1 Myl. & K. 32; 2 L. J., N. S., Ch., 4. And see 7 Bing. 695; 9 L. J., N. S., C. P., 213; 1 M. & Scott 14.

5. Bank stock was settled upon trust for A. and B. successively for life; and after their decease, in trust for one or more of their children, as they or the survivor should appoint; and in default, in trust for all the children equally; but if B. should survive his wife A., and there should be any child or children living at her death, then the trustees were to raise 2,500*l*., and dispose of it as A. should appoint. C. and D. were the only children of the marriage. In 1832, on the occasion of D.'s marriage, A. and B. jointly appointed a portion of the fund, and A. exercised the power given to her as to the 2,500*l*. A. died in January 1844. In July 1843 C. was adjudicated a bankrupt, and assignees were appointed, and on the 10th February, 1844, he obtained his certificate. B., by a deed-poll of the 12th February, 1844, appointed the trust funds, then subject to the indenture of settlement, to and for the use of C., but subject to his own life interest in the income, and subject to the sums already appointed. B. died in March 1855. The assignees of C. claimed to receive the moiety of the funds, to which he would have become entitled in default of appointment:—Held, that during the bankruptcy of C., and before the certificate, all that the assignees had was a defeasible title; and that under the power of appointment executed after the date of the certificate C. became entitled to the whole fund as against the assignees. Lee v. Olding, 2 Jur., N. S., 850; 25 L. J., Ch., 580; 4 W. R. 398.

6. A fund was settled upon trust to pay the interest to the husband, unless and until he should become insolvent, or until his death, whichever should first happen; and after the happening of either of such events, upon trust to pay the interest of the fund to the wife for her life; and after the determination of the several trusts thereinbefore created, upon trust for the children of the marriage, as the survivor should appoint; and in default of appointment, from and after the several deceases of the husband and wife, or the sooner determination of the interest thereinbefore limited to them respectively, upon trust for the children of the marriage equally. The husband became insolvent, and the wife afterwards died in the lifetime of the husband:—Held (affirming 28 Beav. 26; 6 Jur., N. S., 188; 29 L. J., Ch., 421; 8 W. R. 157; 2 L. T., N. S., 141), that the power of appointment given to the husband was extinguished, and that upon the death of the wife the fund was divisible among the children of the marriage, as in default of appointment. Haswell v. Haswell, 6 Jur., N. S., 1223; 9 W. R. 129; 3 L. T., N. S., 393; 30 L. J., Ch., 97; 2 De F. & J. 456.

The power of appointment was not extinguished by the insolvency of the husband, but the settlement indicated an intention that the power should be exercised while the husband or wife had an interest in the fund. Semble. Ib.

7. Devise to A. for life, or until he shall seek relief from any law which shall be in force concerning insolvent debtors, and from and after his decease, or immediately after he shall become insolvent as aforesaid, then to the use of such child or children of A. in such shares and for such estates and interests as he shall by deed or will appoint. A. became insolvent, and then exercised the power by deed:—Held, that the execution of the power was valid. Haswell v. Haswell (28 Beav. 26; 2 De G. F. & J. 456) considered. Wickham v Wing, 6 N. R. 21; 2 Hem. & M. 436; 11 Jur., N. S., 424; 34 L. J., Ch., 425; 13 W. R. 650; 13 L. T., N. S., 37.

8. A power given by will to an insolvent to appoint among his children, held to be capable of being exercised after the insolvency. Re Aylwin, 42 L. J., Ch., 745; 16 L. R., Eq., 535; 21 W. R. 864; 28 L. T., N. S., 65.

1. S. executed a post-nuptial settlement whereby he conveyed freehold hereditaments, the legal estate in which was outstanding, to a trustee upon trust to pay the rents, issues, and profits to his wife during her life, and after her death to himself during his life, and after the death of the survivor for the benefit of their children. The settlement contained a power to S. during his life, and after his death to the wife during her life, and after the death of the survivor to the trustee, to renew leases for lives, and take fines on renewals, but so that the usual rents were still reserved. And it was declared that the trustee should hold all fines which he might take in trust for the child or children who should be then entitled to the inheritance of the premises. S. subsequently assigned his interest under the settlement to B. by way of mortgage. The trustee of the settlement disputed the right of S. to take the fines for his own benefit, claiming them on behalf of the wife. S. accordingly filed a bill against the trustee and B., praying that he might be declared entitled to take the fines on renewals of leases for his own benefit. S. afterwards became bankrupt, and his assignee obtained a supplemental order to carry on the suit:—Held, first, that S. was entitled to take the fines on renewals for his own benefit. Simpson v. Bathurst, Shepherd v. Bathurst, 5 L. R., Ch., 193; 18 W. R. 772; 22 L. T., N. S., 29.

Held, secondly, that inasmuch as the legal estate was outstanding and beyond S.'s control, and the trustee had interfered with his power of granting leases, he was entitled to bring a suit in equity for declaration of his rights. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that the power of granting renewed leases was not extinguished or suspended either by the assignment of S.'s interest by way of mortgage or by his bankruptcy, but that such power might be still exercised by him with the concurrence of the mortgagee and assignee. Ib.

V. BY FINE OR RECOVERY.

2. A bare naked power is not barred by any of the Statutes of Fines; otherwise as to an interesse termini. Willis v. Shorrall, 1 Atk. 476. Neither can a collateral or naked power be barred or extinguished by fine, feoffment, or any other conveyance. Albany's case, 1 Co. 111 a; Digge's case, 1 Co. 174 a. Edwards v. Slater, Hard. 415.

3. Tenant for ninety-nine years, if he so long live, with a power of charging the premises with sums of money, joins in suffering a recovery, and declares the uses thereof; this extinguishes the power of charging the estate. Savile v. Blacket, 1 P. W. 777.

4. Power of appointment in grantor for life, though in favour of particular objects, is not a trust, and may be extinguished by a recovery. Smith v. Death, 5 Madd. 371.

5. Learning as to what powers of appointment are capable of being extinguished or released. West v. Berney, 1 Russ. & M. 431. And see Cunynghame v. Thurlow, id. 436. nom.

6. Semble, where a tenant for life, having a power to charge the estate after his death for the benefit of his children, levies a fine, the power will be extinguished. By a marriage settlement, lands were limited to the use of the husband for life, remainder to the wife for life, remainder to trustees for a term of four hundred years, to commence from the decease of the survivor of the husband and wife, remainder to the heirs of the body of the wife begotten by the husband, remainder to the heirs of the husband. The trust of the term was, in case there should be issue of the marriage a son and one or more younger child or children, who should live to attain, his, her, or their age or ages of twenty-one years, to raise such sum, not exceeding 200*l.* in the whole, as the husband and wife should by any deed or writing appoint, or in default thereof as the survivor should, by deed or writing or his or her last will or testament, appoint; and in default of such appointment, or subject thereto, after the money so appointed should have been raised, and the costs of the trustees paid, the term was to cease or be assigned in trust to attend the inheritance. There were younger children of the marriage who attained twenty-one. The wife died without having joined in any appointment, and afterwards the husband levied a fine of the premises:—Held, that the power was extinguished by the fine. Bickley v. Guest, 1 Russ. & M. 440.

7. Feme covert having power to convey her estate after her death, conveys it by lease and release, to take effect after her death; she afterwards joins with her husband in levying a fine to different uses. The lease and release held to have no effect, and the fine operated. Bramhall v. Hall, Ambl. 467.

8. By a marriage settlement, certain property was conveyed to trustees during the joint lives of the husband and wife, in trust to pay the rents and profits to the wife for life, for her separate use, and after her death to the husband for life, and after his decease to the use of such persons as the husband should by will appoint, and in default of such appointment, to certain uses for the benefit of the children of the marriage, and in default of any such appointment and issue, there was a limitation to the next-of-kin of the husband. By a subsequent deed of 1828, which recited that there were no children of the marriage, the husband and wife released and appointed the property to trustees for sale, and covenanted to levy a fine for the purpose of extinguishing all powers and interest of the wife. It was also declared that the release and fine should operate to extinguish the husband's power of appointment by will, so far only as any such will made in execution of the power should not operate and enure to the use of the trustees, or in confirmation of the indenture of 1828. A fine was accordingly levied, and subsequently, contrary to the expectation of the parties, a child of the marriage was born. The husband then made a will, and executed his power of appointment in favour of the trustees of the deed of 1828, and confirmed that deed in all respects. The trustees contracted to sell the estate; but as the only child of the marriage refused to join in the sale, a bill for specific performance was filed:—Held, that the power of appointment under the marriage settlement was extinguished by the deed of 1828, except for the special purpose of confirming that deed by will. Walmsley v. Jowett, 23 L. J., Ch., 425; 2 W. R. 179.

1. On a devise of lands to be purchased with the proceeds of estates sold by the testator, upon trust to pay the rents and profits to testator's daughter for life, and afterwards for such persons and estates as she should appoint, and for default of appointment to the right heirs of his daughter, he also directed that, as to such part of the proceeds as should not be laid out in lands, his trustees should pay her the dividends for her life, and after her decease to such persons as she should by will appoint, and in default thereof to transfer and assign to her executors, etc.:—Held, that as the effect of the limitation of the proceeds, if uninvested, was to give it to the daughter absolutely, the intention was to be inferred the same whether it continued in the shape of money or was invested in land: the words of limitation, therefore, in the latter case, to the daughter's right heirs, were to be considered not as words of purchase but as of a limitation, and gave her a fee, and that she might by fine extinguish the power, and make a good title to the lands purchased. Webb v. Shaftesbury, 2 Myl. & K. 599.

2. The 19 & 20 Geo. 3, c. 32, incorporated the undertakers of the Lagan Navigation, and enacted that it should be lawful for every subscriber towards completing the navigation, and through whose lands it should pass, to charge his real estate, for the use of his younger children, with the payment of such sums of money and other interest which he might have in the joint stock of the company, as he should assign or bequeath to his heir, any settlement to the contrary notwithstanding. Under a settlement of 1761, A. was tenant for life of lands through which the navigation passed, with powers of joint using and leasing, with remainder to B., his eldest son, in tail. A. was a subscriber to the undertaking by reason of advances made by him before and after May 1792. In 1791 A. and B. suffered recoveries, and declared the uses to be to A. for life, and after his decease as A. and B. should jointly appoint; and until such joint appointment, A. was to be at liberty to exercise all powers given to him by the settlement of 1761. In 1792 A. and B. agreed to resettle the estates for valuable considerations moving from each of them; and by deed of the 17th May 1792, A. and B. appointed the lands, after the decease of A., and subject and without prejudice to his life estate, and to all powers and authorities then vested in or belonging to him, whether appendant or in gross or otherwise, to Z. in fee, in order that he might join in the intended resettlement of the estates; and by another deed of the 19th May, 1792, A., B., and Z., reciting A's powers under the settlement of 1761, and the intention of the parties to resettle the estates, subject to the powers thereinafter mentioned, conveyed the estates to A. for life, remainder to B. for life, remainder to his first and other sons in tail, and new powers of leasing and jointuring were given to A. This deed did not contain any saving of the former powers of A. under the settlement of 1761 or otherwise, and no allusion was made in it to the power of charging under the 19 & 20 Geo. 3, c. 32. A., by his will reciting the Act, devised all his shares in the company to B., his heirs, executors, etc., and charged the settled lands with 30,000*l.* for his only younger child:—Held, first, that the power to charge given by the Act was not destroyed by the recovery of 1791, it not being the intention of the parties to the recovery that the power should be destroyed thereby; secondly, that it was destroyed quoad advances made before the 19th May 1792, by the settlement of that date, which amounted to a contract by A. not to exercise the power as to advances then made, but that it existed as to subsequent advances; thirdly, that "heir" in the Act meant heir to the settled estate, and included, as far as the law would permit, all persons claiming in succession under the settlement, and that the power given by the Act was well executed by the will of A.; for that the bequest of the shares to B., his heirs, executors, etc., thereby made, enured, according to the title, for the benefit of the remainderman under the settlement; fourthly, the younger child of A., who was also his executor, having without fraud consented, quâ executor, that the company should issue new debentures in lieu of some which had been granted to A., and were lost by the executor:—Held, that the charge on the estate was not affected thereby. Stewart v. Donegal (Marquis), 2 J. & L. 636.

VI. BY SUCCESSIVE EXECUTIONS.

3. By a son's marriage settlement, lands were settled on father for life, with a power for him to make a jointure of such lands as he thought proper, not exceeding 600*l.* per annum; remainder to the son in tail, remainders over. The father afterwards, on his second marriage, conveys an estate of 900*l.* per annum to trustees, in trust, to pay 200*l.* clear as pin-money to intended wife, and, if she survive him, to pay her 300*l.* per annum for her jointure. After marriage, by a second deed, he gave her another 300*l.* per annum clear, as a further jointure. By a third deed, as further provision for the wife, he conveyed all the same lands to same trustees, to raise the further sum of 100*l.* for pin-money, and the net sum of 600*l.* per annum as a provision for her in case she survived him, in bar of all other provisions before made; and he thereby declared that it was the intention of that deed, and of the preceding ones, to secure a jointure to his then wife, not exceeding 600*l.* The son and trustees were decreed to convey a jointure not exceeding 600*l.* per annum, subject to taxes, repairs, etc. Hervey v. Hervey, 1 Atk. 561.

4. An estate having once borne a charge in favour of legatees or creditors is discharged, though the fund has been misapplied by the trustees. Omerod v. Hardman, 5 Ves. 736.

5. A power of appointing a fee may be executed at several times, viz., at one time to pass an estate for life, and the fee at another. Bovey v. Smith, 1 Vern. 85; 2 Ch. Ca. 124.

6. Where there was a joint power to husband and wife, of appointing a sum of money among children, with power, in default thereof, for the survivor to appoint, a partial execution by both of the original power was held to prevent the execution of the secondary power by the wife, who survived. Simpson v. Paul, 2 Eden 34.

1. Power to husband and wife to charge a term in lands with a sum of money not exceeding 200*l.* for their daughters A. and B. as the husband and wife should appoint; and in failure of their joint appointment as the survivors should appoint, with interest from such time as the term should commence in possession, and not before. The term was not to commence in possession until after the death of the survivor. The husband and wife, in execution of the power, direct the 200*l.* to be equally divided between the two daughters, six months after the decease of the father and mother; and if either of them die before payment, or the money become due, then the share of her so dying to be laid out for the benefit of her executors; one of the daughters died after the appointment, and before the time of payment:—Held, a good appointment to the daughters themselves, but the appointment to executors is void; but as one of the appointees died before the time of payment her share sinks into the estate. The joint appointment having appointed the whole, the share of the daughter who died is not subject to any further appointment. Brown v. Nisbett, 1 Cox 13.

2. Testator empowered his executors for the time being to advance to his nephew any sum or sums of money not exceeding 30,000*l.* The executors exercised the power to the extent of 20,000*l.*:—Held, that they were not precluded thereby from making a further advance to the nephew. The case of Brown v. Nisbett (1 Cox 13) observed upon. Webster v. Boddington, 16 Sim. 177.

3. By a marriage settlement, the lands of the wife were limited to such uses as she should, notwithstanding her coverture, by deed or will appoint; and in default of appointment, to the use of the children of the marriage. After the husband's death, the wife, by way of appointment under the power contained in the settlement, executed three successive mortgages of the property in fee. Each mortgage deed contained a trust for sale, in default of repayment of the mortgage money; but the language of the two latter deeds differed from that of the former, not only as to the trust for sale, but as to the proviso for reconveyance and in other respects:—Held, that having regard to the construction of the latter deeds taken by themselves, and also in comparison with the former, the wife must be considered as having intended to devote the whole property to purposes beyond those of mere mortgage securities; and consequently, that by the latter deeds, or one of them, the power was exhausted. Barnett v. Wilson, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 407; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 428; 7 Jur. 593.

4. Property was settled in trust for the children of a marriage, as the husband and wife should jointly appoint; but if either the husband or the wife should die before any such appointment should be made, then as the survivor should solely appoint:—Held, that notwithstanding a joint appointment of part of the property, a sole appointment might be made of the remainder by the survivor. Re Simpson's Settlement, 4 De G. & Sm. 521; 20 L. J., Ch., 415.

5. Under a power to lend 2,500*l.* of the trust funds to the tenant for life:—Held, that it was not exhausted by one loan, but that, after repayment, the power might be exercised a second time. Versturme v. Gardiner, 17 Beav. 338.

6. Where there is a primary power, and no default of appointment, a secondary power, or partial exercise of the primary power, does not exclude the exercise of the secondary power. Mapleton v. Mapleton, 4 Drew. 515; 28 L. J., Ch., 785.

Power to a husband to appoint among children and issue of children living at the wife's death; in default of appointment, power to the wife to appoint to children and issue of children living at husband's death. The husband appointed to four children only, leaving a fifth living at his death, with issue. After his death the fifth child died, leaving three children, one of whom, A., was living at the death of the first donee, the other two being born afterwards. The second donee, the wife, then appointed among her four children, and to A., the eldest child of her deceased child:—Held, that although the two others would have been objects of the primary powers, their exclusion by the joint operation of the two powers did not render the execution of either bad. Ib.

7. A testator gave his widow E. J. full and complete control in the disposal of the principal moneys of his estate at such times and in such proportions as she might see fit, whether by will or otherwise, for the benefit of his children or grandchildren; but in the event of E. J.'s marriage or death, the trustees of the will were to divide the estate ratably amongst the testator's children, share and share alike. E. J. executed a deed-poll appointing a portion to a child, a portion to a grandchild, and a further portion to trustees in trust for the child:—Held, that all these appointments were valid executions of the power. Job v. Job, 2 W. R. 25.

8. In a suit to have an appointment under a discretionary power declared invalid, a subsequent appointment pendente lite upheld. Ward v. Tyrrell, 25 Beav. 563.

9. A power may be exercised from time to time by several appointments, to suit convenience and promote advantage, as exigencies arise, or as expediency may suggest. Cuninghame v. Anstruther, 2 L. R., H. L. (Sc.), 223.

10. Where successive irrevocable appointments are made in favour of the same person, the latter appointment will be held to be in substitution for the former, if such appears to be the intention of the donee of the power, and the person in whose favour the appointments are made will be compelled to elect between them. England v. Lavers, 3 L. R., Eq., 63; 15 W. R. 51.

A person having a power of appointment, by deed or will, over a fund in favour of his children, upon the occasion of the marriage of one of his daughters, E., appointed one-seventh to her; and upon the marriage of another of his daughters, L., appointed another one-seventh to her. He afterwards executed a deed-poll, by which, without noticing the previous appointments, he gave one-sixth of the fund to E., another sixth to L., three other sixths to other children, and left one-sixth undisposed of. By his will he disposed of so much of the fund as was not then already appointed in favour of any of his children:—Held, that the appointments to E. and L., made by the deed-poll, were in substitution for those previously made, and raised a case of election, and that the will operated as an appointment of so much of the fund as was not disposed of by the deed-poll. Ib.

VII. MERGER.

1. Where a donee of a power of charging becomes also entitled to the reversion in fee of the estates subject to the power, the power does not necessarily merge, but there must be an indication of an intention to that effect. Sing v. Leslie, 10 Jur., N. S., 794; 2 Hem. & M. 68; 33 L. J., Ch., 549; 4 N. R. 17.

A donee of a power to charge estates, of which he was entitled to the reversion in fee, with portions for younger children, by his will, "in exercise of the power, and of all other powers," charged the estates with 10,000*l.*, and directed the shares of the children to be interests vested at his death, and to be payable when the estates fell into possession. The testator died intestate as to the reversion, leaving five children, all of whom had attained twenty-one at the date of his will, but the execution of the power failed by his death before he became entitled to the actual freehold of the estates. None of the children were alive at the time when the reversion vested in possession:—Held, that, notwithstanding the failure of the power, the sum was raisable out of the testator's reversion in fee. Ib.

2. Power of appointment does not prevent the fee vesting, subject to be devested by execution of the power. Such a power is a mode which the owner of the estate reserves to himself, or gives to another, through the medium of the Statute of Uses, of raising and passing an estate. Maundrell v. Maundrell, 10 Ves. 265, 266.

A general power of appointment over the whole estate may subsist in the same person who has the fee simple. Id. 10 Ves. 247, overthrowing the principle of Cross v. Hudson, 3 Bro. C. C. 30. See note there.

3. By a marriage settlement an estate was settled on the husband for life, with a jointure to the wife secured by a term, with remainder to the issue, and, in default, to the husband in fee. The settlement contained a power of sale and exchange vested in trustees to be exercised with the consent of the husband or the person entitled to the rents. The husband died without issue, having devised his estate in trust to sell. The wife was living:—Held, that the power of sale given to the trustees of the settlement had ceased on the union of the estate for life with the immediate reversion in fee, and that it could not be exercised with any consent. Wolley v. Jenkins, 23 Beav. 53; 5 W. R. 281; 3 Jur., N. S., 321; 26 L. J., Ch., 379.

2. By Covenant not to exercise the Power, 5730.
3. Under Conveyancing Act, 5732.

1. In General.

4. Learning as to what powers of appointment are capable of being extinguished or released. West v. Berney, 1 Russ. & M. 431. And see Cunynghame v. Thurlow, id. 436. n.

5. A tenant for life with a power of appointing the property by will to all or any of the testator's children, may release or extinguish the power. Horner v. Swann, T. & R. 430.

6. By a marriage settlement certain real property was settled upon the husband and wife for life, and afterwards to such of the children of the marriage as they should jointly appoint; in default of joint appointment, as the survivor should appoint, and, in default of such appointment, to the children equally, as tenants in common. The wife died without having joined in any appointment. The husband subsequently executed a deed-poll, by which he absolutely released his power of appointment given by the settlement, and afterwards, by his will, professed to execute the power of selection, without taking notice of the deed of release, and divided the property in unequal shares among his children:—Held, that the deed-poll releasing the power was valid, that the children took as tenants in common, and that the will was inoperative as an execution of the power. Smith v. Plummer, 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 145.

7. Where trust funds were settled to the separate use of a married woman for her life, and after her death upon trust for such persons as she should by will appoint, and, in default of appointment, for her executors and administrators, she, having become a widow, applied for a transfer of the funds to herself and her assignees, offering to release her power of appointment:—Held, that she was absolutely entitled to the trust funds, and the order was made accordingly. Page v. Soper, 11 Hare 321.

8. A father had an exclusive power of appointment in favour of his children over a fund, which, in default, was limited to them equally, and, as representative of a deceased son, he was, in default of appointment, beneficially entitled to one-third of the fund. The father released the power to his mortgagees:—Held, that the power had been effectually destroyed, and the Court declared the rights of the parties consequent on such destruction. Smith v. Houblon, 26 Beav. 482.

9. By a post-nuptial settlement a settlor in 1837 granted lands to trustees, after the death of the survivor of the settlor and his wife, to such persons and for such uses as the settlor should by will appoint, and in default of appointment for all the children of the settlor. The deed contained an ultimate limitation, if there should not be any child of the existing marriage, for the settlor absolutely. In 1841 the wife died, leaving four children of the marriage. By a re-settlement in 1848, to which the same trustees were parties, after reciting wife, who survived. Simpson v. Paul, 2 Eden 34.

1. Power to husband and wife to charge a term in lands with a sum of money not exceeding 200*l.* for their daughters A. and B. as the husband and wife should appoint; and in failure of their joint appointment as the survivors should appoint, with interest from such time as the term should commence in possession, and not before. The term was not to commence in possession until after the death of the survivor. The husband and wife, in execution of the power, direct the 200*l.* to be equally divided between the two daughters, six months after the decease of the father and mother; and if either of them die before payment, or the money become due, then the share of her so dying to be laid out for the benefit of her executors; one of the daughters died after the appointment, and before the time of payment:—Held, a good appointment to the daughters themselves, but the appointment to executors is void; but as one of the appointees died before the time of payment her share sinks into the estate. The joint appointment having appointed the whole, the share of the daughter who died is not subject to any further appointment. Brown v. Nisbett, 1 Cox 13.

2. Testator empowered his executors for the time being to advance to his nephew any sum or sums of money not exceeding 30,000*l.* The executors exercised the power to the extent of 20,000*l.*:—Held, that they were not precluded thereby from making a further advance to the nephew. The case of Brown v. Nisbett (1 Cox 13) observed upon. Webster v. Boddington, 16 Sim. 177.

3. By a marriage settlement, the lands of the wife were limited to such uses as she should, notwithstanding her coverture, by deed or will appoint; and in default of appointment, to the use of the children of the marriage. After the husband's death, the wife, by way of appointment under the power contained in the settlement, executed three successive mortgages of the property in fee. Each mortgage deed contained a trust for sale, in default of repayment of the mortgage money; but the language of the two latter deeds differed from that of the former, not only as to the trust for sale, but as to the proviso for reconveyance and in other respects:—Held, that having regard to the construction of the latter deeds taken by themselves, and also in comparison with the former, the wife must be considered as having intended to devote the whole property to purposes beyond those of mere mortgage securities; and consequently, that by the latter deeds, or one of them, the power was exhausted. Barnett v. Wilson, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 407; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 428; 7 Jur. 593.

4. Property was settled in trust for the children of a marriage, as the husband and wife should jointly appoint; but if either the husband or the wife should die before any such appointment should be made, then as the survivor should solely appoint:—Held, that notwithstanding a joint appointment of part of the property, a sole appointment might be made of the remainder by the survivor. Re Simpson's Settlement, 4 De G. & Sm. 521; 20 L. J., Ch., 415.

5. Under a power to lend 2,500*l.* of the trust funds to the tenant for life:—Held, that it was not exhausted by one loan, but that, after repayment, the power might be exercised a second time. Versturme v. Gardiner, 17 Beav. 338.

6. Where there is a primary power, and no default of appointment, a secondary power, or partial exercise of the primary power, does not exclude the exercise of the secondary power. Mapleton v. Mapleton, 4 Drew. 515; 28 L. J., Ch., 785.

Power to a husband to appoint among children and issue of children living at the wife's death; in default of appointment, power to the wife to appoint to children and issue of children living at husband's death. The husband appointed to four children only, leaving a fifth living at his death, with issue. After his death the fifth child died, leaving three children, one of whom, A., was living at the death of the first donee, the other two being born afterwards. The second donee, the wife, then appointed among her four children, and to A., the eldest child of her deceased child:—Held, that although the two others would have been objects of the primary powers, their exclusion by the joint operation of the two powers did not render the execution of either bad. Ib.

7. A testator gave his widow E. J. full and complete control in the disposal of the principal moneys of his estate at such times and in such proportions as she might see fit, whether by will or otherwise, for the benefit of his children or grandchildren; but in the event of E. J.'s marriage or death, the trustees of the will were to divide the estate ratably amongst the testator's children, share and share alike. E. J. executed a deed-poll appointing a portion to a child, a portion to a grandchild, and a further portion to trustees in trust for the child:—Held, that all these appointments were valid executions of the power. Job v. Job, 2 W. R. 25.

8. In a suit to have an appointment under a discretionary power declared invalid, a subsequent appointment pendente lite upheld. Ward v. Tyrrell, 25 Beav. 563.

9. A power may be exercised from time to time by several appointments, to suit convenience and promote advantage, as exigencies arise, or as expediency may suggest. Cuninghame v. Anstruther, 2 L. R., H. L. (Sc.), 223.

10. Where successive irrevocable appointments are made in favour of the same person, the latter appointment will be held to be in substitution for the former, if such appears to be the intention of the donee of the power, and the person in whose favour the appointments are made will be compelled to elect between them. England v. Lavers, 3 L. R., Eq., 63; 15 W. R. 51.

A person having a power of appointment, by deed or will, over a fund in favour of his children, upon the occasion of the marriage of one of his daughters, E., appointed one-seventh to her; and upon the marriage of another of his daughters, L., appointed another one-seventh to her. He afterwards executed a deed-poll, by which, without noticing the previous appointments, he gave one-sixth of the fund to E., another sixth to L., three other sixths to other children, and left one-sixth undisposed of. By his will he disposed of so much of the fund as was not then already appointed in favour of any of his children:—Held, that the appointments to E. and L., made by the deed-poll, were in substitution for those previously made, and raised a case of election, and that the will operated as an appointment of so much of the fund as was not disposed of by the deed-poll. Ib.

A donee of a power to charge estates, of which he was entitled to the reversion in fee, with portions for younger children, by his will, "in exercise of the power, and of all other powers," charged the estates with 10,000*l.*, and directed the shares of the children to be interests vested at his death, and to be payable when the estates fell into possession. 8. A father had an exclusive power of appointment in favour of his children over a fund, which, in default, was limited to them equally, and, as representative of a deceased son, he was, in default of appointment, beneficially entitled to one-third of the fund. The father released the power to his mortgagees:—Held, that the power had been effectually destroyed, and the Court declared the rights of the parties consequent on such destruction. Smith v. Houblon, 26 Beav. 482.

9. By a post-nuptial settlement a settlor in 1837 granted lands to trustees, after the death of the survivor of the settlor and his wife, to such persons and for such uses as the settlor should by will appoint, and in default of appointment for all the children of the settlor. The deed contained an ultimate limitation, if there should not be any child of the existing marriage, for the settlor absolutely. In 1841 the wife died, leaving four children of the marriage. By a re-settlement in 1848, to which the same trustees were parties, after reciting that it had been proposed that the settlor should give up his life estate in the premises, and forego the power given to him of appointing by will, the settlor granted the rents and profits during his life to the trustees for the benefit of his four children. He also covenanted with the trustees that he would not make any will whereby the trusts thereby declared should be impeached or defeated, and released the trustees from all the trusts of the former settlement. Shortly afterwards he married again, and had seven children by the second marriage. He died in 1866, having devised and bequeathed all his real and personal estate upon trust for his wife for life, and after her death upon trust to sell, and divide the proceeds among the children of the second marriage:—Held, that the covenant and release in the deed of 1848, though voluntary, operated in equity as an effectual release of the power of appointment by will in the settlement of 1837. Isaac v. Hughes, 9 L. R., Eq., 191; 39 L. J., Ch., 379; 22 L. T., N. S., 11.

Held, also, that the power was wholly released, and that the release of the power was not confined to the shares of the children of the first marriage, who alone were living at the date of the deed of 1848. Ib.

2. By Covenant not to exercise the Power.

1. Three powers by settlement, first to raise 3,000*l.*; secondly, to husband alone; thirdly, to husband and wife jointly, to raise and appoint such sum as would, with the sum before raised, make 5,000*l.*: the wife joining in raising 3,000*l.* under the joint power for the husband, he covenanted not to charge by the power reserved to him alone, or any other power whatsoever, during her life, and so long as said 3,000*l.* should remain unpaid with her consent. After her death he, by deed-poll, did charge with 2,000*l.* more to be paid to his executors for debts, etc., and otherwise in performance of his will, or as he should appoint by it, and died, leaving his second wife executrix, without taking notice by his will of the charge, but the deed-poll was found uncancelled among his papers. The 2,000*l.* well charged, and went to the executrix without a special appointment. Uxbridge (Earl) v. Bayly, 1 Ves. J. 499; 4 Bro. C. C. 13.

2. The donee of a power, though to be executed by will only, may bind himself not to execute it, or not to do so except under certain restrictions. Re Chambers, 11 Ir. Eq. R. 518.

3. A person being seised of a life estate in lands, and being indebted in various sums of money secured by his bonds, filed a bill to restrain proceedings at law on them, on account of usury, and then entered into a consent in the cause with his creditors, whereby it was agreed that a certain sum should be found due on foot of those bonds, and the consent was embodied in the Master's report, and a decree pronounced declaring that the said sum was due and well charged on the lands in the pleadings mentioned:—Held, that the consent was such an act or contract on the part of the debtor, as, when acted on and embodied in the decree of the Court, deprived him of the right of executing a power to charge the life estate with portions for younger children, so as to affect the rights of the creditors under the decree which had attached upon his life estate. Piers v. Twits, 1 Dr. & Wal. 279.

4. The 19 & 20 Geo. 3, c. 32, incorporated the undertakers of the Lagan Navigation, and enacted that it should be lawful for every subscriber towards completing the navigation, and through whose lands it should pass, to charge his real estate, for the use of his younger children, with the payment of such sums of money and other interest which he might have in the joint stock of the company, as he should assign or bequeath to his heir, any settlement to the contrary notwithstanding. Under a settlement of 1761, A. was tenant for life of lands through which the navigation passed, with powers of joint using and leasing, with remainder to B., his eldest son, in tail. A. was a subscriber to the undertaking by reason of advances made by him before and after May 1792. In 1791 A. and B. suffered recoveries, and declared the uses to be to A. for life, and after his decease as A. and B. should jointly appoint; and until such joint appointment, A. was to be at liberty to exercise all powers given to him by the settlement of 1761. In 1792 A. and B. agreed to resettle the estates for valuable considerations moving from each of them; and by deed of the 17th May, 1792, A. and B. appointed the lands, after the decease of A., and subject and without prejudice to his life estate, and to all powers and authorities then vested in or belonging to him, whether appendant or in gross or otherwise, to Z. in fee, in order that he might join in the intended resettlement of the estates; and by another deed of the 19th May, 1792, A., B., and Z., reciting A.'s powers under the settlement of 1761, and the intention of the parties to resettle the estates, subject to the powers thereinafter mentioned, conveyed the estates to A. for life, remainder to B. for life, remainder to his first and other sons in tail, and new powers of leasing and jointuring were given to A. This deed did not contain any saving of the former powers of A. under the settlement of 1761 or otherwise, and no allusion was made in it to the power of charging under the 19 & 20 Geo. 3, c. 32. A., by his will reciting the Act, devised all his shares in the company to B., his heirs, executors, etc., and charged the settled lands with 30,000*l.* for his only younger child:—Held, first, that the power to charge given by the Act was not destroyed by the recovery of 1791, it not being the intention of the parties to the recovery that the power should be destroyed thereby; secondly, that it was destroyed quoad advances made before the 19th May, 1792, by the settlement of that date, which amounted to a contract by A. not to exercise the power as to advances then made, but that it existed as to subsequent advances; thirdly, that "heir" in the Act meant heir to the settled estate, and included, as far as the law would permit, all persons claiming in succession under the settlement, and that the power given by the Act was well executed by the will of A.; for that the bequest of the shares to B., his heirs, executors, etc., thereby made, enured, according to the title, for the benefit of the remainderman under the settlement; fourthly, the younger child of A., who was also his executor, having without fraud consented, quâ executor, that the company should issue new debentures in lieu of some which had been granted to A., and were lost by the executor:—Held, that the charge on the estate was not affected thereby. Stewart v. Donegal (Marquis), 2 J. & L. 636.

1. Property was settled, on the marriage of A. and B., on their children, as A. and B., or the survivor of them, should appoint, and in default of appointment on the children equally, if they survived A. and B.,—and the issue of any who died earlier, to take their parent's share. A., on the marriage of his daughter, promised in writing that neither he nor his wife would exercise the power, on the faith of which promise the daughter's share in the fund in default of appointment was settled; but subsequently A. and B. did execute the power:—Held, that a child of the daughter's marriage, who was prejudiced by the appointment, was entitled, after her mother's death, to have the appointment set aside, although her claim was paramount to her mother's settlement. Walford v. Gray, 5 N. R. 235.

2. A tenant for life, with a power of charging portions for younger children, mortgaged his life estate, and covenanted that he would not exercise the power without the consent of the mortgagees. He soon afterwards exercised the power in favour of his daughter on her marriage, and appointed the estate to trustees for a term of years to raise the portions. The trustees had notice of the covenant:—Held, that the portions must be postponed to the mortgages. Hurst v. Hurst, 1 W. R. 105; 22 L. J., Ch., 538; 16 Beav. 372.

3. A testamentary power of appointment may for valuable consideration be released by means of a covenant on the part of the donee of the power. Davies v. Huguenin, 2 N. R. 101.

Covenant by a father in his daughter's marriage settlement not to exercise a power so as to diminish her portion under the father's settlement:—Held, a release pro tanto of the power. S. C. 1 Hem. & M. 730.

By a voluntary settlement D. conveyed freehold estates to trustees, to the use of D. and his wife, successively for their lives, with remainder to the use of their children, as D. should by will, or in default of appointment by him as his wife should by will, appoint, and in default of appointment to the use of trustees for 500 years, with remainder to the use of the first and other sons of D. and his wife successively in tail male; and the trusts of 500 years' terms were declared to be as soon as conveniently might be after the death of the survivor of D. and his wife; in case D. should have issue by his wife one son and also two or more children, then in trust to raise 6,000*l.* for the portion or portions of any child or children of D. and his wife, other than their eldest and only son, equally to be divided between them if more than one. No period was fixed for vesting the portions. D., by a settlement on the marriage of his daughter H., covenanted that he would not execute any appointment, or do any other act to diminish the share to which she might become entitled under the first mentioned settlement; subsequently D., by will, appointed the estate to his second son J., charged with 1,000*l.* in favour of H., and 3,000*l.* in favour of another daughter:—Held, that by the covenant D. had released his testamentary power to the extent of disabling himself from affecting the share of H. by any subsequent exercise thereof (but not to any greater extent), and that she was entitled to the same share in the 6,000*l.* that she would have taken in default of appointment. S. C. 32 L. J., Ch., 417; 11 W. R. 1040; 8 L. T., N. S., 443.

4. An equitable power of appointment may be effectually released by means of a voluntary covenant not to exercise it, entered into by the donee of the power, with the trustees of the fund, subject to the power. Isaac v. Hughes, 9 L. R., Eq., 191; 39 L. J., Ch., 379; 2 2 L. T. 11.

5. In 1825, D. mortgaged an estate to I. in fee (subject, among other incumbrances, to an existing mortgage for 3,000*l.*) to secure 27,000*l.* payable at the end of twelve months, with interest in the meantime. The mortgage deed contained a power of sale providing that if default should be made in payment of the interest, or any part of it, for a month after any of the days appointed for payment, or in payment of the principal on the appointed day, then at any time thereafter, though no advantage should have been taken of any previous default, I., his heirs or assigns, might sell. In 1830, I. having called for payment, a deed of transfer was executed to K. and R. This deed, after reciting that I. was entitled to the prior mortgage for 3,000*l.*, recited the mortgage of 1825, and that "in the now reciting indenture a power of sale is contained for the better securing of the principal and interest, but the power has not been, and is not intended to be exercised," and recited the calling in of the mortgage moneys, and that D. had applied to K. and R. to discharge them, "which K. and R. have agreed to do on having the said sums so agreed to be advanced as aforesaid secured to them by an assignment of the several securities hereinbefore recited, and generally in the manner hereinafter appearing." Then, in consideration of 30,000*l.* paid to I. by K. and R., I., at the request of D., assigned, and I. confirmed to K. and R., the moneys due on the mortgages, "and all powers and remedies for recovering the same sums respectively, and all benefit of the several indentures of mortgage, and of every covenant and security therein respectively contained." Then I. conveyed and D. confirmed to K. and R. in fee the mortgaged estates, subject to a proviso for redemption if D. should pay the principal of 30,000*l.* on the day therein named, being at the expiration of seven years, and should in the meantime pay interest half-yearly on the days therein named. It was agreed that the money should remain on the security for seven years, D. not to be at liberty to pay it off sooner, and K. and R. not to call for payment sooner, unless default was made in payment of interest, or D. died. There was a power of sale to arise if default should be made in payment of the principal or interest contrary to the terms of the proviso for redemption; and a covenant by K. and R. that no sale of the property should be made without three months' notice. The persons claiming under K. and R. having put up the property for sale, the purchasers objected that the power of sale in the deed of 1825 was gone, and that the vendors could not make a good title as against mesne incumbrancers:—Held, that the power of sale in the mortgage of 1825 was still subsisting, and capable of being exercised. Boyd v. Petrie, 7 L. R., Ch., 385; 41 L. J., Ch., 378; 20 W. R. 513; 25 L. T., N. S., 460.

3. Under Conveyancing Act.

1. Section 52 of the Conveyancing Act 1881 does not enable trustees who have confided to them a joint power of appointment over property in the nature of a trust to release such power. The property in such a case can only be made distributable during the lives of the trustees by their jointly executing an irrevocable appointment. Re Eyre, Eyre v. Eyre, 49 L. T. 259.

IX. SUSPENSION BY MARRIAGE.

2. Where a power is given to a woman to dispose of estate by will, and she marries, semble, it is a suspension of power. Sed quære. Rich v. Beaumont, 6 Bro. P. C. 152.

3. By a marriage settlement, certain stock in the funds was settled upon the intended husband and wife for their joint lives, and the life of the survivor, and then upon the children of the marriage, with a power to the trustees, with the consent of the wife, to advance part of the fund for the benefit of the children in her lifetime. There were four children of the marriage; the husband died; the wife married again; the second husband assigned the wife's life interest for value; after the assignment the trustees, with the consent of the wife, exercised the power of advancement in favour of the children of the first marriage:—Held, that the power was well executed as against the assignee of the second husband. Whitmarsh v. Robertson, 1 Colly. 571; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 157; 9 Jur. 125. And see S. C. 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 715; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 404; 6 Jur. 921.

4. A feme sole, by a settlement made three years before her coverture, declared the trusts of a fund, which she had previously transferred into the names of trustees, to be for such person or persons and for such uses as she should by deed appoint, and in default of such appointment, for herself so long as she should continue sole and unmarried, and in the event of her marriage, for herself for life for her separate use, without power of anticipation, with remainder for all or any one or more of her children, grandchildren, or other issue, as she should by deed or will appoint, with remainder, in default of such appointment, for her children equally, with remainder in default of children who should obtain a vested interest, for her next of kin as therein mentioned:—Held, that, upon the marriage of the settlor, her ability to exercise the general power of appointment reserved in the settlement became suspended, the trust declared of the fund in the event of marriage being inconsistent with the continuance of a general power of appointment reserved in the settlor over the fund. Gould v. Gould, 2 Jur., N. S., 484; 25 L. J., Ch., 642; 4 W. R. 484

VI. Lapse and Interests Undisposed of.

I. Death of Donee of Power. Effect on Appointee, 5732.
II. Death of Appointee, 5733.
III. Interests undisposed of, 5736.

I. DEATH OF DONEE OF POWER. EFFECT ON APPOINTEE.

5. Legacy to A., with power to appoint principal, if no appointment, then to B. A. dies in lifetime of testator, B. takes remainder immediately on testator's death, though A., had she survived testator, might have defeated remainder in B. Chatteris v. Young, 6 Madd. 30. Affirmed 2 Russ. 183.

6. A testator gave the residue of his real and personal estate to trustees, upon trust, to pay the income to his wife for life, to her separate use, and after her decease, as to a moiety of the trust funds, for such persons as she should by deed or will appoint, and in default of appointment to her next of kin, as in case of distribution of intestate's estates. The wife died in the testator's lifetime:—Held, that the moiety had not lapsed. Hardwicke v. Thurston (4 Russ. 380; 6 L. J., Ch., 114) followed. Edwards v. Salaway, 2 De G. & Sm. 248; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 329; 12 Jur. 493. Affirmed 2 Ph. 625; 12 Jur. 487.

7. A legacy was given to the separate use of a married woman during the joint lives of her and her husband, and in case she survived him, to her absolutely; but if she did not survive him, to such persons as she should by will appoint, and in default of appointment, to her next of kin exclusive of her husband. She died in the lifetime of her husband and the testator:—Held, that the legacy lapsed. Baker v. Hanbury, 3 Russ. 340; 1 L. J., Ch., 78.

8. A gift by will of real and personal estate to L. for life, and then to L.'s husband for life, and then to her appointees by deed or will; and in default, to her "next of kin, according to the statutes of distribution of personal estate, and in the like shares and proportions as if she had died without having been married;" with a direction to L. to appoint trustees, in whom the property was to be vested, upon the above trusts. L. died in the lifetime of the testatrix, leaving the testatrix, who was her mother, and one other person, who was the only child of her only sister, her next of kin, according to the statute:—Held, that the gift to the next of kin had not lapsed. Nichols v. Haviland, 1 Kay & J. 504; 1 Jur., N. S., 891.

9. A legacy to the testator's daughter, with a gift over, in the event of her dying unmarried, to such of the testator's other children as she should appoint, and, in default of appointment, to and amongst his other children equally, is not an absolute gift, and does not lapse by the death of the daughter unmarried in the lifetime of the testator; and, consequently, the power of appointment not having been exercised, one of the testator's other children was held to be entitled to a distributive share of his sister's legacy; with interest in the absence of laches on his part, from the death of the testator in 1847, according to the express trust in the will. Kellett v. Kellett, 5 Ir. R., Eq., 298.

II. DEATH OF APPOINTEE.

1. Under Special Powers, 5733.
2. Under General Powers, 5734.
3. Effect of Wills Act, s. 33, 5736.

1. Under Special Powers.

1. An appointment is made to all and every the daughter and daughters of R., and the heirs of their body and bodies, and in default of such issue to A. There were only two daughters, and one of them died under twenty-one, sans issue:—Held, that the surviving daughter was entitled, though there were no cross-remainders between them. Wright v. Cadogan (Lord), 1 Bro. P. C. 486.

2. Appointment by will under a power, void by the death of the appointee in the life of testatrix; and if a power is preferred to be executed by a will, such instrument must have all the qualities of a will. Oke v. Heath, 1 Ves. 139.

A wife having power to appoint 4,000*l.* to any of her kin, and for want of appointment to go according to the statute, appoints it by will to her nephew, "upon condition" that he paid his mother an annuity of 100*l.* She then bequeathed to her niece, S., all the real and residue of what she had power to dispose of. The nephew dying in her lifetime, the appointment as to him was void; but not so as to the annuitant; and the remainder was held to pass by the above residuary bequest. Id. 135.

3. Devise of 30,000*l.* to testator's wife for life, and afterwards to be distributed among his children, as she by deed, will, or instrument in nature of a will, should appoint. She having married again, appoints by will (inter alia) unto two of the children, who died in her lifetime:—Held, that their representatives were not entitled, and that the shares so appointed to them lapsed and fell into the residue. Marlborough (Duke) v. Godolphin, 2 Ves. 61.

Appointee under a power must claim also according to nature of the instrument. Id. 77.

Appointee takes under the power, as if inserted therein, but not so as to take by relation from creation of the power, as in assignment on commission of bankruptcy, or in bargain and sale enrolled. Ib.

Naked powers construed strictly; powers coupled with interest liberally. Ib.

4. A testator gave the interest of a fund to his widow for life, with a power of appointment amongst all his children, and in default of appointment amongst all such children, with a gift over to the widow, in case all the children should die before their shares should become payable; the widow appointed the fund to her two children, one of whom died in her lifetime:—Held, that the survivor took the whole fund. Bielefield v. Record, 2 Sim. 354.

5. The trust of a term limited by marriage settlement, was declared to be in case there should be issue male of the marriage, and one or more younger children, to raise 3,000*l.* for the portions of such younger children, in such shares and proportions as J. C., by any writing, etc., should appoint; and for want of appointment equally amongst the children, the portions of the sons to be paid at twenty-one, and of the daughters at twenty-one or marriage. J. C. by will appointed 1,250*l.*, part of the 3,000*l.*, to one of his younger sons, who, after the making of the will, attained the age of twenty-one, but died in the lifetime of the appointor:—Held, that the sum of 1,250*l.* went as in default of appointment. Colthurst v. Colthurst, 2 Jones 262.

6. When father has a power to appoint among children, and one died in his lifetime:—Held, that share which lapsed by death should go among all, as in default of appointment, notwithstanding a direction that each receiving a share should release the fund; and there is no presumption of satisfaction or purchase from another provision which was expressly made in satisfaction of different interest. Burges v. Manbey, 10 Ves. 319.

7. The donee of a power to appoint 5,900*l.* consols among her children, appointed 1,400*l.* to each of her three sons, and then appointed to her daughter the residue which would remain of the consols, after setting apart a sufficient portion to answer and satisfy the appointment made in favour of her sons; and it was provided that the appointment made in favour of the sons should be subject to revocation and new appointment, but that the appointment in favour of the daughter should be irrevocable. Two of the sons died in the lifetime of the mother, the donee of the power:—Held, that the shares appointed to the deceased sons were unappointed, and went as in default of appointment. Lakin v. Lakin, 11 Jur., N. S., 522; 13 W. R. 704; 12 L. T., N. S., 517; 34 Beav. 443.

8. Trusts in marriage articles to pay certain funds, the property of the wife, to all and every her child and children, in such parts, etc., as she should by will give, etc., and for want of such gift, etc., to all and every her child and children, part and share alike, and for want of such issue, over. By her will she gave ten guineas, part of the fund, to her eldest son, declaring that he was otherwise provided for by the will of his uncle; and the remainder she gave to all her other children, naming them, equally, with survivorship in case of the death of any during minority, and before receipt of his, her, or their shares; and in case of the death of her eldest son before he comes to the possession of his uncle's fortune, she gave her second son only ten guineas. The only provision for the eldest son was a remainder in tail after the life estate of his father, who survived his wife. The Court was of opinion that a share appointed to a child who died in the lifetime of her mother, lapsed. Vanderzee v. Aclom, 4 Ves. 771.

9. Renewal of a college lease by tenant for life, with a power of appointment in her own name and at her expense, has not the effect of an appointment in her own favour; and therefore, by the death of the appointee in the life of the tenant, there will be a resulting trust by lapse for the representative of the author of the power. Brookman v. Hales, 2 Ves. & B. 45.

10. By the marriage settlement of A., a sum of 15,000*l.* was to be raised for the portions of the younger children, in such shares, and payable at such times, as A. should appoint; and in default of appointment, among the children equally; the share of each son to be vested at twenty-one, and of each daughter at twenty-one or marriage; with a proviso that the share of any younger child, dying before the time prescribed for the vesting of his or her portion, should go over to the survivors. Afterwards A., by his will, bequeathed unto all and every his daughters who should be living at his death, or born in due time afterwards, 40,000*l.*, share and share alike; but if he should have only one daughter, then unto such only daughter the sum of 20,000*l.*; to be paid to them or her, at such time or times, etc., as the provisions made for them by this marriage settlement was payable. A. died, leaving two daughters, one of whom died under age and unmarried:—Held, that the surviving daughter was entitled to the whole of the 40,000*l.*, if the personalty was sufficient to raise it. Sandford v. Irby, 4 L. J., Ch., 28.

Quære, whether the surviving daughter would be entitled to such part of 20,000*l.* (moiety of the 40,000*l.*) as it might be necessary to raise out of real estate. Ib.

1. The trust of a term limited by marriage settlement was declared to be in case there should be issue male of the marriage, and one or more younger children, to raise 3,000*l.* for the portions of such younger children, in such shares and proportions as J. C., by any writing, etc., should appoint; and for want of appointment equally amongst the children, the portions of the sons to be paid at twenty-one, and of the daughters at twenty-one or marriage. J. C. by will appointed 1,250*l.*, part of the 3,000*l.*, to one of his younger sons, who, after the making of the will, attained the age of twenty-one, but died in the lifetime of the appointer:—Held, that the sum of 1,250*l.* went as in default of appointment. Colthurst v. Colthurst, 2 Jones 262.

2. Where a definite fund is subject to a special power of appointment by will, and by a will purporting to be made in exercise of the power, one sum, part of the fund, is appointed to one person, and another sum, other part of it, to another, and "all the rest," or "all the remainder" of the fund to a third; the third appointee cannot claim a share which may lapse in consequence of the death of either of the former appointees in the lifetime of the testator. Re Harries, 1 Johns. 199.

But if there is upon the will a plain indication of an intention to appoint the whole that may remain strictly in the shape of residue, or to appoint the entire fund charged only with the sums specified in the preceding appointments, then the residuary clause will be read as an appointment, not of the mere balance of the fund after the sums so previously appointed have been deducted from it, but of the entire fund, subject to the preceding appointments, the Court acting upon the manifest intention of the testator to dispose of the entire fund over which he has a power of appointment. Ib.

Appointment by will of the residue and remainder of the said moneys (meaning thereby the sums secured by certain policies of assurance and all bonuses and other sums of money which had accrued or should accrue by virtue of the same), after payment of certain sums specified in previous appointments contained in the will:—Held, upon the whole of the will, to pass a sum which had lapsed by reason of the death of an appointee in the lifetime of the testator. Ib.

2. Under General Powers.

3. Renewal of a college lease by tenant for life, with a power of appointment, in her own name, and at her expense, has not the effect of an appointment in her own favour; and, therefore, by the death of the appointee, in the life of the tenant, there will be a resulting trust by lapse for the representative of the author of the power. Brookman v. Hales, 2 Ves. & B. 45.

4. Appointment of a sum of money by will; the appointee to pay an annuity, and give bond for the payment; the appointment lapsing by the death of the appointee in the life of the testator, the annuity is a trust by way of legacy, not a condition. Taylor v. George, 2 Ves. & B. 381.

5. A married woman having a power, by will gave part of the fund to a person who died in her lifetime, and the residue of the said fund, "after deducting the legacy before mentioned," she gave to A. B.:—Held, that he was entitled to the whole fund. Carter v. Taggart, 16 Sim. 423.

6. A testatrix having a general power of appointment over a sum of stock under the will of T. S., appointed the stock to her sons Joseph and John and her other children equally, and she left any other sum of money or property to which she then was or might thereafter become entitled under the will of T. S. to be divided amongst such of her children as might be living at her death, and she constituted Joseph her residuary legatee. John died before her:—Held, that Joseph was entitled to the share of the stock intended for John. Re Spooner's Trust, 2 Sim., N. S., 129; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 151.

7. A lady had a general power of appointing a trust fund by deed or will, and in default half was limited to A., and the other to B. By her will she appointed the fund to her executor, and made it chargeable with her debts and some legacies, and she gave half the residue, composed of the appointed fund and her own property, to A. A. predeceased the testatrix, and the bequest to him lapsed:—Held, that the moiety of the fund, subject to the power thus appointed in favour of A., passed to the appointor's next of kin, as part of her estate undisposed of, and not to the executors of A., as in default of appointment. Chamberlain v. Hutchinson, 22 Beav. 444.

8. A married woman having, under her marriage settlement, a general testamentary power, by will appointed the settled property to trustees, after specific gifts of chattels, for conversion and payment of debts and legacies, and gave the residue to persons whom she appointed her executors, in equal shares. Of these shares one lapsed and another was forfeited:—Held, that the exercise of the power did not make the appointed property her absolute estate, but that the lapsed and forfeited shares went as in default of appointment under the settlement. Hoare v. Osborne, 10 Jur., N. S., 694; 12 W. R. 661; 10 L. T., N. S., 258; 33 L. J., Ch., 586.

1. A testatrix devising property by will by virtue of a power of appointment:—Held, upon the construction of the will, to have made the property her own, so that on the death of the devisee in her lifetime the gift over in default of appointment did not take effect. Hoare v. Osborne (12 W. R. 661; 33 L. J., Ch., 586) disapproved. Willoughby Osborne v. Holyoake, 22 L. R., Ch. D., 238; 52 L. J., Ch., 331; 48 L. T. 152; 31 W. R. 236.

2. When a married woman, having a general testamentary power of appointment over personal property, appoints the whole property to trustees in such a manner as to show an intention to make it part of her general personal estate, any undisposed of beneficial interest will belong to those entitled ab intestato, not to those entitled in default of appointment. Bickenden v. Williams, 38 L. J., Ch., 222; 7 L. R., Eq., 310; 17 W. R. 441.

3. A testator directed that, in case of one of his daughters having no child, his trustees should stand possessed of a sum of 3,000*l.*, and the stock upon which it should be invested, including the accumulations of the surplus dividends which should not have been applied in manner in the will mentioned during the daughter's minority, upon such trusts as the daughter should by will appoint, and in default of appointment upon the trusts, by his will declared, of his own residuary estate. The daughter, having no child, by her will, after reciting that the 3,000*l.* and the accumulated dividends had been blended with funds to which she was absolutely entitled, in a sum of 6,700*l.* consols, standing in the names of trustees, proceeded, in express execution of the power, to direct that the 3,000*l.*, and the stock upon which that sum or the surplus dividends should have been invested, should be transferred to certain trustees named in her will, upon trust, as to 2,700*l.* consols for her mother, and as to 250*l.* consols for another person, and as to the residue upon the trusts after declared of her residuary estate. She then proceeded to give what she described as "all the residue of my stock in the public funds, and all my moneys, and securities for money, and all the residue of my estate and effects," to the same trustees, upon certain trusts, which she proceeded to declare. The mother died in the daughter's lifetime:—Held, that the 2,700*l.* consols was not well appointed, and that it was subject to the trusts declared by the testator of his residuary estate. Easum v. Appleford, 5 Myl. & C. 56; 10 L. J., N. S., Ch., 81. Affirming 10 Sim. 274; 4 Jur. 981.

4. B. had a general power of appointment over stock. By will he appointed the stock in favour of C., who died in B.'s lifetime. B., by a codicil to his will, gave all his personal estate, and also "any interest or dividends that might be due on his decease from the stock," to his wife absolutely:—Held, that the stock passed. Bush v. Cowan, 9 Jur., N. S., 429; 11 W. R. 395; 9 L. T., N. S., 161.

5. D. bequeathed his residuary estate to his wife for life, with a general testamentary power over one moiety of it. The wife died, having appointed to four persons, two of whom predeceased her, and having directed payments of her debts, and appointed an executor:—Held, that the next of kin of D., and not the next of kin of the wife, were entitled to the shares of the two deceased appointees. Re Davies, 41 L. J., Ch., 97; 13 L. R., Eq., 163; 25 L. T., N. S., 785; 20 W. R. 165. This decision was followed and approved in Re De Lusi, 3 L. R., Ir., 232.

6. An appointment by a married woman under a general testamentary power of personal property in trust for two persons, which appointment failed partially by lapse through the death of one of the beneficiaries:—Held, to make the lapsed portion of the property the absolute estate of the appointor, so that it was taken out of the settlement and devolved upon the testatrix's next of kin. Wilkinson v. Schneider, Re Le Blanc, 39 L. J., Ch., 410; 9 L. R., Eq., 423.

7. Under a settlement two sums of stock were vested in A., B., and C., as trustees, upon trust as testatrix, a married woman, should by will appoint, and in default of appointment upon other trusts. Testatrix, in exercise of that power, appointed that A., B., and C. should stand possessed of the said two sums in trust to pay a legacy of 2,000*l.* (which lapsed) and other legacies amounting to 6,100*l.* She bequeathed to her husband 2,000*l.*, which she authorised her executors to pay, and bequeathed to him her H. stock not included in the settlement. She directed that her funeral expenses be paid by her said trustees out of her said trust property, and that her legacies be paid free of duty. And as to all the residue of her personal estate whatsoever she bequeathed the same to her nephew, who died in her lifetime. She appointed A., B., and D. her executors. At the date of the will the value of the trust property was about 11,000*l.*, and she had no other property except the H. stock and some small savings of her separate estate:—Held, that the trust property was intended by the testatrix to be taken out of the settlement for all purposes, and that, having regard to s. 27 of the Wills Act, the balance, after payment of all the legacies, duty, and expenses, became part of her personal estate and passed to her husband. Re Pinèdes Settlement, 12 L. R., Ch. D., 667; 48 L. J., Ch., 741; 41 L. T. 579; 28 W. R. 178.

8. The effect of a testamentary appointment, either of real or personal estate, to a trustee upon trust for A., who dies in the lifetime of the appointor, is that the appointed property does not revert to the donor of the power, nor to those who would have taken under a gift over (if any) in default of appointment, but remains part of the general estate of the appointor. Re Van Hagan, Sperling v. Rochfort, 16 L. R., Ch. D., 18; 50 L. J., Ch., 1; 44 L. T. 161; 29 W. R. 84. Reversing 49 L. J., Ch., 705.

9. H., by his will dated in 1826, gave his mother, E., a general power of appointment over certain real estate, and provided that in case she died without a will her property should go over to C. E. by her will in 1853 executed the power in these terms: "As to and concerning all the real estate whatsoever and wheresoever of or to which I or any person or persons in trust for me am, is, or are seised or in any way entitled, or over which I have (either under or by virtue of the will of my deceased son), or over which I shall have any power to dispose. . . . I give, devise, limit, divest, and appoint the same unto and to the use of trustees, their heirs and assigns, in trust for G., his heirs and assigns, for ever." G. predeceased the testatrix two days. She made no residuary devise:—Held, that by exercising the power as she had done, the testatrix had made the property her own; and, therefore, that the trust in favour of G. having failed, the property did not go to C. (as in default of appointment), but that there was a resulting trust in favour of E.'s heir-at-law. Ib.

Semble, if the heir-at-law could not be found, the title of the trustees was good as against the Crown. Ib.

1. Testator by his will gave a sum of money to his son M. upon trust to invest and to pay the income unto his daughter A. for her separate use for life, and after her death upon trust to pay the principal sum and interest unto such persons as A. should by deed or will appoint, and in default of appointment upon trust for M.'s own benefit. The testator bequeathed to M. his residuary estate, and appointed him sole executor. The money was invested by M. upon mortgages, and the income paid to A. till her death. A., who was not seised or possessed of any other property, by her will gave all her money and securities for money, furniture, and all other her personal estate and effects and property, and all her real estate, if any, unto her two sisters H. and C. in proportion, i.e., one-third part of all her real and personal property and effects to H., and two-thirds of all her real and personal property and effects to C., absolutely, and she appointed C. sole executrix, and charged her property and effects with the payment of her debts and funeral and testamentary expenses. C. died in 1868, and A. in 1880, and H. was appointed administratrix of the will:—Held, that the two-thirds of the moneys, subject to the payment thereout of a proportion of the debts and funeral and testamentary expenses, belonged to the next-of-kin of A., and not to M., the residuary legatee. Re Ickeringill's Estate, Hinsley v. Ickeringill, 17 L. R., Ch. D., 151; 50 L. J., Ch., 364; 29 W. R. 500.

3. Effect of Wills Acts, s. 33.

2. The provision of 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict., c. 26, against the lapse of a legacy to a child of the testator dying in his lifetime, leaving issue living at the testator's death:—Held, not to apply to the case of a testamentary appointment. Griffiths v. Gale, 12 Sim. 327, 354; 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 286; 8 Jur. 235.

3. The enactment in s. 33 of the 7 Will. 4 and 1 Vict., c. 26, that a bequest to a child of the testator, who dies in the testator's lifetime, leaving issue living at the testator's death, shall not lapse, applies to a testamentary appointment made in exercise of a general power. Eccles v. Cheyne, 2 Kay & J. 676.

Distinction in reference to this subject between a general and a limited power. Ib.

A testatrix, by her will in 1840, in exercise of a general power, appointed proceeds of real estate to a daughter who died in her lifetime, leaving issue living at the testatrix's death:—Held, that the personal representative of the daughter was entitled. Ib.

4. A power of charging the inheritance given under a will to a tenant for life who dies before the testator, cannot be exercised by such tenant for life under the Wills Act, 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict., c. 26, s. 33. Griggs v. Gibson, Maynard v. Gibson, 35 L. J., Ch., 458; 14 W. R. 538.

III. INTERESTS UNDISPOSED OF.

5. A. directs that his estate should be sold after his death, for several purposes, and, amongst others, that 200*l.* should be disposed of as he by note should appoint, and dies intestate, having given no directions. This 200*l.* shall be a resulting trust for the heir-at-law. Emblyn v. Freeman, Pre. Ch. 541.

6. Upon settlement of lands to be sold in trust for several purposes, the residue is given to B. and his heirs, reserving only 200*l.* to appointee of settlor; settlor died without appointing: the 200*l.* shall go to his heir, and to B. or his assignees. Anon., 1 Com. 345.

7. A., by will, devises his lands to trustees to sell and dispose of the money as he by writing should appoint, and, for want of appointment, to his four nephews, and by writing appoints his trustees to pay several sums to several persons, but not near the value of lands. Decreed the surplus to the heir, and not to the nephews, as an interest resulting and not disposed of. London (City) v. Garway, 2 Vern. 571.

8. Settlement of wife's estate to such uses as husband and wife, or survivor, should appoint by deed or will, with three witnesses, in default thereof to the heirs of husband; the wife surviving made a disposition by her will to a charity, and therefore void; decreed to the heir of the husband. Att.-Gen. v. Ward, 3 Ves. 327.

9. A., on settling some estates, had reserved to himself a general power of appointment, which by his will he expressly exercised, but not so as to exhaust the whole interest. The undisposed-of interest was held not to pass under the residuary clause, whereby he gave "all the rest and residue of his real and personal estates of every nature and kind soever." Morrice v. Langham, 11 Sim. 260; 10 L. J., N. S., Ch., 38; 6 Jur. 334. And see S. C. at law, 8 Mees. & Welsb. 196; 10 L. J., N. S., Exch., 289.

10. Testator bequeathed 12,000*l.* stock to trustees, for his son for life, then for the son's wife for life, then unto and amongst his wife and children in such shares, for such interests, etc., as the son should appoint, and in default of appointment unto the children equally, and if there should be no child then to the son's next of kin in blood, and the testator bequeathed his residue to his son, and his, the testator's, two other children, their executors, etc., equally, and he directed that the share of his son should be held by his trustees, for the benefit of him and his children, upon the same trusts and subject to the same limitations, etc., as the 12,000*l.* stock, but that the son's wife should not take any interest in that share. The son died leaving his wife surviving, but never having had a child:—Held, that an appointment made by the son of part of the stock to his wife was good, but that the son, in the events that had happened, was not entitled to the share of the residue absolutely, but that his next of kin in blood was entitled to it. Houstoun v. Houstoun, 4 Sim. 611; 1 L. J., N. S., Ch., 50.

1. Power to appoint among nephews and nieces does not extend to great-nephews, etc.; and if part be appointed, not pursuant to the power, the money so appointed lapses into, and passes under, the appointment of the residue which was properly appointed. Falkner v. Butler, Ambl. 514.

2. A testatrix having a power over a sum of money, appointed it to A. and B. on certain trusts, and she also gave them, in trust, her residuary personal estate, after payment of her debts. She made no beneficial bequest of her residue, and appointed two other persons her executors. The trusts declared of the appointed fund did not exhaust it:—Held, that the surplus fell into the residue, and did not pass as appointed. Lefevre v. Freeland, 24 Beav. 403.

3. A. by her will appointed 100*l.* to a stranger to the power, and after making a proper distribution of other parts of the fund, directed that the balance, amounting to 260*l.*, should be appropriated in payment of her debts; and should any surplus remain, she gave it to B., one of the objects of the power:—Held, that, under the ultimate gift, B. was entitled (the charge failing) to the 200*l.*, but not to the 100*l.* Re Jeaffreson, 2 L. R., Eq., 276; 12 Jur., N. S., 660; 35 L. J., Ch., 622; 14 W. R. 759.

4. A married woman, to whom a power of appointment by deed or will is reserved in her marriage settlement, by her will in execution of the power, after appointing estates A. and B. to her husband in fee, appoints and devises estate C., "and all other the hereditaments comprised in the settlement not hereinbefore disposed of," to the use of J. S. for life, remainder to his children in tail. By subsequent codicils the testatrix revokes the appointment of A. and B. estates, and devises them to trustees for sale, the proceeds, after paying certain legacies, to be divided between two charitable institutions. This residuary gift to the charities being admittedly void:—Held, that it went, as in default of appointment, to the heirs-at-law of the testatrix, and did not pass to J. S. under the words in the will "all other the hereditaments comprised in the settlement not hereinbefore disposed of. Re Brown's Will, 3 W. R. 542; 1 Kay & J. 522.

5. Under a settlement, real estate was limited to such uses as A. and B. should by deed jointly appoint, and subject thereto to the use of A. for life, with remainder to the use of B. for life, with remainder to the first and other sons of B. in tail, with divers remainders over; and there was a power of sale vested in four trustees, and exercisable at the request of A. and B., and the survivor of them. By a deed (which contained a recital that A. and B. were desirous of selling part of the settled property, and with a view to facilitate the sale and conveyance thereof to the respective purchasers had agreed to execute the deed), A. and B., in exercise of the joint power of appointment, appointed part of the settled property to trustees upon trust for sale; and it was declared that the trustees should stand possessed of the proceeds upon the trusts intended to be declared by a deed of even date. No deed declaring the trusts was ever executed, and there was evidence to show that the deed of appointment was executed with the view of avoiding the trouble and expense of an application to the trustees to exercise the power of sale:—Held, that the disposition of the proceeds of sale was a question of intention; and that both on the terms of the deed of appointment (independently of the evidence) and also having regard to the evidence, the proceeds of sale remained subject to the trusts of the settlement. Biddulph v. Williams, 1 L. R., Ch. D., 203.

6. Under an exclusive power to appoint to children, the children being entitled in default of appointment in equal shares, the donee, by will, appointed the whole fund to trustees, upon trust as to 1,200*l.*, to pay the income to one of her children, J., for life, and after his death, for his children; and if J. should die without leaving children who should attain vested interests, then that the 1,200*l.* should be added to and form part of the residue of the trust estate. The trusts of the residue were in favour of daughters for life, with testamentary powers. J. died leaving children. It being admitted that the gift to J.'s children was excessive:—Held, that on J.'s death the 1,200*l.* was not undisposed of but was well appointed by the residuary gift. Re Meredith, 3 L. R., Ch. D., 757.

7. Instruments in exercise of powers of appointment are, as to execution and construction, subject to the law governing instruments of a like nature, disposing of the appointor's own property at the time of the appointment, and this whether or not the law as to execution and construction of such instruments is altered after the date of the instrument giving the power: if then the Wills Act were silent as to appointments, still, as by s. 25 it makes a void devise fall into the residue, it would also make a void devise by way of appointment fall into the residue. Freme v. Clement, 18 L. R., Ch. D., 499; 50 L. J., Ch., 801; 44 L. T. 399; 30 W. R. 1.

But the word "devise" in the Wills Act generally, unless a contrary intention can be shown, includes a devise by way of appointment under a special or general power, and it is to be so read in s. 25. The Act, therefore, alters the law as to the exercise of powers of appointment, and makes a void devise, as above, pass under the residuary clause. Ib.

8. When a married woman, having a general testamentary power of appointment over personal property, appoints the whole property to trustees in such a manner as to show an intention to make it part of her general personal estate, any undisposed-of beneficial interest will belong to those entitled ab intestato, not to those entitled in default of appointment. Bickenden v. Williams, 38 L. J., Ch., 222; 7 L. R., Eq., 310; 17 W. R. 441.

VII. Survivorship.

1. Where feme covert conveys stock to trustees to use of intended husband and self for life, with power to dispose of part, this power survives to wife. Horner v. Bendloes, 9 Mod. 335.

2. As to survivorship of a discretionary power limited to A. and his assigns, see How v. Whitfield, 1 Ventr. 338.

3. Residuary devise and bequest for such of the testator's relations and kindred in such proportions, etc., as his executors should think proper, recommending and advising his said trustees and executors to give the greatest share to such person and persons who in their opinion and judgment should appear to them to be his nearest relations and most deserving, declaring his intention not to control their discretion, but that everything relative to that disposition, who were his relations, and the proportions, should be entirely in the discretion of the said trustees and executors, and the heirs, executors, and administrators of the survivor of them:—Held, a trust and a power; the ground of the power being personal confidence, it is primâ facie limited to the original trustees, not without express words passing to others to whom by legal transmission the same character may happen to belong; and cannot be executed by the devisees and executors, for that specific purpose only, of the surviving trustee: a trust, therefore, executed by the Court for the next of kin at the death of the testator according to the Statute of Distributions. Cole v. Wade, 16 Ves. 27.

4. On a devise of personal residue to trustees, their executors, etc., in trust that they or the survivor of them should invest it in land either in England or Scotland, in the former case to be settled as testator's English estates by his will were limited, for life, with remainder in tail; and in the latter, according to a deed of entail by which his Scotch estates were settled, although tending to perpetuity, and should pay the income of the residuary fund, until so invested, to the persons entitled to the rents of the English estates when so purchased, with a power to such person, or in case of minority his guardian, to appoint new trustees, who were to have all the powers of those for whom substituted; the trustees having invested the greater part in Scotch estates, and having all died during the lifetime of the tenant for life, and the representative of the survivor having declined to act, the son of the testator, who was entitled to both the settled properties, executed disentailing deeds, both of the money and also of the English estates, and obtained payment of the fund to himself:—Held, that, as against the next Scotch heir of entail, he was only entitled to the interest of the fund during his life; and that, there being no one by whom new trustees could be appointed, and their discretionary power not being exercisable by any trustees appointed by the Court, the fund became divisible in equal moieties, one to be paid to the personal representatives of the testator, and the other to be invested in Scotch estates to the uses of the Scotch deed. Fordyce v. Bridges, 2 Ph. 497; 2 Coop. C. C. 326; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 185. Varying 10 Beav. 90; 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 81; 10 Jur. 1020.

5. Where a naked power is given to several, it cannot be exercised by the survivors; but if a power be annexed to an office, any person filling the office may execute it. Brassey v. Chalmers, 16 Beav. 231; 4 De G. M. & G. 528.

6. A fund was settled for all and every the children of B., in such shares and proportions as the trustees (five in number), their executors, administrators, or assigns, should consider proper or expedient. The five original trustees died, and the legal personal representatives of the survivor appointed three new trustees, one of whom afterwards died, and after his death the two surviving trustees appointed the fund among the surviving children of B.:—Held, that the appointment was valid. Reid v. Reid, 8 Jur., N. S., 499; 10 W. R. 225.

7. By deed, power was given to the trustees or trustee for the time being, at their or his entire discretion, to pay certain rents for the benefit of one, two, or more of the children of A. B., the tenant for life, and there was a power to the surviving or continuing trustee to appoint new trustees. The trustees all died without appointing new trustees, and new trustees were appointed by the Court:—Held, that they had the discretionary power given to the original trustees. Bartley v. Bartley, 3 Drew. 384.

8. A. and B., father and son, executed deeds for the settlement of some of their family estates, and for payment of the debts of A. Certain estates were conveyed to trustees, with a power to sell, on the consent, in writing, of A. and B. or the survivor, and to apply the proceeds of the sale in payment of debts therein specified. A. was indebted to D., as trustee for an infirmary, and A. and B. had given joint and separate warrants of attorney to secure the debt. Separate judgments had been entered up against A. and against B. The amount of the sums thus due was stated in the deed. D. had some legal interest in the estates themselves. He was a party to the deed, and executed it:—Held, that this deed created a trust in favour of the infirmary of which he was a trustee. Montefiore v. Browne, 7 H. L. Ca. 241.

In this deed there was a power of revocation to be exercised by A. and B. A. died without exercising it:—Held, that the power of revocation was then at an end. Ib.

9. A testator devised his landed estates in W., with their appurtenances, and all allotments of common now or hereafter to be inclosed, etc., to his daughters, J., M., and S., "to be jointly and equally enjoyed, or divided in the case of the marriage of any of them; and they, or the survivor in case of death, are by this my will fully authorised to dispose of the same by will or assignment, as they shall think proper, giving preference to those of my name and relations, according to behaviour." He also gave personal property "to be equally divided and shared among them," and he expressed a wish that they should live together. None of the daughters married. S. died first, then M., and lastly J. The plaintiffs claimed a moiety of the real property under the will of M., the defendant; the whole of the real property under the will of the survivor, J.:—Held, affirming the decree of the Master of the Rolls, that the last survivor alone had the power of disposing by will; and, semble, that the devise created a joint tenancy in fee. Cookson v. Bingham, 17 Jur. 1039.

I. RELATION BACK TO INSTRUMENT CREATING THE POWER.

1. Whosoever takes under a power takes from the grantor and not from the power itself. Cook v. Duckenfield, 2 Atk. 563.

2. Appointee under a power must claim also according to nature of the instrument. Marlborough (Duke) v. Godolphin, 2 Ves. 77.

Appointee takes under the power, as if inserted therein, but not so as to take by relation from creation of the power, as in assignment on commission of bankruptcy, or in bargain and sale enrolled. Ib.

Naked powers construed strictly; powers coupled with interest liberally. Ib.

3. Nothing is more certain in law, than that when any act is done under a power, that act is deemed to be done by the grantor of the power, and to have its validity from him, and not from the person who executes it. Middleton v. Crofts, 2 Atk. 661.

4. The appointee of a power takes by force of the act of the donor, and not of the donee of the power. Tatnall v. Hankey, 2 Moo. P. C. 342.

5. A power when executed takes place according to the deed creating it. Mosley v. Mosley, 5 Ves. 249.

6. The execution of power of appointment operates by way of limitation of a use, under and by the effect of the instrument, reserving the power; the fee vesting in the meantime. Maundrell v. Maundrell, 10 Ves. 255.

The execution of a power of appointment operates as a limitation of a use, attaching upon the seisin in the feoffees, etc., under the old instrument. Id. 264.

7. Execution of a power is a limitation of a use, which must arise, if at all, at the time of execution, and is as if expressed in the original settlement. Wright v. Wakeford, 17 Ves. 457.

8. Limitations created by the execution of a power must be read as if they were introduced into the deed creating the power. Re Barker, 5 L. T., N. S., 206.

9. R. M. made a settlement of real estate to the use of himself and wife, with a power to appoint to any one or more of his sons in fee or otherwise, and in default of appointment to his first and other sons in tail, with remainder to himself in fee. He became bankrupt, and, subsequently to his bankruptcy, appointed to his eldest son in fee:—Held, that the appointment could not enure as an appointment to a base fee, determinable on the extinction of the prior estates tail, because such a limitation would have been bad in the settlement creating the power. Badham v. Mee, 1 Myl. & K. 32; 2 L. J., N. S., Ch., 4. And see 7 Bing. 695; 9 L. J., N. S., C. P., 213; 1 M. & Scott 14.

10. A power to appoint to any persons by will only is a general power of appointment within the Wills Act, 7 Will 4, and 1 Vict., c. 26, s. 27. And accordingly, a general devise or bequest will operate as an execution of such power. But such a general testamentary power of appointment given to a tenant for life, being a married woman, is not equivalent to ownership, so that as regards the operation of the rule against perpetuities, the interests arising under the execution of the power by the will of the tenant for life, must be considered as created under the deed or will conferring the power. Re Powell, 39 L. J., Ch., 188; 18 W. R. 226.

See also PERPETUITY, XVI. post.

II. OPERATION, WHETHER AS A CONVEYANCE OR AN APPOINTMENT.

11. Where person having particular estate, and also a power, makes a disposition containing words both of appointment and conveyance, it shall not operate as an appointment, and also as a conveyance against the intention of the party executing the instrument. Langley v. Brown, 2 Atk. 199.

12. A devise to A., and to such uses as he should appoint, was good before the Statute of Uses; for when he appoints, the cestui que trust is in by the feoffor, and not by the appointor. Cook v. Duckenfield, 2 Atk. 568.

1. A., having both a power and an interest, the estate being conveyed to such uses as he should appoint, and in default of appointment to him in fee, conveys by lease and release, using also words of appointment; deed operates as a conveyance of his interest, not as an execution of his power, especially if the effect of the latter construction will defeat the object. Cox v. Chamberlain, 4 Ves. 631.

2. Husband having power of appointment, paramount to right of dower, in default thereof to himself for life, remainder to his right heirs, if the power could have effect, yet a purchaser taking by a conveyance, adapted to pass the interest in the estate as a limitation in fee, was held to take in that way, not by way of appointment, and therefore subject to dower. Maundrell v. Maundrell, 7 Ves. 567. See this case further, 10 Ves. 246.

3. A. and his wife, and B. and C., having a joint power of appointing certain lands which, in default of appointment, stood limited (subject to a life interest reserved to C. in part of them) to A. in fee, by lease and release, being a settlement made in contemplation of the marriage of B., granted, bargained, sold, released, conveyed, directed, limited, and appointed the premises to M., to hold the same to him and his heirs, to the old uses, until the marriage, and after the marriage as to certain parts of the lands to the use of A. and his wife during the life of the longest liver, to be in bar of her dower; and as to other parts to the use of A. for life, and the use of C. for life respectively, remainder to the use of M. during the lives of A. and his wife, and of C. respectively, in order to preserve contingent uses; remainder to the use of B. and her intended husband, during the life of the longest liver of them; remainder to the use of M., to support contingent uses; remainder to the use of M. for a term of 500 years, upon certain trusts; remainder to the use of the first and other sons of the marriage successively in tail; remainder to the use of his daughters in tail; remainder to the use of A. and his heirs:—Held, that the release operated not as an appointment under the power, but as a conveyance of the interest, and therefore that the legal fee did not vest in M. Wynne v. Griffith, 1 Russ. 283.

4. A trustee for sale had also a beneficial interest in the property as mortgagee:—Held, on the construction of a very informal instrument, that he had effectually exercised his trust for sale, and not merely sold his interest. Manser v. Dix, 3 Jur., N. S., 252; 8 De G. M. & G. 703.

5. The donee of a power, when executing a deed of appointment, "limited and appointed" not only the lands the subject of the power, but other lands of his which were not subject thereto:—Held, that the words "limited and appointed" operated as a grant of the latter lands. MacAndrew v. Gallagher, 8 Ir. R., Eq., 490.

III. INTEREST OF APPOINTEE. WHETHER PASSING UNDER APPOINTMENT OR UNDER GIFT IN DEFAULT.

6. A fund stood limited by a will, upon trust for a person for life, remainder to all or such one or more of the children or issue of the testator's deceased brother A., in such shares and in such manner as the tenant for life should appoint, and in default of appointment to the children of A. equally. F., one of the children of A., assigned all his property to a trustee for his creditors, by a deed in the form of Schedule (D.). This deed was duly registered, but F. never obtained an order of discharge. After this, the tenant for life appointed the fund to the children of A. equally. All the children of A. living at the testator's death survived the tenant for life, so that F. took the same share under the appointment as he would have taken in default of appointment:—Held, that the deed did not pass after-acquired property, that F.'s interest, in default of appointment, was defeated by the appointment which gave him an interest liable to be defeated by lapse, and which, therefore, must be considered a new interest, and that consequently his share did not pass to the trustee. Re Vizard, 1 L. R., Ch., 588; 12 Jur., N. S., 680; 35 L. J., Ch., 804; 14 W. R. 1000. Affirming 1 L. R., Eq., 667; 35 L. J., Ch., 460; 14 W. R. 496; 14 L. T., N. S., 182.

7. A mother had an exclusive power of appointment over a fund in favour of her children, and which, in default, was divisible equally, the share of the daughters to vest at twenty-one or marriage. She had a son and a daughter, and she appointed 10,000*l.* to her son on his marriage. His marriage settlement recited that he was entitled to the 10,000*l.*, and was also contingently entitled to the other moiety in the event of his sister dying unmarried under twenty-one, and it recited an agreement to settle the 10,000*l.* and "all other his part, share, and interest, as well vested as contingent," in the trust funds. He then assigned his interest in the same terms. The daughter attained twenty-one, and died, and the mother afterwards appointed the residue of the fund to her son:—Held, that such residue did not pass under his settlement. Childers v. Eardley, 28 Beav. 648.

8. Bank stock was settled upon trust for A. and B. successively for life; and after their decease, in trust for one or more of their children, as they or the survivor should appoint; and in default, in trust for all the children equally; but if B. should survive his wife A., and there should be any child or children living at her death, then the trustees were to raise 2,500*l.*, and dispose of it as A. should appoint. C. and D. were the only children of the marriage. In 1832, on the occasion of D.'s marriage, A. and B. jointly appointed a portion of the fund, and A. exercised the power given to her as to the 2,500*l.* A. died in January 1844. In July 1843 C. was adjudicated a bankrupt, and assignees were appointed, and on the 10th February, 1844, he obtained his certificate. B., by a deed-poll of the 12th February, 1844, appointed the trust funds, then subject to the indenture of settlement, to and for the use of C., but subject to his own life interest in the income, and subject to the sums already appointed. B. died in March 1855. The assignees of C. claimed to receive the moiety of the funds, to which he would have become entitled in default of appointment:—Held, that during the bankruptcy of C., and before the certificate, all that the assignees had was a defeasible title; and that under the power of appointment executed after the date of the certificate, C. became entitled to the whole fund as against the assignees. Lee v. Olding, 2 Jur., N. S., 850; 25 L. J., Ch., 580.

1. Under a marriage settlement real estate stood limited to H., the husband, for life, with remainder to the use of such of the children or issue of the marriage as he should by deed or will appoint; and in default of appointment, to the use of the children of the marriage equally as tenants in common in fee. There was issue of the marriage two children only, a son and a daughter. The daughter married, and by her marriage settlement she and her intended husband covenanted with the trustees for the conveyance and settlement of all property which she then was "seised of, or interested in, or entitled to," upon the trusts therein mentioned, including in effect reversionary interests. The daughter survived her husband, and thereupon H. by deed appointed the real estate comprised in the original settlement, subject to his life estate, to his son and daughter equally in fee, the daughter thus taking the same share as she would have taken in default of appointment:—Held, that inasmuch as the reversionary moiety appointed to the daughter constituted a new interest acquired by her subsequently to the date of her settlement, such moiety was not bound by the covenant in her marriage settlement. Sweetapple v. Horlock, 11 L. R., Ch. D., 745; 48 L. J., Ch., 660; 27 W. R. 865.

2. A father, by his will in 1835, gave his residue to trustees for his daughter for life, and after her death for such of her children as might be living at her death in such shares as she should appoint. The father died in 1836. The daughter had four children, who survived her. In 1851 one of them married a Frenchman, who died in 1857, leaving one child by the plaintiff. In 1870 the testator's daughter appointed 6,500*l.* to the plaintiff for her separate use in case she survived her, which happened. By the French Civil Code, in case of marriage all movable property possessed by the husband and wife at the time of marriage, or which falls to them during the marriage by succession or donation, if the donor has not expressed himself to the contrary, becomes subject to the law of community of goods:—Held, that the 6,500*l.* appointed to the plaintiff did not fall into the community of goods, as her interest commenced from the date of the appointment, which was subsequent to her marriage; also that the donor, by appointing the fund to the plaintiff to separate use, had "expressed herself to the contrary." De Serre v. Clarke, 31 L. T., N. S., 161; 23 W. R. 3; 43 L. J., Ch., 821; 18 L. R., Eq., 587.

3. A trader, who was entitled under his father's will to a share in his property, subject to a power for the widow to appoint among himself and the other children, on his marriage covenanted to settle his share whether appointed or unappointed. The widow appointed one-third to him and the remainder to other children, and subsequently he became bankrupt:—Held, that the covenant was not void under s. 91 of the Bankruptcy Act 1869. Re Andrews, 7 L. R., Ch. D., 635; 26 W. R. 572; 38 L. T., N. S., 137.

IV. FAILURE MADE GOOD OUT OF DONEE'S ESTATE.

4. A power having a power, by marriage articles, to charge an estate of which B. was a tenant for life with intermediate remainders with a contingent fee to himself executed the power. The power afterward becoming merged by accession of the fee:—Held, that the provision made by the will should be served out of the estate in fee, being considered as an interest enabling him to charge the estates. Cross v. Hudson, 3 Bro. C. C. 30.

5. Contract by trustees under power of sale, though by subsequent events it cannot be executed under the power, shall be made good in equity by the effect of the interest acquired in the estate bound by the contract. Mortlock v. Buller, 10 Ves. 315. Affirmed 2 Dow 518.

6. E. D. was beneficially entitled, under his marriage settlement, to an estate for his life, and to the ultimate reversion in fee in default of issue male; and the trustees of the settlement had a power to sell at the request and by the direction of the tenant for life. There was issue of the marriage. E. D., acting as absolute owner, entered into a contract by correspondence to sell the estate to T., and the trustees afterwards refused to concur in the sale:—Held, on a bill for specific performance, that there was a binding contract between the vendor and purchaser, and that the vendor was bound to perform it, if he was able; but that the purchaser was not entitled, in such a case, to have the contract performed to the extent of the vendor's interest, by a conveyance of his life estate, and his ultimate reversion. Thomas v. Dering, 1 Keen 729; 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 267; 1 Jur. 211, 427.

7. A testator bequeathed a sum of long annuities to trustees, upon trust for his daughter for life, for her separate use, and after her death upon trust for such persons as she should by will appoint. One of the trustees purchased of the daughter and her husband the absolute interest in the long annuities, and took an assignment to himself of the daughter's life interest in them, accompanied by what purported to be an execution by the same instrument of her testamentary power over the reversion, with a covenant by the daughter and her husband for quiet enjoyment and for further assurance:—Held, as against a purchaser from the trustee, that the attempted execution of the power by the wife being a nullity, the transaction, though it might have been valid as to the purchase of the life interest, was void in toto, the consideration being entire; the wife offered by her bill to repay the original purchase money. Scott v. Davis, 4 Myl. & C. 87; 2 Jur. 1057.

8. Estates were settled, after the death of husband and wife, to trustees, for a term, and subject thereto to the husband in fee. The trusts of the term were, in case the wife should die in the lifetime of the husband, leaving children living at her decease, to raise 8,000*l.* for the portions of such children, to be divided between them in such shares as the husband should by deed or will appoint. By his will, the husband dying before the wife, devised part of the settled land to his eldest son, in strict settlement, with powers of jointuring, and charging portions for his younger children; and other part of the settled lands to his second son in the same manner; and after reciting that he had by his settlement a power of appointing 8,000*l.* among his children, he, in pursuance of the power, and of every other power to him reserved, gave and appointed the 8,000*l.* amongst his children; and he bequeathed to his daughter E. 1,000*l.*, in addition to the sum already appointed to her; and he directed that in case all his younger children should die before their portions became payable, the said sum of 8,000*l.* should sink into the inheritance; and that his personal estate should be applied pro tanto in discharge of the 8,000*l.*, in exoneration of the real estate charged therewith. The husband died, leaving his wife and several children him surviving:—Held, that the 8,000*l.* was well charged upon the real estate of the testator. Mandeville v. Roe, 1 J. & L. 371.

1. Though a contract to lease by a tenant for life with a leasing power cannot be enforced as an execution of the power, it may be partially enforced by decreeing a lease for the life of the tenant for life, if the contract was bonâ fide, and more especially if there has been an outlay on the faith of it. Dyas v. Cruise, 8 Ir. Eq. R. 407; 2 J. & L. 460.

Under a power to lease at the best rent, the highest rent need not be reserved. The question, what is the test that the best rent has been reserved, and the cases on the subject, considered. An authority to let lands may be inferred from the letters and acts of the party. Tenant for life, with power to lease at the best rent, agrees to make a demise for a term warranted by the power, but at a rent which afterwards appears not to be the best rent. There being no fraud in the transaction, the Court will decree a partial performance of the agreement, and direct the tenant for life to execute the agreement as far as his estate enables him to do so. Hartnell v. Yielding (2 Sch. & Lef. 549) observed upon. Ib.

2. A., having a life interest in premises vested in trustees, who had a power of leasing, agreed to grant a lease for twenty-one years to B. The trustees refused to grant a lease to B., on the ground that he was in insolvent circumstances, and that the grant of such lease would be a breach of trust against their cestuis que trustent. The Court, being of opinion that B. was entitled to specific performance, and that the trustees had given A. some authority to act, ordered the trustees to execute a lease to B. to the extent of A.'s interest. Neale v. Mackenzie, 1 Keen 474; 1 Jur. 149.

3. A donee of a power to charge estates, of which he was entitled to the reversion in fee, with portions for younger children, by his will, "in exercise of the power, and of all other powers," charged the estates with 10,000*l.*, and directed the shares of the children to be interests vested at his death, and to be payable when the estate fell into possession. The testator died intestate as to the reversion, leaving five children, all of whom had attained twenty-one at the date of his will, but the execution of the power failed by his death before he became entitled to the actual freehold of the estates. None of the children were alive at the time when the reversion vested in possession:—Held, that, notwithstanding the failure of the power, the sum was raisable out of the testator's reversion in fee. Sing v. Leslie, 2 Hem. & M. 68; 10 Jur., N. S., 794; 10 L. T., N. S., 382; 4 N. R. 17.

V. OF GENERAL POWER. ASSETS BY.

4. By a post-nuptial settlement, in 1810, R. M. settled the moneys to become payable on three policies of insurance on his life, upon trust for B. M., his wife, for life; and after her decease, upon trust for his appointees; and in default of appointment, in trust for the children of the marriage; and he covenanted to keep up the policies. In 1821 R. M. appointed that after the death of R. M., the moneys should be made over to his executors and administrators. By a subsequent order of this Court, in 1821, the trustees were directed to sell the policies to the insurance office, and to bring the money into court to be invested, the dividends to accumulate during the joint lives of R. M. and B. M. In 1828 R. M. took the benefit of the Insolvent Debtors Act. In 1845 R. M. became bankrupt, and obtained his certificate. In 1847 B. M., the wife, died. In 1850 the children of the marriage presented a petition, praying that they, who were next of kin at the date of the appointment, might be declared entitled to the fund, and for payment, or that it might be accumulated till the death of R. M. An order was then pronounced, by the late Vice-Chancellor of England, in the latter alternative. The assignees in bankruptcy appealed from that order, and the assignee in insolvency, who had not been before the Court presented a petition to discharge that order, and for payment of the fund:—Held, reversing the decision of the Vice-Chancellor, that the effect of the appointment was to make the property a part of the personal estate of R. M., subject to the life interest of B. M.; and that neither the next of kin of R. M. were designed by the appointment, nor were the executors or administrators to take beneficially. Mackenzie v. Mackenzie, 3 Macn. & G. 559; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 465; 15 Jur. 1091.

Observations as to the nature of the interests which the children of the marriage took under the settlement, and the appointment. Ib.

5. A. B. was tenant for life of a trust fund, with a general power to appoint by will, and in default, it was settled on the plaintiff. A. B. ordered the trustees to pay over the fund to her on an indemnity, and she afterwards appointed the fund to the plaintiff and others, who filed a bill to make the trustees liable for a breach of trust:—Held, that by the appointment, the fund became assets for answering A. B.'s liabilities, of which the indemnity was one, and that, therefore, the trustees were not liable. Williams v. Lomas, 16 Beav. 1.

6. By a settlement the trusts of a sum of stock were declared to be for A., B., C., D., E., F., and G., equally, with a proviso added, that the shares of females should not be transferred to them on their attaining twenty-one, but should be invested, and the income be paid to them for life for their separate use; and after the death of each such female, the trustees should stand possessed of her share for such persons as she should by will appoint; and in default of appointment, for the executors or administrators, or other the personal representative or representatives of such female. On the marriage of one of the cestuis que trustent, her share was transferred to trustees, upon trusts declared by deed to be for the wife for life, then for the husband for life, and then for the children of the marriage; and if the wife survived her husband, and there were no children of the marriage, then upon such trusts as the wife should by deed or will appoint. The wife survived her husband, and there being no child she by deed appointed the fund to herself:—Held, that she was entitled to have the same transferred to herself. St. John v. Gibson, 12 Jur. 373; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 95.

1. A., having power to appoint 700*l.*, which was to be raised under the trusts of a term, by her will, appointed that sum, to the persons whom she had made her executors in trust; but she did not declare expressly any trust of that sum. She then bequeathed her personal estate to the same persons, in trust, and subject to the payment of her debts and legacies:—Held, in a suit instituted by the legatees, that the 700*l.* ought to be raised and applied in the same manner as the testator's personal estate. Goodere v. Lloyd, 3 Sim. 538.

2. A bankrupt, after the issuing of the commission and appointment of the assignees, transferred French stock, his property, to his wife, who afterwards transferred it to her three sisters. Under a settlement, the wife had a power of appointment over a sum of money in the funds in England, which she exercised by will in favour of one of the sisters, and died in her husband's lifetime. The sister, who resided in France, took out administration with the will annexed. An injunction was granted to restrain the trustees, in whom this fund was vested, from transferring it, on the ground that, if the French Stock should be proved to have been the property of the bankrupt, the assignees would have a claim upon the assets of the wife. Stead v. Clay, 4 Russ. 550.

3. J. S. M. being entitled to the dividends of 4,300*l.* for life, with a power to appoint by any deed or writing the principal after his death, and in default of appointment to his next of kin, and being in prison for debt, and in great distress, is prevailed upon by H. C. to enter into an agreement for sale of the principal after his death, in consideration of 1,000*l.* and other sums therein stated to have been previously lent and advanced to him by H. C. By a subsequent deed, in consideration of 1,854*l.* therein stated to be due from J. S. M., to H. C., and of 1,000*l.* paid by J. S. M. and others, J. S. M., by the direction of H. C., appointed that the principal should, on his death, be transferred to J. S. M. and others, with a proviso that they should assign the same to H. C. on payment of 1,000*l.* and interest, and all further advances. The 1,854*l.*, or any part of it, had not, in fact, been advanced by H. C.:—Held, that the appointment was well executed; that the next of kin of J. S. M. had no claim; that H. C. was a trustee for the personal representatives of J. S. M. for the excess beyond the money received by J. S. M. Miller v. Minet, Taml. 481.

4. C. bequeathed a leasehold estate called S. H., after the death of his wife, upon the same trusts as his wife should declare with respect to the disposition of her residuary personal estate by her will; and in default of any disposition by his wife of her residuary personal estate, or so far as the same (if any) should not extend, upon other trusts. C.'s wife survived him, and by her will gave to S. and R., whom she appointed her executors, "all her property and estate known as S. H.," in trust for T. for life; and gave all her real and personal estate to S. and R. upon trust for conversion, and upon trust out of the proceeds to pay her debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, and legacies; and gave the residue of her property, as to two-thirds, for charitable purposes:—Held, that the S. H. estate was not by the will of the widow converted into her own estate, and that, subject to the life interest of T., two-thirds of it went to the persons entitled under C.'s will in default of appointment. Bristow v. Skirrow, 10 L. R., Eq., 1; 39 L. J., Ch., 840; 18 W. R. 719; 22 L. T., N. S., 642.

VI. CONSENTS.

5. A., having a power to dispose of land, with consent of trustees, devises the lands by her will; this, being without the consent of the trustees, is void. Hutton v. Simpson, 2 Vern. 723; Pre. Ch. 439; Gilb. Eq. Rep. 115, 120.

6. If a man by will empowers his wife to dispose of his personal estate, with the consent of the trustees, the wife without such consent cannot, by her will, devise it; and therefore the husband, as to that part, died intestate. Sympson or Simpson v. Hornby, Pre. Ch. 452.

7. Power to trustees to advance to A. 1,000*l.*, with consent of B., under her hand, signed by two witnesses. Trustees advance the sum without consent. Subsequent acquiescence by such deed not sufficient, and trustees ordered to refund. Bateman v. Davis, 3 Madd. 98.

8. A settlement contained a power which was to be executed by A. with the consent of B., "such consent to be signified by some deed to be duly executed by him, and not otherwise," to release certain estates from charges in favour of the younger children of A., and substitute others in their stead. The donee of the power executed it by deed, which was not, however, executed by B. till nine months after its execution by A., but evidence was produced that a draft of the deed, purporting to be an execution of the power by A., had been shown to B. before it was executed by A., and that B. had given his parol consent thereto:—Held, that the power had been validly executed. Offen v. Harman, 1 De G. F. & G. 253.

9. By marriage articles a power of disposition was given to the wife, with the consent of the undersigned trustees:—Held, that new trustees appointed by the Court might give the required consent. Byam v.

1. Of Determinable Powers or Powers to be Exercised on a Contingency, 5744.
2. Powers arising on a Contingency, 5745.
3. Powers of Sale. See XXI. VII. post.

1. Of Determinable Powers or Powers to be Exercised on a Contingency.

1. Under a settlement a fund was held upon trust for such persons as G. and B. should jointly appoint, and subject thereto upon trust for G. for life, with remainder to B. for life, subject to determination as thereinafter mentioned, with remainder to such of a class as B. should by deed or will appoint; and it was provided that if B. should commit any of certain acts his life estate should be determined and the trust fund should go as if B. was actually dead, and all the powers therein contained should thenceforth be exercised as if he was then dead, without prejudice to his right to exercise jointly with G., either before or after the determination of the trust in his favour, the joint power reserved to them. B. committed an act of forfeiture, and afterwards died:—Held, that the sole power of appointment reserved to him was not effectually exercised by a will made prior to the forfeiture. Potts v. Britton, 11 L. R., Eq., 433; 24 L. T., N. S., 409; 19 W. R. 651.

2. Bequest of personal estate in trust to invest it in stock to accumulate, and to transfer the fund to A. at twenty-one. Power for the trustees to lend 10,000*l.* to B., so long as he carried on the business of banker at H.: B. is not entitled to retain the 10,000*l.* after A. attains twenty-one, though he continue banker at H. Brown v. Sansome, M'Clel. & Y. 427.

3. A trust disposition and deed of settlement conveyed generally the testator's whole heritage to trustees containing no precept of sasine, but surrogating the trustees in place of the truster, and binding him and his heirs to complete titles, and convey to the trustees; he reserving to himself power to execute entails of parts of his fee simple lands, but declaring them to be suspended during the continuance of the trust, except as to rights of patronage; and he executed such entails with precepts of sasine. After his death, the trustees named in the deed having declined to accept the trust, the first heiress of entail made titles, and was duly infefft heiress of entail. Trustees were afterwards appointed by the Court, with her consent, and with all the powers given to those who declined to act, who raised an action of constitution and declarator against the heiress of line, and called the heiress of entail as defender:—Held, by the Lords, that it was not competent for the heiress of entail to oppose the completion of feudal titles, by the trustees, to the whole of the lands comprised in the trust disposition; and that they (provided they were duly appointed) were entitled to a conveyance of the whole lands, according to the intent of the trust disposition, but without prejudice to the rights of any party. Preston v. Melville (Viscount), 8 Cl. & F. 16.

4. A power in a settlement to withdraw funds and lay them out in the purchase of a trade for the benefit of the husband and wife may be exercised after the death of one of them for the benefit of the survivor alone. Doorly v. Arnold, 18 W. R. 540.

5. Power "when and as soon as they shall respectively become seised of freehold in possession to appoint by deed, etc., to have made upon or previously to their marriage." A., one of the donees, married in 1825, and appointed to his wife and children in 1844:—Held, that this deed was not a valid execution of the power. Re Borrowes, 2 Ir. R., Eq., 468.

6. T. and his wife, in exercise of a joint several power contained in their marriage settlement, appointed by deed certain funds to their daughter. This deed contained a power to T. and his wife, or the survivor of them, by deed, from time to time, during their joint lives, to revoke the trusts of the then appointment and to limit new trusts. After the death of the wife, T. executed a deed affecting to revoke the appointment to the daughter, and appointing the funds to trustees, on trust for the daughter for life with remainders over:—Held, that this last deed was inoperative, inasmuch as it was executed during the joint lives of T. and his wife. Re Twiss, 15 W. R. 540; 16 L. T., N. S., 139.

7. A testator by his will gave certain property, including the P. H. estate, to trustees to pay the income to his wife for life, with power to them to sell upon her consent, and invest the proceeds, and apply them upon the trusts of his residuary personal estate, which were that, as soon as each and every of his children should have attained twenty-five, or died under that age, leaving issue, the trustees should sell the unconverted portion, with a right of pre-emption to his younger sons according to seniority, and that the produce and all other his personal property should be in trust for his children and other issue as his wife should, before each and every of his children should have attained the age of twenty-five, by any deed or deeds, instrument or instruments, in writing, sealed and delivered, direct or appoint, with a gift over in default of such appointment. He died in 1840, leaving three sons and his widow surviving, and in 1841 she by a deed, which contained a power of revocation, appointed the general residuary fund among her children as tenants in common. By her will, made later in the same year, the widow devised the P. H. estate in specie to her eldest son. The youngest of the testator's children attained twenty-five in 1851; the widow did not die until 1863:—Held, that the time within which the appointment was to be made by the widow was of the substance and essence of the power, and not mere matter of form; that although the will of the widow was in form a sufficient execution of that power, yet as it had not within the period prescribed by the testator any effect whatever, and (being a will) was of course revocable, the appointment, whatever it purported to make, was invalid; and that as there was no revocation of the deed of 1841, the interests conferred by that deed took effect upon the youngest son attaining twenty-five. Cooper v. Martin, 17 L. T., N. S., 587; 3 L. R., Ch., 47.

1. By a Scotch settlement, a sum of stock was settled on the husband and wife for their lives, and after the death of the survivor, on their children, and, failing children, on the nearest heirs of the wife; and she was empowered, at any time in her life, and even on her death-bed, to bequeath or dispose of the stock to any person, and in any manner she might think proper:—Held, that the power was not intended to be available except in the event of there being a failure of children of the marriage. Peddie v. Peddie, 6 Sim. 78.

2. A proviso in a settlement, if the wife survive her husband, they not having issue between them, then she may revoke the settlement; husband dies, leaving a son, who dies in the life of his mother: she may revoke the settlement. Holt v. Burley, 2 Vern. 651; Pre. Ch. 293.

3. A feme covert having a power under her marriage settlement to create a term and to raise money after the death of her husband, and being in distress, executes that power in the lifetime of her husband, and assigns her interest for a trifling consideration:—Held, a good execution of the power. Sutherland (Countess) v. Northmore, 1 Dick. 56.

4. When a power is given to a designated person, to be executed upon a contingency, it may be executed before the happening of the contingency, and the execution of it will be valid on the subsequent happening of the event; à fortiori where the happening of the contingency cannot be ascertained till the moment of the donee's death. A clause in the instrument executing the power reciting incorrectly that the contingency has already happened will not invalidate the execution. Wandesforde v. Carrick, 5 Ir. R., Eq., 486.

See also XXI. VII. post.

2. Powers arising on a Contingency.

5. Testator gave a fund in trust for A. for life, and at her death, if B. should then be unmarried, in trust for B. absolutely; but if married, then upon trust as she should appoint; and in default thereof, for her separate use for life, and subject thereto for her absolutely. B. married after the death of the testator in the lifetime of A., and died also in her lifetime, having appointed the fund:—Held, that the appointment was good. Ashford v. Cafe, 7 Sim. 641; 5 L. J., N. S., Ch., 109.

6. Devise of stock for life, with absolute power of appointment, if no children, referred to the Master for inquiry about a child upon the grounds for suspicion. Soulthorp v. Burgess, 1 Ves. J. 91.

7. A testator bequeathed certain funds in trust for his wife during her widowhood, and after giving her a power to appoint them by deed or will, provided she did not marry again, directed that upon her second marriage, or her death, without having exercised her power, they should sink into the general residue of his estate: the widow executed a deed, purporting to be an appointment of the property to the residuary legatees, in the same proportions in which they would have been entitled to it under the residuary clause, and she and they concurred in assigning the funds upon trust for the residuary legatees. The Court refused to act upon the appointment and assignment during the widow's life. Goldsmid v. Goldsmid, T. & R. 445.

8. A., by will, gave his residue to C. for life, and after C.'s decease, provided C. leave a child surviving, then to trustees for such persons as C. should by will appoint; but if C. should die without leaving any child surviving, and C. should not, previously to his decease, make any such appointment, then upon trust to B. and others. C. never had a child, but left a will, giving his interest under A.'s will to E.:—Held, that the power of appointment conferred on C. was conditional on his having a child surviving him, and as he never had a child, the power never came into existence, and at his death the gift over to E. took effect. Earle v. Barker, 11 H. L. Ca. 280; 13 L. T., N. S., 29.

9. A testator empowered his widow, if his children should conduct themselves to her satisfaction up to the age of twenty-five, and marry with her approbation, but not otherwise, to give them 1,000*l.* each, for the purpose of setting out in the world:—Held, that she had a discretionary power which she might exercise after a child attained twenty-five, though unmarried. Davidson v. Rook, 22 Beav. 206.

10. A. B. on his second marriage executed a deed of settlement, whereby certain lands were vested in trustees to the use of the settlor for life; then to secure a jointure for his intended wife, and subject thereto to the use of the first and every other son of the settlor by his said intended wife; and in the same deed, there was a power, if the settlor should have more than one son, by deed or will to prefer such son to the whole or part of said lands, subject to said jointure of 60*l.* per annum to his wife, and also subject to all such sums as he might think fit to charge, in the whole not exceeding 4,000*l.* Shortly after the execution of the settlement, the settlor executed the power, and charged the said lands with a sum of 4,000*l.* in favour of the children of his former marriage, and subsequently made his will, and thereby devised certain estates, of which he was seised, to the defendant, who was the only son of the second marriage then living, and reciting "that by his settlement he was empowered to charge the settled lands with 4,000*l.*, and that he had accordingly charged them, etc.," and further declaring that "inasmuch as he had, by the deed of 3rd September, 1819, fully provided for the sons of his first marriage, he left the residue of his real and personal estate to his son by his second marriage." A bill having been filed by the assignee of the share of one of the children of the first marriage:—Held, that the power of charging could not be exercised, save in favour of the children of the second marriage.

1. Of Determinable Powers or Powers to be Exercised on a Contingency.

1. Under a settlement a fund was held upon trust for such persons as G. and B. should jointly appoint, and subject thereto upon trust for G. for life, with remainder to B. for life, subject to determination as thereinafter mentioned, with remainder to such of a class as B. should by deed or will appoint; and it was provided that if B. should commit any of certain acts his life estate should be determined and the trust fund should go as if B. was actually dead, and all the powers therein contained should thenceforth be exercised as if he was then dead, without prejudice to his right to exercise jointly with G., either before or after the determination of the trust in his favour, the joint power reserved to them. B. committed an act of forfeiture, and afterwards died:—Held, that the sole power of appointment reserved to him was not effectually exercised by a will made prior to the forfeiture. Potts v. Britton, 11 L. R., Eq., 433; 24 L. T., N. S., 409; 19 W. R. 651.

2. Bequest of personal estate in trust to invest it in stock to accumulate, and to transfer the fund to A. at twenty-one. Power for the trustees to lend 10,000*l.* to B., so long as he carried on the business of banker at H.: B. is not entitled to retain the 10,000*l.* after A. attains twenty-one, though he continue banker at H. Brown v. Sansome, M'Clel. & Y. 427.

3. A trust disposition and deed of settlement conveyed generally the testator's whole heritage to trustees containing no precept of sasine, but surrogating the trustees in place of the truster, and binding him and his heirs to complete titles, and convey to the trustees; he reserving to himself power to execute entails of parts of his fee simple lands, but declaring them to be suspended during the continuance of the trust, except as to rights of patronage; and he executed such entails with precepts of sasine. After his death, the trustees named in the deed having declined to accept the trust, the first heiress of entail made titles, and was duly infefft heiress of entail. Trustees were afterwards appointed by the Court, with her consent, and with all the powers given to those who declined to act, who raised an action of constitution and declarator against the heiress of line, and called the heiress of entail as defender:—Held, by the Lords, that it was not competent for the heiress of entail to oppose the completion of feudal titles, by the trustees, to the whole of the lands comprised in the trust disposition; and that they (provided they were duly appointed) were entitled to a conveyance of the whole lands, according to the intent of the trust disposition, but without prejudice to the rights of any party. Preston v. Melville (Viscount), 8 Cl. & F. 16.

4. A power in a settlement to withdraw funds and lay them out in the purchase of a trade for the benefit of the husband and wife may be exercised after the death of one of them for the benefit of the survivor alone. Doorly v. Arnold, 18 W. R. 540.

5. Power "when and as soon as they shall respectively become seised of freehold in possession to appoint by deed, etc., to have made upon or previously to their marriage." A., one of the donees, married in 1825, and appointed to his wife and children in 1844:—Held, that this deed was not a valid execution of the power. Re Borrowes, 2 Ir. R., Eq., 468.

6. T. and his wife, in exercise of a joint several power contained in their marriage settlement, appointed by deed certain funds to their daughter. This deed contained a power to T. and his wife, or the survivor of them, by deed, from time to time, during their joint lives, to revoke the trusts of the then appointment and to limit new trusts. After the death of the wife, T. executed a deed affecting to revoke the appointment to the daughter, and appointing the funds to trustees, on trust for the daughter for life with remainders over:—Held, that this last deed was inoperative, inasmuch as it was executed during the joint lives of T. and his wife. Re Twiss, 15 W. R. 540; 16 L. T., N. S., 139.

7. A testator by his will gave certain property, including the P. H. estate, to trustees to pay the income to his wife for life, with power to them to sell upon her consent, and invest the proceeds, and apply them upon the trusts of his residuary personal estate, which were that, as soon as each and every of his children should have attained twenty-five, or died under that age, leaving issue, the trustees should sell the unconverted portion, with a right of pre-emption to his younger sons according to seniority, and that the produce and all other his personal property should be in trust for his children and other issue as his wife should, before each and every of his children should have attained the age of twenty-five, by any deed or deeds, instrument or instruments, in writing, sealed and delivered, direct or appoint, with a gift over in default of such appointment. He died in 1840, leaving three sons and his widow surviving, and in 1841 she by a deed, which contained a power of revocation, appointed the general residuary fund among her children as tenants in common. By her will, made later in the same year, the widow devised the P. H. estate in specie to her eldest son. The youngest of the testator's children attained twenty-five in 1851; the widow did not die until 1863:—Held, that the time within which the appointment was to be made by the widow was of the substance and essence of the power, and not mere matter of form; that although the will of the widow was in form a sufficient execution of that power, yet as it had not within the period prescribed by the testator any effect whatever, and (being a will) was of course revocable, the appointment, whatever it purported to make, was invalid; and that as there was no revocation of the deed of 1841, the interests conferred by that deed took effect upon the youngest son attaining twenty-five. Cooper v. Martin, 17 L. T., N. S., 587; 3 L. R., Ch., 47.

1. By a Scotch settlement, a sum of stock was settled on the husband and wife for their lives, and after the death of the survivor, on their children, and, failing children, on the nearest heirs of the wife; and she was empowered, at any time in her life, and even on her death-bed, to bequeath or dispose of the stock to any person, and in any manner she might think proper:—Held, that the power was not intended to be available except in the event of there being a failure of children of the marriage. Peddie v. Peddie, 6 Sim. 78.

2. A proviso in a settlement, if the wife survive her husband, they not having issue between them, then she may revoke the settlement; husband dies, leaving a son, who dies in the life of his mother: she may revoke the settlement. Holt v. Burley, 2 Vern. 651; Pre. Ch. 293.

3. A feme covert having a power under her marriage settlement to create a term and to raise money after the death of her husband, and being in distress, executes that power in the lifetime of her husband, and assigns her interest for a trifling consideration:—Held, a good execution of the power. Sutherland (Countess) v. Northmore, 1 Dick. 56.

4. When a power is given to a designated person, to be executed upon a contingency, it may be executed before the happening of the contingency, and the execution of it will be valid on the subsequent happening of the event; à fortiori where the happening of the contingency cannot be ascertained till the moment of the donee's death. A clause in the instrument executing the power reciting incorrectly that the contingency has already happened will not invalidate the execution. Wandesforde v. Carrick, 5 Ir. R., Eq., 486.

See also XXI. VII. post.

2. Powers arising on a Contingency.

5. Testator gave a fund in trust for A. for life, and at her death, if B. should then be unmarried, in trust for B. absolutely; but if married, then upon trust as she should appoint; and in default thereof, for her separate use for life, and subject thereto for her absolutely. B. married after the death of the testator in the lifetime of A., and died also in her lifetime, having appointed the fund:—Held, that the appointment was good. Ashford v. Cafe, 7 Sim. 641; 5 L. J., N. S., Ch., 109.

6. Devise of stock for life, with absolute power of appointment, if no children, referred to the Master for inquiry about a child upon the grounds for suspicion. Southorp v. Burgess, 1 Ves. J. 91.

7. A testator bequeathed certain funds in trust for his wife during her widowhood, and after giving her a power to appoint them by deed or will, provided she did not marry again, directed that upon her second marriage, or her death, without having exercised her power, they should sink into the general residue of his estate: the widow executed a deed, purporting to be an appointment of the property to the residuary legatees, in the same proportions in which they would have been entitled to it under the residuary clause, and she and they concurred in assigning the funds upon trust for the residuary legatees. The Court refused to act upon the appointment and assignment during the widow's life. Goldsmid v. Goldsmid, T. & R. 445.

8. A., by will, gave his residue to C. for life, and after C.'s decease, provided C. leave a child surviving, then to trustees for such persons as C. should by will appoint; but if C. should die without leaving any child surviving, and C. should not, previously to his decease, make any such appointment, then upon trust to B. and others. C. never had a child, but left a will, giving his interest under A.'s will to E.:—Held, that the power of appointment conferred on C. was conditional on his having a child surviving him, and as he never had a child, the power never came into existence, and at his death the gift over to E. took effect. Earle v. Barker, 11 H. L. Ca. 280; 13 L. T., N. S., 29.

9. A testator empowered his widow, if his children should conduct themselves to her satisfaction up to the age of twenty-five, and marry with her approbation, but not otherwise, to give them 1,000*l.* each, for the purpose of setting out in the world:—Held, that she had a discretionary power which she might exercise after a child attained twenty-five, though unmarried. Davidson v. Rook, 22 Beav. 206.

10. A. B. on his second marriage executed a deed of settlement, whereby certain lands were vested in trustees to the use of the settlor for life; then to secure a jointure for his intended wife, and subject thereto to the use of the first and every other son of the settlor by his said intended wife; and in the same deed, there was a power, if the settlor should have more than one son, by deed or will to prefer such son to the whole or part of said lands, subject to said jointure of 60*l.* per annum to his wife, and also subject to all such sums as he might think fit to charge, in the whole not exceeding 4,000*l.* Shortly after the execution of the settlement, the settlor executed the power, and charged the said lands with a sum of 4,000*l.* in favour of the children of his former marriage, and subsequently made his will, and thereby devised certain estates, of which he was seised, to the defendant, who was the only son of the second marriage then living, and reciting "that by his settlement he was empowered to charge the settled lands with 4,000*l.*, and that he had accordingly charged them, etc.," and further declaring that "inasmuch as he had, by the deed of 3rd September, 1819, fully provided for the sons of his first marriage, he left the residue of his real and personal estate to his son by his second marriage." A bill having been filed by the assignee of the share of one of the children of the first marriage:—Held, that the power of charging could not be exercised, save in favour of the children of the second marriage.

also, that it was not an absolute power, but a power dependent upon the event of there being more sons than one of that marriage, and any one of such sons being preferred to the settled lands according to the terms of the primary power. Cooke v. Briscoe, 1 Dr. & Wal. 596.

1. A testator, after commencing his will with words amounting to a charge of his real estate with the payment of his debts, devised an advowson to trustees, upon trust to present his youngest son to the living when vacant, and subject thereto in trust to sell and apply the produce of the sale for the special purposes therein mentioned, and he devised his residuary real estate upon certain trusts to other trustees, and appointed three executors (who proved his will), one of whom was his youngest son, and another one of the trustees of the advowson. The personal estate being insufficient for the payment of his debts, the trustees of the advowson, one of whom was an executor, at the instance of the other executors, contracted to sell the advowson before any vacancy had occurred in the living. In a suit for specific performance by the plaintiffs, the trustees of the advowson and executors, against the purchaser, it was held that the charge being in effect a devise of real estate in trust to pay debts, a good title could be made by plaintiffs without institution of a suit to ascertain deficiency of personal estate, and that purchaser was not bound either to inquire whether other sufficient property ought first to be applied in payment of debts, or see to the application of purchase money. Shaw v. Borrer, 1 Keen 559; 5 L. J., N. S., Ch., 364.

2. A testator by his will directed his trustees to purchase a sum of bank annuities, upon trust to pay the dividends to his son John for life, with a proviso against alienation; and he then provided that in case his said son should marry with the consent of his trustees, the annuities should, subject to the life interest of his son, be settled for the benefit of any woman with whom his son should intermarry, and the issue of such marriage in such manner as should be agreed upon with the concurrence of his trustees, and subject to the trusts to be declared in any settlement to be made on the marriage of his son, or in case none should be declared, then the annuities should go as his son should by will appoint; and the testator also provided that in case his son should die unmarried, or, having been married, without leaving issue, and without having exercised the power of appointment thereby given to him, then a moiety of the annuities should go to persons named in the will. The son died without ever having been married, and having by his will appointed a portion of the annuities to two of his brothers:—Held, sustaining this appointment, that in the events which had happened the son had a power of appointment over the annuities. Sheffield v. Coventry (Earl), 2 De G. M. & G. 551; 17 Jur. 289; 22 L. J., Ch., 498.

3. By a deed of entail certain estates were settled upon J. K. and the heirs whatsoever of his body, remainder to several successive heirs substitutes, it being declared that the eldest heir female and the descendants of her body, so often as the succession should devolve upon heirs female, should exclude all other heirs portioners; but it was to be lawful for the heir of entail in possession, so often as his apparent or presumptive heirs were female, so far to alter the destination of succession as to settle the estate upon a younger daughter in preference to an elder. W. K., the heir of entail in possession in 1837, being a bachelor and having four sisters, of whom, according to the original settlement, upon the death of W. K. without issue, the eldest would have inherited, executed a deed calling E. K. the youngest, and the heirs of her body first in succession, failing heirs of his own body. He died in 1844, a bachelor; E. K. thereupon obtained enfeoffment:—Held, that the power of altering the destination was not confined to the case of lineal or apparent heirs portioners, but extended to the collateral or presumptive heirs portioners, of the heir substitute in possession; and therefore the appointment by W. K. of his youngest sister E. K. was good:—Held, also, that the heirs of the heir substitute in possession being females, the power arose when exercised by him in altering the destination, and was not postponed, and to arise only in case the heirs were females when the succession opened; and that no subsequent alteration among the persons of the heirs portioners could have any effect upon the operation of the power:—Held, further, that the power might properly be executed by a deed inter vivos; and might be exercised by E. K. herself when her apparent or presumptive heirs were females. E. K., under the provisions of Lord Rutherford's Act, with the concurrence of the three persons next entitled in possession, barred the entail:—Held, that the bar was not rendered nugatory by the possibility that subsequently other persons might come into esse whose rights as heirs of entail would override those of the parties who barred the entail. Ex. gr., an heir of the heir in tail in possession who altered the destination by deed inter vivos. Martin v. Kelso, 5 W. R. 440.

4. By a settlement upon the marriage of A. with B., a widow with three infant children, the trusts of the property were declared to be, after the life interests, for such of the children then living of B., and such children of the marriage, as should attain twenty-one or marry; and if there should be no object of the preceding trust who should acquire a vested interest, then for A. absolutely. The settlement subsequently conferred upon A. a general power of appointment over the property, in case there should be no child of the intended marriage who should attain a vested interest. A., by will, charged all his estate with payment of his debts, and referring to his power under the settlement, gave all his estate and effects equally between the two children of his marriage with B., to be paid to them respectively at twenty-one. These two childen being still infants:—Held, that there was no repugnancy between the trusts of the settlement and the power, which was well exercised by the will; and, consequently, that two of the children of B. who had attained twenty-one were entitled to their shares of the fund, subject to the contingency of the children of the marriage dying under twenty-one. Bradley v. Bury, 10 Jur., N. S., 937; 10 L. T., N. S., 868.

5. A testator gave a life interest in his residuary estate to his nephew, and in the event of his leaving any children, he gave him a general power of appointment by will; but if his nephew should die without leaving any children, and he should not make any such appointment as aforesaid, then over. The nephew made a will, purporting to be in exercise of the power, and died without having any children:—Held, that the power to appoint failed, and that the gift over took effect. Barker v. Young, 10 Jur., N. S., 163; 9 L. T., N. S., 704.

1. A power of appointment among a class cannot be well exercised at a time when, though all the persons who may be included in the class are known, it is uncertain whether they will, in fact, be included in it. A. purported to exercise by will a power of appointment given her by B.'s will, before the annuities and mortgages were satisfied, and therefore before the class of grandchildren was finally ascertained, though the extreme limits of the class were ascertained:—Held, that the power was baldy exercised. Re Blight, Blight v. Hartnoll, 19 L. R., Ch. D., 294; 51 L. J., Ch., 162; 45 L. T. 524; 30 W. R. 513.

VIII. PENDING SUIT.

2. The Court will not, on the motion of a creditor coming in under a decree directing a sale of lands devised for payment of debts, set aside a lease obtained pendente lite from the devisee under the will, with a leasing power. Moore v. M'Namara, 2 Ball & B. 186. See Walker v. Smallwood, Ambl. 676.

3. The institution of a suit against trustees for the administration of the trust estate under the direction of the Court, does not preclude the exercise of the discretion given to the trustees by the will of the testator, as to the appointment of new trustees, or the management of the trust; but the trustees are required, after the institution of the suit, to act under the control of the Court. Cafe v. Bent, 3 Hare 245; 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 169; 8 Jur. 141.

4. J. S. gave and devised all his real and the residue of his personal estate to trustees upon trust (subject to the power after mentioned) for his widow for life, and after her death upon certain trusts for the benefit of his daughter. The testator empowered his trustees at their discretion to apply, during the life of his wife, any part not exceeding one moiety of the annual income of the trust estate for or towards the maintenance and education of his daughter, or otherwise for her benefit in such manner as the trustees should think proper. The daughter having married and having attained twenty-one, and difficulties having arisen as to the execution of the trusts of the will, a bill was filed by the trustees to have the trusts administered under the direction of the Court:—Held, that notwithstanding such bill, and notwithstanding that the daughter was of age, the trustees might still exercise their discretion, and might pay part of the income of the trust fund to the daughter. Sillibourne v. Newport, 3 W. R. 653; 1 Kay & J. 602; 1 Jur., N. S., 608.

5. Where, under a will, the income of a fund is payable for the maintenance of T., the trustee, by paying the fund into Court, relinquishes his discretionary power. Re Tegg, 15 W. R. 52; 15 L. T., N. S., 236.

6. In a suit to have an appointment, under a discretionary power, declared invalid, a subsequent appointment pendente lite upheld. Ward v. Tyrrell, 25 Beav. 563.

7. After a decree in a suit for administration of trust funds the Court will not without reason control a discretionary power given to the trustees by the instrument creating the trust. Brophy v. Bellamy, 43 L. J., Ch., 183; 8 L. R., Ch., 798; 29 L. T., N. S., 380.

8. After an administration decree has been made all powers of management of the estate which may be vested in trustees are subject to the control of the Court; and the judge who exercises such control must be personally satisfied of the propriety of the course proposed to be adopted by the trustees. Bethell v. Abraham, 17 L. R., Eq., 24; 43 L. J., Ch., 180; 22 W. R. 179; 29 L. T., N. S., 715.

Trustees having power to invest certain moneys belonging to a testator's estate at their discretion, and having also power to continue or change securities from time to time, as to the majority should seem meet, applied to the Court in a suit for the administration of the trust estate for liberty to invest the moneys in and to convert securities into American funds or railway stocks. Infants were interested in the trust estate:—Held, that if the trustees had the discretion they claimed (which was doubtful), the Court ought not, in a case where infants were interested, to permit them to exercise that discretion in the way they proposed. Ib.

Exercise of Power of Sale.] See XXI. VIII. 9 post.

IX. BY CONTINGENT PERSON.

1. In General, 5747.
2. By Survivors, 5748.

1. In General.

9. Stock was transferred to trustees in trust for such persons as A. and his wife should jointly appoint; and in default of appointment in trust, during their joint lives, for the separate use of the wife; and in case A. should die first, in trust for his wife absolutely, but if she should die first, in trust for him for life, and subject thereto in trust for such persons as his wife, notwithstanding her coverture, should by will appoint; and in default of such appointment in trust for her next of kin. The wife, in A.'s lifetime, made a will in exercise of the last-mentioned power. A. died before her. On her death her will was admitted to probate, but the probate was limited to the property which she had power to dispose of:—Held, that the will was inoperative. Price v. Parker, 16 Sim. 198; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 398.

10. Trust funds were limited to a married woman absolutely if she survived her husband; but, if she predeceased him, she was to have a general power of appointment by will. The wife survived her husband:—Held, that the power had not arisen, and that therefore her will, made during the coverture, was inoperative. Trimmell v. Fell, 16 Beav. 537; 22 L. J., Ch., 954.

1. A wife having separate estate, and having under her marriage settlement a power of appointment in the event of her dying in the lifetime of her husband, made a will with the assent of her husband, and survived her husband:—Held, that though the will passed the separate estate, it did not execute the power of appointment, nor pass property acquired by the wife after the death of her husband. Noble v. Willock, 8 L. R., Ch., 778; 42 L. J., Ch., 681; 21 W. R. 711; 29 L. T., N. S., 194. Reversing 42 L. J., Ch., 321; 21 W. R. 353.

2. By Survivors.

By Will.] 2. Where a power to appoint among children was in default of any joint appointment by the husband and wife, to be exercised by the survivor after the death of the other:—Held, that a will made during their joint lives by the one who survived did not speak at his death, so as to be an execution of the power. Cave v. Cave, 8 De G. M. & G. 131.

Personalty was settled upon such trusts as the survivor of A. and B. should at any time or times after the decease of the other of them by deed or will appoint. In 1846, A., during the life of B., made a will, purporting to exercise this power. A. survived B., and died without having republished his will:—Held, that the will did not operate as an execution of the power, and that the 24th section of the 7 Will. 4 and 1 Vict., c. 26, had no bearing on the case. S. C. 2 Jur., N. S., 295.

The argument whether the will was a good execution of the power was allowed to proceed, though the will had not been proved, the claimants undertaking to propound it for probate if the decision should be, that if testamentary it was a good execution. Ib.

3. A general power of appointment over equitable estates given to the survivor of two, can be well exercised by the will, made during the lives of both, of the person who turns out to be the survivor. Thomas v. Jones, 1 N. R. 138; 2 John. & H. 475; 8 Jur., N. S., 1124; 31 L. J., Ch., 732; 10 W. R. 853; 7 L. T., N. S., 154. Affirmed 1 De G. J. & Sm. 63; 9 Jur., N. S., 161; 32 L. J., Ch., 139; 7 L. T., N. S., 610.

Therefore, where a general power was vested in the survivor of A., B., and C. (a married woman with testamentary capacity), and C. ultimately became the survivor:—Held, that the power was well exercised by a residuary devise in the will of C., made while under coverture, and during the life of B. Ib.

The circumstance that the devise contained a limitation for the life of B.:—Held, not to be a conclusive indication of an intention not to exercise a power which would only come into existence in the event of B. predeceasing the testatrix. Ib.

4. A sum of money was settled, after the death of A. and B., in trust for their children according as A. and B., during their joint lives, by deed, or as the survivor, by deed or will, should appoint, and in default of appointment for the children absolutely. During the joint lives of the parties, A. made a will, whereby, after certain bequests, he gave all the real estate and the residue of the personal estate of or to which he was or should at his decease be possessed or entitled, or have power to dispose of by will, to his wife; but in case (which happened) she should die in his lifetime, then upon trust for his son for life, remainder for testator's grandson, an infant; and if his grandson should die under twenty-one without issue, then for a stranger to the power, with executory devises over. Upon the question being raised as to whether the will operated as a valid exercise of the power of appointment contained in the settlement:—Held, that the power, being special and given to the survivor of two persons, was not well exercised by a will made during the lives of both the persons by that individual who afterwards proved to be the survivor; and that even had the testator at the date of his will been actually survivor, the words of the will were not sufficient to include property over which he had only a special power of appointment. Re Moir's Settlement Trusts, 46 L. T. 723.

By Deed.] 5. Power to the survivor of husband and wife to appoint among children, not well executed by a deed by both. M'Adam v. Logan, 3 Bro. C. C. 310.

6. By the settlement made on the marriage of A. and B., certain real estates were conveyed to trustees upon trust to pay the rents to A. for life, and after his death to B. for life, and, after the death of A. and B., upon trust for such one or more of the children of the marriage as A. and B. should by deed jointly appoint; and, in case of the death of A. in the lifetime of B., before any such appointment should be made, as B. should by deed appoint. A. and B. jointly appointed two-fourths of the estate to two of their children. A. died; B. appointed the other two-fourths to two other of the children:—Held, that the appointments made by B. alone were valid. Re Simpson's Settlement, 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 415; 4 De G. & Sm. 521.

X. BY RESERVATION OF EQUITY OF REDEMPTION.

7. A tenant in tail, under his brother's will, with remainders over, suffers a recovery to such uses as he should appoint by deed or will, and subject thereto to the uses of the will. He afterwards makes a mortgage of part of the estate in fee, and limits the equity of redemption to the prior uses. He then joins in a transfer of the mortgage, and reserves the equity of redemption to himself in fee:—Held, that the equity of redemption did not revert to the old uses. Anon v. Lee, 4 Sim. 364. And see Thorne v. Thorne, 1 Vern. 141. And Perkins v. Walker, id. 97. n.

8. By a marriage settlement, the lands of the wife were limited to such uses as she should, notwithstanding her coverture, by deed or will appoint, and in default of appointment to the use of the children of the marriage. After the husband's death, the wife, by way of appointment under the power contained in the settlement, executed three successive mortgages of the property in fee; each mortgage deed contained a trust for sale in default of repay ment of the mortgage money, but the language of the two latter deeds differed from that of the former, not only as to the trust for sale, but as to the proviso for reconveyance, and in other respects:—Held, that having regard to the construction of the latter deeds taken by themselves, and also in comparison with the former, the wife must be considered as having intended to devote the whole property to purposes beyond those of mere mortgage securities, and consequently, that by the latter deeds, or one of them, the power was exhausted. Barnett v. Wilson, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 407; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 428; 7 Jur. 563.

1. Where lands are in settlement, and husband and wife join in mortgage of them; if deed creating the security is no more in effect than a simple charge on lands, and does not alter limitations further than is necessary to create the charge, the right of redemption, although reserved by deed to husband and wife or either of them, their or either of their heirs, etc., belongs only to those who are entitled under settlement, and not to heirs of husband if he survives wife. But where lands of wife, on marriage, were settled to use of husband and wife successively for life, remainder in strict settlement, remainder to wife and her heirs, with power of revocation and appointment of new uses, and she joined with him in mortgage, and by deed, to lead uses of fine afterwards levied by them according to covenant, the lands after determination of term, created to secure repayment of money borrowed, were limited to husband and wife, and survivor for life, remainder in tail special, remainder for default of such issue to right heirs of survivor of husband and wife; wife having died without issue, leaving husband surviving:—Held, husband and his heirs, and not heirs of wife, were entitled to equity of redemption. Jackson v. Innes, 1 Bligh. 104. See 16 Ves. 356.

2. By indentures, dated in December 1826, an estate was conveyed to C. by way of mortgage, for the term of 2,000 years, and subject thereto to such uses as A. and B. should jointly appoint, with remainder, in default of such appointment, to A. for life, with remainder to B. in fee. By indentures, dated in December 1839, A., B., and C. conveyed the estate to D. (who had paid off the mortgage debt created by the deeds of 1826) in fee, by way of mortgage, with a proviso that if A. and B., or either of them, their or either of their heirs, should pay the mortgage debt, D. would convey the estate to A. and B. and their heirs; and a declaration, that as between A. and B. the mortgage debt should be considered as a charge on the estate, and that A. should pay the interest in his lifetime. B. died in the lifetime of A.:—Held, that notwithstanding the proviso for redemption contained in the deed of December 1839, the estate, subject to A.'s life-estate, was vested in B. absolutely. Hipkin v. Wilson, 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 305; 14 Jur. 1126.

3. A limitation of the equity of redemption in a mortgage, under a general power by tenants for life, to the mortgagor in fee, does not afford evidence of intention to destroy the remainder. Eyton v. Knight, 2 Jur. 8.

4. Real estate was settled on A. for life, remainder to his wife for life, remainder to the heirs of the body of the wife, remainder to the right heirs of A. A. and his wife barred the wife's estate tail; and by that and other deeds it was settled to such uses as A. should appoint. A. appointed, by a deed of July 1817, to such uses as he and his wife should jointly appoint, and in default to himself for life, remainder to his wife for life, remainder to his son in fee. A. and his wife made several mortgages, all except one limiting the equity of redemption upon or consistently with the uses of the deed of 1817. In 1832 they made, under the power in the deed of 1817, another mortgage, which limited the equity of redemption to A. and his wife, "their heirs or assigns, or to such other persons, etc., as they should direct;" and by a deed of even date certain terms were assigned to attend the inheritance according to the uses of the mortgage deed of even date. The wife having died, the husband, claiming to be seised in fee, sold. On a bill filed against the purchaser, by parties claiming under the son to redeem:—Held, that the proviso for redemption in the deed of 1832 was not intended to vary the limitation of the equity of redemption, and did not defeat the limitation of the fee in the deed of 1817. Whitbread v. Smith, 3 De G. M. & G. 727; 18 Jur. 475; 23 L. J., Ch., 611; 1 Eq. Rep. 392; 1 Drew. 531; 17 Jur. 725.

A. and his wife, by deed, limited the estate to such uses as A. alone should by deed or will appoint. On the next day, A. by deed poll appointed to such uses, etc., as he and his wife should jointly appoint, with remainder, in default of appointment, to the son in fee; and on the day after, by a deed, A. and his wife appointed the estate by way of mortgage: after this last deed had been engrossed, it was considerably altered and interlined, the wife not having been originally made a party to it:—Held, under the circumstances, that the three deeds must be presumed to have formed but one transaction. Ib.

5. Lands of a wife were settled to such uses as she and her husband should appoint, and subject thereto to the use of the husband for life, with remainder to the wife for life, with remainder to the children of the marriage. Two days afterwards, the husband and wife, in exercise of the power, appointed the lands to the use of trustees upon such trusts as the husband alone should appoint, and subject thereto in trust for the husband for his life, until his bankruptcy, with remainder in trust for the wife for life, and after her death on the trusts declared by the former deed. Some months afterwards the husband executed a mortgage, reciting merely an agreement for a loan, and thereby appointed that the trustees should hold the lands upon trusts for sale, and securing the repayment of the mortgage money, and subject thereto upon trust for the husband and his heirs:—Held, that the equity of redemption was effectually unsettled, and belonged to the husband in fee. Heather v. O'Neill, 2 De G. & J. 399; 4 Jur., N. S., 557; 27 L. J., Ch., 513.

XI. EXECUTION BY WILL. PERSONS TO ADMINISTER.

6. Where a married woman who was the donee of a general power of appointment executed it by will, and appointed as executors persons who were neither appointees, nor the trustees of the settlement:—Held, that it was the duty of the executors, and not of the trustees of the deed conferring the power, to distribute the property appointed among the appointees. Quære, whether this would be so in the case of any donee of a power. Platt v. Routh (6 M. & W. 756) observed upon. Re Philbrick, 5 N. R. 502; 11 Jur., N. S., 558; 34 L. J., Ch., 368; 13 W. R. 570; 12 L. T., N. S., 261.

1. A. bequeathed a fund to trustees in trust for the children of his daughter B., in such shares and in such manner as B. should by will appoint, and gave his trustees usual powers of maintenance and advancement. B. by will appointed the fund to her children in certain proportions, and further appointed that the share of any minor should be paid to the trustees of her will, with powers of maintenance and advancement. B.'s children being infants, the question arose whether the appointed fund should be retained by A.'s trustees or handed over to B.'s trustees:—Held, that A.'s trustees were the proper parties to hold the fund and to administer the trusts of B.'s testamentary appointment. Busk v. Aldam, 44 L. J., Ch., 119; 19 L. R., Eq., 16; 23 W. R. 21; 31 L. T. 370.

2. A married woman having, under a settlement, a general power of appointment by will, appointed the fund, in pursuance of the power, to be divided among five persons, and appointed executors. The trustees of the settlement paid the money into court under the Trustee Relief Act, and the cestuis que trustent presented a petition for payment out, establishing their right to the fund by evidence:—Held, that the trustees should have paid the fund over to the executors of the will for distribution, and they were ordered to pay the costs; but, as the executors were the proper persons to present the petition, the trustees were exempted from payment of so much of the costs as were occasioned by the production of evidence by the cestuis que trustent. Re Hoskin, 5 L. R., Ch. D., 229; 46 L. J., Ch., 274; 35 L. T. 935.

Semble, on appeal, that the decision of Malins, V.-Ch., on the question of law was right, and that the executor of the donee of the power was the proper person to give a discharge. S. C. 6 L. R., Ch. D., 281; 46 L. J., Ch., 817; 25 W. R. 779.

3. Under a settlement a sum of 10,000*l.*, secured by mortgage, was vested in trustees for the wife of S. for her life, and after her death for S. for his life, and subject as aforesaid, for such persons as the wife should by deed or will appoint, and in default of appointment for S. The wife made a will, by which she directed that her husband should enjoy the income of the fund during his life, subject to payment of two annuities; and she directed certain pecuniary legacies to be paid, after his death, out of one moiety of the fund, and she gave the other moiety of the fund and the residue of her property to her husband, whom she appointed executor. The trustees of the settlement paid over the whole trust fund to the husband; and part of the 5,000*l.* applicable to the payment of the pecuniary legacies was lost by him:—Held, that the payment to him was proper, and that the trustees were not answerable for the loss. Hayes v. Oatley, 14 L. R., Eq., 1; 41 L. J., Ch., 510; 26 L. T. 26.

XII. REVOCATION OF TESTAMENTARY APPOINTMENT.

4. Execution of power by will is revoked by subsequent conveyance upon a sale, by the tenant for life having obtained the legal estate; and that not being an execution within the intent of the power, the estate passed under a general residuary devise against the purchaser. Reid v. Shergold, 10 Ves. 370.

5. A covenant to levy a fine to H. for 1,000 years by way of mortgage: remainder as A. should appoint; fine levied. A. devises to H.; afterwards, for 10*s.*, covenants that the fine should enure to H. in fee:—Held, a revocation of the will. Hick v. Mors, Ambl. 215; 2 Ken. Ch. 117.

At law, an imperfect conveyance is a revocation; it depends on intention. Ib.

"Intent" does not mean intent to revoke, but to make a different disposition. Ib.

6. Appointment (under a power) by will is revocable by a subsequent appointment by deed, though no power of revocation is reserved by the will. Lisle v. Lisle, 1 Bro. P. C. 533.

7. J. H., having settled his real estate in trust for himself for life, and afterwards to such uses as he might by deed or will appoint, and, in default of appointment, to sole use of the heirs of his body, by his will noticing the settlement, after giving several legacies, devised all the rest of his real and personal estate to J. P. (who was not his heir) and the heirs of his body, etc. By lease and release, subsequent to the will, J. H. conveyed the real estate to a trustee for himself for life, and afterwards for such uses as he should by deed or will appoint, with power to raise, etc., for debts, etc., and, in default of appointment, for J. H., his heirs and assigns. J. H. died without altering will, or making any other appointment:—Held, that the latter conveyance was a revocation of will. Huband v. Huband, 7 Bro. P. C. 433.

8. By deed of 4th November, 1800 (being the settlement made on the marriage of A. and B.), the intended wife, B., in exercise of a general power of appointment vested in her by a previous deed of the 4th May, 1799, appointed certain freehold houses to the use of trustees during the joint lives of herself and her husband, for her separate use, with the remainder, in the event of her dying in the lifetime of her husband (which happened), as she should appoint by will attested by three witnesses, with limitations over. Shortly after her marriage, B., by will duly attested by three witnesses, devised the houses to her husband in fee; afterwards, in 1811, she and her husband executed a deed attested by two witnesses, by which, after reciting the indenture of the 4th May, 1799, but not mentioning the marriage settlement, B., in exercise of the power given her by the deed of 1799, and of all other powers, etc., appointed the messuages to the use of her husband for life, remainder to the use of herself for life, remainder to the use of the children of the marriage as she should appoint; and, in default of appointment, to all the children equally in tail, remainder to her husband in fee:—Held, that the deed of 1811 did not operate as a revocation of the previous will. Kilbeck v. Wood, 1 Russ. 564; 5 L. J., Ch., 61.

1. Where there was some doubt as to the validity of a power, and a deed was executed by A., the donee of the power, and those who together with her were interested in the capital of the fund, supposing that the power either was not valid or not executed, which deed it was held was intended only to take effect on one of the two events last stated, and the donee of the power then by will executed such power (which was in fact valid), and after that, in pursuance of a power given by the deed, appointed a new trustee of such deed:—Held, that this appointment was not a revocation of the appointment by the will. Phipson v. Turner, 9 Sim. 227; 2 Jur. 414.

2. A. devised all his estates to widow for life, remainder to nephew, he paying 2,000*l.* to appointee of widow, and made her executrix and residuary legatee. The estates were held under church leases, which testator renewed after will. Quære, if a revocation. The widow, by will, "in pursuance of power," appointed plaintiff, and devised estates, "so given by her said husband's will, and all her interest, etc., therein," to trustees, for nephew, on his paying the said 2,000*l.*, "according to the true intent, etc., of husband's will; but not before or otherwise." Supposing the renewal of leases a revocation, the widow shall be presumed to have designedly given effect to real intent of husband. Penrice v. Garnons, 3 Anstr. 821.

3. A disposition by will, since the 7 Will. 4 and 1 Vict., c. 26, can be revoked only by ademption of the property devised, or by a declaration of intention to revoke, or words equivalent thereto; and therefore a will executing a power of appointment is not revoked by deeds subsequently executed, and making a different disposition of the property appointed. De Pontes v. Kendall, Ford v. De Pontes, 8 Jur., N. S., 323; 31 L. J., Ch., 185; 10 W. R. 69; 5 L. T., N. S., 515; 30 Beav. 572.

4. Two wills of different dates, each purporting to be the last will, but the second containing no revoking clause, were admitted to probate as together constituting the last will of a testatrix. Each will bequeathed a number of legacies, all the legatees in the first, except two, being also named in the second. The legacies for the most part differed in amount, and there were other slight differences; but five legacies, and the residuary bequest, were the same in both. Some plate was specifically given by each will. The first will contained an appointment of a sum of money under a special power; by the second will the power was not exercised, but a pecuniary legacy was given to the appointee:—Held, that the legacies given by the second will to legatees named in the first was substitutional for the legacies given to them by the first, except that the appointment under the power was not revoked, and the legacy to the appointee was therefore cumulative. Tuckey v. Henderson, 11 W. R. 1013.

5. B., by a will made in 1858, specifically devised and bequeathed freehold, copyhold, and leasehold property, and gave all other real and personal estate, of which he should die possessed or should have power to dispose, upon certain trusts. By a voluntary settlement in August 1862, B. conveyed all his freehold property upon trust, after his own death, for E. for life, with remainder as B. should by his last will, or any codicil thereto, appoint, and in default of appointment in trust for E. in fee; and by the same settlement he disposed of all his leasehold and personal property. In November 1862, B., by an instrument purporting to be his last will, and not mentioning any former will, appointed under the power in the settlement an annuity to be raised out of his freehold property, and devised all his copyhold property, but made no other disposition of freehold or personal property. Probate of both wills was granted:—Held, that having regard to the terms of the power, the testator had indicated an intention that the will of 1862 alone should operate as an execution of the power, and that consequently the specific and residuary devises in the will of 1858 were not in due execution of the power. Pettinger v. Ambler, Bunn v. Pettinger, 1 L. R., Eq., 510; 14 L. T., N. S., 118.

6. A testator, having executed a will, completely disposing of his own property, and also of other property over which he had a disposing power, subsequently, and after some changes had taken place in the investment of the property, and having the former will before him, executed a later will complete in form, having no word of a codicillary character, and no reference to the former—by which he fully disposed of his own property, but not of that over which he had the power, although on comparing the two together it was plain that he intended to dispose of both; and the effect of admitting the former will to probate would be the retention, contrary to the intention of the testator, of a certain appointment:—Held, that the latter will alone should be admitted to probate. Shiel v. O'Brien, 7 Ir. R., Eq., 64.

7. Under a marriage settlement the husband had a power of appointment by will, and the trustees a power to sell and reinvest in land to the old uses. The husband made a will appointing the settled property to W. and N., and giving the residue of his real and personal property to his wife. Afterwards the trustees entered into a contract for sale. After the conveyance had been executed by the husband and one trustee, and before payment of the purchase money, the husband died:—Held, that the purchase money went to the wife under the residuary clause. Gale v. Gale, 4 W. R. 277; 21 Beav. 349.

8. Under a settlement of real estate made in 1825, the husband and wife had a joint power of revocation and new appointment, and, after other limitations, the wife had an absolute power of appointment by will. In 1827 the wife made her will under the power. In 1840 it was discovered that limitations for the lives of the husband and wife had been accidentally omitted from the settlement of 1825. A new deed was executed solely for the purpose of supplying the omission. By this instrument the former settlement was revoked under the joint power, and the estates were settled as before, except that the limitations to children were omitted, there being then no issue of the marriage, and the wife having reached an advanced age, and a power of appointment by will was again given to the wife:—Held, that the deed of 1840 annulled the will of 1827. Held, also, that extrinsic evidence of the purpose with which the deed of 1840 was executed was not admissible. Walker v. Armstrong, 4 W. R. 280; 21 Beav. 284; 2 Jur., N. S., 221; 25 L. J., Ch., 402. See S. C. on appeal 2 Jur., N. S., 959; 25 L. J., Ch., 738.

But on appeal:—Held, that the parties claiming under the original limitations were entitled to have the second deed rectified. S. C. 4 W. R. 770.

1. A general clause in a will revoking all former wills revokes a prior testamentary appointment. Merritt, In Goods of (1 Sw. & Tr. 112), and Joys, In Goods of (4 Sw. & Tr. 214), considered. Sotheran v. Dening, 20 L. R., Ch. D., 99.

A married woman having a general power of appointment by will over real estate executed a will appointing the estate. After the death of her husband she made another will revoking all former wills and containing a general devise and bequest of all her real and personal estate. She afterwards made a third will, also revoking all former wills, and bequeathing her personal estate, but not devising or appointing her real estate. She had no real estate except that subject to her power of appointment:—Held, that the testamentary appointment under the first will was revoked by the second will, and the second will by the third, and that the real estate went as in default of appointment. Ib.

2. A widow, having power of appointment among her children by deed or will over real estate, appointed it to her two children, a son and daughter, in moieties by will. She afterwards executed another will, revoking all former wills made by her (without special reference to the former will and appointment), and devised and bequeathed all her real and personal estate to her daughter absolutely. Her son died in her lifetime, leaving issue one child, a son:—Held, that the second will revoked the first, but did not amount to an execution of the power of appointment. Harvey v. Harvey, 32 L. T., N. S., 141; 23 W. R. 478.

Married Woman.] 3. Stock was, in contemplation of a marriage, vested in trustees for the separate use of the wife for life, and with full power for her to dispose of it by will. She made her will during coverture. She survived the husband, and afterwards took a transfer of the stock into her own name. This does not operate as a revocation of the will, or an ademption of the bequest of the stock. Dingwell v. Askew, 1 Cox 427.

4. Feme covert, under a power, makes a will; afterwards becoming discovert, she takes a conveyance from the trustees to her own use. This is a revocation of the will. Lawrence v. Wallis, 2 Bro. C. C. 319.

5. A married woman, having a power to appoint personal estate, held in trust for her, by her last will and testament, notwithstanding her coverture, made a will in exercise of her power during the life of her husband. She survived her husband, and afterwards took an assignment from her trustee of the personal estate to herself. This assignment does not operate as a revocation of the will. Clough v. Clough 3 Myl. & K. 296.

6. A woman being about to marry, enters into an agreement with the future husband (without seal or stamp), by which her property is settled upon the survivor for life, with power to the wife to dispose by will made after the marriage; she then immediately makes a will, by which she gives her property to the intended husband; and afterwards (on the same day) she marries; the articles resting in agreement give the husband an equitable estate for life, but the will is revoked (not being protected by the power) by the subsequent marriage. Hodsden v. Lloyd, 2 Bro. C. C. 534.

XIII. RE-EXECUTION AFTER INVALID APPOINTMENT.

7. A. having a power to appoint 10,000*l.* amongst his younger children, appoints it to them equally, reserving to himself a power of revocation as to 5,000*l.*, which he afterwards irrevocably appoints to E., one of the children, in consideration of her having agreed to apply part of it in payment of his debts. Afterwards, A., by a deed, to which E. is also a party, revokes, with her consent, the last appointment as to 2,500*l.*, and in pursuance of all powers, appoints that sum to a child by a second marriage, and confirms E.'s title to the remainder under the former appointment:—Held, that the appointment of the 5,000*l.* being void, the appointment of the 2,500*l.* must also fail. Farmer v. Martin, 2 Sim. 502.

8. A father had a power of appointing to any of his children. Having, in breach of trust, obtained possession of part of the trust funds, he, in 1834, appointed that part of his daughters, in exclusion of his son, under an agreement that that part should afterwards be conveyed to him, in exchange for an estate of less value. In 1844 he executed a second appointment, reciting the previous dealing with the fund, and he thereby appointed the remaining portion of the trust property, "and all other" the property comprised in the settlement, to his daughters:—Held, that the first appointment was void; and, secondly, that the portion of the property comprised therein was not appointed by the second deed. Askham v. Barker, 12 Beav. 499.

9. A father executed a power of appointment, under which his four younger children, B., C., D., and E., became entitled, subject to his life interest, to 30,000*l.* in equal shares. The father afterwards, by several instruments of appointment, affected to appoint the whole fund to B., C., and D., in the following shares; viz., to B. 13,000*l.*, to C. 5,000*l.*, and to D. 12,000*l.* E., who was a son, died in his father's lifetime intestate and without issue; whereupon his share devolved to the father. After E.'s decease, the father, with a view to support the subsequent appointment, executed a deed-poll, declaring that the original appointment, under which the children took equally, was made by mistake:—Held, that though the subsequent appointments were invalid, so far as related to the shares of B., C., and D., yet, as regarded the share of E., the father was bound by the statement in the deed-poll; and that E.'s share, amounting to 7,500*l.*, must be apportioned between B. and D., in satisfaction pro tanto of the losses which, through the invalidity of the subsequent appointments, had been sustained by their respective shares. Armytage v. Armytage, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 461; 6 Jur. 790.

1. In 1813 a married woman, who was entitled for life to estates, including the L. estate, with a power of appointing them after her death to all or any of her children, appointed them by deed to her eldest son in fee. This appointment was made upon a bargain between the husband and wife, and the eldest son, that the estates should be settled, subject to the wife's life estate, to the use that the husband should receive a rent charge for his life, and subject thereto to the use of all or any of the children of the marriage as the husband and wife should jointly appoint, or as the wife, if she survived, should by deed or will appoint; and the estates were so settled accordingly. In 1820 the husband and wife made a joint appointment of the estates among their children, by which they gave the L. estate to the eldest son, and they made slight variations of these dispositions in 1826, reserving on each occasion a power of revocation and new appointment to them jointly and to the wife if surviving. In 1827 the husband died. In 1829, the widow, who had not married again, by a deed not noticing the invalidity of the appointment of 1813, and expressed to be made in exercise of the powers given her by the deeds of 1820 and 1826, or by the deeds recited in them, and of all other powers vested in her, made some slight variations of the dispositions made by the deeds of 1820 and 1826, and subject thereto, confirmed the dispositions of those deeds:—Held, that although the appointment of 1813 was invalid as being made on a bargain for the benefit of the husband, and the appointments of 1820 and 1826 were therefore invalid, as made under a power which was ill created, the original power of the wife was well exercised by the appointment of 1829, and that the title of the eldest son to the L. estate was good. Carver v. Richards, 1 De G. F. & J. 548; 6 Jur., N. S., 410; 29 L. J., Ch., 357; 8 W. R. 349; 2 L. T., N. S., 161; 27 Beav. 496.

2. Where the donee of a power to appoint among children had given an unmarried child a power to make appointments to take effect only in case of the child's marriage, and after the child's marriage he executed a further deed, in the operative part of which he was expressed to confirm the prior appointment:—Held, that this second deed operated as a new appointment, and gave the child a valid general power of appointing exercisable immediately. Morgan v. Gronow, 42 L. J., Ch., 410; 16 L. R., Eq., 1; 28 L. T., N. S., 434.

3. When an appointment has been set aside on the ground that, though not based on any actual agreement between the appointor and the appointee, it was made in reliance on a sense of moral obligation known to be operating on the mind of the appointee, which would lead her to carry out the appointor's wishes, nothing short of a distinct declaration by the appointor that he considers the appointee relieved from such obligation, can make a fresh appointment to the same person valid. Topham v. Portland (Duke), 38 L. J., Ch., 513; 17 W. R. 911. Affirmed 39 L. J., Ch., 259; 5 L. R., Ch., 40; 18 W. R. 235; 22 L. T., N. S., 847. And see Jackson v. Jackson, Dru. 99.

XIV. IN OTHER CASES.

4. Trustee of a settlement not entitled by an agreement with the husband before the marriage, to a lien on the fund, settled to the separate use of the wife during the joint lives of the husband and wife, with remainder to the survivor, in opposition to a joint appointment made by them, under a power reserved to them in the settlement. Morris v. Clarkson, 1 Jac. & Walk. 107.

5. Married woman being entitled to annuity of 200*l.* out of dividends of 10,500*l.* 4 per cent. stock, which, subject to the annuity, was divisible among the children of herself and her husband as he should appoint. Husband appointed 2,500*l.* to eldest son. Court refused to transfer this sum to son, though the remainder was much more than sufficient to pay the annuity. Breton v. Clifden (Lord), 1 Sim. & S. 363.

IX. Execution. By Particular Persons.

I. By Infant, 5753.
II. By Lunatic, 5754.
III. By Married Woman, 5754.

I. BY INFANT.

6. Semble, there is no precedent either in a court of law or equity where it has been held that a power over real estate executed by an infant is good. Hearle v. Greenbank, 3 Atk. 695; 1 Ves. 298.

7. Although a power simply collateral may be exercised by an infant, a devise to an infant and others upon a discretionary trust for sale cannot be exercised by them. King v. Bellord, 1 Hem. & M. 343; 32 L. J., Ch., 646; 11 W. R. 900; 8 L. T., N. S., 633; 2 N. R. 442.

Devisees on a discretionary trust for sale (one of whom was an infant) having contracted to sell:—Held, on a bill by the purchaser for specific performance, that the contract was void, and bill dismissed accordingly. Ib.

8. An infant cannot exercise a power over personal property (though authorised to do so by the instrument creating the power) which goes to defeat his or her own interest therein. Re Armit, 5 Ir. R., Eq., 352.

9. An infant can exercise a power not simply collateral, where it may be plainly inferred from the instrument creating the power that such an exercise was in contemplation of the persons executing the instrument. Re Cardross, 38 L. T., N. S., 778; 7 L. R., Ch. D., 728; 26 W. R. 389; 47 L. J., Ch., 327.

By a marriage settlement, where the intended wife was an infant ward of court "of the age of seventeen years and upwards," funds, the property of the lady, were settled, with power to change investments, "with the consent of Lady C. and her husband":—Held, that the lady, though still a minor, could give a valid consent to a change of investment of the settled funds. Ib.

1. By a settlement made on the marriage of a lady then and therein described as "an infant of the age of nineteen years and upwards," it was agreed that, after the marriage, as soon as the case would admit, certain personal estate standing in the names of the trustees of her father's will in which the lady would take a vested interest on her marriage, subject to an annuity for her mother's life, should be assigned to trustees, in trust for investment with the consent of the husband and wife, and to pay the income to the wife for her separate use, and after her death to her husband till bankruptcy or alienation; and then to hold the capital on trusts for the issue of the marriage; and, in default of such issue, in trust for such person or persons as the wife should by will or deed appoint. The wife appointed the fund by deed to her husband, and died without issue, being still an infant. An action having been brought by the trustee in the husband's bankruptcy, who was also the legal personal representative of the wife, against the next of kin of the wife, claiming the property:—Held, by a majority of the judges, that the appointment by the wife while still a minor was valid. Re D'Angibau, Andrews v. Andrews, 15 L. R., Ch. D., 228; 49 L. J., Ch., 756; 43 L. T. 135; 28 W. R. 930. Affirming 49 L. J., Ch., 182; 41 L. T. 645; 28 W. R. 311.

Held, also, by the whole Court, that whether the appointment was valid or not, the wife's next of kin, being volunteers, could not claim under the settlement in opposition to her legal personal representative. Ib.

II. BY LUNATIC.

2. The Court has jurisdiction to decide upon the validity of the execution of a testamentary power over personalty with reference to the state of the donee's mind at the time of the alleged execution. Morgan v. Annis, 3 De G. & Sm. 461.

3. In a suit to set aside an appointment, on the ground of the unsoundness of mind of the appointor, who was the tenant for life of the estate, parties who would be entitled in remainder in default of appointment cannot, either by joining as plaintiffs in a supplemental suit, or by offering in their answer to convey their interests for the plaintiff's benefit, enable the plaintiff to sustain the suit in respect of any relief beyond the duration of his own life estate. Price v. Berringlon, 7 Hare 394.

4. A power of limiting a rent charge by way of jointure was given to tenants for life, when and as they should severally and successively be in possession of the subject property. Previously to his becoming entitled in possession, A. by his marriage settlement covenanted, in that event, to exercise the above power in favour of his then intended wife. Upon his accession to the estate, he executed a deed of appointment accordingly. After his death the validity of such appointment was disputed by the remainderman, upon the ground that A. was of unsound mind at the date of its execution, and during the whole time that he was in possession as tenant for life:—Held, that the effect of the covenant to execute the power did not depend upon the continuance of mental capacity in the covenantor: and that the estate was bound by his covenant. Affleck v. Affleck, 5 W. R. 425; 26 L. J., Ch., 358; 3 Jur., N. S., 326; 3 Sm. & G. 394.

1. Capacity. General Principles.

5. There is a diversity between a naked power and a power which flows from an interest, for where a bare power is given to a feme by will to sell lands, though she afterwards marries, she may sell the lands, and may sell to her husband; but where a feme, upon a settlement of her own estate, reserves a power which flows from an interest, that power ought to be executed by the feme whilst sole, and yet it is said such powers ought to be taken liberally, though formerly they were taken strictly. Antrim (Marquis) v. Buckingham (Duke), 1 Ch. Ca. 17; 3 Salk. 276; 2 Freem. 168.

Where a reversioner, upon an estate for life, made a settlement on herself for life, with power for her, being sole, to make leases for three lives in possession, and she and her husband, in the lifetime of the tenant for life, made a lease for twenty-one years, habendum from the date, it was held not pursuant to her power; for, by the marriage, she put herself under the control of her husband. S. C. 1 Ch. Ca. 17. In this case, Ld. K. took a diversity between a naked power and a power which flows from an interest.

6. Where a wife has a power to dispose of her separate estate, her disposition of it must be by acts strictly pursuing the power. Ross v. Ewer, 3 Atk. 160; Burnet v. Mann, 1 Ves. 157.

7. Feme covert may execute a power. Peacock v. Monk, 2 Ves. 191.

8. A woman entitled to the trust of a reversion in fee of lands, reserves to herself, by articles previous to her marriage, a power of disposing of all her estate to such uses as she shall think proper. She afterwards makes an appointment in favour of her husband and children. This appointment was held good, although no conveyance of the reversion was ever executed. Wright v. Cadogan (Lord), 1 Bro. P. C. 486.

1. An agreement by feme covert to execute a power of leasing over lands settled to her separate use:—Held, to be a valid execution of the power, without deciding whether the married woman was personally bound by the agreement. Dowell v. Dew, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 345; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 158; 7 Jur. 117.

2. A devise of real estate to trustees, for the sole and separate use of a married woman and her heirs, gives her the same power of disposition by deed or will over the equitable fee as she would have had if she were a feme sole. Taylor v. Meads, 11 Jur., N. S., 166; 13 W. R. 394; 34 L. J., Ch., 203; 5 N. R. 348; 12 L. T., N. S., 6; 4 De G. J. & S. 597. Reversing 10 Jur., N. S., 1012; 12 W. R. 846; 10 L. T., N. S., 475; 4 N. R. 203.

3. The Wills Act, 7 Will. 4 and 1 Vict., c. 26, does not enlarge the testamentary capacity of a married woman, but enlarges the subject matter over which she, having testamentary capacity, can operate by will. Noble v. Willock, 8 L. R., Ch., 778; 42 L. J., Ch., 681; 21 W. R. 711; 29 L. T., N. S. 194. Reversing 42 L. J., Ch., 321; 21 W. R. 353.

The death of a husband operates as a revocation of his assent to the will of his wife. Ib.

Suspension of Power by Marriage.] See V. IX. ante.

2. During what Coverture or Widowhood.

4. Where feme sole conveys stock to trustees to use of intended husband and self for life, with power to dispose of part, this power survives to wife. Horner v. Bendloes, 9 Mod. 335.

5. A trust term created by a marriage settlement, to raise a sum of money on the decease of the survivor of the husband and wife, in case there should be no issue of the marriage living at her death, and to be paid as the wife, at any time or times during her coverture, and notwithstanding the same, by any deed or writing, etc., should appoint or devise. The power cannot be exercised during widowhood, or a second marriage. Horseman v. Abbey, 1 Jac. & Walk. 381.

6. A trust was created by a marriage settlement to raise 1,000*l.*, on the decease of the survivor of the husband and wife, in case there should be no issue of the marriage living at her death, and to pay the same to such person or persons as the wife, "at any time or times thereafter during her coverture," should by deed or will appoint; and, in default of appointment, to the executors, administrators, and assigns of the wife's mother. There was no issue of the marriage, and the wife survived the husband without having exercised the power of appointment during the first coverture. She afterwards married a second time, and had issue by her second husband, and died leaving such issue, her second husband and mother surviving. The mother afterwards bequeathed her residuary estate and died:—Held, that the power given by the settlement to appoint the 1,000*l.* could not be exercised during the widowhood of the donee, or during any other than the first coverture: and that the executors of the mother were entitled to take the 1,000*l.* and interest, as part of her residuary personal estate. Morris v. Howes, 4 Hare 599; 9 Jur. 966. Affirmed 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 121; 10 Jur. 955.

7. By a marriage settlement, the wife has power, notwithstanding "her coverture," to appoint to the children of the marriage; and in default of such children, she has a power, "during and notwithstanding" her coverture, to appoint to other persons. The latter power cannot be exercised during her widowhood. Quære, whether the former can. Burnham, v. Bennett, 2 Colly. 260; 9 Jur. 888. See S. C. 1 De G. & Sm. 513.

8. Settlement on wife for life, with power for her, during the intended coverture, to appoint by will, and in default, over:—Held, on the context, that an appointment by will, after the coverture, was invalid. Holliday v. Overton, 14 Beav. 467; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 769; 16 Jur. 346. Affirmed 16 Jur. 751.

By a marriage settlement, reciting that the rents, issues, and profits of the property to be thereby settled should be to the separate use of the intended wife for life, and after her decease, for the further purpose of making of the reversion and principal thereof a provision for the children of her former marriage, certain real and personal property then belonging to the intended wife was conveyed to trustees, in trust to pay the income to the intended wife for life; and after her decease, in trust for such persons and in such manner as she, "in and by her last will and testament, or instrument testamentary, or in the nature of a will, in writing, to be signed and published by her in the presence of three or more credible witnesses, upon testamentary considerations only, during her intended coverture, should direct or appoint":—Held, that the words, "during her intended coverture," applied to the whole clause, and that an appointment made by the wife after the death of the husband was an invalid execution of the power. S. C. 16 Jur. 751.

9. Stock was transferred to trustees in trust for such persons as A. and his wife should jointly appoint; and in default of appointment in trust, during their joint lives, for the separate use of the wife; and in case A. should die first, in trust for his wife absolutely; but if she should die first, in trust for him for life, and subject thereto in trust for such persons as his wife, notwithstanding her coverture, should by will appoint; and in default of such appointment in trust for her next of kin. The wife, in A.'s lifetime, made a will in exercise of the last-mentioned power. A. died before her. On her death her will was admitted to probate, but the probate was limited to the property which she had power to dispose of:—Held, that the will was inoperative. Price v. Parker, 16 Sim. 198; 17 L. J., N. T., Ch., 398.

10. A power enabling a married woman to dispose of settled property, in the event of her dying in the lifetime of her husband, is satisfied by her surviving him, and becoming absolutely entitled to the property; and a will executed by her during their joint lives was held to be inoperative as an appointment. Trimmell v. Fell, 22 L. J., Ch., 954; 16 Beav. 537.

3. Divorce. Effect.

11. By a marriage settlement, the incom of a trust fund was to be paid during the joint lives of husband and wife, as they should appoint, "but not so as to deprive themselves of the benefit thereof, by charge or otherwise, in the way of anticipation." Upon a divorce a mensâ et thoro, they appointed the income between themselves in equal moieties. The Court held the appointment valid, and acted upon it. Re Linzee, 23 Beav. 241.

1. By a settlement in 1840, on the marriage of C. (the wife) and B. (the husband), a fund was settled upon the children of C. by B., and in default as C. should appoint. In 1860 the marriage was dissolved, there being then no issue to take:—Held, that the power of appointment arose, notwithstanding the possibility of a marriage and future issue. Bond v. Taylor, 2 John. & H. 473; 8 Jur., N. S., 1090; 31 L. J., Ch., 784; 10 W. R. 169; 5 L. T., N. S., 445.

2. A married woman under a general power of appointment exercisable during coverture, by deed of appointment executed after marriage, appointed the property to trustees during the joint lives of herself and her husband for her sole and separate use; and if she should survive her husband, for herself absolutely; but in case she predeceased him, as she should appoint; and in default of her appointment to her next of kin. There were no children, and the marriage having been dissolved by a final decree of dissolution on account of the husband's misconduct:—Held, that the wife was absolutely entitled. Jessop v. Blake, 3 Giff. 639.

4. Undue Influence. Effect.

3. Deeds of gift, by a wife to her husband, of property over which she has a power of appointment, are regarded by the Court with jealousy, and inquiries will be directed as to the circumstances under which they were executed. Where a wife makes a deed of gift to her husband, of property over which she has a power of appointment, and the deed is afterwards impeached by her, the burden lies on her of showing that the circumstances were such as to invalidate it, and the burden does not lie on the husband of showing that the circumstances were such that it ought to be supported. Property was settled on A., a married woman, for her life, with remainder to such uses as she should by deed appoint; A., by deed dated in 1821, appointed the reversion to B., her husband, and in 1836 filed a bill to have the deed set aside. The circumstances relied on by A. were, that the deed had been prepared by B.'s solicitors; that it had not been read over at the time of the execution; and the evidence of one of the attesting witnesses, that she was agitated and distressed at the time of the execution, and signed it in a reluctant manner:—Held, that these circumstances were not such as to invalidate the deed. Nedby v. Nedby, 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 446; 5 De G. & Sm. 377.

An appointment made, in exercise of a power by a wife, in favour of her husband, is to be considered good, unless the wife shows that it was executed under circumstances sufficient to invalidate it. The onus probandi lies on the party impeaching the instrument. Ib.

4. An estate was settled on husband and wife for life, with a limitation to their issue, and in default a power of appointment was given to the wife. There was one child only of the marriage, who died an infant. The wife survived her husband, and appointed the estate to G. D. F., who was the releasee to uses, and had possession of the settlement. G. D. F. shortly after his wife's death made a feoffment, and levied a fine with proclamations. After the expiration of the five years, the heirs of the child claimed the estate, insisting that, under the terms of settlement, the child took the estate in fee, and that the power of appointment had never arisen. He filed a bill against G. D. F. to avoid the fine, alleging that it had been levied with full knowledge of the plaintiff's rights, and with a fraudulent view to bar them:—Held, that the act of G. D. F. did not constitute a fraud; that G. D. F. stood in no fiduciary relation towards the plaintiff, and the bill was dismissed with costs. Langley v. Fisher, 9 Beav. 90; 15 L. J., N. S., Ch., 73.

5. Where a feme covert having separate property joins in a security for money advanced to her husband, the Court acts upon it, not as an agreement to charge her separate property, but as an equitable appointment under the settlement, to be satisfied from the rents and profits of that property, and not by sale or mortgage. If the feme covert insists upon the exercise of undue influence by the husband, she must prove it, and it is not for the plaintiff to prove a negative. Field v. Sowle, 4 Russ. 112.

5. By Deed during Coverture.

6. Money vested in trustees, in trust for husband and wife successively for life, and remainder to the children, and in default thereof to such person as the wife should appoint; a deed of the wife, conveying this contingent interest, was established. Guise v. Small, 1 Anstr. 277.

7. A feme covert, described as such in the will of the testator, may, during the coverture, execute, by deed, a power of disposition given her by the will, over real and personal estate. Downes v. Timperon, 4 Russ. 334.

8. A., entitled to the interest of money for life, with power of appointment as to the principal, receives for her support a part of the principal, and appoints to her husband; the husband cannot claim his part of the principal. Randal v Hearle, 2 Anstr. 363.

9. A woman entitled to the trust of a reversion in fee of lands, reserves to herself, by articles previous to her marriage, a power of disposing of all her estate to such uses as she shall think proper. She afterwards makes an appointment in favour of her husband and children. This appointment was held good, although no conveyance of the reversion was ever executed. Wright v. Cadogan (Lord), 1 Bro. P. C. 486.

10. A sum of stock was settled upon trust to pay the income to C. D. (then single), for her separate use, without power of anticipation; and after C. D.'s decease, upon trust, as to the principal sum, for A. B. (subject, however, to the proviso, that the trustees should, on the requisition of C. D., to be signified by deed at any time within ten years, if C. D. should so long live, notwithstanding the restrictions placed on her life interest, raise the sum of 5,000*l.* out of the trust fund, and pay the same to her, or to such persons as she should by any deed direct): C. D. afterwards married, and then executed a deed-poll, directing the trustees to raise that sum, and pay it to her:—Held, that notwithstanding her coverture she might make the requisition, and that she was entitled to have the money raised. Green v. Campbell, 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 172.

1. Money invested in trust for a married woman, to pay her interest for life to her separate use, and after her decease to such person, and subject to such powers, etc., as she should, by any instrument in writing, from time to time, or by will appoint (during the present coverture). She cannot dispose of the principal at once by deed, but by a revocable act only. Sockett v. Wray, 4 Bro. C. C. 483.

2. A feme covert having an interest for life, to her separate use, and a power of appointment of the fund by deed, to take effect after her death, assigned her life interest, and appointed the fund after her death to trustees, upon trust, to invest the fund in the immediate purchase of an annuity for her life. The Court ordered a transfer of the fund to the new trustees accordingly. Lynn v. Ashton, 1 Russ. & M. 188; Taml. 328.

3. Feme covert having power to convey her estate after her death, conveys it by lease and release, to take effect after her death; she afterwards joins with her husband in levying a fine to different uses. The lease and release held to have no effect, and the fine operated. Bramhall v. Hall, Ambl. 467.

4. A sum of money in the public funds being given by will to trustees for the separate use of a feme covert, and to be subject to her appointment after her death, the wife made an appointment of this money to her husband; and on bill filed by husband and wife against the trustees to transfer this fund, the Court, on examination of the wife, decreed the same accordingly. Frederick v. Hartwell, 1 Cox 193.

5. A married woman having a general power of appointment over a reversionary trust fund, subject to a previous life estate in another person, appointed it by way of mortgage, with a power of sale under which it was afterwards sold. Her husband became bankrupt, and after the determination of the life estate, the trustees paid the fund into court, under 10 & 11 Vict., c. 96. The purchasers thereupon presented a petition for a transfer of the fund to them. The petition was only served upon the trustees. The Court made the order, subject to a direction that it should not be drawn up for a fortnight, and that the husband's assignees should be served with notice that the fund would be transferred, if no objection were made within that period. Exp. Stutely, 1 De G. & Sm. 703.

6. A general power of appointment was given to a feme sole under a settlement of her property, with subsequent trusts in default of appointment, for herself and any future husband, and a power of appointment among children, and with a provision that her after-acquired property should be subject to the same trusts:—Held, that the power could be exercised during coverture, and that an appointment made in exercise of it after marriage in favour of the donee of the power and her husband was valid. Wood v. Wood, 10 L. R., Eq., 220; 39 L. J., Ch., 790; 18 W. R. 819; 23 L. T., N. S., 295.

7. A feme covert may make a will by virtue of a power. Where a feme covert has a power to dispose of her estate by will, the writing she leaves ought first to be propounded as a will in the Spiritual Court; and if no executor is appointed, they will grant administration to the husband, with the will annexed. Ross v. Ewer, 3 Atk. 160.

8. Power in feme covert to dispose by writing purporting to be a will, does not give it authority as one in Ecclesiastical Court, and husband must be examined to his consent before it can be proved. Henley v. Philips, 2 Atk. 48.

9. Appointment pursuant to a power good, though executed by will of a feme covert. Burnet v. Mann, 1 Ves. 156.

10. Writing, in nature of a will, by feme covert, under a power, is not a proper will, and the appointees take under the power coupled with the writing, yet it has effect of a will to three intents; the words have the same liberal construction; it is ambulatory until testator's death, whom appointee might survive and appointee can take only from testatrix's death. Southby v. Stonehouse, 2 Ves. 612.

11. If a wife has a power to dispose of money in the life of her husband, she may dispose of it by a writing in nature of a will, though not so provided. Sawyer v. Bletsoe, 2 Vern. 329.

A man settles land of 6*s.* per annum to the use of himself for life, then to his wife for life, and agrees she shall hold the land until 100*l.* shall be paid by his heir to her executors, etc. She, by a writing purporting to be her will, disposes of this 100*l.*, and dies in the lifetime of her husband. A good appointment in equity. Id. 244.

Feme covert may, in life of husband, dispose of money laid up out of her separate maintenance. Ib.

12. A woman, by marriage articles, reserves a power of disposing of her present or any future estate, real or personal, by deed or will; a devise is a good execution of her power, the legal estate being in trustees. Wright v. Englefield, Ambl. 468; 2 Eden. 239.

13. A devise of real estate to trustees for a married woman for her sole and separate use in fee gives her the same power of disposition by deed or will over the equitable fee as if she were a feme sole. Taylor v. Meads, 11 Jur., N. S., 166; 13 W. R. 394; 34 L. J., Ch., 203; 5

N. R. 348; 12 L. T., N. S., 6; 4 De G. J. & Sm. 597. Reversing 10 Jur., N. S., 1012; 12 W. R. 846; 10 L. T., N. S., 475; 4 N. R. 203.

1. The 7 Will. 4 and 1 Vict., c. 26, s. 8, which provides that no will of a married woman shall be valid, except such as might be made before the Act, is intended as a qualification of s. 3, and has for its purpose the preservation of a married woman's general incapacity to devise, not the withdrawal of a married woman's will from the law as constituted by the 7 Will. 4 and 1 Vict., c. 26. Thomas v. Jones, 2 John. & H. 475; 8 Jur., N. S., 1124; 31 L. J., Ch., 732; 10 W. R. 853; 7 L. T., N. S., 154; 1 N. R. 138. Affirmed 1 De G. J. & Sm. 63; 9 Jur., N. S., 161; 32 L. J., Ch., 139; 7 L. T., N. S., 610.

Consequently the rule of law that a general devise by a will executed since the statute operates as an execution of a power which came to the devisor after the date of the will (7 Will. 4 and 1 Vict., c. 26, ss. 24, 27), operates, whether the devisor be a man or a married woman devising under a power. Ib.

2. The Wills Act, 7 Will. 4 and 1 Vict., c. 26, does not enlarge the testamentary capacity of a married woman, but enlarges the subject-matter over which she, having testamentary capacity, can operate by will. Noble v. Willcock, 8 L. R., Ch., 778; 42 L. J., Ch., 681; 21 W. R. 711; 29 L. T., N. S., 194. Reversing 42 L. J., Ch., 321; 21 W. R. 353. Affirmed 7 L. R., H. L., 580; 44 L. J., Ch., 345; 23 W. R. 809; 32 L. T., N. S., 419.

A wife having separate estate, and having under her marriage settlement a power of appointment in the event of her dying in the lifetime of her husband, made a will with the assent of her husband, and survived her husband:—Held, that though the will passed the separate estate, it did not execute the power of appointment, nor pass property acquired by the wife after the death of her husband. Ib.

The death of a husband operates as a revocation of his assent to the will of his wife. Ib.

3. By a marriage settlement personal property was assigned to trustees to pay the income to the wife for her separate use for life, without power of anticipation, and after her death, in case her husband should survive, to pay him so much of the income as she should by deed or will appoint for his life, and subject thereto for the children of the marriage; and in case there should be no children, then upon trust, in case the wife should survive her husband, for her, her executors, administrators, and assigns, for her sole and separate use; but if she should not survive her husband, then for such of her relations as she should, notwithstanding coverture, by deed or will appoint. The wife made a will in exercise of the power during coverture, and survived her husband without having had issue of the marriage:—Held, that the will, made during coverture, was a good disposition of all the property. Bishop v. Wall, 3 L. R., Ch. D., 194; 45 L. J., Ch., 194; 25 W. R. 93.

(b) By Devise or Bequest in General Terms.

4. Testator gave 1,000*l.* stock to a married woman for her separate use, and whenever she should die, to be absolutely in her own power to dispose of, by will or writing purporting to be her will, to any person or persons, purpose or purposes, she should think proper, but in case of failure of any such disposition or appointment to go over; this is not a power, but an absolute gift, qualified only to exclude the husband, upon the death of his wife; therefore it passed by general words in her will. Hales v. Margerum, 3 Ves. 299.

5. A married woman, by her will, appointed and devised certain property and all other "hereditaments (if any) which she had any power to appoint or devise." She afterwards, when a widow, by codicil confirmed the will:—Held, that the will, as confirmed, only passed such hereditaments as were subject to her power. Du Hourmelin v. Sheldon, 19 Beav. 389.

6. A testatrix having by her marriage settlement power by will or deed to appoint certain funds, but it not appearing that she was possessed of any other property, by her will, dated in 1822, not referring in terms to the power, gave "all her property and estate whatsoever and wheresoever, and of what nature, kind, and quality soever the same might be," to her husband, his executors, administrators, and assigns, for his and their own use and benefit absolutely:—Held, an execution of the power. Att.-Gen. v. Wilkinson, 2 L. R., Eq., 817; 14 W. R. 910; 14 L. T., N. S., 725; 12 Jur., N. S., 593.

Semble, the onus probandi in cases where a question arises whether a general bequest operates as an exercise of a power, is not upon the party who alleges that there is no property on which the bequest can operate except that subject to the power, but upon the party who seeks to show that the bequest does not operate as an exercise of the power. Ib.

7. A will by feme covert, containing a devise of all the property, real and personal, of which the testatrix was possessed, and of all her reversionary interest in any property or properties:—Held, to be a good execution of a power given by settlement to the wife to appoint freehold estates in default of issue of the marriage, and subject to the life interest of the husband. Curteis v. Kenrick, 9 Sim. 443; 4 Jur. 934. See S. C. 3 Mees. & Welsb. 461.

8. If a married woman having a testamentary power of appointment makes a will, it must be intended to be an exercise of the power, though it contains no reference to it. Churchill v. Dibben, 9 Sim. 447. n.

9. A married woman, having freehold estates which were settled on her marriage to her separate use, with a testamentary power of appointment over them, made a will, by which, without referring to the power, she disposed of certain of the estates nominatim, and then gave all the rest of her goods, chattels, estate, and estates to R. C.:—Held, that the residuary clause was a good execution of the power as to all the estates not previously mentioned. Ib.

10. By a marriage settlement, power was given to the wife, if the husband survived her, to dispose by will, immediately, of 3,000*l.*, part of certain funds, and, after the husband's death, of the residue of the funds; powers were also given to her to dispose, by will, of certain household furniture, and there was a covenant by the husband that she should have power to dispose, by will, of certain shares, of her jewels, and of her savings. She died in her husband's lifetime. By her will expressed to be by virtue of the power and authority of the settlement, after reciting that she had power to dispose of 3,000*l.*, she gave certain legacies and annuities. She then disposed of the shares and of certain jewels, and then gave the household furniture. She then directed, appointed, gave, and bequeathed all the rest, residue, and remainder of her moneys and of her personal estate, after payment of debts and funeral expenses, to certain persons: —Held, that the will operated as an execution of her power as to the residue of the funds. Harvey v. Stracey, 1 Drew. 73; 16 Jur. 771; 22 L. J., N. S., Ch., 23.

1. A married lady, having power under her settlement to dispose of real and personal property to which her husband was entitled for his life, and her husband having agreed subsequently to the marriage that certain other personal property should be disposed of by her in such manner as she thought proper, made a will, commencing as follows:—"I, Ann B., the wife of W. B., by the authority of my marriage articles, do make this my last will and testament: whereas my husband is entitled to the whole of the rents and profits of my estates, both real and personal, during his life, from and after the decease of myself and my husband I do hereby give," etc. The testator then proceeded to dispose of the property comprised in her settlement, and after appointing executors she gave all the rest, residue, and remainder of her property, both real and personal, to G. H.:—Held, that the will was an appointment of the property comprised in the post-nuptial agreement as well as of that comprised in the settlement. Harrington v. Harrington, 13 Sim. 318; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 354.

2. A married woman having power to dispose of property, by her will, executed as required by the power, but not referring to it, and gave to her husband all the property which she might die possessed of, or have in reversion or expectation:—Held, not to be an execution of the power. Lempriere v. Valpy, 5 Sim. 188.

3. A married woman having power to appoint leaseholds and stock, by her will, executed and attested as required by the power, but not referring to it, gives to her husband the whole of her property, both real and personal, and whatsoever she might possess at her decease:—Held, not to be an execution of the power. Lovell v. Knight, 3 Sim. 275; 8 L. J., Ch., 44. Affirmed 1 L. J., N. S., Ch., 47.

4. A feme covert having a limited testamentary power of appointment over personalty, made her will in 1848, whereby, without referring either to her power, or to the property subject to it, she professed to dispose "of the property and income I am now or may become possessed of," and she then gave "her property" to her husband and her children. She died in 1854, at which time she had (independently of the property subject to the power) 93*l.* in arrears of income, and a contingent reversionary interest in some trust moneys:—Held, that the will did not operate as an execution of the power. The decision of Lovell v. Knight (3 Sim. 275) followed. Evans v. Evans, 23 Beav. 1; 3 Jur., N. S., 7; 26 L. J., Ch., 193.

5. A will must be taken to be an execution of a power, where the words of it would, otherwise, have nothing to operate upon. Shelford v. Acland, 23 Beav. 10; 3 Jur., N. S., 8; 26 L. J., Ch., 144; 5 W. R. 170.

A married woman, donee of a power which could be exercised only during coverture, made her will in these terms: "I do by this my will give to T. S. 2,600*l.*" This sum was about the value of the fund over which she had a power. She had no other property in her own right: —Held, to be a valid execution of the power. Ib.

6. The 27th section of the 7 Will. 4 and 1 Vict., c. 26, applies to married women having testamentary powers of appointment exercisable during coverture, equally with persons sui juris. Bernard v. Minshull, 1 Johns. 276; 5 Jur., N. S., 931; 28 L. J., Ch., 649.

Under the 27th section, a general bequest by a married woman, will include property over which she has a power of appointment. Ib.

7. A testatrix, having under the will of her husband a testamentary power to appoint to any one or more of his children property, which, in default of appointment, was to go upon trust for all his children equally, and under her marriage settlement a general power of appointment over other property, by her will, which was expressed to be made in pursuance of every power, authority, direction, estate, or interest in any wise enabling her in that behalf, made an invalid appointment of a part of such first-mentioned property, and then proceeded to appoint, devise, and bequeath all her real and personal estate not thereinbefore specifically and absolutely appointed and bequeathed, unto and to the use of her daughter absolutely for her own sole and separate use:—Held, that all the property over which she had any power of appointment, whether under the settlement or under the will, was absolutely and well appointed to her daughter. Wallinger v. Wallinger, 18 W. R. 274; 22 L. T., N. S., 259.

8. A feme sole having a limited power of appointment, made her will, whereby, after making certain specific bequests of jewellery without referring either to the power or to the property subject to it, she "bequeathed the residue of her personal estate" amongst certain persons, all of whom (except one) were objects of the power. At the time of her death, she had (independently of the property subject to the power) the jewellery specifically bequeathed, and a reversionary interest in some trust moneys:—Held, that the will did not operate as an execution of the power. Humphery v. Humphery, 36 L. T., N. S., 91.

7. Other Cases.

9. Feme covert not relieved, after husband's death, from improvident execution of power, but in this case conditional redemption allowed. Sutherland (Countess) v. Northmore, Dick. 56.

10. Where feme sole conveys stock to trustees to use of intended husband and self for life, with power to dispose of part, this power survives to wife. Horner v. Bendloes, 9 Mod. 335.

11. A married woman with an absolute power of appointment over property settled to her separate use having, by her acts, induced the

N. R. 348; 12 L. T., N. S., 6; 4 De G. J. & Sm. 597. Reversing 10 Jur., N. S., 1012; 12 W. R. 846; 10 L. T., N. S., 475; 4 N. R. 203.

1. The 7 Will. 4 and 1 Vict., c. 26, s. 8, which provides that no will of a married woman shall be valid, except such as might be made before the Act, is intended as a qualification of s. 3, and has for its purpose the preservation of a married woman's general incapacity to devise, not the withdrawal of a married woman's will from the law as constituted by the 7 Will. 4 and 1 Vict., c. 26. Thomas v. Jones, 2 John. & H. 475; 8 Jur., N. S., 1124; 31 L. J., Ch., 732; 10 W. R. 853; 7 L. T., N. S., 154; 1 N. R. 138. Affirmed 1 De G. J. & Sm. 63; 9 Jur., N. S., 161; 32 L. J., Ch., 139; 7 L. T., N. S., 610.

Consequently the rule of law that a general devise by a will executed since the statute operates as an execution of a power which came to the devisor after the date of the will (7 Will. 4 and 1 Vict., c. 26, ss. 24, 27), operates, whether the devisor be a man or a married woman devising under a power. Ib.

2. The Wills Act, 7 Will. 4 and 1 Vict., c. 26, does not enlarge the testamentary capacity of a married woman, but enlarges the subject-matter over which she, having testamentary capacity, can operate by will. Noble v. Willcock, 8 L. R., Ch., 778; 42 L. J., Ch., 681; 21 W. R. 711; 29 L. T., N. S., 194. Reversing 42 L. J., Ch., 321; 21 W. R. 353. Affirmed 7 L. R., H. L., 580; 44 L. J., Ch., 345; 23 W. R. 809; 32 L. T., N. S., 419.

A wife having separate estate, and having under her marriage settlement a power of appointment in the event of her dying in the lifetime of her husband, made a will with the assent of her husband, and survived her husband:—Held, that though the will passed the separate estate, it did not execute the power of appointment, nor pass property acquired by the wife after the death of her husband. Ib.

The death of a husband operates as a revocation of his assent to the will of his wife. Ib.

3. By a marriage settlement personal property was assigned to trustees to pay the income to the wife for her separate use for life, without power of anticipation, and after her death, in case her husband should survive, to pay him so much of the income as she should by deed or will appoint for his life, and subject thereto for the children of the marriage; and in case there should be no children, then upon trust, in case the wife should survive her husband, for her, her executors, administrators, and assigns, for her sole and separate use; but if she should not survive her husband, then for such of her relations as she should, notwithstanding coverture, by deed or will appoint. The wife made a will in exercise of the power during coverture, and survived her husband without having had issue of the marriage:—Held, that the will, made during coverture, was a good disposition of all the property. Bishop v. Wall, 3 L. R., Ch. D., 194; 45 L. J., Ch., 194; 25 W. R. 93.

Under the 27th section, a general bequest by a married woman, will include property over which she has a power of appointment. Ib.

7. A testatrix, having under the will of her husband a testamentary power to appoint to any one or more of his children property, which, in default of appointment, was to go upon trust for all his children equally, and under her marriage settlement a general power of appointment over other property, by her will, which was expressed to be made in pursuance of every power, authority, direction, estate, or interest in any wise enabling her in that behalf, made an invalid appointment of a part of such first-mentioned property, and then proceeded to appoint, devise, and bequeath all her real and personal estate not thereinbefore specifically and absolutely appointed and bequeathed, unto and to the use of her daughter absolutely for her own sole and separate use:—Held, that all the property over which she had any power of appointment, whether under the settlement or under the will, was absolutely and well appointed to her daughter. Wallinger v. Wallinger, 18 W. 10. Where feme sole conveys stock to trustees to use of intended husband and self for life, with power to dispose of part, this power survives to wife. Horner v. Bendloes, 9 Mod. 335.

11. A married woman with an absolute power of appointment over property settled to her separate use having, by her acts, induced the trustees to lend the fund, on an unauthorised security, so that it was lost, and conceiving herself unable to maintain a suit to charge the trustees for loss, executed an appointment of the fund after it had been lost in favour of her infant children, to enable them to file a bill to charge the trustees, the Court dismissed the bill. Brewer v. Swirles, 2 Sm. & G. 219; 18 Jur. 1069.

1. A feme covert was entitled to a reversionary interest in a sum of money vested in her husband and another as trustees. By deed, expressed to be made between the tenant for life of the one part and the trustees (including the husband) of the other part, the tenant for life, who alone executed the deed, declared that the trustees should hold the fund on certain modified trusts, whereby the wife's reversionary interest was made subject to her power of appointment by deed or will. The wife died, leaving her husband surviving, having appointed the reversionary interest away from her husband. The husband afterwards died, and the reversionary interest subsequently came into possession. The Court considered that, under the circumstances, the husband ought to be deemed to have acquiesced in the arrangement, and accepted the trusts for the benefit of the wife's appointees; and held that the appointees of the wife were entitled as against the representatives of the husband. Inman v. Whitley, 7 Beav. 337.

2. Subject to the life estate of her husband, a wife had the absolute power of appointing a trust fund, which, in default of appointment, was limited to her next of kin, and there was a proviso that if the husband became bankrupt the dividends should no longer be paid to him. The wife died first, and appointed the fund to her husband:—Held, that he became entitled thereto, absolutely, and had a right at once to have a transfer thereof. Neale v. Hodgson, 5 Beav. 159.

3. By a settlement, the husband and wife had a joint power of appointment over part of the property in favour of the children; the wife had, in one event, a general power to appoint by deed or will, and in another event, by will only, over the other part. The ultimate remainder, in default of issue, etc., was to the wife's heir and next of kin. The deed contained a proviso of forfeiture of the husband's interest, in case he should do, or attempt to do, any act which would prevent or hinder the wife executing her power, or prevent the property devolving on her heir. The husband and wife appointed a part of the fund nominally to a child, but really for the husband's benefit, which was set aside:—Held, that the husband's interest had not been thereby forfeited, and that the proviso pointed to the separate power of the wife and not to the joint power of husband and wife. Wade v. Hopkinson, 19 Beav. 613.

4. A husband and wife being donees of a joint power to be exercised by deed or writing, the husband drew up written instructions for a solicitor to prepare a proper deed. There was evidence from other sources of the wife's consent to the instructions, but none on the document itself; nor was there any written authority by the wife. The husband died before the draft could be prepared:—Held, that as the power required a joint authority during the coverture, the instructions could not be made to operate as a valid execution. Hawke v. Hawke, 26 W. R. 93.

X. Execution. By what Instrument.

I. By Deed. Of Power to be Executed by Deed (Formalities), 5760.
II. By Deed. Of Power to be Executed by Will, 5762.
III. By Will. Of Power to be Executed by Deed or Writing under Seal, 5762.
IV. By Will. Of Power to be Executed by Will, 5764.
V. By Two Deeds, 5767.
VI. By Other Instruments, 5767.

I. BY DEED. OF POWER TO BE EXECUTED BY DEED (FORMALITIES).

5. Where a power is reserved to be executed by deed, in the presence of three witnesses, it is by marriage settlement executed, but the deed is attested by only two; this shall be supplied. Wade v. Paget, 1 Bro. C. C. 364. For the judgment, see S. C. 1 Cox 74.

A power to be executed by writing, in the presence of three witnesses; it is executed in consideration of marriage, in the presence of two witnesses only: this defective execution shall be supplied. Id. 368.

6. Equity aids a defective execution of a power, if for a valuable consideration, and this against a remainderman, or one not claiming under the power. Cotter v. Layer, 2 P. W. 623.

Where there is a power to declare a use by writing attested by three witnesses, and such use is declared by a writing only attested by two, if for a valuable consideration equity will help it. Ib.

7. Power of appointment by deed, to be signed and sealed in the presence of witnesses: the attestation applying only to sealing and delivery, though the deed purported to be signed, sealed, and executed, it was presumed that the signature was in the presence of the witnesses. M'Queen v. Farquhar, 11 Ves. 467.

Under a power to alter uses, the new use will not arise except in the very circumstances prescribed by the contract. Id. 475.

8. Where the instrument conferring the power required it to be executed "by any deed or deeds under the respective hands and seals (of the donees), to be by them executed in the presence of and attested by two or more credible witnesses," and the form of attestation was "sealed and delivered in the presence of," nothing being said about signing:—Held, that by reason of such omission the execution was invalid. Waterman v. Smith, 9 Sim. 629; 4 Jur. 672.

9. A wife, in the event of her surviving her husband, and not having younger children, had a power to dispose of 4,000*l.* by deed or will, executed in the presence of three witnesses; and this sum was a charge on the real estate of the husband. Before her second marriage, she, by articles executed in the presence of two witnesses only, appointed 2,000*l.* out of the 4,000*l.* to be for the use of her intended husband, and the remaining 2,000*l.* she disposed of by will, but did not execute it in the presence of three witnesses:—Held, that the articles were a good appointment of the 2,000*l.* for the benefit of her second husband; for, though the appointment was inaccurately and informally expressed, yet, being executed for a valuable consideration, equity will supply the defect; but the will, under which the 2,000*l.* was given, being a voluntary disposition, and not pursuing the power, was held a void appointment, and the 2,000*l.* shall sink into the real estate. Sergeson v. Sealey, 2 Atk. 414; 9 Mod. 370.

1. By fine and deed declaring the uses, the estate of a feme covert is conveyed to a trustee, to discharge certain specified debts, and "other sums borrowed or to be borrowed by the husband and wife for the like or other purposes," and subject thereto, "to such uses as the wife should appoint by deed under hand and seal." A joint bond and warrant to confess judgment executed by husband and wife, was a good execution of the particular power given to both, or, semble, of the general power given to the wife. Dillon v. Grace, Hearn v. Cavanagh, 2 Sch. & Lef. 456.

2. Husband and wife having a joint power to appoint by formal deed over wife's estate, agree in writing to sell it. Specific performance refused, as the agreement was invalid against a married woman. Martin v. Mitchell, 2 Jac. & Walk. 425.

3. Where, on marriage, a settlement is made of the wife's property to herself for life to her separate use, with remainder as she should appoint, by any writing signed by her and attested by two witnesses, and for default of appointment to the children of the marriage, and the trustees part with the trust fund upon the joint application of the husband and wife, by letter not attested by any witness, the trustees, after the death of the wife, must make good the trust fund for the children. Hopkins v. Myall, 2 Russ. & M. 86.

4. Where a seal is required by the power, an appointment among children without seal is bad: as to supplying the want of due execution of such a power for favoured objects, quære. M'Adam v. Logan, 3 Bro. C. C. 310.

5. Held, that a stamp was equal to a seal in the execution of a power which requires sealing. Sprange v. Bernard, 2 Bro. C. C. 585.

6. A bond was vested in a trustee in trust, as to income, for a married woman, for her life, for her separate use, with remainder; as to the corpus, in trust for her issue, and in default of issue, in trust for such persons as the married woman alone, notwithstanding coverture, should, by deed or instrument in writing, to be by her sealed and delivered in the presence of, and to be attested by, two credible witnesses, appoint. The husband being indebted to his bankers on the balance of an account current, the married woman deposited the bond with the bankers, with a letter signed by her, to the effect that in consideration of the bankers paying, or having already paid, the cheques of the husband, or otherwise advancing him sums of money, she thereby guaranteed the repayment thereof; and that she deposited, as a collateral security, the bond, which she undertook to assign to the bankers on request:—Held, that the consideration was sufficient, and that the separate life interest of the wife was effectually charged; but that, the letter not having been executed and attested as required by the power, the Court would not, under the circumstances, give effect to it as an appointment. Thackwell v. Gardiner, 5 De G. & Sm. 58; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 777; 16 Jur. 588.

7. A married woman having a life estate, with power to dispose of the same in trust for such person or persons, for such estate or interests, or upon or subject to such powers, provisions, charges, and limitations as she should at any time during her life, by deed attested by two or more subscribing witnesses, or by her last will, attested by three witnesses, direct, limit, and appoint, joined her husband in executing a joint and several bond, attested by one witness only, upon which joint and several judgments were entered; and subsequently, by deed, attested as prescribed by the power, she conveyed the lands to a mortgagee, who had notice of the judgment:—Held, that as against the mortgagee, the bond was not a due execution of the power, and that the judgments did not affect the lands in the hands of the mortgagee. O'Callaghan v. Comyn, Ll. & G. temp. Plunk. 484.

8. Where, by the terms of a power, the instrument by which it is executed is to be sealed and delivered in the presence, and attested by two or more credible witnesses, it is sufficient primâ facie evidence of attestation if on the instrument there appears an indorsement to the effect that it has been sealed and delivered in the presence of two persons, although such two persons are not named as witnesses either in the body of the instrument or the attestation. Ricketts v. Loftus, 4 Y. & Coll. 519.

9. No memorandum of attestation to a deed, made in execution of a power, stating the observance of all the particulars required by the deed creating the power, is needed to establish that the power has been, as to the forms required, duly executed. Newton v. Ricketts, 9 H. L. Ca. 262; 31 L. J., Ch., 247; 7 Jur., N. S., 953; 10 W. R. 1; 5 L. T., N. S., 62. Affirming 1 John. & H. 70; 6 Jur., N. S., 976; 29 L. J., Ch., 712; 8 W. R. 389.

A power authorised a deed to be made by two persons, "under their hands and seals, in the presence of, and attested by, two witnesses." The attestation of the deed exercising the power was in these words, "signed, sealed, and delivered in the presence of" two witnesses:—Held, a sufficient attestation. Ib.

10. Under a power of sale, with a consent of parties, testified by any writing, etc., under their and his hands, etc., attested by two or more witnesses; the attestation going only to sealing and delivery:—Held, not sufficient, nor a subsequent attestation that they also signed, but a case was directed. Wright v. Wakeford, 17 Ves 454. But see Burdett v. Spilsbury, 10 Cl. & F. 340; and Vincent v. Sodor and Man

(Bishop), 4 De G. & Sm. 294; 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 433; 15 Jur. 365.

Power to be executed by a deed, signed and sealed in the presence of witness, and the deed expressed to be so executed, though the attestation appeared to be only to the sealing and delivery, signature in the presence of the witnesses presumed. Id. 458.

II. BY DEED. OF POWER TO BE EXECUTED BY WILL.

1. A bill by the heir of mortgagor for redemption, dismissed; it appearing that he was not then entitled to the equity of redemption. Testator empowered his wife to appoint an estate among her sons; and in case of her intestacy, then to be divided equally among all then alive. She appointed it, by deed, to her son A.; and afterwards, by her will (which did not take effect until after A.'s death), she confirmed all her former deeds and assignments:—Held, that the power could only be exercised by will; and that the deed and will could not be incorporated in favour of A.'s son and heir. Brown v. Chambers, Hayes 597.

2. By a marriage settlement, certain properties, to which A., the intended wife, was entitled, were settled upon the husband and wife for their lives, and for the life of the survivor, and after the decease of the survivor, to the use of the issue of the marriage; and in default of issue, to the use of such person as A. should by will appoint. There was no issue of the marriage; and, by an instrument in the form of a deed-poll, reciting the antecedent deeds, A., in pursuance of the power by the previous deed given to her, appointed, that in case she should die without issue, all the said properties should, after her decease, go to her husband absolutely. This instrument was stamped and attested as a deed, and a memorial of it was lodged in the Registry Office:—Held, that the instrument was a deed both in form and substance, and, therefore, an invalid execution of the power. Marjoribanks v. Hovenden, Dr. 11; 6 Ir. Eq. R. 238.

3. A testator bequeathed 2,000*l.* consols to trustees, upon trust to pay the interest to his daughter S., to her separate use during her life, the principal to go to her heirs, or any other she might choose to will it to. S. married, and by a deed in the Scotch form, and executed in Scotland reciting the will, she granted and assigned the 2,000*l.* consols, from and after her decease, to and in favour of her husband and his son by a former marriage:—Held, that the words "to will it," meant to dispose of it by will, and that the disposition of the fund by the deed in the Scotch form was not a valid execution of the power. Paul v. Hewetson, 2 Myl. & K. 434.

4. By Mr. and Mrs. P.'s marriage settlement, estates in Kent and other counties, the lady's property, were settled on her for life, remainder to Mr. P. for life, if she should so appoint, remainder to their children, remainder as Mrs. P., by deed, under her hand and seal attested, etc., or by her will signed and published, in the presence of three witnesses, should appoint; remainder to Mrs. P. in fee, with a power of sale, and directions for re-investing the proceeds in other estates, and in the usual security in the interim, and that upon the re-investment the uses of the settlement should cease as to the sold estates. Mrs. P., by deed, not attested as to her signature (at the foot of which she had written, without date, directions for the burial), appointed the estates, after her decease, to her husband for life, and in default of children to him in fee, and she revoked a prior deed of appointment. The estates were afterwards sold, and the proceeds invested in securities, but were never re-invested in lands, although their liability to be so was recognised by the parties. There was no issue of the marriage. Mrs. P. survived her husband, and applied part of the proceeds to her own use. At her death she was seised (exclusive of the settled property) of a mansion-house, buildings, etc., opposite to it, let to tenants, and was possessed of some personal estate, no part of which was in the name of a trustee. She devised the mansion house, with its appurtenances, and all other her real estates, to C., and bequeathed all her personal estate, whether in the name of herself or of any trustee, subject expressly to her debts and legacies, to other persons. After her death, the deed of appointment was found in her house, with the title deeds of the mansion-house, but the revoked deeds could not be found. Her debts and legacies greatly exceeded her assets:—Held, that the former deed was not a testamentary instrument, and that Mrs. P.'s receiving part of the proceeds of the settled estate was not an entry or claim within the 54 Geo. 3, c. 168, but that the statute remedied the defects of attestation; that the remaining proceeds remained as real estate, but did not pass either to the devisee or the residuary legatees in the will; that Mr. P.'s co-heirs in gavelkind were not entitled to any part, but that the whole belonged to his heir-at-law, under the appointment. Houghan v. Sandys, 2 Sim. 95; 6 L. J., Ch., 671.

5. S. made his will, containing a specific bequest of property. He subsequently settled that property, reserving to himself a power of appointment by will; after which he executed a voluntary deed, attested by one witness, by which he covenanted that his devisees and executors should, after his death, convey, assign, and pay over, all the real and personal estate in which he had any beneficial interest, or which he should then have disposed of by his will, to trustees for certain purposes:—Held, that this instrument was a pure deed, and not a will, and was valid, though voluntary, and was not a revocation of the will. Patch v. Shore, 9 Jur., N. S., 63; 32 L. J., Ch., 185; 11 W. R. 142; 7 L. T., N. S., 554; 2 Dr. & Sm. 589; 1 N. R. 157.

Held, also, that the specific bequest in the will operated in exercise of the power subsequently reserved, and that the appointed property was assets to satisfy the debt created by the voluntary deed. Ib.

III. BY WILL, OF POWER TO BE EXECUTED BY DEED OR WRITING UNDER SEAL.

6. Power to make provision for children by deed is well executed by will. Sneed v. Sneed, Ambl. 64 ; Cowp. 264 cited. Smith v. Ashton, 1 Ch. Ca. 264.

1. A wife, in the event of her surviving her husband, and not having younger children, had a power to dispose of 4,000*l.* by deed or will, executed in the presence of three witnesses ; and this sum was a charge on the real estate of the husband. Before her second marriage, she, by articles executed in the presence of two witnesses only, appointed 2,000*l.* out of the 4,000*l.* to be for the use of her intended husband, and the remaining 2,000*l.* she disposed of by will, but did not execute it in the presence of three witnesses :—Held, that the articles were a good appointment of the 2,000*l.* for the benefit of her second husband ; for, though the appointment was inaccurately and informally expressed, yet, being executed for a valuable consideration, equity will supply the defect ; but the will, under which the 2,000*l.* was given, being a voluntary disposition, and not pursuing the power, was held a void appointment, and the 2,000*l.* shall sink into the real estate. Sergeson v. Sealey, 2 Atk. 414 ; 9 Mod. 370.

2. Quære, whether a power to revoke uses "from time to time during his natural life," such revocations and re-appointment "to be sealed, signed, and delivered in the presence of, and attested by, two or more credible witnesses," can be executed by will. Edwards v. Edwards, 3 Madd. 197.

3. A power of revocation is reserved to A., by any writing under hand and seal, and of appointing new uses, by the same or any other deed. A., by his will, without taking any notice of power, devised to B. :—Held, a good execution. Roscommon v. Fowke, 6 Bro. P. C. 152.

4. Power of appointment in such shares and proportions as husband and wife should by any deed in writing direct, and well executed by appointment by the will of the husband, with a written endorsement thereon, made by the wife after his death, expressing her approbation ; nor would it have been better if the wife had ratified it at the time of the execution, it being revocable by the husband during his life. Bushell v. Bushell, 1 Sch. & Lef. 96.

5. By a deed made since the Statute of Wills, 7 Will. 4, and 1 Vict., c. 26, certain trust funds were appointed to trustees in trust for such person or persons, for such intent or intents, and chargeable with such sum or sums of money, and for such intents and purposes and in such manner in all respects as the appointor should, by any deed or deeds, writing or writings, with or without power of revocation and new appointment, to be by her sealed and delivered in the presence of, and attested by, one witness or more, direct or appoint. The appointor afterwards made her will, which was duly executed and attested according to the Statute of Wills, and thereby bequeathed part of the trust funds :—Held, that the will was writing within the terms of the power. Buckell v. Blenkhorn, 5 Hare 131.

6. Where a power of appointment is to be exercised by a writing under the hand and seal of the donee, it cannot be exercised by a will executed with only the formalities required by the 1 Vict., c. 26, because the essential requisition of the power is, that it should be exercised under hand and seal, and the statute applies to a power of which the essential question is that it should be exercised by will, and the formalities are comparatively unimportant. The reason that such a power would have been held duly exercised before the new Wills Act by a will under hand and seal was because, under the general word "writing," it was indifferent by what kind of instrument the power was exercised, provided the essential solemnities were complied with. Buckell v. Blenkhorn (5 Hare 131) not followed. West v. Ray, 1 Kay 385 ; 23 L. J., Ch., 447 ; 2 Eq. Rep. 431 ; 2 W. R. 319.

7. Held, by the Master of the Rolls, governed by the case of Buckell v. Blenkhorn (5 Hare 131), that a will, not sealed but executed according to the formalities of the last Wills Act, was a due execution of a power required to be executed by writing under hand and seal. But, held by the Lords Justices, that the title was too doubtful to force on a purchaser. Collard v. Sampson, 17 Beav. 543 ; 17 Jur. 641 ; 22 L. J., Ch., 729 ; 4 De G. M. & G. 224 ; 1 Eq. Rep. 262.

8. If a power is created, to be executed by deed or instrument in writing, it may be well executed by will. Taylor v. Meads, 4 De G. J. & S. 597.

Under a power created either before or since the Wills Act 1837, to appoint real estate by deed or will to be respectively signed, sealed, and delivered in the presence of, and attested by three credible witnesses, a will executed in manner prescribed by that statute is a good execution of the power. Ib.

But where a power was created after the Wills Act, to be executed by any instrument in writing, signed, sealed, and delivered in the presence of, and attested by, two credible witnesses :—Held, that a will duly executed in conformity with the statute, but not sealed, was not an instrument by which the power could be duly exercised. Ib.

A testator, by his will, made since 7 Will. 4, and 1 Vict., c. 26, gave real estate to trustees, upon trust for M., a married woman, her heirs and assigns, and to be conveyed by her to such person as she, notwithstanding her coverture, should direct or appoint by any instrument in writing to be by her signed, sealed, and delivered in the presence of, and attested by, two or more credible witnesses, and in default for E. M., her heirs and assigns, for her separate use. M. devised the estate to her husband by a will, duly executed in conformity with the 7 Will. 4 and 1 Vict., c. 26, but not sealed :—Held, that the power was not well executed. S. C. 11 Jur., N. S., 166 ; 34 L. J., Ch., 203 ; 13 W. R. 394 ; 5 N. R. 348 ; 12 L. T., N. S., 6. Reversing 10 Jur., N. S., 1012 ; 12 W. R. 846 ; 10 L. T., N. S., 475 ; 4 N. R. 203.

Held, also, that the equitable fee to which, in default of appointment, she was entitled to her separate use, was well devised by her will. Ib.

9. A power to appoint by an instrument in writing with formalities may be exercised by a will with those formalities. Smith v. Adkins, 41 L. J., Ch., 628 ; 20 W. R. 717 ; 27 L. T., N. S., 90 ; 14 L. R., Eq., 402.

A power given to A. to appoint by any deed or instrument in writing, with or without power of revocation, to be by her signed sealed, and delivered in the presence of two or more credible witnesses, is well exercised by an appointment by her will not expressed to be delivered, but stated in the attestation clause to be "signed, sealed, published, and acknowledged and declared to be her last will," in the presence of the attesting witnesses. S. C. 14 L. R., Eq., 402.

1. A testator bequeathed certain property to A. for life, with remainder to such persons as A. should by any deed or deeds, instrument or instruments in writing, to be by her signed, sealed, and delivered in the presence of, and attested by, two or more witnesses, appoint. A. made a will, dated after the operation of the Wills Act:—Held, that the will was an execution of the power. Turner v. Turner, 21 L. J., Ch., 843.

2. A power, to be executed by any deed or instrument in writing, with or without power of revocation, to be sealed and delivered in the presence of two or more credible witnesses, could be well executed before the 7 Will. 4 and 1 Vict., c. 26, by a will sealed and delivered in the presence of three witnesses. Orange v. Pickford, 4 Jur., N. S., 649; 27 L. J., Ch., 808; 6 W. R. 738; 4 Drew. 363.

By a marriage settlement, power was given to the wife to appoint certain real property at any time or times during her life, by any deed or instrument in writing, with or without power of revocation, to be sealed and delivered in the presence of and attested by two or more witnesses. The wife executed the power by will, dated before the 7 Will. 4 and 1 Vict., c. 26; and it was expressed in the attestation clause to be signed, sealed, published, and declared, and also sealed and delivered in the presence of and attested by three witnesses:—Held, that the power was well executed. Ib.

The will was thirty years old from the date of execution; it came from the custody of the person in whose favour it was executed:—Held, that this was sufficient evidence of the fact of due execution. Ib.

IV. BY WILL. OF POWER TO BE EXECUTED BY WILL.

1. In General, 5764.
2. Where Special Formalities Necessary, 5764.
3. By Foreign Will, 5766.

1. In General.

3. Power to appoint a use of land by deed or will; a will attested by two witnesses not a good appointment, because in such case, "by a will" must be intended such a will as is proper to dispose of land; so, though the words are, "or other writings in nature of a will." Longford v. Eyre, 1 P. W. 742.

4. Will to pass lands by virtue of a power, must be executed according to the Statute of Frauds. Marlborough (Duke) v. Godolphin, (Lord), 2 Ves. 76.

5. A trust is limited to A., his heirs and assigns, or to such as he or they may appoint: A. devises these lands by a will, attested but by two witnesses; the will void, and shall not operate as an appointment. Wagstaff v. Wagstaff, 2 P. W. 258.

6. Father tenant for life, and two sons, article to charge with a sum for younger children after father's death, as he by will duly executed should direct; he directs by will with two witnesses only: good execution of the power, nothing passing from the father; otherwise, if by owner of the estate. Jones v. Clough, 2 Ves. 365. Sed quære, see Belt's Supp. 360.

7. Will made under a power, but not duly attested, to pass real estate, a good execution of the power quoad the personalty. Duff v. Dalzell, 1 Bro. C. C. 147.

8. Power over land by deed or will "duly" executed, requires three witnesses; but where will is to operate by way of appointment, taking no effect from the statute, such defect may be cured in equity. Wilkes v. Holmes, 9 Mod. 485.

9. A. had a power to appoint "by his will, or any writing in the nature of or purporting to be his will, or any codicil thereto." On his death, the third and fourth sheets of a will were alone discovered, and which were in the handwriting of and signed by A., and were attested by two witnesses; one of them contained, in words, a perfect appointment, probate having been refused:—Held, that this was not a valid execution of the power to appoint by writing purporting to be a will. Gullan v. Grove, 26 Beav. 64.

2. Where Special Formalities Necessary.

10. Baron and feme seised in fee, in right of the feme by deed and fine, settled the premises to the use of the baron and feme for their lives, remainder to the first, etc., sons in tail, remainder to daughters in tail, remainder to the husband and wife and their heirs, with power to the baron, during the joint lives of him and his wife, by his last will, or any writing purporting to be his last will, under hand and seal attested by three witnesses, if baron dies before his wife, to charge the premises with 2,000*l.*; the like power (mutatis mutandis) to his wife if she died first, to charge the premises with the like sum: husband by will under his hand, attested by three witnesses, but not sealed, charges the premises with 2,000*l.*:—Held, void, being without a seal. Taylor v. Johnston, 2 P. W. 506. See note id. 511.

11. Wife, having a power to dispose, by will signed and sealed by her, of 300*l.* in the hands of trustees, having made a will, agreeably to the power, afterwards makes a testamentary paper, by which she gives it to her husband, but so much as shall be remaining at his death, etc., to her brother and sisters. This paper is not sealed, found annexed to the will by a wafer, and is on a stamp. His Honour held the annexation by the wafer immaterial, and that the stamp was equivalent to a seal; secondly, that it vested absolutely in her husband, and it was decreed to be paid to him, the property not being sufficiently certain to raise a trust. Sprange v. Barnard, 2 Bro. C. C. 585.

12. By settlement before marriage, 3,000*l.* stock belonging to the wife was vested in trustees, who were to transfer one moiety to such person, etc., and for such uses, etc., as she should by her last will in writing, or other writing under hand and seal, to be attested by two or more credible witnesses, appoint, etc., and for want of such appointment, etc., then in trust to transfer all such stocks to her executors or administrators. After death a paper was found in her closet of her handwriting, by which she gave different sums to different persons, but not signed or sealed by her, nor attested by witnesses. Lord H. held, that the words "under her hand and seal, to be attested by two or more credible witnesses," are referable to the will, as well as to the other writing; and for want of the ceremony of sealing and attestation by witnesses, this paper was not a good execution of the power. Ross v. Ewer, 3 Atk. 156.

1. Quære, whether power given to be executed by will "signed and published in presence of, and attested by, two or more credible witnesses," is executed by will, signed by testatrix, and attested generally: "witness A. B. and C. D.":—Held, not, by Court of C. P., 2 Madd. 156. Moodie v. Reid, 1 Madd. 516.

2. Power to A. to dispose of estate by will duly executed and attested, and in default of appointment, to A.'s executorsor administrators to their own benefit; will not signed, sealed, nor attested:—Held, no execution of power, and no executor being named in such will, A.'s administratrix entitled beneficially. Sanders v. Franks, 2 Madd. 147.

3. Where power was to be executed by will, signed and published in the presence of and attested by three witnesses:—Held, that a will concluding with this declaration, "this is my last will and testament," and expressed to be signed by the testatrix in the presence of the three attesting witnesses, was not a good appointment, because the publication was not attested. Stanhope v. Keir, 2 Sim. & S. 37; 2 L. J., Ch., 166.

4. A power over personal property was required to be executed by a will signed and published in the presence of, and attested by, two witnesses. The donee professed to exercise the power by a will which was signed by her, and she acknowledged her signature to the two witnesses, but did not sign it in their presence, and the witnesses at different times signed an attestation that the testatrix had signed and delivered the will in their presence:—Held, that though delivery was equivalent to publication, the power was not well exercised. Simeon v. Simeon, 4 Sim. 555.

5. Where a power was to be executed by deed or by will, signed and published by donee in the presence of and attested by two credible witnesses, a will expressed to be signed and sealed only, omitting the word published, and attested by three witnesses, was held to be a good execution. Mackinley v. Sison, 8 Sim. 561; 1 Jur. 558.

And where the property subject to the power was stock in the 3 per cents., and the donee, who had no other stock, gave legacies to be paid out of the moneys invested in her name in the 4 per cents.:—Held, that this was an appointment of the 3 per cents. Ib.

6. A power, to be executed by writing under the hand and seal of the donee, attested by two witnesses, or by will, signed, etc., in the presence of three witnesses:—Held, not to be executed by will signed and sealed in the presence of two witnesses, the testator having himself drawn the distinction between testamentary and other writings. Bainbridge v. Smith, 8 Sim. 86; 5 L. T., N. S., Ch., 300.

7. A power to appoint by deed or will "signed, sealed, and delivered," is well executed by a will expressed to be "signed, sealed, published, and declared." Mason v. Heywood, 7 L. J., N. S., Ch., 145.

8. A married woman, having power, under her marriage settlement, to dispose of personal estate by a will to be signed and published by her in the presence of two or more credible witnesses, made her will in pursuance of the power, and signed her name at the foot of it. Then followed the signatures of the witnesses, and below those signatures was a memorandum, in the handwriting of the testatrix, to the effect that the will had been signed and sealed by her in the presence of the above three witnesses. Upon the examination of the witnesses after the death of the testatrix, two of them deposed to the testatrix having signed the will in the presence of all the witnesses, but the third stated her belief that the will had been signed before the witnesses entered the room:—Held, that coupling the memorandum with the testimony of the witnesses, there was sufficient evidence of signing in the presence of the witnesses, or two of them, to satisfy the requisition of the power in that respect:—Held, also, that the testatrix calling the witnesses to attest her will, sealing it, and declaring it to be her act (which circumstances were given in evidence), thereby published her will within the meaning of the power:—Held, further, that as no attestation clause was required by the power, the omission of any statement as to publication in the memorandum (considered as an attestation clause) was immaterial:—Held, therefore, under all the circumstances of the case, that the will was a due execution of the power. Where an attestation clause is not required, the mere circumstance that there is an attestation clause specifying certain things, does not exclude evidence that other things were done besides those which are attested. Warren v. Postlethwaite, 2 Colly. 108; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 422; 9 Jur. 721.

9. By a marriage settlement, a freehold estate, held for lives, was limited, after the death of the husband, to the use of such persons as married lady, notwithstanding coverture, should, by will, "to be by her signed and published in the presence of and attested by" two witnesses, appoint. The lady, by will, devised "the estate comprised in the said settlement," after her husband's death, to certain persons, and signed and sealed the will, which purported to be "signed and sealed" in the presence of "two witnesses":—Held, that a will cannot be made without being published, that it is not necessary to mention the word "published" in the attestation, and that the power was validly executed. Vincent v. Sodor and Man (Bishop), 4 De G. & Sm. 294; 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 433; 15 Jur. 365. And see S. C. at law 5 Exch. 683.

Semble, that Wright v. Wakeford (17 Ves. 454) cannot be considered to be in force since Burdett v. Spilsbury (10 Cl. & F. 340). Ib.

10. A will, in order to be a good exercise of a power, was required to be signed and published by the donee in the presence of and attested by two or more credible witnesses. The donee made a will, which was signed by him, and was attested thus: "We the undersigned attest to have seen the above testator sign the above will":—Held, that that clause was in effect an attestation to the publication as well as the signature of the will, and, consequently, that the power was well exercised. Bartholomew v. Harris, 15 Sim. 78; 15 L. J., N. S., Ch., 106.

1. Power to appoint by will, "to be signed and published by testator in the presence of and attested by three or more credible witnesses." Testator made and published his will, which was signed by him in the presence of and attested by the three witnesses; but the attestation took no notice of the publication:—Held, that the power was well executed. Re Wrey's Trust, 17 Sim. 201; 19 L. J., Ch., 183.

2. By a settlement of 1813, stock was settled upon trust, in the events which happened, for such persons as a married woman should, during and notwithstanding coverture (among other modes), by her last will and testament in writing, or any writing purporting to be or in the nature of a will, to be by her duly signed, sealed, and delivered, in the presence of, and to be attested by, two or more credible witnesses, give, direct, limit, and appoint. The husband of the donee died in 1819, and the donee in 1840. After the death of the donee of the power, a writing was found, in the form of a letter, and sealed on the outside only, purporting to bear date August 20th, 1816, and to be made in execution of the power, and concluding thus: "As witness my hand and seal," with a signature purporting to be that of the donee, and two other names in other handwritings, but with no memorandum of attestation. On a reference to the Master, in 1847, as to the form and manner of the execution of this paper, no evidence could be produced but such as was afforded by the document:—Held, that the document was not shown to be a due execution of the power. Burnham v. Bennett, 1 De G. & Sm. 513.

Effect of Grant of Probate.] 3. Where, in a marriage settlement, a power of appointment by will, signed, sealed, published, and declared, in the presence of two witnesses, is given to the wife, notwithstanding her coverture, and an instrument, afterwards executed by the wife, is proved as a will, this Court is concluded by the decision of the Ecclesiastical Court, that the instrument propounded is a will, and is bound to consider it as a valid execution of the power, if the instrument be proved in this court to have been executed with the formalities prescribed by the power. Douglas v. Cooper, 3 Myl. & K. 378.

4. The Prerogative Court refused probate to a will of a feme covert, made in pursuance of a power, because it was, upon the face of it, not executed according to the requisites of the power:—Held, that such will was entitled to probate, the Ecclesiastical Courts having no jurisdiction to inquire as to the due execution of the power, but simply to grant probate, leaving it to a court of equity to determine the question of the due execution of the power. Barnes v. Vincent, 5 Moo. P. C. 201.

5. A married woman, having a power to appoint a sum of money by will, or by any writing in the nature thereof, signed, sealed, and published in the presence of two witnesses, by her will made in 1837, and signed in the presence of two witnesses, but not sealed, assumed to appoint the sum in question and other property, and nominated an executor, who proved her will in the Diocesan Court. The husband survived the wife, and after his death his representative obtained letters of the estate of the wife from the Prerogative Court, and procured the Diocesan Court to recall the grant of probate to the executor of the wife, so far as related to the sum in question. In a suit by the appointee of the wife against the representative of the husband, and the trustees of the fund:—Held, that the Court could not treat the probate of the Diocesan Court, which excluded from the grant the sum in question, as probate of a testamentary instrument executing the power, and that a probate sufficient to cover the sum in question was necessary in order to enable the party claiming under the appointment to sustain the suit. Whether in such case, if the party claiming under the appointment, by appealing from the Court of Probate, had shown that the probate had been refused by the Court of ultimate jurisdiction in such cases, upon principles not recognised in this court, this Court would consider the question of the execution of the power independently of the probate, quære. Goldsworthy v. Crossley, 4 Hare 140.

3. By Foreign Will.

6. A will, disposing of personal estate, situate in this country, made in pursuance of a power of appointment, and executed in compliance with the requisites of the power, is entitled to probate, though not executed according to the testamentary law of the domicil of the party making it. Tatnall v. Hankey, 2 Moo. P. C. 342.

7. An appointment of personal estate in England, made by a person who died domiciled abroad, by a will not attested as required by the law of England, but valid according to the law of the country of the testator's domicil, and consequently admitted to probate in England, is a valid execution of a power, created, by an English will, to appoint by will duly executed. D'Huart v. Harkness, 11 Jur., N. S., 633; 34 L. J., Ch., 311; 13 W. R. 513; 5 N. R. 440.

Personal property was held, under an English will, in trust for such person as an English lady should by her last writing duly executed appoint. She afterwards married a Frenchman, and died domiciled in France, having appointed the property by an unattested will, valid according to the law of her domicil, and admitted to probate in this country:—Held, that this will was a valid execution of the power. S. C. nom. De Huarte v. Harkness, 34 Beav. 324.

8. A testamentary instrument, signed, but invalid for want of attestation, is not a good execution of a power to appoint by writing signed or by will. Re Daly, 25 Beav. 456; 4 Jur. N. S., 525; 27 L. J., Ch., 751; 6 W. R. 525.

A married woman had power to appoint a fund by writing under her hand or by will, "notwithstanding her coverture, and as if she were sole and unmarried." Ib.

For thirty years previous to and up to the time of her death she resided in Paris separate from her husband, but there was no legal divorce or separation. Her husband was domiciled in England. She disposed of the fund by testamentary papers, valid according to the law of France, but not witnessed so as to be valid in this country:—Held, not to be a good execution of the power, either as a will or as a writing under her hand. Ib.

V. BY TWO DEEDS.

1. Two deeds, though executed at an interval of nine years from each other, may be treated as constituting one disposition. And what is done under a power of appointment is to be referred to the deed creating the power. Braybrooke (Lord) v. Att.-Gen., 9 H. L. Ca. 150.

2. Property was settled, subject to an estate for life to the parents, to the use of all and every the child and children of the marriage, as the parents should by deed appoint, and in default equally. There were nine children, and one-eighth was duly appointed to one of such children, who afterwards died. After the death of four of the other children, the remaining seven-eighths were appointed to the surviving four children:—Held, that this appointment was good; and, secondly, that the property having been appointed by two deeds, formed no objection to the due execution of the power. Colston v. Pemberton, 5 L. J., N. S., Ch., 181.

VI. BY OTHER INSTRUMENTS.

1. By Covenants or Agreements to Execute, 5767.
2. By Recitals, 5769.
3. By Transfer of Stock, 5770.
4. Other Cases, 5771.

1. By Covenants or Agreements to Execute.

3. H. settled lands on himself and wife for life, remainder to his son in tail, with a covenant to raise 500*l.* apiece to his younger children, to be raised and paid as he should appoint. He died without making any appointment, and left several younger children. This covenant is a charge on the land, and shall bind the remainder in tail, and is an execution of the power of appointment. Sarth or Garth v. Blanfrey, Gilb. Eq. Rep. 166.

4. By a marriage settlement of 1791, estates at B. were charged with 10,000*l.* for portions of the children of the marriage in equal shares, and power was given to substitute other estates of equal value for those charged. In 1811 the settlor covenanted to charge estates at H., as soon as they were disencumbered, in place of the estates at B., with 10,000*l.* for portions, as stipulated by the settlement, and with 30,000*l.* for the younger children, in such shares as settlor should appoint. The estates at H. were afterwards conveyed to trustees for the purpose, among other things, of raising the 10,000*l.*, and also of raising the 30,000*l.* for all the younger children, excluding J., the eldest:—Held, that the power contained in the deed of 1811 was thereby completely executed, and that the younger children who were then living were entitled to the 30,000*l.* in equal shares. Armytage v. Armytage, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 461; 6 Jur. 790.

5. J. A. devised his estates to R. A. for life, remainder to his nephew G. A. for life, remainders over, and declared that it should be lawful for G. A., when and as he should be in possession of the estates, by any deed, to grant to the use of any woman whom he might marry, for her life, an annual sum, by way of rent-charge (as a jointure, and in lieu of dower), not exceeding 30*l.* for every 1,000*l.* which he should receive with such wife as her portion, so that such jointure should not exceed 300*l.* per annum; and the portion to be received was to be settled for the benefit of younger children. Upon the death of the testator, R. A. became tenant for life, and entered into possession of the estates. In his lifetime a marriage was agreed upon between G. A. and E., whose fortune of 10,000*l.* was vested in trustees for the benefit of the husband for life, with remainder to the wife for life, with remainder to the younger children, and in default, to the survivor of the husband and wife; and G. A. covenanted that if he should come into or be entitled to the possession of the estates, he would grant, limit, and appoint to the use of E. the annual sum of 300*l.* There was no issue of the marriage. R. A. died, and G. A. succeeded to the estates, and executed the deed of appointment. Upon the death of G. A. in 1854 the defendant entered into possession of the estates, and subsequently objected to pay the rent-charge, on the ground that E. had become entitled to the 10,000*l.* settled on her marriage, and that G. A. was, when he came into possession of the estates, and up to the time of his death, of unsound mind, and incapable of performing any legal act; but:—Held, that the operation of the covenant was independent of any subsequent mental incapacity of the covenantor, and that the estates were bound by the covenant. Affleck v. Affleck, 3 Jur., N. S., 316; 26 L. J., Ch., 358; 5 W. R. 525; 3 Sm. & G. 394.

6. Where a testator bequeathed a share of property upon certain trusts, and amongst them upon such trusts as one should appoint by deed or will, "after attaining the age of twenty-five years and not before;" and the donee of the power, on reaching the age of twenty-three, entered into a covenant to exercise the power on her reaching the prescribed age, which age she reached, but died without exercising the power:—Held, that the covenant was an equitable exercise of the power. Johnson v. Touchet, 16 W. R. 71; 17 L. T., N. S., 191; 37 L. J., Ch., 25.

7. A bill was pending to enable the Corporation to construct a new street: the Metropolitan Railway Act 1862, passed in the same session, authorised the Metropolitan Railway Company, in the event of the bill becoming law, to buy any lands which the Corporation might take: the bill did become law, under the title of The Metropolitan Meat and Poultry Market Act 1862, incorporating the provisions of the London City Improvement Act 1847, which authorised the Corporation to take and use any lands which they might deem necessary and expedient. On the eve of the bill receiving the Royal assent, the Corporation agreed with the company that, if the bill passed, they would take certain scheduled lands, and then re-sell them to the company:—Held, by the Lords Justices, reversing the decision of the V.-Ch. Wood, that the Corporation had in effect incapacitated themselves from forming a just judgment as between themselves and the owner of the scheduled lands, and that consequently their agreement with the company was improper. Semble, per Wood, V.-Ch. (p. 422), that, if such agreement had been entered into subsequently to the passing of the Act, the corporation would not have been thereby incapacitated from exercising the powers of the Act. Galloway v. London (Mayor), 4 N. R. 77, 422; 10 Jur., N. S., 552; 12 W. R. 891; 10 L. T., N. S., 439.

1. By a marriage settlement made in 1831, the plaintiff assigned all the personal estate to which she then was, or to which she or her intended husband in her right might during their intended coverture become, entitled, whether in possession or expectancy, to trustees upon the trusts of the settlement. The father of the plaintiff, by his will, gave to her, subject to a life interest in her mother, a power of appointment over his personal estate. By a deed poll made in 1844, the plaintiff appointed that after the death of her mother, which event subsequently happened, 1,000*l.* should be paid to her own separate use, and also an annuity of 100*l.* during her life, and the residue of the income of the trust property to herself for life, without power of anticipation:—Held, that the assignment made by the settlement did not amount to a covenant to execute the power; that the plaintiff was bound to bring the 1,000*l.* appointed to herself into settlement; and that the annuity of 100*l.* and remainder of the income of the property were not subject to the trusts of the settlement. Ewart v. Ewart, 1 W. R. 466; 1 Eq. Rep. 536; 11 Hare 276; 17 Jur. 1022.

2. A married woman having under a settlement a general power of appointment by will among her children over a fund, which, in default of appointment, was, after her death, to be divided among her children, covenanted by deeds with one of her sons and third parties, that (as a security for goods to be supplied by such third parties to her son upon credit) she would appoint in favour of such son not less than a certain sum out of the fund; and by the same deeds the son mortgaged to such third parties all his interest in the fund, whether by appointment, or in default of appointment. She, by her will, appointed in favour of such son the amount of the fund she had covenanted to appoint, and expressly declared that the sums she had by two deeds, being securities executed by her as a guarantee for her son and at his request, and for his sole benefit, covenanted to appoint or leave to him by her will, were to be paid by him to the parties thereto as soon as might be after her decease:—Held, that the appointment, notwithstanding the covenants in the deeds, was good. Coffin v. Cooper, 2 Dr. & Sm. 365; 34 L. J., Ch., 629; 13 W. R. 571; 12 L. T., N. S., 106; 5 N. R. 459.

3. A father, who had a limited power of appointment over a fund by will only, among his children, made a will by which he appointed a sum of 5,000*l.* to his son J., and the remainder among his other sons. A few weeks afterwards he executed a bond binding himself that his son J. should receive, either out of his own property or out of the fund subject to the power, the sum of 5,000*l.* at the least. The father died without revoking his will:—Held, that the appointment was valid. Coffin v. Cooper (2 Dr. & Sm. 365) followed. Palmer v. Locke 15 L. R., Ch. D., 294; 50 L. J., Ch., 113; 43 L. T. 454; 28 W. R. 926.

Held, also, by Brett, L. J. (dubitante Cotton, L. J.), that a bond or covenant by the donee of a limited testamentary power that he will exercise it in a particular way is entirely void. Ib.

Agreements not Under Seal.] 4. Under a settlement lands stood limited to such uses as D. should by deed appoint, and subject thereto to the use of D. and the heirs of his body, with remainders over. D. was also absolutely entitled in fee to other lands. A railway company required part both of the settled estate and of the lands to which D. was absolutely entitled. By an agreement not under seal made between D. and two of the directors of the company, after reciting that D. was owner of certain lands, part of which, being those specified in the schedule thereto, were required by the company, and that the purchase money and compensation to be paid to D. in respect of the taking of such lands had not been ascertained, and that it had been agreed to refer these matters to arbitrators and an umpire therein named, the parties thereto bound themselves to abide by the determination of the arbitrators and umpire. The schedule comprised the lands required by the company, without any distinction as to the titles under which they were held: and a single sum was awarded to D. as the purchase money for the whole thereof. Before any conveyance was executed, D. died:—Held, that the agreement operated in equity as an execution of the power of appointment in the settlement: and that the purchase money was payable to the legal personal representatives of D. as part of his personal estate. Re Dykes, 7 L. R., Eq., 337; 17 W. R. 658; 20 L. T., N. S., 292.

5. M. married E.'s daughter; after some years the daughter eloped, and then E. left by will 6,000*l.* in trust to dispose of the principal and interest as his daughter should by deed or will appoint. M. afterwards met and took possession of his wife, when she agreed that if M. would permit her to live separate, she would pay him 1,000*l.* and settle 200*l.* per annum on him for life, and articles were accordingly executed. On a bill to set aside the articles and that M. should elect to take the 200*l.* per annum: decreed, that the articles were a good execution of the power created by the will of E., and that M. was not bound to elect. Moore v. Freeman, Bunb. 205; 3 Bro. P. C. 378.

6. A testator devised his property as follows: "I give and bequeath all my property, real and personal, of whatever nature or kind wheresoevever to be found in possession, reversion, or expectancy, to which I am legally or equitably entitled, unto my dear wife, absolutely, and to be by her willed to any or either of my children in any manner suitable to her wishes, to hold to her for ever; and I appoint her executrix of this my will, revoking all other wills":—Held, that the wife took the property absolutely, but that a trust was engrafted on it for the benefit of the children who might survive her, with a power for her to appoint it among them by will, as she might think fit. Evans v. Evans, 33 L. J., Ch., 662; 12 W. R. 508; 10 L. T., N. S., 59.

The widow made a will, by which she devised part of his real estate to a son of his, in liquidation of a debt due to him from the testator; and she afterwards made an agreement with that son and another, that the latter should have the property on the terms of his paying the debt due to the former, and also stipulating for certain benefits for herself:—Held, that neither the will of the widow, nor the agreement, was an exercise of the power in the testator's will. Ib.

1. By marriage settlement it was covenanted that a term shall be vested in trustees, to secure portions for the younger children of the marriage, as the father should appoint by deed or will. On the marriage of one of his younger sons, he wrote a letter, promising to appoint a portion of the fund in his favour. On the marriage of another of his younger sons, the father made a regular appointment, by deed, in his favour:—Held, that the former, though but a contract to appoint, being prior in date, should be preferred to the subsequent regular appointment. Re Jennings, 8 Ir. Ch. R. 421.

See also XX. II. 1 post.

2. By Recitals.

2. A widow of a freeman of London who left children and died intestate, was entitled to four-ninths of his personal estate, and having, by deed, assigned over four-ninths for her separate use, in case of marriage, and to such person as she should appoint, and for want of such appointment then to her children; the widow intending to marry a second husband, by another deed, to which the husband was a party, in consideration of the intended marriage, and of a settlement made on her by him, recites that if she did not dispose of her four-ninths, the husband would be entitled thereto, and then assigns it over to trustees, in trust for the intended husband, during their joint lives, subject to her control and disposal by writing; after which she dies, without disposing of it. Decreed, the second husband is as a purchaser, and the recital, that he would be entitled to it, if the wife should not dispose of it, was a gift. Poulson v. Wellington, 2 P. W. 533.

3. The recital, in an instrument capable of operating as an execution of a power, of a past transaction, which would by itself have been inadequate, is a sufficient execution of such power. Lees v. Lees, 5 Ir. R., Eq., 549.

4. On marriage 4,000*l.* was settled in trust after the decease of the husband and wife, to pay among all and every the child and children other than an eldest or only son, at such time and in such proportions as he or she, or the survivor, should appoint by deed or will, for want of appointment among such child and children, other than, etc., equally to be divided, if but one, to that one, payable at twenty-one or marriage, or as soon after as the life interest should drop, the shares of any dying before payable in the 4,000*l.*, or so much as should not be appointed, to go to the survivors at the same time. There were four children; the marriage settlement of one recited that she was entitled to 1,000*l.* part of this fund; one-fourth of it was appointed to another on his marriage, and to a third 1,000*l.* as her share of that portion; the fourth died above twenty-one before his father, who survived his wife and died without any further appointment:—Held, that 3,000*l.* was well appointed, and that the remainder vested in all equally, according to the direction for want of appointment. Wilson v. Piggott, 2 Ves. J. 351.

5. A testator had a power to appoint a fund, and his son (A.) and grandson (B.) were objects. Having by deed appointed part to his son, he, by will, reciting that the son could, under the hotch-pot clause, be obliged to bring in the appointed part, proceeded, "and then as I make no further appointment," the whole settled fund must be equally divided between A. and B. He made A. his residuary legatee. It turned out that the hotch-pot clause did not apply:—Held, first, that the will did not operate as an appointment; and, secondly, that no case of election arose. Langslow v. Langslow, 21 Beav. 552; 2 Jur. 1057; 25 L. J., Ch., 610.

6. Decree for raising money under deed of appointment, though the only copy produced appeared not executed, upon recitals of it in two settlements as a subsisting effectual deed, and evidence from books of a deceased solicitor of charges for the preparation and execution of it. Skipworth v. Shirley, 11 Ves. 64.

7. A married woman, having a power of appointment over property, joined in a deed of compromise, in which she recited that she had previously executed a deed of appointment in favour of certain of the parties to the compromise, but had destroyed it:—Held, in a suit instituted after her death, and nearly forty years after the execution of the deed of compromise, that the recital was conclusive evidence against her personal representative of the execution and destruction of the deed of appointment. Dyne v. Costabadie, 1 W. R. 315; 1 Eq. Rep. 116.

8. By a deed of 1817, the sum of 1,000*l.* was settled on the death of A. and B., his wife, to and amongst their children, as they or the survivor should by deed or writing or will appoint. B.'s father, who had this 1,000*l.*, by his will gave her a power of appointing amongst her children by will 4,000*l.*, with a gift to her children equally in default of appointment; and he gave 1,000*l.* to be held by his trustees on the trusts of the deed of 1817. B., by her will in 1842, reciting her power over the 4,000*l.*, and her power in conjunction with her husband, to dispose of the 1,000*l.*, appointed 500*l.* to each of her eight daughters out of the two sums of 4,000*l.* and 1,000*l.* After B.'s death, a settlement was made in 1845, on the marriage of C., one of the daughters, to which A. was a party. It recited B.'s will, and that C. was, under the will and appointment therein made, entitled to 500*l.*: that A. had agreed to secure by bond and warrant a further sum in addition to, and to be settled with, the 500*l.*; and C. assigned the 500*l.* for herself, her husband, and their issue. B.'s will was afterwards declared to be an invalid appointment of both the sums of 4,000*l.* and 1,000*l.* A. died:—Held, that C.'s settlement did not operate as an execution of the power by A. as the survivor of B. over the 1,000*l.*, nor as a contract to guarantee the 500*l.*, which could be enforced against him, and which the Court would aid as a defective execution of his power. Minchin v. Minchin, 5 Ir. R., Eq., 178. Affirmed 19 W. R. 993.

3. By Transfer of Stock.

1. A gift of personal estate to the wife for life, with a direction that, after her death, one moiety thereof shall be at her entire disposal, either by will or otherwise, amounts only to an estate for life in the wife, with a power of appointment. The sale by the widow of a sum of 3 per cent. stock, which constituted nearly the whole of the residue, and the investment of the proceeds in the purchase of long annuities in her own name, does not amount to an exercise of her power. Reith v. Seymour, 4 Russ. 263; 6 L. J., Ch., 97.

2. Shares were settled on trust for such person as A. might by deed or will appoint. A. took a transfer of the shares into her own name in the ordinary way, executing the transfer under hand and seal:—Held, this amounted to an appointment by A. in her own favour. Marler v. Tommas, 43 L. J., Ch., 73; 17 L. R., Eq., 8; 22 W. R. 25.

3. By a marriage settlement moneys in the funds, moneys lent on mortgage, and other property, were assigned to trustees, upon trust to pay and transfer the same unto such persons, for such estates or interests, either absolutely or conditionally, and in such parts, shares, and proportions, manner and form, and under and subject to such powers, provisoes, etc., either for the benefit of the issue of the intended marriage, or of any other persons whomsoever, as the wife, notwithstanding her coverture, at any time or times, and from time to time, during the joint lives of herself and her husband, should, by and with the consent and approbation of her husband, testified in writing under his hand and seal, or as the wife alone, after the decease of the husband, in case she should survive him, should by any deed or writing, to be sealed and delivered by her in the presence of and attested by two or more witnesses, direct or appoint; and in default of such direction or appointment, and in the meantime, and until such direction or appointment should be made and executed, and subject thereto, and as to so much of the said trust moneys, etc., whereof no such direction or appointment should be made, upon trust to receive the annual proceeds due, and to grow due, for or in respect of the same, and pay the same to such persons as the wife, during her life, notwithstanding her coverture, and whether sole or covert, should, from time to time, by any writing or writings under her hand, direct or appoint to receive the same, and in default of such direction or appointment into the proper hands of the wife for her separate use. The moneys in the funds were transferred to the husband by virtue of powers of attorney, under the hand and seal of the wife, with the consent of the husband under his hand and seal, and attested by two witnesses; and the mortgage money was received and a receipt given by the husband and wife, and the premises reconveyed, and the receipt and reconveyance also so attested:—Held, that the powers of attorney were not directions, but were merely authorities to the bankers by the wife to assign the stock to her husband, and only enabled the banks to do for her what she might have done for herself, with their intervention. That, as the directions must follow on the authorities before the authorities could be acted on, it still remained to make the appointment after the execution of the powers of attorney, and that the transfers made subsequently to such executions, being unaccompanied by any of the formalities required by the settlement, could not have the effect of converting instruments of substitution into instruments of alienation, and could not operate as executions of the power of appointment. That the wife had no power to dispose of the trust funds otherwise than by a perfect appointment. That in order to constitute a purchaser, in whose favour a defective execution of a power will be aided in equity, there must be a consideration and an intention to purchase, either proved or to be presumed; and the maintenance of his household and establishment by the husband does not furnish such consideration to the wife. That if the transfer of a wife's legacy to herself by the husband be a consideration, it does not show any intention to purchase. That if a wife thinks proper to keep up an establishment against the wishes of the husband, what is supplied for the establishment will be a consideration for payments out of her estate on that account. That the proceeds of the settled funds having been placed to the wife's account at her banker's, and applied principally to the current expenses of the establishment of her husband and herself, by the order and direction of the wife, the husband being the agent in their application, as to moneys so applied there was a defective appointment, which ought to be aided by the Court. Hughes v. Wells, 9 Hare 749; 16 Jur. 927.

If the husband have not in any degree influenced the acts or conduct of the wife, there is no reason why (the wife having been constituted a feme sole by the settlement) her assets, including the trust funds which have become her assets by the exercise of her power, should not be bound to the same extent as the assets of any other person, not under the disability of coverture, would be bound in the same circumstances. Ib.

The rights of married women may be barred, and their estates affected, by active participation in breaches of trust, and if, their powers having been exercised by will, the trust funds become their assets, they must be liable for those breaches of trust. Semble.

But the fact of a married woman having permitted her husband to receive the trust funds, does not preclude a right to relief by her or her appointee, for that would be to defeat the purpose for which the trust was created, the protection of the wife against the husband. Ib.

4. Other Cases.

1. Devise to A., the testator's wife, for life, and then to be at her disposal, provided it be to any of his children, gives an estate for life, with a power to dispose of the fee; and where such devisee with an after taken husband did by lease and release, and fine, convey the premises to a trustee and his heir, to the use of the wife, for life, without impeachment of waste: remainder to her daughter by her first husband, and the heirs of her body; remainder to the son by the first husband and his heirs. This adjudged a good execution of the power. Tomlinson v. Dighton, 1 P. W. 149; Salk. 238; 10 Mod. 31; Com. Rep. 194.

2. Imperfect execution of power to jointure by articles completed by words of request in a codicil. Vernon v. Vernon, Ambl. 3.

3. Power executed by will, but afterwards discharged and a new power created. A subsequent codicil will not, by the mere effect of republishing the will, be an execution of the power. Holmes v. Coghill, 7 Ves. 499.

4. What shall be said to be a will, and what a deed of appointment. See Potter v. Layer, 1 Barn. K. B. 256.

5. B., by an instrument, attested by one witness, covenanted with trustees, that his devisee, or heirs, executors, or administrators, should after his death, on being satisfied that all his debts were paid, convey and assign to them all the realty and personalty to which he, or any one in trust for him, should at the time of his death be seised, possessed, or entitled for any beneficial estate or interest, or which he should then have disposed of by his will. By the same instrument the trustees declared that they would stand possessed of the property to pay debts, and convert in their discretion, and transfer the remainder to B.'s wife, if she should be living, and if not, to his next of kin:—Held, that this instrument was a valid deed, and not a will. Patch v. Shore, 9 Jur., N. S., 63; 32 L. J., Ch., 185; 7 L. T., N. S., 554; 11 W. R. 142; 1 N. R. 157; 2 Dr. & Sm. 589.

6. Where, on marriage, a settlement is made of the wife's property to herself for life to her separate use, with remainder as she should appoint, by any writing signed by her and attested by two witnesses, and for default of appointment to the children of the marriage, and the trustees part with the trust fund upon the joint application of the husband and wife, by letter not attested by any witness, the trustees, after the death of the wife, must make good the trust fund for the children. Hopkins v. Myall, 2 Russ. & M. 86.

7. Decree for raising money under deed of appointment, though the only copy produced appeared not executed, upon recitals of it in two settlements as a subsisting effectual deed, and evidence from books of a deceased solicitor of charges for the preparation and execution of it. Shipwith v. Shirley, 11 Ves. 64.

8. Deeds of appointment of a sum of 30,000*l.* for younger children's portions having been properly executed, and being found in the custody of the family solicitor:—Held, that the onus was thrown upon the party disputing them, to prove their invalidity as escrows. Rowley v. Rowley, 1 Kay 242; 18 Jur. 306; 23 L. J., Ch., 275.

9. Renewal of a college lease by tenant for life, with a power of appointment in her own name and at her expense, has not the effect of an appointment in her own favour; and therefore, by the death of the appointee in the life of the tenant, there will be a resulting trust by lapse for the representative of the author of the power. Brookman v. Hales, 2 Ves. & B. 45.

10. Bill by husband and wife, who had a power of appointment for her separate use, submitting that the subject of it should be applied in payment of his debts, by mortgage and otherwise, for which a decree passes, tantamount to an actual appointment. The heir, therefore, although in being at the time, and not made a party to the original suit, was not permitted to unravel the accounts taken under that decree, but only to surcharge and falsify. Allen v. Papworth, 1 Ves. 163. See observation on this case, 4 Ves. 138. n.; and Belt's Supp. 88.

11. A testator, excluding his son John from all share in his property, gave to his trustees and the survivor of them, and the executors and administrators of such survivor, power to give him an equal share with the other children. One only of the trustees, who were also executors, proved, and an administration suit having been instituted, John was employed under the Court, together with one of his brothers, to carry on the testator's business, and the trustee stated in a statement of facts that John in that capacity had acted to his satisfaction, and he had also made him advances out of the estate; John died:—Held, that the sole executor had power to appoint, and had well appointed, a share to John. Eaton v. Smith, 2 Beav. 236.

12. Legacy in trust to be laid out in stock, the dividends as they come due to A. for life, and after her decease to pay the principal according to her appointment by will or otherwise, with power to her to purchase with it an annuity, with the approbation of the trustees, but not to sell it. A. has an absolute power of disposition, and her bill was held a sufficient indication of her intention to take the whole, making a formal appointment or writing unnecessary. Irwin v. Farrar, 19 Ves. 86.

13. Bequests to females, some of whom were married and some single, for their separate use for their respective lives, and after their decease to such persons as they should respectively appoint, and in default of appointment to their respective executors, administrators, and assigns:—Held, that each of the legatees, whether married or unmarried women, was entitled, upon petition, without executing any formal appointment, to an immediate transfer or payment to herself of the corpus or her share of the fund. Holloway v. Clarkson, 2 Hare 521; 6 Jur. 923.

14. Money in court stood limited to a widow for life, and afterwards as she should by deed or will appoint. The Court directed payment to her, without requiring an appointment. Cambridge v. Rous, 25 Beav. 574.

1. Trust moneys settled on such trusts as the plaintiff should by deed or will appoint, ordered to be paid to the plaintiff. Watts v. Campbell, 2 Giff. 112.

2. Power of appointment among three persons, executed by a transfer of one-third to one under an order on petition, stating that the person having the power was desirous that the fund might be equally divided; that person dying without any farther execution, the Court gave the two remaining thirds respectively to another of the objects, and to the administratrix of the third, who was dead, but had survived the person having the power. Fortescue v. Gregor, 5 Ves. 553.

3. Whether an answer is such a defective execution of a power as a court of equity would make good in favour of a daughter. Carter v. Carter, Mos. 369.

4. Lands were settled to such uses as A. and B. should, by a joint deed, executed in the presence of witnesses, appoint, and, in default of appointment, to uses in strict settlement, A. and B. being the first tenants for life in succession. In 1845 the South Western Railway Company contracted with A. and B. for the sale of land, but the price was not fixed. In 1846 the company advanced part of the consideration money to them, on their joint receipt, in which it was stated that the money was "in respect of the lands, part of our estates, required for the purpose of the South Western Railway Company." Before any formal exercise of their joint power by A. and B., A died. Afterwards other parts of the settled lands were contracted to be sold to the company:—Held, first, that this was not such a contract as could be enforced against B.; secondly, that the receipt was not such a defective execution of the power as would be aided in equity. Morgan v. Milman, 16 Jur. 755. Affirmed 17 Jur. 193; 1 W. R. 134; 22 L. J., Ch., 897; 3 De G. M. & G. 24.

5. A bequest of personal property to the three trustees, A., B., and C., "upon trust to dispose of the same in whatever way A. shall, by any deed or deeds, instrument or instruments, or by his will, appoint, provided that no such deed, instrument, or will shall be taken to be an execution of the power, unless the said deed, instrument, or will be executed after my decease;" and, subject thereto, upon trust for A. for life:—Held, to be a power exercisable by any instrument in writing, whether a deed or not, if such instrument sufficiently referred to the power, or to the property subject to it, or if it made a general gift, and the appointor had no property of his own to which he could refer. Brodrick v. Brown, 1 Kay & J. 328.

A written order directed to the trustees of the fund would be a good exercise of this power. Ib.

If the donee of the power was also the sole trustee of the fund, a cheque upon a banker where the fund was lying would be a good appointment if he had no money of his own there. Ib.

So also would a letter from him, referring to the power or to the property, and accompanying a gift of money, which it stated to be in pursuance of the power or out of the property. Ib.

Various examples of this last kind of appointment. Ib.

In the case of a series of appointments of this kind, one letter stated only that the payment which it accompanied was "in fulfilment of the known wishes" of the donor of the power:—Held, that this was an ambiguity that might be explained by reference to other documents, which showed that the gift was intended to be in exercise of the power. Ib.

6. A testatrix gave her residue to A. B., her executor, in trust for such of the children or grandchildren of X. as he should think it most acceptable to, etc. The will was contested, and in answer to a letter from his proctor, requesting, in the event of his releasing his interest, the names of the persons most interested, or one of them, in order that they might appoint a proctor, and make the affidavit of scripts, A. B. stated, by name, "the children whom it is desired may benefit," and that he presumed that having thus determined, their father should make the affidavit:—Held, that this amounted to a valid app tment of the residue. Bailey v. Hughes, 19 Beav. 169.

A power to appoint personalty amongst a class may, if no formality be required, be executed by merely naming the parties to be benefited, semble. Ib.

7. By marriage settlement it was covenanted that a term shall be vested in trustees, to secure portions for the younger children of the marriage, as the father should appoint by deed or will. On the marriage of one of his younger sons, he wrote a letter, promising to appoint a portion of the fund in his favour. On the marriage of another of his younger sons, the father made a regular appointment, by deed, in his favour:—Held, that the former, though but a contract to appoint, being prior in date, should be preferred to the subsequent regular appointment. Re Jennings, 8 Ir. Ch. Rep. 421.

8. A. having a power, by deed or will, to appoint the lands of D. (which were held with other lands, and were subject to a proportioned rent of 19*l.*) to the use of such child or children of his marriage, in such shares, or the whole to one of such children, for such estates, and with such conditions, and limitations over, for the benefit of some or one of such children, and subject to such charges for the other or others of such children as he should appoint, purchased the reversion of the lands of D., and afterwards, by a settlement on the marriage of B., his eldest son, reciting that he was seised in fee of the lands of D., and that it had been agreed that an annuity, to be thereby granted and charged on the lands of D., should be assigned upon the trusts of the settlement, granted an annuity of 100*l.*, to be charged on the lands of D. for 100 years, upon trust, after the death of the survivor of A. and his wife, to pay the same to B. for life, and after his decease to C. (B.'s intended wife), so long as there should be issue of the marriage, and she should remain a widow; and after the death of the survivor, or in case C. should survive B., and there should have been no issue of the marriage, or she should marry again, in trust for the executors, etc., of A. By will, A. reciting his power, devised all his right to the lands of D. to his three sons, in trust by sale, etc., to raise a sum for his younger children:—Held, first, that the settlement was an execution of the power, and that the annuity was charged on the entire interest in the lands of D., and not on the reversion only. Irwin v. Irwin, 10 Ir. Ch. R. 29.

Held, secondly, that the settlement operated as an appointment to B., and a settlement by him on C., and that she was therefore, though not an object of the power, entitled to the annuity after B.'s death. Ib.

1. By a settlement, dated the 19th April, 1815, made on the marriage of Sir J. W. with Miss J. D., certain personal property, consisting of money in the funds and money out on mortgage, etc. (all belonging to the lady), were settled to the general appointment, by deed attested by two witnesses, of the lady herself, during the joint lives of herself and her husband, with his consent, and after his decease to her general appointment; and subject to this power, the trusts were for the lady for life, to her separate use, but without any restraint on anticipation; with remainders over. The marriage took place, and in the same year Sir J. W. made his will, bequeathing and devising all his property, real and personal, to his wife, Lady W., and making her his sole executrix. The trustees of the settlement never acted in any way previous to the institution of this suit, and the funds were never transferred into their names, but continued standing in Lady W.'s name. After the marriage, Lady W., who resided with her husband at a distance from London, executed several powers of attorney to enable her bankers in London to sell out various parts of the funds in settlement, which were sold out accordingly, and paid in to Sir J. W.'s name. The bank powers of attorney required to be executed with the same ceremonies as were required by the marriage settlement to be observed in executing the power of appointment there. Various sums of mortgage money, also in the settlement, were from time to time paid off, and the amounts paid in to his name, invested also in his name in the purchase of consols; and in this manner about 8,000*l.* worth of different stock was in 1821 standing in the name of Sir J. W., and all cheques for current expenses were drawn by Sir J. W., which, in accordance with Lady W.'s written request, were honoured by her London bankers out of her separate account. On the other hand, Sir J. W. suffered a legacy of 2,000*l.* to be received and placed to the separate account of his wife:—Held, that the power of appointment was not well exercised by Lady W. in the powers of attorney, nor by the assignments of mortgage. Hughes v. Wells, 16 Jur. 927; 9 Hare 749.

2. A testator had a power to appoint the produce of a policy on his life amongst his children, by writing or will. By will he bequeathed all his personal estate to his daughter F. By a contemporaneous writing, unattested, and headed "memorandum," he gave directions to F. as to his property, and said, "The money from the Equitable Insurance Office I would have equally divided between my daughters F. G. and A.," and it also expressed his wish that his two sons should have certain interests out of his own property:—Held, first, that he must be assumed to have known that his will did not operate on the policy fund. Proby v. Landor, 28 Beav. 504; 30 L. J., Ch., 593; 6 Jur., N. S., 1278; 9 W. R. 47.

Held, secondly, that the memorandum was an execution of the power. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that the words "I would have" were imperative, and not mere instructions to F. Ib.

Held, fourthly, that F., who was not shown to have obtained the benefits under the will, on the faith of any promise to distribute the testator's property according to the memorandum, was not bound to do so. Ib.

3. The execution of a bond, by the donee of a power in favour of the object thereof, operates as an exercise of that power. Burke v. Lambert, 15 W. R. 913.

4. A husband and wife, who jointly had a limited power of appointment over settled personalty, executed a deed purporting to appoint to persons not objects of the power. By the death of the husband, the wife became absolutely entitled to the property comprised in the settlement. She appointed a new trustee, and more than once wrote to the mother of the intended appointees about the settled property, and describing the deed of appointment as still standing. It was not shown that she knew of the invalidity of the deed of appointment:—Held, that she had sufficiently declared a trust of the settled property in favour of the intended appointees. Re Bennett, 16 W. R. 331.

5. A husband and wife being donees of a joint power to be exercised by deed or writing, the husband drew up written instructions for a solicitor to prepare a proper deed. There was evidence from other sources of the wife's consent to the instructions, but none on the document itself; nor was there any written authority by the wife. The husband died before the draft could be prepared:—Held, that, as the power required a joint authority during the coverture, the instructions could not be made to operate as a valid execution. Hawke v. Hawke, 26 W. R. 93.

6. A lady, having power to appoint a fund by deed to be sealed and delivered and attested by one witness, in January 1870 signed an unattested memorandum, stating her wish that if she died suddenly her eldest son should have the fund, and that her intention was to make it over to him legally if her life was spared. She died in March 1870, after two days' illness:—Held, that her intention to appoint the property by this memorandum was sufficiently clear, and that the Court would give effect to the memorandum as an execution of the power. Kennard v. Kennard, 42 L. J., Ch., 280; 8 L. R., Ch., 227; 21 W. R. 206; 28 L. T., N. S., 83.

7. A. having in the events that happened power to appoint funds amongst her children by deed, or by her last will in writing, or any writing purporting to be or being in the nature of her last will, or any codicil thereto, to be signed and published in the presence of, and to be tested by, two credible witnesses, died intestate; but left in an envelope, addressed to her son, an unattested memorandum (signed by herself, and dated eight years before her death), "for my son and daughters. Not having made a will, I leave this memorandum, and hope my children will be guided by it, though it is not a legal document. The (funds) I wish divided as follows":—(amongst her children, followed by bequests out of another fund, and a gift of the residue, and concluding), "this paper contains my last wishes and blessings upon my dear children, and thanks for their love to me":—Held, that this memorandum showed no intention to execute the power, and, consequently, that the Court could not remedy any defects in the execution so as to give validity to it as an appointment. Garth v. Townsend, 7 L. R., Eq., 220.

1. The donee of a power, when executing a deed of appointment, "limited and appointed," not only the lands the subject of the power, but other lands of his which were not subject thereto:—Held, that the words "limited and appointed" operated as a grant of the latter lands. MacAndrew v. Gallagher, 8 Ir. R., Eq., 490.

2. By a deed of entail certain estates were settled upon J. K. and the heirs whatsoever of his body, remainder to several successive heirs substitutes, it being declared that the eldest heir female and the descendants of her body, so often as the succession should devolve upon heirs female, should exclude all other heirs portioners; but it was to be lawful for the heir of entail in possession, so often as his apparent or presumptive heirs were females, so far to alter the destination of succession as to settle the estate upon a younger daughter in preference to an elder. W. K., the heir of entail in possession in 1837, being a bachelor and having four sisters, of whom, according to the original settlement, upon the death of W. K. without issue, the eldest would have inherited, executed a deed calling E. K. the youngest, and the heirs of her body first in succession, failing heirs of his own body. He died in 1844, a bachelor; E. K. thereupon obtained enfeoffment:—Held, that the power might properly be executed by a deed inter vivos; and might be exercised by E. K. herself when her apparent or presumptive heirs were females. Martin v. Kelso, 5 W. R. 440.

3. Under a settlement, jewels were assigned upon trust for such person as G. (a married woman) should by writing direct or appoint, and in default of such appointment, upon trust for her during her life for her separate use, and to be at her absolute disposal, and her receipt or that of the person to whom she should direct the jewels to be delivered, to be a good discharge. G., without any direction in writing, delivered the jewels as an absolute gift to V., who retained them in her possession. After the death of G. the question arose as to the validity of the gift to V.:—Held, that G. had power to dispose of her whole interest in the jewels without any direction in writing, and that under the gift and manual delivery V. was absolutely entitled to them. Farrington v. Parker, 4 L. R., Eq., 116; 16 L. T., N. S., 258.

4. A., by his will in 1809, gave his wife a power of appointment over real estate; she survived him, and in 1829 married again. On her second marriage a settlement of personalty was made for her separate use for life, with power for her to dispose of it by deed, will, or otherwise. In 1829 she made a will appointing the real estate under A.'s will, and disposing of the personalty settled on her second marriage. By a codicil made in 1830 she revoked the appointment in her will, and after appointing the real estate in a different manner bequeathed part of the personalty, settled as aforesaid, to her daughter C., who was an attesting witness to the codicil:—Held, that the gift to C. was valid. Wilkins v. Charretton, 22 W. R. 598.

5. A testator bequeathed 2,000*l.* consols to trustees, upon trust to pay the interest to his daughter S., to her separate use during her life, the principal to go to her heirs, or any other she might choose to will it to. S. married, and by a deed in the Scotch form, and executed in Scotland, reciting the will, she granted and assigned the 2,000*l.* consols, from and after her decease, to and in favour of her husband and his son by a former marriage:—Held, that the words "to will it," meant to dispose of it by will, and that the disposition of the fund by the deed in the Scotch form was not a valid execution of the power. Paul v. Hewetson, 2 Myl. & K. 434.

I. REFERENCE TO POWER. GENERAL PRINCIPLES.

6. If a person, in the execution of a power, sufficiently describes the estate he had a power to charge, the estate is bound, though there is no reference to the deed out of which the power arises. Probert v. Morgan, 1 Atk. 441.

7. A man may execute a power without reciting it; but he should mention the estate he disposes of. Exp. Caswall, 1 Atk. 559; Molton v. Hutchinson, id. 558.

8. Three powers by settlement, first to husband and wife jointly, to raise and appoint 3,000*l.*; secondly, to writing under hand and seal, and of appointing new uses, by the same or any other deed. A., by his will, without taking any notice of power, devises to B.:—Held, a good execution. Roscommon v. Fowke, 6 Bro. P. C. 158.

9. Power reserved by the owner of an estate to be construed liberally, and no occasion to refer to the power, if it is done in substance. Maddison v. Andrew, 1 Ves. 61.

1. Power attempted to be executed by invalid instruments:—Held, not executed by the general words of will containing no reference to it. M'Leroth v. Bacon, 5 Ves. 159.

2. Power of appointment not executed by will having no reference to the power or the subject of it, and the Court will not inquire into the circumstances of the property. Nannock v. Horton, 7 Ves. 391.

3. Though to effect the execution of a power by will a direct reference to the power is not necessary, the intention must distinctly point to the subject of it, as if something is included which the testator had not otherwise than under the power; and part of the will, unless applied to it, would be wholly inoperative. Bennet v. Barrow, 8 Ves. 609.

4. It is not necessary to recite an intention to execute a power, if the act can be done only by that authority, but where the act purports to pass the interest, it shall be considered so intended and not to exercise an authority. Maundrell v. Maundrell, 10 Ves. 257.

5. Power may be executed by will applying to the subject, without an express reference to the power. Bradley v. Westcott, 13 Ves. 445.

6. On the execution of a power it is not requisite to refer to a power; it is sufficient if reference be had to the subject of it. Dillon v. Dillon, 1 Ball & B. 92.

7. A general gift, to operate as an execution of a power, must either refer to the power, or to the subject of it; and a reference to part of the subject, or to some of many subjects of the power, will not be sufficient to make a will operate as an execution of the power, where there is no other indication of an intention to execute it. Hughes v. Turner, 3 Myl. & K. 666; 4 L. J., N. S., Ch., 141.

8. Although a will does not state that it is made in execution of a power, yet if it plainly refer to and comprise the subject of the power, it will be deemed a good execution. Hunloke v. Gell, 1 Russ. & M. 515.

9. To execute a power over personal estate, it is not necessary to refer to it, but there must be very clear internal evidence of the intention. Webb v. Honnor, 1 Jac. & Walk. 357.

10. A will is deemed a good execution of a power if it dispose of the subject of the power, although it does not refer to the power. The subject of the power will pass by the words of "all other my property," if it be plain, from other expressions in that will, that under these general words she considered the property under the power to be included. Walker v. Mackie, 4 Russ. 76.

11. Whether a testator intended by his will to execute a power, is to be collected from the whole instrument, and not from the force of any particular expression. In this case, the testator devised his estates, and made disposition of part of the fund to be produced by the sale of the estates, to purposes not warranted by the power; but still, upon the whole will, the Court held that he intended to execute the power. The recital of a deed is a key to the construction, where the operative art is doubtfully expressed, and not otherwise. Bailey v. Lloyd, 5 Russ. 330; 7 L. J., Ch., 98.

12. The recital of a power is not necessary to the due execution of it. Blake v. Marnell, 2 Ball. & B. 44; 4 Dow P. C. 248.

13. Where the intention of a donee of a power to pass the property comprised in the power is clearly established, the Court will give effect to the intention, even although the donee, in making the appointment, does not profess to do so in exercise of the power. Carver v. Richards, 5 Jur., N. S., 1412. And see S. C. 6 Jur., N. S., 410; 29 L. J., Ch., 357; 8 W. R. 349; 2 L. T., N. S., 161; 1 De G. F. & J. 548.

14. A marriage settlement comprised a sum of 20,000*l.* South Sea Annuities; 7,000*l.*, 3*l.* per cent. reduced, and 3,150*l.* new 4*l.* per cent.; also certain shares in a company, and 54,000 French rentes. These were settled on trust to raise an annuity of 500*l.* for the life of the wife for her separate use, subject thereto for the husband and wife for their joint lives; if the wife should predecease her husband, then on trust to raise 3,000*l.*, over which a general power of appointment was given to the wife; and as to the rest, after the death of the wife so predeceasing her husband, for him for life; and after his death, in trust for all and every or such one or more exclusively of the other or others of the relations in blood to the said Sarah Harvey (the wife) at the time of her decease, within the eighth degree of consanguinity to her, at such age, day, or time, or respective ages, days, or times; and if more than one, in such shares and proportions, and with such annual sums of money and future or executory or other trusts (such annual sums of money and future or executory or other trusts being for the benefit of the said relations in blood of the said Sarah Harvey within the degree aforesaid, or some or one of them), and in such manner as the said Sarah Harvey should, notwithstanding her coverture, by her last will and testament in writing or any codicil or codicils in writing, or any writing or writings in the nature of or purporting to be a will or codicil, to be signed and published by her in the presence of and to be attested by two or more credible witnesses, direct or appoint; and in default of such direction or appointment, and so far as any such direction or appointment should not extend, in trust for such person or persons as, under the Statute for the Distribution of the Effects of Intestates, would at the decease of the said Sarah Harvey have become entitled thereto as her next of kin in case the said Archibald Morrison (the husband) had died in her lifetime, and she had died possessed thereof his widow, and intestate. The settlement also comprised certain plate, linen, china, etc., over which a general power of appointment was given to the wife, to take effect after the death of her husband. It comprised also certain shares in a public library, and tickets of admission to a theatre, and jewellery, etc.; and, as to these, the settlement gave to the wife a general power of gift and appointment, either during her life or after her death, as well as over what she should save out of her separate income. The wife died many years before her husband. By her will she said:—"I do, by virtue of the power and authority reserved to me in and by the deed of settlement, made, etc., hereby make, publish, and declare this my last will and testament in manner and form following, that is to say." She then referred particularly to the power to dispose of 3,000*l.*, and made a disposition of a great part of it. She gave to her husband for life all the benefit of her shares in the public library, of her admission to the theatre, and of her books. After his death she disposed of these things to various persons; she disposed also of her jewels, china, and other things; and her will concluded as follows:—"And after payment of my just debts, funeral expenses, the charges of proving this my will and of carrying the trusts thereof into execution, I direct and appoint, give and bequeath, after the decease of my said husband, all the rest, residue, and remainder of my moneys and other my personal estate, of whatever description the same may be, unto and amongst all and every the daughters of my said brother, John Harvey, the said Charles Day and Louisa Day, the children of my deceased niece, and the two daughters of my said brother Charles Saville Onley, or to such of them as shall be living at my said husband's death, and to the issue of such of them as shall then happen to be dead, to be equally divided amongst them, share and share alike. But it is my will that the said Charles Day and Louisa Day, and the children of any other of my nieces who may be dead, shall only be entitled to the share in the said residue which his or her mother would have had if living at the death of my said husband. And further, it is my will that the shares of each of my said nieces of the residue of my personal estate shall be placed and continue out at interest by my surviving executor, his executors or administrators, on Government or real security during the respective lives of my said nieces; and the dividends or interest on each share, as the same shall from time to time become due, shall be paid to each of my nieces during her life, on her own receipt, for her own sole and separate use, and not to be subject to the debts or control of her present or any future husband. And as to the share of my niece Caroline Onley, I will and desire that the same shall, after her decease, be paid to all my other nieces who shall be living at the decease of the said Caroline Onley, and to the issue of such of them as shall then happen to be dead, equally share and share alike; but the issue of any deceased niece is only to be entitled to the share which his or their mother would have had if living at the decease of the said Caroline Onley; and after the death of each of my other nieces, I direct that the dividends and interest of her share shall, if she die married, be paid to her husband during his life for his own use. And I further will and direct that, after the several deceases of my said last-mentioned nieces, or their respective husbands, that the share of each of the said last-mentioned nieces shall be paid to her child, children, or grandchildren, or any other relation in blood to my said niece, in such parts and proportions, manner and form, as she may by her last will and testament, duly executed, and which she shall have power to make, notwithstanding her coverture, give and bequeath the same; and in default thereof, then unto the next of kin in blood of my said niece, according to the Statute for Distribution of Intestates' Personal Estates": —Held, first, that the will was an execution of all the powers; that is, of the power to appoint each portion of property comprised in the settlement. Secondly, that the appointment in favour of the daughters of John Harvey was not void ab initio, because it might comprise persons not living at the death of the testatrix, and within the eighth degree; nor did it become void in toto, because it did, in fact, at the time of distribution, include such persons; but that it was good pro tanto. Thirdly, that the attempted limitation to the husbands of the nieces was bad, as they were strangers; and the limitations to their children, grandchildren, or other relations in blood, was void for remoteness. Fourthly, that the attempt to cut down the estate given to the nieces, in the first instance, failing the attempted remainders over, did not go as unappointed, to the next of kin, but failed wholly, and left absolute interests subsisting in the nieces. Harvey v. Stracey, 1 Drew. 73; 16 Jur. 771; 22 L. J., N. S., Ch., 23.

1. The Court may look at surrounding circumstances, and if it can gather from them a clear intention on the part of a settlor to take property comprised in the deed out of a will of prior date, it will not hold the general devise in the will an execution of a general power to appoint by deed or will contained in the settlement. Re Ruding, 20 W. R. 936; 14 L. R., Eq., 266; 41 L. J., Ch., 665.

2. Vague and general words of reference to all powers found among words of a general gift and bequest of a testator's own property, where the words are justified by the existence of a power as to property in which he had an interest, cannot be extended to operate as an exercise of a special and limited kind over property derived from another source. Hope v. Hope, 5 Giff. 13.

Semble, that a new power over property acquired after the will requires a clear manifestation of a new intention to exercise it, and a mere republication of the will by a codicil made after the acquisition of such new power is not a sufficient manifestation of intention. Ib.

3. The donee of a power may execute it without referring to it, and without taking the slightest notice of it, provided the intention to execute the power really appears. Smith v. Adkins, 41 L. J., Ch., 628; 20 W. R. 717; 27 L. T., N. S., 90; 14 L. R., Eq., 402.

In Case of Married Woman.] See IX. III. 6 (b) ante.

II. ERROR IN REFERENCE TO POWER.

4. A testator, after reciting that under the settlement in 1819, on his second marriage, he had power to charge 5,000*l.* amongst the children of his second marriage, proceeded to appoint it. The settlement of 1819 contained no such power, but a re-settlement of 1839 contained a power to appoint that sum to his younger children:—Held, that the will was a valid execution of the power. Re Wilmot, 29 Beav. 644.

1. A testator being entitled to one-sixth of leasehold lands under the will of T. J., and having a power of appointment over another sixth under the will of C. J., both wills being nearly of the same date, devised all his property in the lands bequeathed by the will of C. J., speaking of it for purposes in common with other property, which he owned absolutely:—Held, merely a falsa demonstratio, and to apply only to the property he was entitled to under T. J.'s will. Lendrick v. Russell, 10 Ir. Eq. R. 269.

2. By articles of agreement of the 19th November, 1812, purporting to be made in contemplation of a then intended and soon after solemnised marriage, it was declared that 600*l*., portion of the wife's fortune, should be secured by the bond and warrant of her father, L. On the 19th January, 1826, L. made his last will and testament, wherein he (correctly) recited that he was tenant for life on the lands of Aggard, which, by the terms of his marriage settlement, were charged with 4,000*l*. for his daughters in such shares as he should by will or other writing appoint, and he thereby further (erroneously) recited that the sum of 600*l*. was on the marriage of his daughter charged for her on the lands, and he thereby directed the said last-mentioned sum, together with other sums amounting to 1,100*l*., to be for her, his married daughter's portion, and he then also appointed three several sums of 900*l*. each to his third, fourth, and fifth daughters, which, with sums charged on other lands, made 1,100*l*. each:—Held, that the will sufficiently indicated an intention on the part of the testator to appoint the 600*l*. to his married daughter, notwithstanding that he had not therein made any appointment to her by name. Burke v. Lambert, 15 W. R. 913.

III. WHERE SEVERAL POWERS.

3. R. P., being entitled to one-third share of real and personal estates, settled it, on her marriage, with power of appointment to herself (in events that happened) over one-third part thereof by deed or will, and over two-thirds by will, subject to the husband's life interest therein, and in default of issue of the marriage. R. P., becoming entitled to a moiety of another one-third of same estate, settled it to such uses as she should appoint, subject to the husband's life interest. There was one child of the marriage. R. P., by her will, devised, bequeathed, and appointed "all that one-third part of her real and personal estates, over which she had a disposing power," upon trust, immediately after her death to raise a sum of 500*l*.; and "as to the residue of the said one-third part, and the remaining two-third parts," she gave the same to her husband for life, remainder to her infant son, and his heirs; but in case he should die under twenty-one without issue, she directed the residue of the said one-third part to be sold, for payment of an annuity and legacies given by her will, the annuity to be payable upon the son's death, and the legacies as soon as the said one-third part could be sold; and as to the remaining two-third parts, subject to her husband's life interest, she gave and appointed them to her sister absolutely. The son survived the testatrix, and died under twenty-one without issue:—Held, first, that the appointment of the "one-third" part for payment of the annuity and legacies, extended only to one-ninth of R. P.'s original third share, and to one-third of her moiety of the other third share; secondly, that the annuity and legacies became payable on the death of the son, with interest on the legacies from that time; thirdly, that the will did not affect the husband's rights under the settlement, and no case of election was raised against him. Saward v. M'Donnell, 2 H. L. Ca. 88; 12 Jur. 685. Affirming 3 Jur. 682.

4. A testatrix, having a power of appointing a sum of 10,000*l*. secured by a term of 500 years, and having also a power of appointing the fee of the lands on which the money was secured by her will, devised her lands to A. for life, with remainder to B. in tail, and gave to A. all the residue of her personal estate:—Held, that the 10,000*l*. passed under the residuary gift of the personal estate. Clifford v. Clifford, 9 Hare 675.

5. Where husband, having, by articles, power to appoint wife's real estate, and by other articles to appoint his own real estates, by will, reciting power over his own estates, in exercise of that power, and all other powers, appointed his own real estates, and all other real estates over which he had power in trust, etc., making no mention, in any part of will, of wife's estates, or of his power over them, and expressing that all persons taking under his will should be bound by doctrine of election:—Held, wife's estate was included in appointment by will. Trollope v. Linton, 1 Sim. & S. 477; 2 L. J., Ch., 3.

6. A power to husband alone to appoint a sum of 4,000*l*., which in default of appointment was limited in a particular way, was not well executed by an appointment by husband and wife of 6,000*l*. given in lieu of the 4,000*l*. by a subsequent deed, and which 6,000*l*. was to go differently in default of appointment. Hamilton v. Royse, 2 Sch. & Lef. 315.

7. An "advancement" means that a certain portion of the fund is actually taken out of the settlement altogether, and paid over to the object of the power; but an "appointment" deals only with the reversion of the fund, leaving the previous life interests untouched. Therefore, when there are a power of advancement and a power of appointment, and the rights of the parties under the two are different (for instance with respect to hotchpot), so that the question arises which power the payment of certain sums out of the trust fund to one of the objects is to be referred to, the Court must attribute it to that power to which it is primâ facie applicable, viz., to the power of advancement. Power to appoint among children. After marriage of a daughter, settlement made to which the donees of the power and the daughter and her husband were parties, and whereby part of the fund was appointed (subject to the life estates of the donees of the power) in trust for the daughter and her husband successively for life, and afterwards for their issue:—Held, a valid appointment and settlement, not merely with respect to the daughter's life interest, but with

and authority reserved to me in and by the deed of settlement, made, etc., hereby make, publish, and declare this my last will and testament in manner and form following, that is to say." She then referred particularly to the power to dispose of 3,000*l.*, and made a disposition of a great part of it. She gave to her husband for life all the benefit of her shares in the public library, of her admission to the theatre, and of her books. After his death she disposed of these things to various persons; she disposed also of her jewels, china, and other things; and her will concluded as follows:—"And after payment of my just debts, funeral expenses, the charges of proving this my will and of carrying the trusts thereof into execution, I direct and appoint, give and bequeath, after the decease of my said husband, all the rest, residue, and remainder of my moneys and other my personal estate, of whatever description the same may be, unto and amongst all and every the daughters of my said brother, John Harvey, the said Charles Day and Louisa Day, the children of my deceased niece, and the two daughters of my said brother Charles Saville Onley, or to such of them as shall be living at my said husband's death, and to the issue of such of them as shall then happen to be dead, to be equally divided amongst them, share and share alike. But it is my will that the said Charles Day and Louisa Day, and the children of any other of my nieces who may be dead, shall only be entitled to the share in the said residue which his or her mother would have had if living at the death of my said husband. And further, it is my will that the shares of each of my said nieces of the residue of my personal estate shall be placed and continue out at interest by my surviving executor, his executors or administrators, on Government or real security during the respective lives of my said nieces; and the dividends or interest on each share, as the same shall from time to time become due, shall be paid to each of my nieces during her life, on her own receipt, for her own sole and separate use, and not to be subject to the debts or control of her present or any future husband. And as to the share of my niece Caroline Onley, I will and desire that the same shall, after her decease, be paid to all my other nieces who shall be living at the decease of the said Caroline Onley, and to the issue of such of them as shall then happen to be dead, equally share and share alike; but the issue of any deceased niece is only to be entitled to the share which his or their mother would have had if living at the decease of the said Caroline Onley; and after the death of each of my other nieces, I direct that the dividends and interest of her share shall, if she die married, be paid to her husband during his life for his own use. And I further will and direct that, after the several deceases of my said last-mentioned nieces, or their respective husbands, that the share of each of the said last-mentioned nieces shall be paid to her child, children, or grandchildren, or any other relation in blood to my said niece, in such parts and proportions, manner and form, as she may by her last will and testament, duly executed, and which she shall have power to make, notwithstanding her coverture, give and bequeath the same; and in default thereof, then unto the next of kin in blood of my said niece, according to the Statute for Distribution of Intestates' Personal Estates":—Held, first, that the will was an execution of all the powers; that is, of the power to appoint each portion of property comprised in the settlement. Secondly, that the appointment in favour of the daughters of John Harvey was not void ab initio, because it might comprise persons not living at the death of the testatrix, and within the eighth degree; nor did it become void in toto, because it did, in fact, at the time of distribution, include such persons; but that it was good pro tanto. Thirdly, that the attempted limitation to the husbands of the nieces was bad, as they were strangers; and the limitations to their children, grandchildren, or other relations in blood, was void for remoteness. Fourthly, that the attempt to cut down the estate given to the nieces, in the first instance, failing the attempted remainders over, did not go as unappointed, to the next of kin, but failed wholly, and left absolute interests subsisting in the nieces. Harvey v. Stracey, 1 Drew. 73; 16 Jur. 771; 22 L. II. ERROR IN REFERENCE TO POWER.

4. A testator, after reciting that under the settlement in 1819, on his second marriage, he had power to charge 5,000*l.* amongst the children of his second marriage, proceeded to appoint it. The settlement of 1819 contained no such power, but a re-settlement of 1839 contained a power to appoint that sum to his younger children:—Held, that the will was a valid execution of the power. Re Wilmot, 29 Beav. 644.

1. A testator being entitled to one-sixth of leasehold lands under the will of T. J., and having a power of appointment over another sixth under the will of C. III. WHERE SEVERAL POWERS.

3. R. P., being entitled to one-third share of real and personal estates, settled it, on her marriage, with power of appointment to herself (in events that happened) over one-third part thereof by deed or will, and over two-thirds by will, subject to the husband's life interest therein, and in default of issue of the marriage. R. P., becoming entitled to a moiety of another one-third of same estate, settled it to such uses as she should appoint, subject to the husband's life interest. There was one child of the marriage. R. The son survived the testatrix, and died under twenty-one without issue:—Held, first, that the appointment of the "one-third" part for payment of the annuity and legacies, extended only to one-ninth of R. L. Ca. 88; 12 Jur. 685. Affirming 3 Jur. 682.

4. A testatrix, having a power of appointing a sum of 10,000*l*. secured by a term of 500 years, and having also a power of appointing the fee of the lands on which the money was secured by her will, devised her lands to A. for life, with remainder to B. in tail, and gave to A. all the residue of her personal estate:—Held, that the 10,000*l*. passed under the residuary gift of the personal estate. Clifford v. Clifford, 9 Hare 675.

5. Where husband, having, by articles, power to appoint wife's real estate, and by other articles to appoint his own real estates, by will, reciting power over his own estates, in exercise of that power, and all other powers, appointed his own real estates, and all other real estates over which he had power in trust, etc., making no mention, in any part of will, of wife's estates, or of his power over them, and expressing that all persons taking under his will should be bound by doctrine of election:—Held, wife's estate was included in appointment by will. Trollope v. Linton, 1 Sim. & S. 477; 2 L. J., Ch., 3.

6. A power to husband alone to appoint a sum of 4,000*l*., which in default of appointment was limited in a particular way, was not well executed by an appointment by husband and wife of 6,000*l*. given in lieu of the 4,000*l*. by a subsequent deed, and which 6,000*l*. was to go differently in default of appointment. Hamilton v. Royse, 2 Sch. & Lef. 315.

7. An "advancement" means that a certain portion of the fund is actually taken out of the settlement altogether, and paid over to the object of the power; but an "appointment" deals only with the reversion of the fund, leaving the previous life interests untouched. Power to appoint among children. After marriage of a daughter, settlement made to which the donees of the power and the daughter and her husband were parties, and whereby part of the fund was appointed (subject to the life estates of the donees of the power) in trust for the daughter and her husband successively for life, and afterwards for their issue:—Held, a valid appointment and settlement, not merely with respect to the daughter's life interest, but with respect to the whole of the corpus of the fund settled. Re Gosset's Settlement, 19 Beav. 529.

1. An appointor, having various powers of appointment over certain property, executed a deed of appointment, in general terms, reciting only the power which included a particular portion of the property:—Held, that the appointment was valid only as to that particular part of the property. Cooper v. Martin, 12 Jur., N. S., 887; 15 W. R. 5; 15 L. T., N. S., 268.

A testator, by his will, gave his wife several powers of appointment by deed or will, and a power of appointment by deed or deeds, instrument or instruments in writing, sealed and delivered, over a particular estate if converted. She executed a deed of appointment in general terms, reciting only the power of appointment by "deed or deeds," etc., which included only that particular estate:—Held, that the particular estate was duly appointed, but that certain other properties, subject to the powers of appointment by deed or will, did not pass. Ib.

The same person having afterwards made a will, in which she purported to appoint the particular estate so previously appointed by deed (which was never, in fact, converted):—Held, that the will did not revoke the appointment by deed, but was entirely inoperative as to that particular estate. Ib.

IV. EVIDENCE AS TO STATE OF TESTATOR'S PROPERTY.

2. The testator having a power over 3,000*l.* originally the property of his wife, gave several legacies, and then after the death of his wife the residue to the defendant: his estate was not sufficient to pay the legacies, yet held that the will was not an execution of the power, the same not being referred to, nor anything by which an intention appeared in testator to execute it. Evidence to show the testator's own estate was insufficient for the purposes of his will without the 3,000*l.*, rejected. Andrews v. Emmot, 2 Bro. C. C. 297.

3. C., by will, gave the produce of 1,000*l.* stock to F. for life, with a power to dispose of 400*l.* thereof by writing, signed in the presence of three witnesses; and if F. made no appointment, then the 400*l.* to go to a charity; F. by will gave several legacies, and then the residue among his nearest relations:—Held, no execution of the power, and that the 400*l.* would not pass by the bequest of the residue, neither could parol evidence be admitted of the intent; decreed, the 400*l.* to go according to the will of C., the first testator. Molton v. Hutchinson, 1 Atk. 558.

4. Devise of real estate to be sold, and the produce, with the personal estate, to testator's wife for life, with power to appoint a moiety by deed or will with two or more witnesses; the estate was not sold; the wife, having no other real estate, by will with three witnesses, gave specific legacies, some described to have been her husband's, and all the rest, residue, and remainder of her estate and effects of what nature or kind soever, and whether real or personal, and all her plate, china, linen, and other utensils which she should be possessed of, interested in, or entitled to at her decease: the power is executed by the residuary clause. Evidence of conversations with the person who drew the will, to show the testatrix had no other real estate, rejected. Standen v. Standen, 2 Ves. J. 589. And see S. C. nom. Standen v. Macnab, 6 Bro. P. C. 193.

5. On a question, whether a power has been executed by a will, evidence of the state of the property is admissible, so far as it is material to the question, whether a particular part of such property is or is not described by the will; but unless the circumstances of the property, when known, are found to exclude the primary and strict sense of the words which the testator has used, such strict sense must be adhered to; and the mere probability, however strong, that the words were used in a secondary sense, does not authorise the Court so to construe them. Innes v. Sayer, 7 Hare 377; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 274; 13 Jur. 402.

A. B. was, at the date of her will, entitled for life under her marriage settlement to the dividends of a sum of consols, with a power of appointment over a portion of such consols, which in default of appointment was to go to her next of kin living at her death. She was also entitled for life, under the will of her husband, to the dividends of 10,000*l.* consols, and of various other stocks, with a power of appointment by deed or will, attested by two witnesses, over one-third part of such sums, and in default of appointment the stock was limited to other parties. By an unattested will not referring to the powers, she gave four several sums (amounting to 3,000*l.* consols), "in the 3*l.* per cent. consols," to four charities, and "the remainder in the 3*l.* per cents.," and in the other stocks in the settlement, naming them, to other parties:—Held, that the will operated as an execution of the power under the will of the husband; and also, that the words "the remainder in the 3*l.* per cents." sufficiently showed that the legacies previously given were part of a large amount of stock in that specific fund, and whether the specific stock referred to might mean stock which the testatrix might purchase between the date of her will and her death, or stock existing at the date of her will, still the gifts were specific. S. C. 3 Macn. & G. 606; 16 Jur. 21; 21 L. J., Ch., 190.

Where a gift is primâ facie specific evidence of the state of the property at the date of the will, it is admissible. Ib.

6. A., having power to appoint by will certain funds in such manner as he should think fit, he by his will, so executed and attested as required by the power, gives and bequeaths to his relations sums of money, amounting in the whole to precisely the sum of which he had the power to dispose, but without any reference or allusion in his will to the power, or any words indicative of his intention to execute it:—Held, that the will was a good execution of the power. Quære, if the Court, in deciding whether a will is a good execution of a power, can look at the state of the testator's property at the time of making his will as a guide to his intention. Lownds v. Lownds, 1 Y. & J. 445.

7. A testator having a general power over a sum in the funds, limited in default of appointment to his children, and having no other funded property, bequeaths all his personal estate, "consisting of money invested in any of the public funds, household furniture, etc." This is not an execution of the power. The circumstance of his having no other funded property is not to be adverted to, on the question, whether he was or was not executing the power. Webb v. Honnor, 1 Jac. & Walk. 352.

1. The circumstances that a testatrix had not nearly sufficient property of her own to satisfy the legacies bequeathed by her, and that the legacies added together exactly amounted to a sum over which she had a power of appointment by will:—Held, not sufficient ground for deciding that the will (executed before the Wills Act of 1837 came into operation) was a good execution of the power, there being no reference to the power in it. Davies v. Thorns, 3 De G. & Sm. 347; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 212; 13 Jur. 383.

2. M. gives to the defendant all her freehold and copyhold estates upon trust to permit E. to receive the rents, etc., during her life, and after her death to sell, and out of the produce to pay 100*l.* to such person as she should by will appoint: E. by will, without reference to the power, gives 100*l.*, and the whole of her household furniture, to the plaintiff; it was charged by the bill and not denied that the testatrix had no personal property at the time of her death besides some household furniture to very small amount in value, but no evidence was gone into, and an inquiry was asked as to the state of the property at the time of making the will, with the view of ascertaining that the testatrix must have intended the gift of the 100*l.* as in execution of her power. But the inquiry was refused, and the bill dismissed. Jones v. Tucker, 2 Meriv. 533.

No inquiry as to the quantum of personal property to determine whether gift is or is not in execution of a power, as to an inquiry whether there be anything but copyhold to answer a devise of land; the question there being whether there was anything for the will to operate upon at the time when it was made; whereas a will of personalty speaks at the death. Ib.

3. Semble, the onus probandi in cases where a question arises whether a general bequest operates as an exercise of a power, is not upon the party who alleges that there is no property on which the bequest can operate except that subject to the power, but upon the party who seeks to show that the bequest does not operate as an exercise of the power. Att.-Gen. v. Wilkinson, 12 Jur., N. S., 593; 2 L. R., Eq., 817; 14 W. R. 910; 14 L. T., N. S., 725.

4. The Court may look at surrounding circumstances, and if it can gather from them a clear intention on the part of a settlor to take property comprised in the deed out of a will of prior date, it will not hold the general devise in the will an execution of a general power to appoint by deed or will contained in the settlement. Re Ruding, 14 L. R., Eq., 266; 41 L. J., Ch., 665; 20 W. R. 936.

5. By voluntary deed A. settled property, including 1,000*l.* due to him from his son-in-law B.; such sum to be allowed to remain owing during A.'s lifetime, but not after his death, except on the terms of obtaining security by the assignment of a policy upon B.'s life; upon such trusts as A. should by will or deed appoint, and, in default of appointment, on trust to pay the interest to A. for life, and after his death on trusts for his daughters and their children, under which the interest of daughters ceased on their death without issue. By a subsequent will A. bequeathed his residuary estate on trusts for his daughters and their children, under which daughters dying without issue had power by will to appoint their shares. By a codicil, after reciting that he had advanced to B. other sums besides the 1,000*l.*, and that under the settlement and under the will, or one of them, his daughter, B.'s wife, would be entitled for her life, and their children would be entitled in remainder to a certain share in the property comprised in the settlement, A. declared that such share under the settlement or will, or either of them, should be taken to be satisfied out of the moneys owing to him by B. other than the 1,000*l.* On the day following the execution of this codicil, B. assigned to A. a policy of assurance on his life as security for 2,000*l.* then owing by him to A.:—Held, that no contrary intention had been shown within the meaning of the Wills Act, s. 27; and, accordingly, that the residuary gift in the will was an execution of the general power reserved by the settlement. Maddick v. Marks, Re Clark's Estate, 14 L. R., Ch. D., 422; 49 L. J., Ch., 586; 43 L. T. 40; 28 W. R. 753. Affirming 49 L. J., Ch., 205; 28 W. R. 342.

Held, also, that the execution of the assignment of the policy was not one of the surrounding circumstances which could be looked at for the purpose of ascertaining the testator's intention. Ib.

Whether a codicil can be read with a will for the purpose of ascertaining the intention of the testator in the will—quære. Ib.

In ascertaining whether a testator has shown an intention not to execute a general power of appointment by a residuary gift, it makes no difference whether the settlement creating the power was made by the testator himself or by a stranger. Ib.

V. WHERE WILL EXECUTED BEFORE CREATION OF POWER.

6. A., being entitled to a share of a testator's residuary estate, bequeathed all the effects due to him from the estate to his nine children. The estate was then unadministered, but it was afterwards administered, and certain debts due to it were allotted to A. as his share of the residue; after which he settled the debts in trust for himself for life, remainder in trust for his sons and daughters, or any of them, or any of their children, as he from time to time, by deed or writing, to be by him duly executed and attested, or by his will, should appoint:—Held, that, under the combined operation of the 24th and 27th sections of the late Wills Act (7 Will. 4 and 1 Vict., c. 26), the will, though made before the power was created, was a good execution of it. Stillman v. Weedon, 16 Sim. 26; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 46; 12 Jur. 992.

1. T. in 1852 bequeathed all the residue of her estate and effects, consisting of moneys at interest, shares in a company, and household furniture, to trustees, in trust for H. for life, and after his death for the children of her brothers and sisters. In 1856 T. executed a settlement in anticipation of her marriage with H., whereby 250 shares in the company, and certain money out at interest, were settled for the benefit of T. for life, with remainder to H. for life; and after the death of the survivor, in trust for all and every the person or persons, child or children, as T. should appoint; and in default, for her next of kin. The marriage took place, but H. being a married man, it was invalid:—Held, that the residuary gift in the will was a good execution of the power contained in the subsequent settlement. Cofield v. Pollard, 3 Jur., N. S., 1203; 5 W. R. 774.

2. B., by a will made in 1858, specifically devised and bequeathed freehold, copyhold, and leasehold property, and gave all other real and personal estate, of which he should die possessed or should have power to dispose, upon certain trusts. By a voluntary settlement in August 1862, B. conveyed all his freehold property upon trust, after his own death, for E. for life, with remainder as B. should by his last will or any codicil thereto, appoint, and in default of appointment in trust for E. in fee; and by the same settlement he disposed of all his leasehold and personal property. In November 1862, B., by an instrument purporting to be his last will, and not mentioning any former will, appointed under the power in the settlement an annuity to be raised out of his freehold property, and devised all his copyhold property, but made no other disposition of freehold or personal property. Probate of both wills was granted:—Held, that having regard to the terms of the power, the testator had indicated an intention that the will of 1862 alone should operate as an execution of the power, and that consequently the specific and residuary devises in the will of 1858 were not in due execution of the power. Pettinger v. Ambler, Bunn v. Pettinger, 1 L. R., Eq., 510; 14 L. T., N. S., 118; 33 Beav. 321; 35 L. J., Ch., 389.

3. In contemplation of a marriage of a lady with her deceased sister's husband, personal property belonging to her was settled, upon trust, in default of issue, for herself absolutely, if she survived her intended husband; but if she predeceased him, for such person as she should by deed or will appoint. The form of marriage was gone through between the parties. The lady, in the lifetime of the husband, made a will, in which, reciting the settlement, and the power of appointment, she confirmed the settlement, and in exercise of such power, and of all other powers enabling her in that behalf, appointed and bequeathed the property comprised in the settlement, after the death of the intended husband, and in default of issue, among certain persons. She survived the husband, and died without issue, and without having made any other disposition of her property:—Held, that the will did not operate to pass the property comprised in the settlement. Jones v. Southall, 32 Beav. 31; 11 W. R. 247; 9 Jur., N. S., 93; 32 L. T., N. S., 103; 32 L. J., Ch., 130; 1 N. R. 152. Reversing 7 Jur., N. S., 1180; 30 L. J., Ch., 875; 9 W. R. 546; 4 L. T., N. S., 231; 30 Beav. 187.

4. Vague and general words of reference to all powers found among words of a general gift and bequest of a testator's own property, where the words are justified by the existence of a power as to property in which he had an interest, cannot be extended to operate as an exercise of a special and limited kind over property derived from another source. Hope v. Hope, 5 Giff. 13.

Semble, that a new power over property acquired after the will requires a clear manifestation of a new intention to exercise it, and a mere republication of the will by a codicil made after the acquisition of such new power is not a sufficient manifestation of intention. Ib.

5. S., by will, in 1855, disposed of all his property, and by an indenture dated in February 1860, settled 5,072*l.* upon trust for his wife for life with remainder to himself for life, reserving to himself power to appoint the same by will. In December 1860, he by a voluntary instrument attested by one witness, and reciting the settlement of February 1860, covenanted that his devisees or executors would, after his decease, on being satisfied that all his debts were paid, convey, transfer, and pay over to the trustees therein named all the real and personal estate to which he should be then entitled, or which he should then have disposed of by his will. He died in his wife's lifetime:—Held, that the will, though dated prior to the deed of February 1860, operated as an execution of the power of appointment contained in that deed. Patch v. Shore, 2 Dr. & Sm. 589; 1 N. R. 157; 11 W. R. 142; 9 Jur., N. S., 63; 32 L. J., Ch., 185; 7 L. T., N. S., 554.

Held, also, that the instrument of December 1860 was a deed and not a will, and that the covenant that the executors should pay over the residue was a valid covenant. Ib.

Held, also, that the deed of December 1860 was not a revocation of the will, but created a debt for which the testator's assets were liable, and that the 5,072*l.*, settled by the deed of February 1860, having been appointed by the will, constituted assets to satisfy the voluntary debt due under the covenant in the deed of December 1860. Ib.

6. A testatrix, by her will made in 1860, devised real estate upon trust, in case her personal estate should prove insufficient to pay her debts, legacies, etc., by sale or mortgage to raise a sum to make good the deficiency; subsequently, upon the marriage of her son, she put the estate into strict settlement, reserving to herself a power to charge it with 1,000*l.* in priority to all the uses declared by the settlement; and lastly, she made a codicil bequeathing a legacy, and stating that, in all other respects, she confirmed the will:—Held, that the power to charge was well exercised to the extent of 1,000*l.* Meredyth v. Meredyth, 5 Ir. R., Eq., 565.

7. In 1845 a testator disposed of his real estate by will. In 1849 real estate was settled to such uses as he should by will appoint. The testator made a subsequent will, which did not pass real estate:—Held, that upon the true construction of the Wills Act, 7 Will. 4 and 1 Vict., c. 26, ss. 24, 27, the disposition by the prior will was a good execution of the power contained in the subsequent settlement. Hodsdon v. Dancer, 16 W. R. 1101.

1. By a settlement certain real estate was conveyed to trustees upon trust to sell, and to pay the proceeds of sale to such persons as A. should by deed or will appoint. By a second deed of settlement A. appointed that the trustees of the first settlement should stand possessed of the sale moneys in trust for such persons as she should by will appoint. By her will, made previous to the second settlement, A., "in pursuance of" the power contained in the first settlement, appointed the property comprised therein (describing it as real estate) to her three sons. Semble, that the will was revoked by the second settlement:—Held, that the will, if not revoked, did not operate as an execution of the power contained in the second settlement. Thompson v. Simpson, 50 L. J., Ch., 461; 44 L. T. 710.

2. By a settlement of the 6th January, 1858, the settlor declared that a sum of money should be held on trust as he should by deed or will appoint, and in default of appointment in trust as therein mentioned. A will made by the settlor five weeks before the settlement contained a general residuary bequest:—Held, that although a general residuary bequest would operate as an execution of a power in a subsequent settlement, still the Court had power in construing both instruments to consider the surrounding circumstances, which showed that the settlor never intended the settlement to be revoked by a prior will; and that consequently the will was not an execution of the power. Re Ruding, 14 L. R., Eq., 266; 41 L. J., Ch., 665; 20 W. R. 936.

3. By a separation deed A. settled his property, reserving to himself a general power of appointment by will over one-third of it, and declaring the trusts of the remaining two-thirds for his wife and children. By his will, executed several months previously to the separation deed, A. devised and bequeathed all his property to trustees upon trust for his wife and children:—Held, that the will was a good execution of the power: and that the settlement and the circumstances under which it was executed could not be looked at to show a contrary intention. Re Ruding (14 L. R., Eq., 266) questioned. Boyes v. Cook, 14 L. R., Ch. D., 53; 49 L. J., Ch., 350; 42 L. T. 556; 28 W. R. 754.

VI. GENERAL POWERS BEFORE THE WILLS ACT.

1. Powers Over Personal Property, 5781.
2. Powers Over Real Estate, 5783.

1. Powers Over Personal Property.

4. Power not executed by general words in a will. Langham v. Nenny, 3 Ves. 467. S. P. Croft v. Slee, 4 Ves. 59.

5. The will (attested by three witnesses) of a person having a power to dispose of a fund consisting partly of real estates, and partly of household furniture, with linen and plate, containing a gift of "all my estates and effects of whatsoever denomination," and of "my household furniture, with linen and plate," is not an execution of the power. Jones v. Curry or Currey, 1 Swan. 66; 1 Wils. 24.

6. Power to charge a particular sum reserved by owner of the inheritance, not executed in his lifetime:—Held, to be executed in substance by his will, charging debts and legacies on all his real and personal estate, though it did not refer to the power. Maddison v. Andrew, 1 Ves. 58.

7. A., by a voluntary deed, assigned all his personal estate, upon trust to pay the interest to himself for life, and after his decease to such persons as he should appoint by will for their lives, and subject thereto, to pay the principal to his next of kin, who should be living at his decease, his, her, or their executors, etc. Soon afterwards the testator by his will gave some legacies, and gave the residue to the persons by name who were his next of kin at the execution of the deed, and at his death:—Held, that the power was not executed by the will. Griffin v. Nanson, 4 Ves. 343.

8. Power not executed by general bequest of "my estate and effects," which will pass only what the testator has an interest in, not what he has an authority over. Roach v. Haynes, 8 Ves. 588.

9. Testatrix gave a fund over which she had a power to appoint, etc., to trustees, in trust for her residuary legatee after named, and gave the general residue to A. By codicil she revoked the bequest of the residue and gave it to A. and B. A. was held solely entitled to the fund under the appointment. Roach v. Haynes, 6 Ves. 153. Affirmed 8 Ves. 584.

10. Power of appointment not executed by general words in a will, "all my personal estate, etc., and all my estate and interest therein." Bradley v. Westcott, 13 Ves. 445.

Power of appointment not executed by appointing an executor. Id. 452.

11. General bequest of personalty, with a reference to all property over which the testator had a power of appointment:—Held, to operate as an execution of a power. Pidgely v. Pidgely, 1 Colly. 255; 8 Jur. 529.

12. Where a testatrix having personal estate of her own (and of considerable amount), and a power of appointment over certain stock standing in the names of trustees, after directing speedy payment of her debts and testamentary expenses out of her personal estate, and giving certain legacies out of the funds standing in the trustees' names, being only part thereof, and without any reference to the power, she bequeathed all the residue of her estate, "after payment of the before-mentioned legacies," to two persons equally:—Held, that the legacies being an appointment of part, the residuary clause applied also to the part undisposed of. Elliot v. Elliot, 15 Sim. 321; 15 L. J., N. S., Ch., 393; 10 Jur. 730.

13. A testator had a power of appointment over a sum of money. He gave certain portions of this sum to various legatees, referring at the same time to the power, but without exercising it by technical words. His will contained a residuary bequest which made no reference to the power:—Held, that the residuary bequest operated as an exercise of the power with respect to the remainder of the sum subject thereto. Re Comber, 11 Jur., N. S., 968; 14 W. R. 172; 13 L. T., N. S., 459.

1. By deed, certain personal property was limited, upon the determination of the life interests, to go as A. B., by deed or will, should appoint. By her will, she gave and bequeathed one moiety or half part of her property which she might be possessed of or entitled to at the time of her decease:—Held, to be a valid exercise of her power of appointment. Frankcombe v. Hayward, 9 Jur. 349.

2. Testator gave 3,000*l.* to trustees for C. S. for life; remainder to such persons as she should appoint. C. S. by her will disposed of all her personal estate, and then gave all sums, messuages, etc., and other interest to which she was entitled under the testator's will:—Held, that the latter gift was a good execution of the power. Maples v. Brown, 2 Sim. 327.

3. A., having a power of appointment, by will, of a sum of 4,000*l.*, bequeathed several pecuniary legacies, which greatly exceeded the amount of her estate, exclusive of the 4,000*l.*, and then bequeathed to L. all other her personal estate, and over which she had any disposing power. The will did not contain any reference to the 4,000*l.*, or to any power of appointment:—Held, that the power was well executed by the residuary bequest; and that L. was entitled to the whole sum of 4,000*l.*, to the exclusion of the legatees. Lowe v. Pennington, 10 L. J., N. S., Ch., 83.

4. A testator gave his widow the power of appointing his residuary estate. By her will, after reciting the power, she declared that, in pursuance of the power and all other powers enabling her, for the purpose of disposing of her husband's and her own estate, she made her will as follows. She then directed her debts to be paid and gave some legacies, and, as to all the rest "of her personal estate," she bequeathed it to A. and B. on trust:—Held, that she, having died in 1832, had thereby appointed the residuary estate of her husband. Davies v. Fisher, 5 Beav. 201; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 338; 6 Jur. 248.

5. A testatrix having, under the will of her mother, a power of appointing by will to a sum of 2,000*l.*, and also an interest in the residue of her mother's personal estate, gave legacies of 1,000*l.*, 500*l.*, and 500*l.* She then gave 21*l.* to each of her executors, and proceeded as follows:—"Forasmuch as the amount of my property is not yet ascertained, the same awaiting the settling of my late mother's affairs, my will is, that, if my money and personal estate should not be sufficient to pay the said legacies in full, the legatees shall make an abatement." She then disposed of her furniture, plate, etc., and of the residue of her money and personal estate:—Held, that the testatrix's will was not an execution of her power. Buxton v. Buxton, 1 Keen 753.

6. The widow, by her will, alluding at the opening to her husband's will, but not referring in any way to the power of appointment given to her, gave personal estate to one of her sons, and only a small pecuniary legacy to two of the others:—Held, that her will was inoperative as an appointment. Jones v. Jones, 10 Jur. 960.

7. In a partnership deed, it was stipulated that the testator's interest in the partnership concern after his death, and during the term of the partnership, should go to such persons as he should by will name or appoint, and in default of appointment that it should devolve to his wife; in case of her death to his children in equal shares, and in case of the death of all his children to his executors or administrators:—Held, that the true construction of this is, not to create a technical power of appointment, but to reserve to the testator an absolute power of disposition by will. The testator made a will, not containing any allusion to the power, by which he gave all his estates and effects to one of his children:—Held, that his interest in the partnership passed by his bequest. Ponton v. Dunn, 1 Russ. & M. 402.

8. A testator gave to his wife the residue of his personal property, with a proviso that, if not disposed of by her in her life or by her will, it should go over. It passed as part of her property by her will, although not specifically noticed. Bourn v. Gibbs, 1 Russ. & M. 614; Taml. 414; 8 L. J., Ch., 151.

9. Where under a settlement a testator had, in a certain event, the fee of an estate subject to a term, and had under the same settlement a power, in the particular event, to appoint the fee subject to the term by deed or will, and by his will he devised the estate in fee without reference to his power, the will takes effect as a devise of his interest, and not as an execution of his power. By the same agreement he had, in the events which happened, a power to appoint a sum of 1,000*l.*, which was to be raised after his death, by the term to which the fee of the same estate was subject, but his will took no notice whatever of this power; the devise of the estate does not operate as an execution of the power to appoint the 1,000*l.* Farmer v. Bradford, 3 Russ. 354; 5 L. J., Ch., 157.

10. A. having a power to appoint by will certain funds in such manner as he should think fit, he by his will, so executed and attested as required by the power, gives and bequeaths to his relations sums of money, amounting in the whole to precisely the sum of which he had the power to dispose, but without any reference or allusion in his will to the power, or any words indicative of his intention to execute it:—Held, that the will was a good execution of the power. Quære, if the Court, in deciding whether a will is a good execution of a power, can look at the state of the testator's property at the time of making his will, as a guide to his intention. Lownds v. Lownds, 1 Y. & J. 445.

11. The sum of 1,000*l.* was given by will to trustees, upon trust (after a life interest given to A.) for such persons as A. should by will appoint. A. made a will, whereby she gave legacies amounting exactly to 1,000*l.*, but did not notice either the power or the property subject to it. A. had no property of her own at the date of her will, or at her death:—Held, that A.'s will was not an execution of the power. Davies v. Thorns, 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 212; 13 Jur. 383.

12. A. B. was at the date of her will entitled for life under her marriage settlement to the dividends of a sum of consols, with a power of appointment over a portion of such consols, which, in default of appointment, was to go to her next of kin living at her death. She was also entitled for life under the will of her husband to the dividends of 10,000*l.* consols, and of various other stocks, with a power of appointment by deed or will attested by two witnesses over one-third part of such sums, and in default of appointment the stock was limited to other parties. By an unattested will not referring to the powers, she gave four several sums (amounting to 3,000*l.* consols), "in 3*l.* per cent. consols," to four charities, and "the remainder in the 3*l.* per cents." and in the other stocks in the settlement, naming them, to other parties:—Held, that the will operated as an execution of the power under will of the husband. Innes v. Sayer, 3 Macn. & G. 606; 16 Jur. 21; 21 L. J., Ch., 190. Affirming Sayer v. Sayer, Innes v. Sayer, 7 Hare 377; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 274; 13 Jur. 402.

1. A testatrix having by her marriage settlement power by will or deed to appoint certain funds, but it not appearing that she was possessed of any other property, by her will, dated in 1822, not referring in terms to the power, gave "all her property and estate whatsoever and wheresoever, and of what nature, kind, and quality soever the same might be," to her husband, his executors, administrators, and assigns, for his and their own use and benefit absolutely:—Held, an execution of the power. Att.-Gen. v. Wilkinson, 2 L. R., Eq., 817; 14 W. R. 910; 14 L. T., N. S., 725; 12 Jur., N. S., 593.

2. A., being entitled under B.'s will to a considerable sum of personalty, settled thereout 3,000*l.* on the marriage of his daughter; and on his own second marriage in October 1823, he settled thereout a further sum of 2,500*l.* on his wife for life, with remainder to the children of the marriage; and, in default of issue, it was declared that the trustees should, after the death of the survivor of the husband and wife, pay the money to such persons as A. should appoint by will, and in default of appointment, to such persons as should then be the next of kin of A., according to the statute. A. made his will in April 1824, and after reciting that under B.'s will he was entitled to considerable sums of personalty, and that he had settled 3,000*l.*, part, upon his daughter, and 2,500*l.*, other part, upon his wife upon his marriage, he ratified and confirmed the settlements made by him upon his daughter and his wife, and as to all the residue and remainder of the moneys to which he was entitled under B.'s will, he gave them upon trusts, under which his wife eventually became entitled. He died in 1829, and his wife died in 1869:—Held, that he had not, by the residuary gift in his will, exercised the power of appointment conferred on him by the settlement; and that the 2,500*l.* went, as in default of appointment, to A.'s next of kin, who were to be ascertained at the death of his wife. Re Bringloe, 26 L. T., N. S., 58.

2. Powers Over Real Estate.

3. Copyhold conveyed in trust to sell, the money to be deemed part of testator's personal estate, and in trust for such uses as he should by deed or will appoint, and in default for his right heir. A will executed on the same day, but not referring to the deed, directing a sale of particular property, and disposing of personal estate in general terms:—Held, not applicable to the estate conveyed by the deed which went to the heir, no use being by the subsequent instrument declared if the estate was converted. Lowes v. Hackward, 18 Ves. 168.

4. A., being possessed of two freehold houses, and having power of appointment over lands, and money to be laid out in land, by her will devises "all and every her freehold messuages, lands, tenements, and hereditaments" for sale:—Held, not an execution of the power. Hoste v. Blackman, 6 Madd. 190.

5. A testator having a power of appointment over certain freehold and copyhold estates, and being seised of other freehold estates, devises all his freehold and copyhold estates, without reference to the power:—Held, an execution of the power as to the copyhold estates, but not as to the freehold estates, which were subject to the power. Lewis v. Llewellyn, T. & R. 104.

6. Where husband having in articles power to appoint wife's real estate, and by other articles to appoint his own real estate, by will, reciting power over his own estates in exercise of that power and all other powers, appointed his own real estates and all other real estates over which he had power in trust, and making no mention in any part of will of wife's estates or of his power over them, and expressing that all persons taking under his will should be bound by the doctrine of election:—Held, that wife's estate was included in the appointment by will. Trollope v. Linton, 1 Sim & S. 477; 2 L. J., Ch., 3.

7. A general devise of all lands of which the testatrix had power to dispose, is not a good execution of a power to appoint moneys which were to arise from the sale of lands. Adams v. Austen, 3 Russ. 461.

8. A testator makes a general devise of all his lands in nine parishes; in five of them he had only lands in fee; in three others he had only lands over which he had a power of appointment; in the other he had lands in fee, and also lands over which his power extended: all the lands pass by his will, except the lands in the latter parish, which were subject to his power. Napier v. Napier, 1 Sim. 28; 5 L. J., Ch., 65.

9. The will (attested by three witnesses) of a person having a power to dispose of a fund consisting partly of real estates, and partly of household furniture, linen, and plate, containing a gift of "all my estates and effects of whatsoever denomination," and of "my household furniture, with linen and plate," is not an execution of the power. Jones v. Curry, 1 Swan. 66; 1 Wils. 24.

10. A tenant in fee of one undivided moiety, being tenant for life of the other undivided moiety with power of appointment in fee, devised as follows: "I give and devise all my freehold estates in the city of London and county of Surrey, or elsewhere, to my nephew, John Roake, for his life, on condition that out of the rents, he do from time to time keep such estates in proper and tenantable repair":—Held, that was not an execution of the power. Roake v. Denn d. Nowell, 1 Dow & Cl. 437; 4 Bli. N. S. 3.

VII. EXECUTION OF GENERAL POWERS UNDER THE WILLS ACT, s. 27.

1. What Powers are Within the Act, 5784.
2. What Amounts to an Appointment Under the Act, 5784.
3. "Contrary Intention," 5787.
4. Direction as to Debts, 5788.

1. What Powers are Within the Act.

1. A power to appoint by will is a general power within the scope of the Wills Act, 7 Will. 4 and 1 Vict., c. 26, s. 27, so that where a person having a power to appoint real or personal estate by will makes a residuary disposition of his property without reference to the power, the will will be construed as an execution of the power. Re Powell, 18 W. R. 228; 39 L. J., Ch., 188.

But such a general power does not constitute ownership; so that, for the purpose of considering the question whether the exercise of the power be or be not void for remoteness, the real or personal estate subject to the power will be deemed to be the property of the donor, and not of the donee of the power. Ib.

P. bequeathed sums amounting to 5,000*l.* after the deaths of certain persons mentioned, upon trust, for H. for life, and after her death upon trust for such person or persons as H. should, by her last will and testament, appoint. H. made a will not referring in any way to the power, but leaving the residue of her property in trust for her daughter L. for life, for her separate use, without power of anticipation, and after her death in trust for the children of L., who, being a son or sons, should attain the age of twenty-one, or, being a daughter or daughters, should attain that age or marry. L. was born after the death of P.:—Held, first, that the will of H. must be construed as an execution of the power created by the will of P. according to s. 27 of the Wills Act. Ib.

Held, secondly, that the exercise of the power was void for remoteness. Ib.

2. By a voluntary settlement in 1848, a settlor transferred a debt to a trustee, in trust for such persons and purposes as the settlor should by any deed or instrument in writing appoint, and in default to pay the income to the settlor for his life, and on his death to distribute the amount among specified persons. He afterwards executed an appointment by deed of part of the fund, and confirmed the trusts of the settlement as to the remainder. By his will, made in 1852, the settlor gave certain legacies, and then gave "all his personal estate not otherwise effectually disposed of" to trustees:—Held, first, that the settlor had sufficiently expressed his intention not to affect the unappointed property comprised in the settlement of 1848; and secondly, that even if no such intention appeared, the Wills Act (7 Will. 4 and 1 Vict., c. 26, s. 27) applied only to cases where the power of appointment was equivalent to absolute property. Moss v. Harter, 2 Sm. & G. 458; 18 Jur. 973; 2 W. R. 540.

Semble, that the power of appointment contained in the deed did not authorise an appointment by will. Ib.

It is not the duty of the Court to strain the words of a power of appointment in order to bring them within the 27th section of the Wills Act, but to ascertain whether the power is in the widest and most general terms. Ib.

3. A power to appoint amongst children is not within the 27th section of the Wills Act, and a mere general devise or bequest to a child will not operate as an execution of such a power. Clowes v. Awdry, 12 Beav. 604.

4. A power of appointment by will among the "relations or friends" of the donee of the power, is a special power in favour of any relations, and as such cannot be exercised by a general disposition. In default of appointment, there being no gift over, the Court will imply a trust in favour of the next of kin. Re Caplin, 6 N. R. 17; 11 Jur., N. S., 383; 34 L. J., Ch., 578; 13 W. R. 646; 12 L. T., N. S., 526; 2 Dr. & Sm. 527.

5. A., having a power to appoint real estate and 4,000*l.*, to all or any, or one or more of the children, or more remote issue of his marriage, made his will before any child was born, but while his wife was enceinte, was bequeathing all his property on trust in the event of his leaving one child, that he or she should inherit all his landed and personal property; but in case of his leaving a son and daughter, he devised and bequeathed all his landed and personal property to his son, save and except 4,000*l.* to his daughter. He afterwards died, having no real estate except what was the subject of the power, but considerable personal estate, and having two sons and two daughters:—Held, that the will did not operate as an execution of the power over the real estate, as the devise was either void for uncertainty, or conditional on events which had not happened. Russell v. Russell, 12 Ir. Ch. R. 377.

Held, also, that the will did not operate as an execution of the power over the 4,000*l.*, the 7 Will. 4 and 1 Vict., c. 26, s. 27, applying to general powers, and not to special powers in favour of particular objects. Ib.

6. A. bequeathed her residue to such person as B. should, by deed or will, appoint, and in default to his next of kin. B. died in the life of A.:—Held, that his will could not operate as an execution of the power under the 7 Will. 4 and 1 Vict., c. 26, s. 27, and that his next of kin were entitled to the residue. Jones v. Southall, 32 Beav. 31; 9 Jur., N. S., 93; 32 L. J., Ch., 130; 11 W. R. 247; 8 L. T., N. S., 103; 1 N. R. 152. Reversing 30 Beav. 187; 7 Jur., N. S., 1180; 30 L. J., Ch., 875; 9 W. R. 546; 4 L. T., N. S., 231.

The 27th section of the Wills Act applies only to powers actually created at the death of the testator; and does not enable a testator to execute an inchoate power of which he was the intended donee under the will of a person who survives him. Ib.

2. What Amounts to an Appointment Under the Act.

7. Certain houses were assigned by the settlement upon the marriage of J. and M. to trustees upon trust, to pay the rents to M. for her life, for her separate use, and after M.'s death, upon trust for such person or persons, etc., as J. by deed or will should appoint, or give the same, and in default of appointment, and subject thereto, if any, upon trust for such persons as under the Statute of Distributions might be or become entitled thereto. J., by his will, after certain bequests to S., his son by a former marriage, gave all his residuary estate whatsoever and wheresoever (subject to the payment of the above-mentioned legacies, and also subject to such parts thereof respectively as were comprised in the settlement to the trusts, thereby declared, which indenture he ratified and confirmed in all respects), and every part thereof to M., her executors, administrators, and assigns absolutely:—Held, that this general residuary bequest to M. operated as an execution of the power of appointment by will reserved to J. by the settlement. Hutchins v. Osborne, 6 W. R. 426; 4 K. & J. 252; 27 L. J., Ch., 421; 3 De G. & J. 142.

1. A donee of a general power of appointment over some consols, by will gave various specific and pecuniary legacies, including a gift of Indian stock, and appointed executors, but the will did not contain any general gift or reference to the power:—Held, not an execution of the power under 7 Will. 4 and 1 Vict., c. 27, s. 27. Hurlstone v. Ashton, 11 Jur., N. S., 725.

2. G. B. devised all his real estate to such uses as E. should by deed or will appoint; in default of appointment, he devised the same to E. for life, and after her death he directed the H. estate to be sold, the proceeds to fall into his general residuary personal estate, and, as to the S. estate, and all other his real estate, he devised it to G. and her issue in strict settlement. He then gave the residue to such persons as E. should by deed or will appoint, and in default and subject thereto he gave the same upon trusts for G. and her children. After the death of the testator, E. applied the whole of the personal estate to herself for life, and after her decease, to the trustees of the will to be held upon the trusts thereof. On the marriage of G., E. revoked her own life estate, and appointed the personal estate to the trustees of the will to hold 20,000*l.* on such trusts as she, E., should appoint; and as to the remainder, upon trust for G. and her children. After the marriage of G., E., by her will, gave all her real estate to trustees upon the trusts of the S. estate:—Held, that the appointment of the personalty did not include the H. estate, and that the general devise contained in the will of E. operated as an execution of the power over the S. estate. Walker v. Banks, 1 Jur., N. S., 606.

3. A testatrix, having a general power of appointment over a sum of stock under the will of T. S., appointed the stock to her sons Joseph and John and her other children equally, and she left any other sum of money or property to which she then was or might thereafter become entitled under the will of T. S. to be divided amongst such of her children as might be living at her death, and she constituted Joseph her residuary legatee. John died before her:—Held, that Joseph was entitled to the share of the stock intended for John. Re Spooner's Trust, 2 Sim., N. S., 129; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 151.

4. A. having a power of appointment over a sum of consols, some leasehold ground rents, and some shares in an insurance company, made a will, by which she bequeathed all her real estate, money, and securities for money to B., and all the rest, residue, and remainder of her personal estate to C.:—Held, that all the property subject to the power passed by the will, and that B. was entitled to the consols, and C. to the shares and ground rents. Turner v. Turner, 21 L. J., Ch., 843.

5. A testator appointed a leasehold estate to such uses as his wife, if surviving, should declare with respect to the disposition of her residuary personal estate. The wife, by her will, gave the leasehold estate to C. for life, and all the residue of her personal estate, subject to the payment of some legacies, she gave to certain charities:—Held, to be a valid exercise of the power. Bristow v. Skirrow, 5 Jur., N. S., 1379; 1 L. T., N. S., 180.

6. A testator was under covenant to pay 2,000*l.* to the trustees of his settlement, for his wife for life, with remainder to his general appointees by deed or will. By his will he directed the executors to pay the 2,000*l.* to the trustees, in order that they might invest it, and pay the income to the wife for life; and then bequeathed his residuary estate, subject to certain legacies, to the wife absolutely:—Held, that the residuary bequest was a good execution of the power. Soriven v. Sandom, 2 John. & H. 743.

7. A will must be taken to be an execution of a power, where the words of it would, otherwise, have nothing to operate upon. Shelford v. Acland, 23 Beav. 10; 3 Jur., N. S., 8; 26 L. J., Ch., 144; 5 W. R. 170.

A married woman, donee of a power which could be exercised only during coverture, made her will in these terms: "I do by this my will give to T. S. 2,600*l.*" This sum was about the value of the fund over which she had a power. She had no other property in her own right:—Held, to be a valid execution of the power. Ib.

8. A testatrix, having a power of appointing a sum of 10,000*l.*, secured by a term of 500 years, and having also a power of appointing the fee of the lands on which the money was secured, by her will devised her lands to A. for life, with remainder to B. in tail, and gave to A. all the residue of her personal estate:—Held, that the 10,000*l.* passed under the residuary gift of the personal estate. Clifford v. Clifford, 9 Hare 675.

A general pecuniary legacy with no particular fund indicated for the payment is "a bequest of personal property described in a general manner," within the meaning of the Wills Act, s. 27; and therefore where the proper assets of the testator are inadequate for the payment of the legacy, without resort to personal estate, over which the testator has a general power of appointment, the personal estate which is subject to the power must be applied in satisfaction of the legacy.

Semble, that the mere nomination of executors where there is no general gift of the personal estate will, in favour of legatees, extend the operation of the will to personal property, over which the testator has a general power of appointment.

9. Quære, whether this mode of construction would be applied in favour of creditors, even if there was a direction to the executors to pay debts. Hawthorne v. Shedden, 25 L. J., Ch., 833; 2 Jur., N. S., 749; 3 Sm. & G. 293.

1. When a testatrix has a general power of appointment over sums of money, a bequest of pecuniary legacies operates as an execution of the power under 7 Will. 4 and 1 Vict., c. 26, s. 27. Re Wilkinson, 4 L. R., Ch., 587; 17 W. R. 839. Affirming 8 L. R., Eq., 487.

2. Under his marriage settlement, A. had power to appoint the reversion in fee of the settled real estate, and the trustees had a power of sale, with his consent. He, by his will, appointed it to trustees, to sell and stand possessed of the produce in trust for a class; and he gave all his real and personal estate, "not thereinbefore specifically disposed of, to his widow." Subsequently the trustees, with A.'s consent, sold the estate; but at his death, the conveyance had not been executed by one of the trustees, and the purchase money had not been received:—Held (notwithstanding the 7 Will. 4 and 1 Vict., c. 26, ss. 19, 23), that the gift to the class was inoperative, and that the purchase money passed, under the residuary gift, to the widow. Gale v. Gale, 21 Beav. 349; 4 W. R. 277.

3. A testator had a general power of appointment over the reversion in fee of settled real estate, which the trustees had power to sell with his consent. During his lifetime, and with his consent, part of the real estate was sold and another part contracted to be sold, leaving some of the real estate unsold. Subsequently he made his will, whereby, after reciting that the real estate was subject to such uses as he should appoint, he directed that the same should remain to the use of trustees for a term of 500 years, and subject thereto to the use of A. and his heirs. And subject and without prejudice to the appointment already made, he gave all the real and personal estate of or to which he was seised or possessed, or over which he had a power of appointment, to B. absolutely:—Held, that the proceeds of sale of real estate passed to B. under the residuary gift, and not to A. under the appointment. Gale v. Gale (21 Beav. 349) followed. Blake v. Blake 15 L. R., Ch. D., 481; 49 L. J., Ch., 393; 42 L. T. 724; 28 W. R. 647.

4. By A.'s marriage settlement, dated in 1832, her father settled certain real estate to the use of A. for life, and after her death, and in default of issue of the marriage, to the use of such persons as she should by will appoint. The settlement contained a power for the trustees to sell the real estate, with a direction to lay out the proceeds, with A.'s consent, in the purchase of other hereditaments to be settled to the like uses, with a power of interim investment, with the like consent, in Government securities. By his will, dated [illegible] 1831, and confirmed, subject to the settlement, by a codicil executed in 1832, shortly after the settlement, A.'s father devised the property, subject to the settlement, and all other his real estate, to the use of A. for life, and, in default of her having any issue, to such uses as she should by will appoint. Some years afterwards, A.'s father and husband both having died and there having been no issue of the marriage, the trustees of the settlement, at A.'s request, sold all the settled real estate for a sum of 24,226*l.* 2*s.* consols, which they transferred to her. A. died a widow in 1879, having by her will, dated in 1875, shortly after the transfer to her of the consols, after appointing executors and bequeathing pecuniary legacies amounting to upwards of 30,000*l.*, bequeathed "all the residue of my personal estate and effects whatsoever" to two persons absolutely. The personal estate to which A. was entitled at the date of her will and of her death, independently of the 24,000*l.* 2*s.* consols, did not amount to more than 6,000*l.*:—Held, that, having regard to s. 27 of the Wills Act 1837 (1 Vict., c. 26), and the interpretation clause, s. 1 ("personal estate"), A.'s will should be read as an appointment of "all the Government and other funds and all personal property over which I shall, at the time of my death, have a general power of appointment by will;" and that the will operated as an execution of the powers of appointment over the real estate given to her by her marriage settlement and her father's will, and passed the consols. Chandler v. Pocock, 15 L. R., Ch. D., 491; 49 L. J., Ch., 442; 45 L. T. 112; 28 W. R. 806.

5. By a marriage settlement executed in March 1823, real estate was conveyed to trustees in fee, to their use during the life of the wife, on trust to pay the rents to her for her life, and after her death to such uses as the husband should by deed or writing, to be by him executed and delivered in the presence of and attested by two witnesses, appoint, and, in default of appointment and subject thereto, to the common dower uses in favour of the husband. There was a power for the trustees to sell the property with the consent of the husband and wife during their joint lives, and the money to arise from any sale was to be laid out in the purchase of other land, to be settled in the same uses, and until the reinvestment should be made the money was to be invested in (inter alia) the public funds, and the income was to be payable to the persons to whom the rents of the land to be purchased would go. During the joint lives of the husband and wife, and before the date of the husband's will, the land was sold, and the proceeds of the sale were invested in new 3 per cents. in the names of the trustees. No purchase of land was ever made, but the income of the stock was paid to the wife during her life. In October 1844 the husband made his will (which was signed by him and sealed, and attested by two witnesses). The will contained the following bequest: "I also give and bequeath all the money and moneys that I die possessed of, whether in the public funds or in the care of W., or elsewhere, after my funeral expenses are paid, unto the sole use and behoof of my children hereinbefore named, share and share alike." W. was one of the trustees of the will, and at the time of the testator's death he had in his hands some money belonging to the testator. The testator had no money of his own in the funds, nor has he any power of appointment other than that contained in the settlement. The testator died on the 28th December, 1851. After the death the question arose whether the testator had by his will exercised the power of appointment contained in the settlement, or whether the sum of stock passed as unappointed to his heir-at-law:—Held, that inasmuch as the wife had a right to call for the reinvestment of the stock in land it must be considered as having been land at the time of the testator's death, and that the will did not operate as an exercise of the power of appointment, and that consequently the stock passed to the testator's heir-at-law. Re Greaves' Settlement Trusts, 23 L. R., Ch. D., 313; 52 L. J., Ch., 753; 48 L. T. 414; 31 W. R. 807.

3. "Contrary Intention."

1. Estates A. and B. were so settled that the testator had no power to deal with A., but had a power of appointment over B. By his will, made after the 1 Vict., c. 26, he referred to the settlement and confirmed it, and then, reciting that he had considerable freehold estates, and might become possessed of more, he devised all his real estates of which he might die possessed to certain persons as trustees for purposes totally different from those of the settlement. He had not, at the date of his will or his death, any other estates besides A. and B.:—Held, that the testator must be taken to have known that he had a power of appointment over estate B., that the confirmation of the settlement operated only upon the estate A., and that the devise was a good execution of the power. Lake v. Currie, 2 De G. M. & G. 536; 16 Jur. 1027.

Held, also, that the Wills Act, 7 Will. 4, and 1 Vict., c. 26, has not, by making the will speak as from the date the death of the testator, and thereby passing real estate of which he was not possessed at the date of the will, assimilated the doctrine as to the execution of powers over real estate to that of the execution of powers over personal estate. Ib.

A testator, who in his will refers to a settlement, must, in the absence of something to show the contrary, be taken to know the general effect of that settlement. Ib.

2. A testamentary power of appointment over realty was given to the survivor of A., B., and C. (a woman). B. died; C. married, and by her will, executed since the 7 Will. 4 and 1 Vict., c. 26, made a general devise of residuary real estate, giving a life interest to A. Afterwards A. died, living C.:—Held, that the will of C. operated as an execution of the power, and that the gift of a life estate to A., whom the testatrix must necessarily survive before the power could vest in her, was not a sufficient expression of a contrary intention to take the case out of the statute. Thomas v. Jones, 1 De G. J. & Sm. 63; 9 Jur., N. S., 161; 32 L. J., Ch., 139; 7 L. T., N. S., 610; 1 N. R. 138. Affirming 2 John. & H. 475; 8 Jur., N. S., 1124; 31 L. J., Ch., 732; 10 W. R. 853; 7 L. T., N. S., 154.

3. By a marriage settlement leaseholds were assigned to trustees, upon trust for the wife for life, for her separate use; and after her death, upon such trusts as the husband should by deed or will appoint; and subject thereto, upon trust for the next of kin under the Statutes of Distribution. The husband did not exercise the power by deed, but by his will, dated in 1850, after providing for his only child, he made a general residuary bequest of all the rest of his property which he was possessed of, or interested in, or entitled to at his death (subject, as to such parts as were comprised in the settlement, to that settlement, and the trusts thereby declared, which indenture he ratified and confirmed in all respects), to his wife absolutely:—Held, that the general residuary bequest operated as an execution by will of the power of appointment reserved to the testator by the settlement. Hutchins v. Osborne, 4 Kay & J. 252; 4 Jur., N. S., 830; 27 L. J., Ch., 421; 3 De G. & J. 142; 6 W. R. 246.

4. The sum of 15,000*l.* having been placed by G. W. in the hands of J. M., a stranger in the blood, G. W., by voluntary settlement of the 30th March, 1848, assigned the 15,000*l.* and interest to J. W., in trust for such persons, etc., as G. W. should at any time thereafter, by any deed or deeds, instrument or instruments in writing, direct or appoint, and in default, etc., to permit the said sum to remain upon its then investment, and to pay the interest, etc., to G. W. for life, and after his death to collect and get in the 15,000*l.*, giving to J. M., in case the sum or any part should remain in his hands, twelve months' notice in writing to pay in the amount; and in trust to pay a part thereof to J. M. and various members of his family, and other persons, as in the deed mentioned, and the residue thereof in trust for J. W. By deeds poll dated the 30th October, 1851, and the 13th January, 1853, the trusts of the settlement were slightly varied in one or two instances, by G. W. directing that out of the residue of the trust moneys an annuity of 100*l.* should be paid to R. W. for life. J. W. died in 1852. G. W., who was one of his executors, acquired a large increase of property by his death. G. W., by his will of the 2nd August, 1852, after making various bequests, bequeathed to trustees "all his personal estate not otherwise effectually disposed of," upon trust for the benefit of certain persons, other than those mentioned in the deed of 1848, to which no direct reference was made. G. W. died in 1853. On a bill by J. M. against the executors and the persons interested under the will:—Held, that there was distinct evidence upon the face of the will that the testator did not intend to touch the property settled by the deed of 1848; that the deed of settlement and the deeds poll were unaffected by the will, or by the 7 Will. 4 and 1 Vict., c. 26; and that upon no construction of the words of the power could it be held to be within the description of power to which the Act applied. Moss v. Harter, 18 Jur. 973; 2 W. R. 540; 2 Sm. & G. 458.

5. By voluntary deed A settled property, including 1,000*l.* due to him from his son-in-law B.; such sum to be allowed to remain owing during A.'s lifetime, but not after his death, except on the terms of obtaining security by the assignment of a policy upon B.'s life; upon such trusts as A. should by will or deed appoint, and, in default of appointment, on trust to pay the interest to A. for life, and after his death on trust for his daughters and their children, under which the interests of daughters ceased on their death without issue. By a subsequent will A. bequeathed his residuary estate on trusts for his daughters and their children, under which daughters dying without issue had power by will to appoint their shares. By a codicil, after reciting that he had advanced to B. other sums besides the 1,000*l.*, and that under the settlement and under the will, or one of them, his daughter, B.'s wife, would be entitled for her life, and their children would be entitled in remainder to a certain share in the property comprised in the settlement, A. declared that such share under the settlement or will, or either of them, should be taken to be satisfied out of the moneys owing to him by B. other than the 1,000*l.* On the day following the execution of this codicil, B. assigned to A. a policy of assurance on his life as security for 2,000*l.* then owing by him to A.:—Held, that no contrary intention had been shown within the meaning of the Wills Act, s. 27; and, accordingly, that the residuary gift in the will was an execution of the general power reserved by the settlement. Maddick v. Marks, Re Clark's Estate, 14 L. R., Ch. D., 422; 49 L. J., Ch., 586; 43 L. T. 40; 28 W. R. 753. Affirming 49 L. J., Ch., 205; 28 W. R. 342.

Held, also, that the execution of the assignment of the policy was not one of the surrounding circumstances which could be looked at for the purpose of ascertaining the testator's intention. Ib.

Whether a codicil can be read with a will for the purpose of ascertaining the intention of the testator in the will—quære. Ib.

In ascertaining whether a testator has shown an intention not to execute a general power of appointment by a residuary gift, it makes no difference whether the settlement creating the power was made by the testator himself or by a stranger. Ib.

4. Direction as to Debts.

1. A testatrix, having a general power of appointment over personal property, by her will, made after the Wills Act, directed that her debts and funeral and testamentary expenses should be fully paid by her executor out of her personal estate; she then gave several pecuniary legacies, with a direction that they should abate ratably if, after payment of her debts and funeral and testamentary expenses, there should not be sufficient to pay them all in full, and she gave all the residue of her estate to certain persons:—Held, that the will operated as an execution of the power in favour of the executor for the purpose of paying the testatrix's debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, and legacies, and that only so much of the property, the subject of the power, as remained after making those payments, passed by the residuary bequest. Wilday v. Barnett, 6 L. R., Eq., 193; 16 W. R. 961. And see Re Keown's Estate, 1 Ir. R., Eq., 372.

2. A married woman with a general power of testamentary appointment over a settled fund, after by her will directing payment of her debts, etc., gave, bequeathed, limited, and appointed, in pursuance of all powers and authorities, etc., all her clothes and ready money unto W. The testatrix was possessed at the time of her death of a sum of 697*l.* in ready money. Out of this sum her debts were paid by her executor:—Held, that W. was entitled to the 697*l.* without any deduction for debts, and that the amount must be made good out of the settled fund. Laing v. Cowan, 24 Beav. 112.

VIII. EXECUTION OF SPECIAL POWERS.

1. Reference to Power, 5788.
2. Effect of Charge of Debts, 5793.

1. Reference to Power.

3. A testator, having a power of appointment over certain real estates among his children, devised all the real estates to which he was entitled, or of which he had the power to dispose or to appoint by will, to trustees upon trust to sell, and hold the produce in trust for his children equally; but if they should die under the age of twenty-one without issue, then in trust for persons not objects of the power:—Held, that the devise in trust for the children was an execution of the power. Banks v. Banks, 1 W. R. 511; 17 Beav. 352.

4. Marriage articles carried into execution, by limiting estates in strict settlement to A. and B. respectively, with cross-remainders between B. and the issue of A., with power to A. to appoint both estates among his children. The will of A. referring to the estate, but not to the power, declared a good execution of the power, to the extent of limiting estates tail to the children; the excess reformed to effectuate the general intention of the articles. Dillon v. Dillon, 1 Ball. & B. 77.

5. B., by will, gave all the residue of his estate that he might die possessed of, including the funds which shall be in the names of the trustees of his marriage settlement, which he directed should be considered part of his residuary personal estate, to trustees for his wife for life, and afterwards to his daughter, her husband and children. The testator had a power of appointment by deed or will, and was entitled at his death to a moiety of his settlement funds as representative of a deceased child who had attained a vested interest:—Held, that he did not intend to exercise the power or put his daughter to her election, but to dispose only of the moiety to which he was himself entitled. Re Bidwell, 11 W. R. 161; 8 L. T., N. S., 107; 1 N. R. 176; 9 Jur., N. S., 37; 32 L. J., Ch., 71.

6. A testator, having power to appoint to his children in remainder, after his brother's death, made his will, by which he left all property of every kind he died possessed of, or was entitled by reversion or otherwise, to his wife, giving her the power of dividing his property among his children as she might think proper; and by a codicil reciting that he had, on the marriage of his eldest son, executed a deed conveying over his interest in other lands, over which he had also a power of appointment, he desired the trustees of his will to hand over to his eldest son the reversionary property of every kind to which he was entitled after the death of his brother, the son binding himself to pay 3,000*l.* to his younger brother and sisters; and he appointed the eldest son joint executor with his wife. The testator had no other property on which the codicil could operate, which would be sufficient to pay the charge of 3,000*l.*:—Held, that the codicil was a good execution of the power. Jones v. Jones, 13 Ir. Ch. R. 409.

1. A. B., by his will of the 12th August, 1824, devised certain estates in trust for all and every the children or child of his son, S. H., subject to such charges, powers, and dispositions, etc., and in such manner and form as S. H., by any deed or writing properly attested, should direct and appoint; and in default of appointment, in trust for all and every the children and child of S. H. equally, share and share alike. A. B. died on the 20th March, 1827. S. H., by will of the 3rd June, 1826, being at that time and at the time of his death in possession of considerable property, devised, bequeathed, etc., and appointed all his real estates, and all the residue of his personal estate, and all such estate, property, and effects in or to which he was in any way interested, or of which he had any power to dispose or appoint, in trust, after paying an annuity to his wife, and providing for the maintenance and education of his children, to distribute the residue amongst his children as his wife should appoint; and in default, etc., to distribute it equally amongst them. This will was republished by S. H. on the 25th April, 1829. By a codicil of the 17th March, 1827, S. H., after increasing the annuity to his wife, and giving her a power of disposition over 50,000*l.*, directed that the residue should be divided so "that his sons should have as much as, and one-half more than, each of his daughters," etc. S. H. died on the 15th October, 1837, leaving his widow and three sons and seven daughters him surviving. On bill praying for a declaration that the power given to S. H. had been effectually exercised by him, and that no daughter of S. H. was entitled to any share or interest in the estates made subject to the power of appointment by the will of A. B.:—Held, that the equal distribution under the will of A. B. could only be disturbed by an appointment which should afford clear evidence of S. H.'s intention to execute the power; that no words in the will of S. H., importing an unequal distribution of his own property among his children, should be strained to extend to the property given to them by the will of A. B., unless upon sufficient manifestation of intention; and that as there had been no express reference by S. H. to, or to the property which was the subject of, the power of appointment and distribution given him by A. B., it had not been validly exercised. Hope v. Hope, 18 Jur. 823; 2 W. R. 674.

2. S. bequeathed to trustees 5,000*l.* stock, upon trust for the benefit of his daughter C. and of her husband (if any) during their joint lives and the life of the survivor, and after the death of the survivor, for the children of C.; and if there should be no child, upon trust for such person of the blood or kindred of C. as she should by will appoint; and in default of appointment, in trust for such person as at the decease of C. should be her next of kin. S. also gave to trustees 8,000*l.* stock, in trust for C., and he directed that it should be held upon the like trusts, and subject to the same powers, as declared concerning the 5,000*l.*, except as to the ultimate trust declared in the event of C. having no child, in default whereof he directed that the 8,000*l.* should, after the decease of C. and of her husband (if any), remain upon trust as to one moiety, for such person of her blood or kindred as she should by her will appoint, and as to the other moiety, in trust for such person as she should by will appoint; and in default of appointment of either or both moieties, in trust for such person as at her decease should be her next of kin. S. declared that C. might direct the trustees to invest the moiety of the 8,000*l.*, over which she had an absolute power of appointment by will, in the purchase of an annuity for her own life. By a codicil, S. empowered C. to direct the trustees to sell the moiety of the 8,000*l.* over which she had a general power of appointment, and to pay the proceeds to herself for her own use; and by a further codicil he empowered C. to direct the trustees to sell any part of the moiety of the 8,000*l.* which she was authorised to appoint to any person of her blood or kindred, and to pay the proceeds to herself. S. died in March 1855. C., by her will, dated in May 1855, after bequeathing legacies to persons of her blood or kindred, strangers, and charities, said, "I appoint as my executors A., B., and C., requesting these my executors will see this my last will and testament be fully and duly carried into effect." C. died in June 1855. The personal estate of the testatrix amounted to about 1,000*l.* sterling, and the legacies given by her will amounted, as alleged, to not less than 6,970*l.* sterling. C. did not exercise the power she possessed of requiring the trustees to apply any part of the 8,000*l.* stock in the purchase of an annuity, and never, except by her will, attempted to execute the power to dispose of any portion of that legacy. On a bill praying for a declaration that the will of C. was a valid execution of the powers given her of appointing the legacies of 5,000*l.* and 8,000*l.*, so far as might be necessary for giving effect to the legacies bequeathed by her will:—Held, that the will of C. operated as an execution of the power as to the moiety of 8,000*l.* subject to the general power, so as to make the fund available for the payment of legacies; but as to the other moiety of the 8,000*l.*, and the 5,000*l.*, the power to appoint these legacies amongst persons of C.'s blood or kindred was not sufficiently referred to, and the language of s. 27 of the 7 Will. 4 and 1 Vict., c. 26, could not be extended to a power so limited in its objects. Hawthorn v. Shedden, 2 Jur., N. S., 749; 25 L. J., Ch., 833; 3 Sm. & G. 293.

3. Testamentary power to appoint a trust fund among all or any of donee's children. Bequest by donee, as follows: "All my personal estate upon trust to pay all just debts and funeral expenses; to pay to E. 19*l.*, and to my daughter J., the whole of my furniture and household effects; and as to my money in the funds, and all my residue of my personal estate" upon further trusts for the benefit of J. At the date of the will and of the death, the testator had no money in the funds, and the trust fund consisted of consols:—Held, that the will was not an appointment. Re Mattingley, 2 John. & H. 496.

1. A father, on his son's marriage, conveyed a farm to the use of himself and his wife successively for life, with remainder to the children of the son. A power was reserved to the father by deed or will, to charge all or part of the hereditaments settled, with any sums or sum not exceeding 500*l.* for the portions of his younger children, and to create a term for securing the same. The father, by will, devised the farm to his son in fee, charged with the payment of legacies of 200*l.*, 200*l.*, and 100*l.* to the testator's three daughters. The will contained no reference to the settlement, and no limitation of any term, nor did the father otherwise exercise the power:—Held, that the will operated as an execution of the power of appointment of which the father was donee under the settlement. Davies v. Davies, 4 Jur., N. S., 1291; 28 L. J., Ch., 102.

2. A testator being entitled to personal property, derived indirectly through the wills of A. and his father, settled part of it on his marriage with a power of appointment among his children, leaving a fractional part in himself. He made his will, giving all the personal estate that he derived through the will of his father to his two daughters, exclusively of his other children:—Held, that the fractional part reserved to himself, satisfied the language of the gift, and that it was not an execution of his special power. Noel v. Noel, 4 Drew. 624.

3. Gift of residue after death of testator's widow to the brothers and sisters of testator's wife, and to their descendants in such proportions as testator's wife by her last will and testament may appoint. Testator's widow made a will, reciting the power, and disposing of the property of herself and her late husband. She afterwards revoked this will and made another, dated in 1851, not referring to the power whereby she gave part of the property which passed by her late husband's will to a son of one of her own sisters then living, and a further part thereof to a daughter of one of her late husband's brothers then living. On the question whether the will of the testator's widow operated as an appointment under the power:—Held, that it did not; and the Court declared that the persons to take were those brothers and sisters of the husband and wife who were living at the death of the tenant for life, and if any were dead, then the children of such as were dead were entitled to take by way of substitution. Tucker v. Billing, 2 Jur., N. S., 483.

4. A., a testator, having a power of appointment of a fund consisting of 3½ per cent. reduced annuities, unto and amongst such of the children of a prior testator as should be living at the death of A., in such shares and proportions as A. should by will appoint, gave by will two legacies to two of the three children of the original testator out of this stock; and as to all the residue of my property to be found in 3½ reduced (now reduced to 3½ per cent.), and all other property, to D. (the other child of the original testator) absolutely during her life, and to be disposed of as she shall think fit at her death":—Held, that the power did not justify the exclusion of any of the three children of the original testator, nor had the testator done so; and that it was a good execution of the power, and the third child took the residue. Re David, 1 L. T., N. S., 130; 1 Johns. 495; 6 Jur., N. S., 94; 29 L. J., Ch., 116.

5. By marriage articles, it was agreed that the interest of the amount of a policy of assurance, effected on the husband's life, should be applied, first, in payment of an annuity to the wife, and that the remainder of the interest should be paid among the issue of the marriage, in such shares as the husband and wife, or the survivor of them, should by deed or will appoint; and in default of appointment, share and share alike; and that the principal, after the death of the wife, should remain to the use of the issue of the marriage, in such manner and in such shares and proportions to and amongst the issue as the husband and wife, or the survivor of them, should by deed or will appoint, and for want of such appointment, share and share alike. The articles contained a covenant to execute all acts necessary to carry them into execution. The husband survived the wife; but by a codicil to his will, made in 1854, and in her lifetime, he willed and devised that whatever property he should die possessed of, or be entitled to, either freehold or otherwise, after the payment of his debts and funeral expenses, should be equally divided amongst his sons and daughters which he then had, or might have by his marriage; and that on the death of either of his sons or daughters by his marriage, before they arrived at twenty-one, the share or shares of him or her should be equally divided amongst the survivors. And he declared it to be his will and desire that, in the event of his being entitled to any property not named in his will, which contained an exclusive, and therefore invalid, appointment of the principal of the policy, his wife should be his residuary legatee:—Held, that the will and codicil did not amount to a valid execution of the power. Cronin v. Roche, 8 Ir. Ch. R. 103.

Held, also, that if a settlement had been executed, it should have contained a clause that, in the event of any of the children dying under age and unmarried, the share of the child so dying should go to the survivors. Ib.

6. Under the marriage settlement of a testator a fund was settled upon trust as he should appoint, and in default of appointment, upon trust, in the events which happened, for his son and his grandson equally. The testator appointed to his son a portion of the property. He afterwards made his will as follows: "I give and bequeath to my dear son the proceeds of all the policies of insurance on my life, and all other property which I may have at the time of my death. He will have to bring into hotchpot that portion of the fund settled on the marriage of his mother which has been already received by him; and then, as I make no further appointment under the power for that purpose, the whole settled fund will be equally divided between him and my little grandson":—Held, that the will did not operate as an appointment under the power in the settlement, and that the son was not bound to elect whether he would take under the will. Langslow v. Langslow, 2 Jur., N. S., 1057; 25 L. J., Ch., 610; 21 Beav. 522.

7. By a marriage settlement the husband had a power to appoint 1,800*l.* (invested in 3*l.* per cent. annuities) among the children of the marriage. By his will, without referring to the power, he bequeathed to three of his children a third part of the money which he had in the 3*l.* per cent. consols and 3*l.* per cent. annuities. He likewise bequeathed to his grandson, who was not an object of the power, 100*l.* out of his money in the Government funds, the same to be made up by each of his three children. The testator had eight children; two of them had died, and to one of these he had taken out administration for property sworn under 200*l.* He had no money in the funds at the time of his death:—Held, that the will was a good execution of the power, but that the bequest of the 100*l.* to the grandson was void. Rooke v. Rooke, 2 Dr. & Sm. 38; 31 L. J., Ch., 636; 10 W. R. 435; 6 L. T., N. S., 527.

1. A testatrix, having property of her own, and a power to appoint to her children other property of which she was tenant for life, gave the whole of the residue of her property, "except her freehold property," disposed of by a contemporaneous codicil, to A. The excepted freehold property was part of the subject of the power:—Held, in consequence of the exception, that the residue of the property, subject to the power, passed. Reid v. Reid, 26 Beav. 469.

A testatrix had ground-rents of her own, and ground rents of which, under the will of her husband, she was tenant for life, with power to appoint to her children. By her will she gave a son an annuity, payable "out of my ground rents." The Court having held, on another clause of her will, that "my property" included the husband's, also came to the conclusion that "my ground rents" also included the husband's. Ib.

2. A testatrix bequeathed all moneys belonging to her in the 3*l.* per cent. consols to two children and her son's widow. The only consols she was interested in were settled on her for life, with power to appoint amongst her children:—Held, that the will operated as an execution of the power as regarded the two-thirds to the two children, although it contained no other reference to the power or to the subject of it. Re Gratwick, 35 Beav. 215; 11 Jur., N. S., 919.

3. On the marriage of P. certain lands were vested in trustees for a term of years upon trust, in the events, which happened, to raise 4,000*l.* for the children of the marriage, payable as he, or, in default, his widow, should by deed or will appoint, and, in default of appointment by either parent, equally, in the usual mode. P. by his will directed all his lands, including all those comprised in the term, to be sold, and out of the produce gave portions to his five sons, and 1,000*l.* each to three of his daughters. By a codicil he further gave 1,000*l.* each to his two remaining daughters, and then added:—"I hereby direct that no part of the produce of my lands shall be paid to any of my sons until the sums of 1,000*l.* each shall have been paid to each of my five daughters, or 5,000*l.* among the survivors of them, over and above and in addition to the equal distributive share of the 4,000*l.* mentioned in my marriage settlement, which each of them are (sic) entitled to":—Held, that P. had not thereby executed the power. Pennefather v. Pennefather, 7 Ir. R., Eq., 300.

4. A feme sole, having a limited power of appointment, made her will, whereby, after making certain specific bequests of jewellery, without referring either to the power or to the property subject to it, she "bequeathed the residue of her personal estate" amongst certain persons, all of whom (except one) were objects of the power. At the time of her death, she had (independently of the property subject to the power) the jewellery specifically bequeathed, and a reversionary interest in some trust moneys:—Held, that the will did not operate as an execution of the power. Humphrey v. Humphrey, 36 L. T., N. S., 91.

5. A testatrix having willed property to her daughter M. A. C. absolutely, in a codicil said, "All I have given my daughter M. A. C. I give her for her life only and at her disposal by will into my surviving family as she may think proper. In case she dies without will then I request her property may be divided to the females in Mrs. L.'s, Mr. W. C.'s, and Mr. J. C.'s families share and share alike." M. A. C. by her will, without referring to her mother's will or codicil, gave her property to a niece, being a grandchild of the testatrix:—Held, that M. A. C.'s will was not a good execution of the power contained in the codicil, and that Mrs. L.'s, Mr. W. C.'s, and Mr. J. C.'s daughters were entitled. Elgood v. Cole, 17 W. R. 953; 21 L. T., N. S., 80.

6. A testatrix, having power to appoint certain funds by will in favour of A., B., C., D., and E., in such parts, shares, and proportions as she might think fit, and having no other power, by her will gave legacies of 5*l.* each to A., B., and C., and all the residue of her property, of whatever kind and wheresoever situate, and over which she had any power of appointment, to D. and E., and died leaving some personal estate of her own:—Held, that the will was a valid execution of the power. Gainsford v. Dunn, 17 L. R., Eq., 405; 43 L. J., Ch., 403; 30 L. T., N. S., 283; 22 W. R. 499.

7. A testatrix, having a special power of appointment over two several funds, by a will dated 1826, after reciting her power of appointment over one of the funds and appointing such fund accordingly, and after devising her real estate to trustees, to sell and to stand possessed of the proceeds upon the trusts therein mentioned, gave and bequeathed, "and also in exercise of all powers and authorities" vested in her, appointed all her personal estate to trustees upon the same trusts as were thereinbefore declared concerning the proceeds of the sale of her real estate, which trusts were in favour of persons some of whom only were within the scope of the special power of appointment:—Held, that such residuary gift was an exercise of the special power of appointment. Maunsell v. Maunsell, 19 W. R. 1003; 24 L. T., N. S., 698.

8. A testator gave his estate by will to trustees in the following words:—"I give, devise, and bequeath all my property over which I have any disposing power." The trusts of the will were for his wife for life for her separate use, and after her death for all his children who should attain twenty-one in equal shares, and upon failure of children for the brothers and sistsrs of his wife:—Held, that the will must be read reddendo singula singulis, and operated as an appointment under two special powers, one of which was a power to appoint among his children subject to a life interest in his wife during widowhood; and the other was a power to appoint a life interest to his wife in a fund which, subject to such power, was held on trust for his children at twenty-one in equal shares. Thornton v. Thornton, 20 L. R., Eq., 599.

1. G. having a life interest in a fund, with a power to appoint the fund among her children, appointed by her will, which recited the power and the testatrix's intention to exercise it, a part of the fund to persons who were objects of the power; and then, without any reference to the power, proceeded to bequeath legacies to persons who were not objects of the power. She then directed payments of her debts and legacies, and after the payment thereof bequeathed the residue of her estate not specifically bequeathed, or over which she had a general power of appointment, to J. E. G., an object of the power:—Held, that the will of G. was not, as to the residue of her share in the fund, an exercise of the power of appointment. Butler v. Gray, 18 W. R. 193; 5 L. R., Ch., 26; 39 L. J., Ch., 291.

2. A devise and bequest of all a testator's property, both real and personal, will not operate to pass property over which he has only a limited power of appointment, though the devise and bequest are confined to objects of the power; but such property will go as in default of appointment. Wildbore v Gregory, 19 W. R. 967.

Under a marriage settlement, power was reserved to the husband to appoint, after the death of his wife, if she should survive him, so much of a particular freehold estate settled by him "as shall not exceed the annual income of 300*l.*," to the use of the children of the marriage; the same to be, in default of appointment, for the use of the children equally. The residue of the estate to be to the use of the husband absolutely. By his will he gave, devised, and bequeathed "the whole of my property, real and personal, consisting of a farm" (describing the freehold estate above mentioned), "and whatever may devolve to me by virtue of the marriage settlement," to a trustee upon trust after the death of his wife, for his five children, in unequal shares. He further gave to the trustee a discretionary power either to divide the income of "my entire property," according to the provisions before made, or to sell the whole, and divide the proceeds:—Held, that the will did not operate as an exercise of the power of appointment. S. C. 12 L. R., Eq., 482; 41 L. J., Ch., 129.

3. A widow, having power of appointment among her children by deed or will over real estate, appointed it to her two children, a son and daughter, in moieties by will. She afterwards executed another will, revoking all former wills made by her (without special reference to the former will and appointment), and devised and bequeathed all her real and personal estate to her daughter absolutely. Her son died in her lifetime, leaving issue one child, a son:—Held, that the second will revoked the first, but did not amount to an execution of the power of appointment. Harvey v. Harvey, 32 L. T., N. S., 141; 23 W. R. 478.

4. Under an exclusive power to appoint to children, the children being entitled in default of appointment in equal shares, the donee, by will, appointed the whole fund to trustees, upon trust as to 1,200*l.*, to pay the income to one of her children, J., for life, and after his death, for his children; and if J. should die without leaving children who should attain vested interests, then, that the 1,200*l.* should be added to and form part of the residue of the trust estate. The trusts of the residue were in favour of daughters for life, with testamentary powers. J. died leaving children. It being admitted that the gift to J.'s children was excessive:—Held, that on J.'s death the 1,200*l.* was not undisposed of, but was well appointed by the residuary gift. Re Meredith, 3 L. R., Ch. D., 757; 25 W. R. 107.

5. Under his marriage settlement a testator had a power of appointment by deed or will over personal estate among his children. He had no other power of appointment. By his will he devised and bequeathed all the real and personal estate of or to which he might be at the time of his death seised or entitled, or over which he might have "any beneficial power of disposition" (save such as were by his will otherwise devised or bequeathed) to trustees, upon trust for sale and conversion, and out of the proceeds to pay his funeral and testamentary expenses, debts, and legacies, and as to the residue of the proceeds, upon trust, as to one-third, for his eldest son; as to another third, for his younger sons in equal shares; and, as to the remaining third, upon trust for his daughters in equal shares, their shares to be settled for the benefit of themselves, their husbands, and children:—Held, that the power was not exercised by the will. Ames v. Cadogan, 12 L. R., Ch. D., 868; 48 L. J., Ch., 762; 27 W. R. 905; 41 L. T. 211.

6. A testator having a special power of appointment over certain real estate under an instrument dated prior to the Wills Act, made his will, which he declared should be an exercise of any power of appointment vested in him, and thereby devised such real estate in a manner which was held to be invalid. The will contained a general residuary devise in favour of a person who was an object of the power:—Held, that the residuary devise operated as an appointment under the power, and that the property passed to the residuary devisee. Freme v. Clement, 18 L. R., Ch. D., 499; 50 L. J., Ch., 801; 44 L. T. 399; 30 W. R. 1.

7. Instruments in exercise of powers of appointment are, as to execution and construction, subject to the law governing instruments of a like nature, disposing of the appointor's own property at the time of the appointment, and this whether or not the law as to execution and construction of such instruments is altered after the date of the instrument giving the power: if then the Wills Act were silent as to appointments, still, as by s. 25 it makes a void devise fall into the residue, it would also make the above void devise by way of appointment fall into the residue. Ib.

But the word "devise" in the Wills Act generally, unless a contrary intention can be shown, includes a devise by way of appointment under a special or general power, and it is to be so read in s. 25. The Act, therefore, alters the law as to the exercise of powers of appointment, and makes a void devise, as above, pass under the residuary clause. Ib.

1. C. P. had under his first marriage settlement, as the survivor of himself and his first wife, a power of appointment of certain funds by deed or will among the children of his first marriage: and had also under his second marriage settlement a power of appointment, after the death or second marriage of his second wife, of a fund settled on her for life or widowhood. By his will C. P. referred to and confirmed his first marriage settlement, and directed the trusts thereof to be fully carried out; and he also referred to and confirmed his second marriage settlement, and directed a fund to provide his second wife's life annuity to be invested. He then made certain other bequests, and as to all the rest, residue and remainder of his real and personal estate, and which he should in any way have power to dispose of or appoint by will, he gave, devised, and bequeathed the same unto and to the use of his executors and trustees, upon trust for conversion, and out of the proceeds to pay his funeral and testamentary expenses, and debts and legacies, and to divide the residue thereof among such of the children of his first marriage as should be living at his death, but as to the shares of his daughters therein, he settled them on his daughters for life, then on their husbands for life, and then on the issue of the daughters as they should appoint, and in default of such appointment then to his daughters' children, as to sons at twenty-one, as to daughters at twenty-one or marriage, and in default of daughters' children, then as his daughters should generally appoint, and in default of such appointment, then for his daughters' next of kin:—Held, that the will of C. P. operated as an exercise of the power to appoint among the children of his first marriage the fund settled on that marriage, which was vested in him under his first marriage settlement as being the survivor of himself and his first wife, notwithstanding that first, the testator had described the residue which he was giving as the residue of "my estate;" secondly, he had directed it to be converted; thirdly, he had directed payment out of it of his funeral and testamentary expenses, debts, and legacies; and fourthly, he had settled his daughters' shares for the benefit of their respective husbands and children. Price v. Price, 46 L. T. 228.

2. Effect of Charge of Debts.

2. Whether a testator intended by his will to execute a power, is to be collected from the whole instrument, and not from the force of any particular expression. In this case, the testator devised his estates, and made disposition of part of the fund to be produced by the sale of the estates to purposes not warranted by the power; but still, upon the whole will, the Court held that he intended to execute the power. The recital of a deed is a key to the construction, where the operative part is doubtfully expressed, and not otherwise. Bailey v. Lloyd, 5 Russ. 330; 7 L. J., Ch., 98.

3. Where a testatrix having personal estate of her own (and of considerable amount), and a power of appointment amongst her brothers and sisters over certain stock standing in the names of trustees, after directing speedy payment of her debts and testamentary expenses out of her personal estate, and giving certain legacies out of the funds standing in the trustees' names, being only part thereof, and without any reference to the power, she bequeathed all the residue of her estate, "after payment of the before mentioned legacies," to two persons equally who were objects of the power:—Held, that the legacies being an appointment of part, the residuary clause applied also to the part undisposed of. Elliott v. Elliott, 15 Sim. 321; 15 L. J., N. S., Ch., 393; 10 Jur. 730.

4. Testatrix having a testamentary power of appointment, in favour of her children, over certain sums of stock standing in the names of A. and B. as trustees, gave, bequeathed, and, by virtue of every power enabling her in that behalf, appointed all the property of or to which she was then, or at the time of her death should or might be possessed or entitled, or have power to dispose, to A. and B. upon trust, after payment of her debts and funeral and testamentary expenses, to invest the residue thereof in their names in the funds, or upon Government or real security; and she then declared trusts in favour of her children. She died possessed of personal estate more than sufficient to pay her debts and funeral and testamentary expenses:—Held, that her will was not an exercise of the power. Clogstoun v. Walcott, 13 Sim. 523; 7 Jur. 616.

5. Realty was settled to such uses as A. should appoint, so only that every such appointment should be made in favour of a child or children or other issue of A. to be born in his lifetime. A., by will, devised all his real and personal estate, whereof he had power to dispose, to trustees, upon trust to sell (with power to give receipts and to discharge purchasers), and apply the proceeds in payment of his debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, and, subject thereto, to stand possessed of the proceeds in trust for his children, in certain shares:—Held, that the will amounted to an execution of the power of appointment, notwithstanding the invalid attempt to throw the burden of the testator's debts on the settled property. Cowx v. Foster, 1 John. & H. 30; 6 Jur., N. S., 1051; 29 L. J., Ch., 886.

Held, also, that the trustees could give a valid discharge to a purchaser. Ib.

6. A husband, having a power to appoint the income of a fund to his wife for life, and no other power of appointment, by his will directed payment of his debts, and then, by a separate clause, devised all property, of whatever description, belonging to him, "or over which he might at his decease have any power, disposition, or control," to his wife, her heirs and legal representatives, in full property for ever absolutely:—Held, that the will operated an an exercise of the power. Re Teape, 43 L. J., Ch., 87; 16 L. R., Eq., 442; 28 L. T. 799; 21 W. R. 780.

7. A testatrix having a general power to appoint 500*l.* and a special power to appoint the residue of property, gave all her real and personal estate whatsoever and wheresoever, and of which she had any power to appoint or dispose of, to trustees, in the first place to pay her debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, and then to divide the residue between the objects of the special power:—Held, that the special power was well executed. Forrior v. Jay, 10 L. R., Eq., 550; 39 L. J., Ch., 686; 18 W. R. 1130; 23 L. T., N. S., 302.

1. H. bequeathed 1,000*l.*, in case his daughter S. should die leaving issue, to be at her disposal unto such issue, and directed that that sum should be paid and payable to such issue, being a son or sons, at the age of twenty-one, and being a daughter or daughters at the age of twenty-one or marriage, in such proportions as S. should by deed or will appoint. S., having two daughters, M. and A., the latter being the wife of F., bequeathed all her property, including that over which she had any disposing power, to trustees, as to one moiety, for M., her heirs and assigns, and as to the other moiety, upon trust to pay the dividends to A. for her life, for her separate use without power of anticipation, and on the death of A. in the lifetime of F., upon trusts, in default of appointment by A., in favour of her children as therein mentioned, and upon other trusts as therein mentioned. The trustees of H.'s will having paid the money into court, M., F., and A. petitioned the Court as to its disposal. Ordered, that one moiety of the residue of the fund should be transferred to M., and the other moiety carried to the account of A.'s moiety, and the dividends paid to her separate use, without prejudice to any question. Re Harris, 20 W. R. 742.

I. PROPERTY INCLUDED IN APPOINTMENT.

2. A testatrix, after reciting a power of appointment given to her by her deceased father's will, over certain personal property, and stating that she computed such property to be of the value of 18,000*l.*, or thereabouts, appointed that sum, whether the same should be the whole or parcel only of the amount of such property, to trustees upon certain trusts:—Held, that the appointment extended only to the sum of 18,000*l.* Young v. Martin, 2 Y. & Coll. 582; 7 Jur. 1147.

3. Semble, that by an appointment duly made of a whole estate to the uses of a marriage settlement by a party thereto, who thereby also granted and released a moiety only of the estate to the same uses, the entirety of the estate passed. Farmer v. Farmer, 1 H. L. Ca. 724.

4. Testatrix, after reciting a power of appointment over 10,000*l.* given to her by her father's will, in exercise of the power appointed "the said sum of 10,000*l.* then secured on mortgage, and any other moneys representing the same," to trustees in certain shares and proportions in trust. The 10,000*l.*, by changes of investment, now amounted to 11,463*l.* 14*s.* 7*d.*:—Held, that the whole 11,463*l.* 14*s.* 7*d.* was well appointed. Lefevre v. Freeland, 24 Beav. 403.

5. A testator bequeathed certain shares of the residue of his estate to trustees, upon trust to accumulate for such of his issue as his widow should by deed or will appoint. The widow by her will referring to the power, appointed certain definite sums to the issue, on the express supposition that the shares would realise a certain sum per share; but if not, then she directed that the legatees should receive in proportion to their respective bequests:—Held, that the appointment extended to the accumulations of the shares. Thompson v. Teulon, 22 L. J., Ch., 243.

6. Bonuses on bank stock are capital. A. had a power of appointment over 7,150*l.* stock: certain bonuses accrued thereon, which were laid out upon stock, upon the trusts and subject to the appointment; and after the accretion of these, A. exercised his power, but only noticed the original stock and the first bonus thus: "And also the said sum of 715*l.* 5 per cent., etc., together with all such further additions, in the nature of profit, to be made to the said bank stock in my lifetime":—Held, that all the bonuses passed under the appointment. Carver v. Bowles, 9 L. J., Ch., 91.

7. A. and B. his wife, resident abroad, had a life interest in Government stock, with a joint power of appointment by deed in favour of their children; and B. was tenant for life of other stock, with remainder to the children of the marriage. The dividends on both sums of stock were transmitted through the banking firm of C. & Co. to A. and B., who had no other account with that firm. In 1830 A. and B. appointed by deed one-half of the first fund to their eldest son, and the remainder among their younger sons equally, reserving a power of revocation as to the shares of the younger sons. In 1839 and 1843, on the respective marriages of two of the younger sons, A. and B. executed joint instruments (unattested), by which they deposed that the two sons respectively should receive from the survivor of them a capital property of 7,000 dollars, "which stands in the English Bank of C. & Co.":—Held, that, in point of construction, the words "which stand in the English bank of C. & Co." described both funds, and that each of the two sons was entitled, under the two latter instruments, to receive only from the fund over which the power of appointment extended so much money as with the share he was entitled to out of the other fund would make up the sum thereby provided for him. Sheffield v. Von Donop, 7 Hare 42; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 481; 12 Jur. 672.

8. E. S., having a power of appointment over 10,000*l.* stock, by her will appointed 150*l.* a year, part of the interest thereof, or the stocks, etc., into which the same should be changed at her death, to I. S. for life; and after his death she appointed so much of the 10,000*l.* or of the stocks, etc., into which the same might be then changed, from which the 150*l.* should have arisen, to A. B.; and as to so much of the 10,000*l.*, or the stocks, etc., into which the same should be changed at her death, which should not be necessary to answer the annuity, she appointed the same to I. B. After E. S. made her will the trustees sold the stock, and invested the proceeds (6,600*l.*) on mortgage, which after her death was paid off, and under a decree of the Court invested in 7,143*l.* consols:—Held, that A. B. was entitled to 5,000*l.* consols, as being the capital of the 150*l.*, and I. B. to the residue. Bullock v. Thomas, 9 Sim. 634; 3 Jur. 314.

1. M. C., by his will, gave two leasehold estates (each of which was subject to a distinct mortgage), and all the residue of his estate, subject to the payment of his debts, to trustees, for his wife E. C., for life, with remainder as she should appoint. E. C. paid off both mortgages, and took an assignment of each to a trustee, "to the end and intent that the same might be kept on foot for her benefit." She afterwards executed her power of appointment over both estates; over the one by a deed poll, by which she annexed to the gift a condition that her appointees should release a certain claim which might have been enforced against the estate; and over the other by her will, by which, after reciting her power of appointment over the premises (describing them), she appointed the same to trustees, upon trust to pay the rents, etc., to certain of her children:—Held, that it was E. C.'s intention to keep these charges on foot, and, therefore, that her appointees took subject to them. Cole v. Stutely, 6 Jur. 314.

M. C.'s general assets being insufficient to pay off the mortgage debts:—Held, that the leasehold premises passed to his wife's appointees cum onere. Ib.

2. Hereditaments were, by deed of 1830, conveyed to a trustee for sale, the produce to be held as A. and B. should appoint. Part of the property was taken by a railway company, and the purchase money was laid out in the purchase of cottages, which, in 1850, were conveyed to the trustees. In 1851, by deed poll, reciting that by the settlement the property (describing it) had been conveyed to the uses above-mentioned, A. and B. appointed all the moneys to arise from the sale of the aforesaid hereditaments, and the said hereditaments until such sale:—Held, that the cottages were not included in the appointment. Collinson v. Collinson, 24 Beav. 269.

3. In 1858, C. wrote to his bankers requesting them to purchase 2,000*l.* consols, to be added to the sum "now standing in my name," and the dividends to be received by them with this addition as before. C. was tenant for life under his marriage settlement of consols on which the dividends were received by the bankers under a general power of attorney from the trustees. The bankers wrote stating the names in which the consols stood, and asking if the investment was to be made in his name or the trustees'. He thereupon called and endorsed the letter "Make the investment in the trustees' names." The trustees were never informed of this, but the investment was made and the dividends received by C. till his death in 1870. In 1862, he and his wife executed a joint appointment to children under the settlement, of the original sum of consols, not mentioning the addition:—Held, that the 2,000*l.* consols were included in the settlement, and passed as in default of appointment. Re Curtois, 14 L. R., Eq., 217; 41 L. J., Ch., 631; 26 L. T. 863.

4. By a settlement a fund was conveyed to trustees, upon trust, after the death of husband and wife, to pay the same unto and amongst the child or children of the marriage, or unto and amongst the issue of such child or children, in case such child or children should then be dead leaving issue, as the husband should appoint; and in default of appointment, and in case such child or children should die in their father's lifetime leaving issue, then upon trust that the share of such child or children should be paid to the issue of such child or children so dying, at such times and in such shares and proportions as such child or children if living would have been entitled to. The trustees applied the trust funds, with a small sum advanced by the husband, in the purchase of a copyhold estate upon the trusts of the marriage settlement. The husband made his will, and by a codicil thereto, after reciting the marriage settlement and the purchase of the copyhold estate, and that, the trust funds being insufficient, he had contributed 300*l.* or thereabouts towards the purchase of the same; and further reciting, that by virtue of the marriage settlement, and the deed or deeds executed upon the purchase of the estate, he had power to direct that the 300*l.* or thereabouts should be raised and paid to such of his issue as he should appoint; and reciting that no appointment of the money or any part thereof had been made by him, and that he was desirous of making such appointment; he thereby, by virtue of the power reserved to him in the marriage settlement, or the deed or deeds, and of every power and authority, directed and appointed that the 300*l.*, or such other sum as he was empowered to appoint, should be raised and paid to his grandson. There was issue of the marriage two children, A. and B., both of whom died in their father's lifetime, leaving children and grandchildren:—Held, that the appointment by the husband was intended to operate over the whole fund over which he had any power of appointment, and was not confined to the money advanced by him in part payment of the purchase money. Robinson v. Sykes, 2 Jur., N. S., 895; 23 Beav. 40; 26 L. J., Ch., 782.

II. ABATEMENT AND PRIORITY.

5. Mrs. C. had a power to appoint three sums of 10,000*l.* each: the first, under her father's will, amongst her children; the second, under her mother's will, to any person; and the third, also under her mother's will, amongst her children. In 1836 the second sum was appointed to her husband, and paid to him. In 1838 the legacy duty was paid on the third sum, which reduced it to 9,900*l.* In 1842 she purported to appoint the two sums of 10,000*l.* under her mother's will to her two daughters equally; and in 1843 she, by her will, appointed 9,900*l.*, described as derived from her father, to her daughter A. B., and 10,000*l.*, also described as settled by her father and mother, to the other daughter C. D., and she confirmed the deeds of 1842, so far as they were valid, and not inconsistent with her will; and declared, that if she had exceeded her powers, her will should have effect under the doctrine of election. The Court, having come to the conclusion that Mrs. C., when she made her will, believed she had the power of appointing 19,000*l.*, and appointed 9,900*l.* to A. B., and 10,000*l.* to C. D.:—Held, that the doctrine of Page v. Leapingwell (18 Ves. 463) applied; and that as the testatrix had then only the power of appointing the first sum of 10,000*l.*, it must be divided between the two legatees in the proportion of 99 to 100. Lauris v. Clutton, 15 Beav. 65; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 226; 16 Jur. 825.

1. A donee of a power affecting two sums of stock of different description, appointed a gross amount, part of one of them, and exceeding one-fourth part of it. Afterwards she executed, successively, deeds purporting to appoint aliquot parts of both funds, as one subject, and without noticing the previous appointment of the gross sum, which was never severed from the mass. The appointees comprised all the parties entitled, subject to the appointment, and the aliquot part so appointed amounted to four-fifths, thus exceeding, with the earliest appointment, the entirety of one of the funds:—Held, first, that the latter appointees were not entitled to put the earlier to their election, so that the excess might be made good out of the unappointed one-fifth of the unexhausted fund; and, secondly, that the successive appointments of the aliquot parts operated upon the aliquot parts of the whole of each fund, and that therefore the loss arising from the deficiency of the one fund fell upon the last appointees. Trollope v. Routledge, 1 De G. & Sm. 662; 11 Jur. 1002.

2. Under a marriage settlement a sum of consols was held in trust for the husband for life, remainder as to a certain portion of it for the wife for life, remainder for such one or more of the children as the husband and wife should appoint, remainder for the children at twenty-one, and as to the rest of the consols in trust after the husband's death for the children absolutely at twenty-one. There were five children who attained twenty-one. The parents, conceiving that they had power to appoint the whole of the consols, made appointments at different times to two of them, which more than exhausted that portion of the consols which was appointable. Each deed of appointment declared that the appointee should not be entitled to any further or other share in the trust fund under the settlement until he should have put in hotchpot the thereby appointed share, unless a contrary intention should be expressed in the instrument by which any further appointment should be made:—Held, that though the appointable part of the consols was not sufficient to answer fully the second appointment, yet there was to be no apportionment, and that the second appointee as well as the first was prevented by the hotchpot clause from taking any part of his one-fifth of the unappointable consols, unless he would give up the whole of what he would get under the appointment, and that the unappointable consols belonged wholly to the three other children. Warde v. Firmin, 11 Sim. 235; 10 L. J., N. S., Ch., 43; 5 Jur. 288.

3. A testator having a power of appointment by will over a sum of stock, bequeathed two sums of 5,000*l.* and 500*l.* sterling thereout to A. and B., and the residue to his son. The stock became in equity liable to his debts, and, by payment thereof and of the costs of the suit, the fund became less than 5,500*l.* sterling:—Held, that the pecuniary and residuary legatees were not liable to abate proportionably, but that the residuary gift failed altogether. Petre v. Petre, 14 Beav. 197; 15 Jur. 693.

4. Three policies of assurance on the settlor's life were assigned by a voluntary deed on trust for A., B., and his other children, in such shares, etc., as he should appoint. He, on A.'s marriage, appointed 2,000*l.* out of the sums secured by the policies to her: he made a similar appointment on B.'s marriage. By his will he appointed 2,000*l.* to each of the other children. Two of the policies having dropped before his death:—Held, that the sums given to A. and B. should be paid in full, according to the priorities of the appointments, and the entire loss fall on the other objects. Borough v. Close, 11 Ir. Eq. R. 391.

5. A donee of a power of appointment over a gross sum of money which, in default of appointment, was to be divided equally among her children, appointed a specific sum which she described as being part of the gross sum, but she did not make any appointment of the residue, the gross sum proving deficient:—Held (reversing 2 Jur., N. S., 943; 4 W. R. 453), that the specific sum appointed was to be paid in full, and not ratably out of the deficient gross sum. Booth v. Alington, 6 De G. M. & G. 613; 3 Jur., N. S., 49; 26 L. J., Ch., 138; 5 W. R. 107.

B., the wife of B., having an absolute power of appointment over a sum of 120,000*l.* bequeathed by the will of her father, by deed, reciting that she was desirous, in the event of her dying in the lifetime of her husband, that the sum of 30,000*l.*, part of the sum of 120,000*l.*, might immediately after her decease be paid to the husband as a permanent and certain provision for him, appointed that sum to be paid to him immediately after her death. The estate of her father proved insufficient to pay the legacies in full, and the legacy of 120,000*l.* had, with others, to abate:—Held, that the husband, the appointee, was entitled to an absolute sum of 30,000*l.*, and not a mere aliquot part of the abated legacy of 120,000*l.* Ib.

6. By a settlement of 1835 a sum of 16,000*l.* was vested in trustees upon trust for A. for life; and after her decease, upon trust for her children as she should appoint. By a settlement of 1847, 5,000*l.* consols was vested in trustees upon trust for A. for life; and after her death, upon trust for her children or grandchildren (such grandchildren to be born in her lifetime) as she should appoint. A., by her will, after referring generally to these settlements, appointed "all such real or personal estate as she should have power to appoint or otherwise dispose of" to trustees, upon trust to sell, and out of the proceeds of sale to invest 3,500*l.*, and to pay the income to her daughter B. for life, and after her death, for her children as therein mentioned; and "as to the residue of the proceeds of the said sale," she devised and bequeathed the same to C. At the death of A. her daughter B. was unmarried:—Held, that the 3,500*l.* must be considered as appointed ratably out of both funds. Swete v. Tindal, 31 L. T., N. S., 223.

Held, also, that, subject to B.'s life interest, the 3,500*l.* remained unappointed, and did not pass to C. under the residuary gift. Ib.

1. A testatrix, having the power to raise and appoint 10,000*l.* out of real estate, after directing that sum to be raised, and appointing 5,000*l.* of it to A., proceeded to direct the residue to be distributed in the proportions thereinafter mentioned, naming certain beneficiaries, among others, a charity. She then gave and bequeathed to B., C., and D. certain sums, and provided that, in the event of any of the legatees or appointees dying in her lifetime, their share should go over to other persons. The money thus disposed of amounted to 8,950*l.*:—Held, that this was a good appointment of the whole 10,000*l.*, and ordered that, after setting aside 5,000*l.* for A., the residue was to be apportioned among the remaining appointees, including the charity, in proportion to the amounts set against their names; that the sum apportioned to the charity must sink for the benefit of the estate charged with raising the 10,000*l.*, and that the cost of raising the 10,000*l.* was to be borne by the estate. Cust v. Middleton, 18 L. T., N. S., 36.

2. Where a testatrix appointed 600*l.* to a trustee to invest and pay 75*l.* to each of her daughters, and to apply the income of the residue for the benefit of her granddaughter till she attained seventeen, and then to pay 100*l.* more to each of her daughters, and apply the income of the residue for the benefit of her granddaughter till she attained twenty-one, and then to pay such residue to the granddaughter for her own absolute use and benefit; and the fund had been diminished by certain costs and was insufficient:—Held, that the gift of the residue to the granddaughter was not a gift of a fixed sum, but only of what might be left after payment of the fixed legacies, and that, therefore, the legacies to the daughters must be paid in priority, and were not liable to abate pari passu with the residue. Harley v. Moon, 1 Dr. & Sm. 623; 31 L. J., Ch., 140; 7 Jur., N. S., 1227; 10 W. R. 146.

3. A married woman, having over one fund an absolute power of appointment and over two other funds a power of appointment by will in case she should die in the lifetime of her husband, and an absolute interest in the events (which happened) of her surviving her husband and having no children, attempted to dispose of both funds, by way of appointment, by a will made in her husband's lifetime and not republished after his death. The fund, which was well disposed of, being insufficient to satisfy the legacies in full:—Held, that those of the next of kin, who were also legatees, were entitled to have their legacies paid (ratably with the other legatees) out of the fund disposed of by the will, and at the same time to share in the undisposed-of residue, without being put to their election. Blaiklock v. Grindle, 17 W. R. 114.

4. A testator gave his real estate and the residue of the personalty to sell and convert and pay certain annuities, and after the decease of his wife 5,000*l.* to such persons, etc., as she should by will appoint. The widow by her will, reciting the power, gave 5,000*l.* in her husband's will mentioned to his trustees, to call in and invest the same, and stand possessed of the dividends and interest as to one moiety during the life of her niece, A., for her separate use, and after her decease (subject to the power of her appointing any part of such moneys not exceeding 1,000*l.*) on like trusts for her niece S., and as to the other moiety, on the same terms as were used with respect to the first moiety to her niece S., and she gave her nieces power to appoint by will any part of the said trust moneys (not exceeding 1,000*l.*), and after the decease of the survivor, that the trustees should stand possessed of the trust moneys (subject to the payment of the respective sums not exceeding 1,000*l.* each) for C. D. and S. D. The estate was deficient, and 2,148*l.* 19*s.* only was apportioned in respect of the 5,000*l.* A. by her will gave 1,000*l.* to S., and the representative of C. D. and S. D. contended that there must be an abatement in respect of the 1,000*l.*:—Held, that there must be such abatement. Miller v. Huddlestone, 18 L. T., N. S., 203; 37 L. J., Ch., 421; 6 L. R., Eq., 65.

5. The equitable doctrine of cumulative gifts does not apply to appointments under powers. England v. Lavers, 15 W. R. 51; 3 L. R., Eq., 63.

6. When an appointment is made to take effect out of a trust fund generally, and afterwards an appointment is made of a specific portion of the trust fund, the portion of the fund not specifically appointed must be first applied in satisfaction of the first appointment; and the specifically-appointed portion is only to be resorted to in the event of a deficiency. Morgan v. Gronow, 42 L. J., Ch., 410; 16 L. R., Eq., 1; 28 L. T., N. S., 434.

7. An appointor by deed appointed specified shares of a trust fund of consols, "or other the stocks, funds, and securities of which the same should then consist, or thereafter should or might consist, or upon which the same, or any part or parts thereof, should then, or thereafter should or might be invested," to appointees, named, and the residue to C. At the date of the execution of the deed the appointor was aware that the fund had diminished in value, through re-investment, and at the time of his death it proved insufficient to satisfy the specific appointments irrespective of the residue:—Held, that it must be distributed ratably amongst the appointees, exclusive of C. De Lisle v. Hodges, 30 L. T., N. S., 158; 43 L. J., Ch., 385; 22 W. R. 363.

8. A father having power to appoint 10,000*l.* among his children, and having exercised the power by appointing 3,000*l.* to one child, appointed by will 10,000*l.* among all his children nominatim, being 3,000*l.* in excess of the power. One of the children, to whom 4,000*l.* was thus appointed, having died in the testator's lifetime, so that his appointed share lapsed:—Held, that the deficiency of the other shares should be made up out of the lapsed share. Eales v. Drake, 45 L. J., Ch., 51; 1 L. R., Ch. D., 217; 24 W. R. 184.

1. The donee of a special power to appoint (subject to a life interest) 3,000*l.* raisable out of the proceeds of two policies and of real property, made three appointments by successive deeds of 1,000*l.*, described as part of the 3,000*l.*, in favour of three objects of the power. The property available eventually, owing to the insolvency of the insurance office, fell short of 3,000*l.*:—Held, that the appointees took according to priority of appointment, and not ratable portions of the fund. Stokes v. Bridgman, 47 L. J., Ch., 759.

Held, also, that the sums appointed were not to be answered ratably by the different properties from which the sum of 3,000*l.* was raisable, but that each 1,000*l.* in its entirety was charged upon the aggregate fund. Ib.

2. By a marriage settlement a special power of appointment, by deed or will, was given over a sum of 10,000*l.*, which was invested on certain mortgage security. The donee of the power made successive revocable appointments, by deed, of sums of 3,000*l.*, 1,200*l.*, 1,000*l.*, and 1,000*l.* (respectively described as part of the 10,000*l.*), in favour of three objects of the power. He confirmed these appointments by his will, and appointed the residue of the fund among objects of the power. The mortgage security was bad, and the fund became insufficient to satisfy the sums appointed:—Held, that the appointments took effect in order of date, and that the appointees did not take ratable portions of the fund. Gilbert v. Whitfield, 52 L. J., Ch., 210; 48 L. T. 383.

III. SHARES IN UNAPPOINTED RESIDUE AND HOTCHPOT.

3. A testator having by his will charged 6,000*l.* on his real estate, directed the same to be paid to and among such of his younger children, in such shares and proportions, as his wife should appoint, and the wife having by her will directed the inheritor "three of the 6,000*l.* I wish to have given to the two elder girls":—Held, that this was a good appointment of the 3,000*l.*, and that the appointees took as tenants in common and not as joint tenants; and as to the remaining 3,000*l.*:—Held, that it was to go and be divided amongst all the objects of the power equally, including those to whom an appointment of the other 3,000*l.* had been made; and that they were not bound to bring their shares into hotchpot, when there is no express clause in the instrument creating the power so requiring, which direction should, therefore, be always inserted in order to prevent such accumulation. Alloway v. Alloway, 2 Con. & L. 517; 4 Dr. & War. 380.

There is nothing better established than that any portion of a fund, the subject of a power which is not appointed, goes as it would have gone in default of any appointment. Ib.

4. On marriage 4,000*l.* was settled in trust after the decease of the husband and wife, to pay among all and every the child and children, other than an eldest or only son, at such time and in such proportion as he or she or the survivor should appoint by deed or will; for want of appointment, among such child or children other than, etc., equally to be divided; if but one, to that one, payable at twenty-one or marriage, or as soon after as the life interest should drop; the shares in the 4,000*l.* of any dying before, payable, or so much as should not be appointed to go to the survivors at the same time. There were four children; the marriage settlement of one recited that she was entitled to 1,000*l.*, part of this fund; one-fourth of it was appointed to another on this marriage; and to a third, 1,000*l.* as her share of that portion; the fourth died above twenty-one, before his father, who survived his wife, and died without any further appointment:—Held, that 3,000*l.* was well appointed, and that the remainder vested in all equally, according to the direction for want of appointment. Wilson v. Piggott, 2 Ves. J. 351.

5. Parties having a power of appointment of certain funds amongst children, and no power of appointment over other funds, to which the same children were entitled in equal shares, executed several instruments, by mistake assuming to appoint both funds:—Held, that notwithstanding the mistake, all the appointments were valid and operative, as to the funds expressed in them that were subject to the power; but that the effect of the hotchpot clauses contained in the instruments of appointment was to exclude the appointees respectively from the whole of the benefits thereby intended to be given to them, unless they gave up the whole of the shares to which they were respectively entitled in the fund not subject to the power. Warde v. Firmin, 11 Sim. 235; 10 L. J., N. S., Ch., 43; 5 Jur. 288.

6. Where two funds were settled on tenant for life, with remainder to his children, as to one fund as he should appoint, and as to the other in equal shares, and the appointment did not refer exclusively to the former fund:—Held, that the appointee was entitled to his share of the other fund, and to have the sum mentioned in the appointment made up to him out of the former fund. Sheffield v. Von Donop, 7 Hare 42; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 481; 12 Jur. 672.

7. A father executed a power of appointment under which his four younger children, B., C., D., and E., became entitled, subject to his life interest, to 30,000*l.* in equal shares. The father afterwards, by several instruments of appointment, affected to appoint the whole fund to B., C., and D., in the following shares, viz., to B. 13,000*l.*, to C. 5,000*l.*, and to D. 12,000*l.* E., who was a son, died in his father's lifetime intestate and without issue; whereupon his share devolved to the father. After E.'s decease, the father, with a view to support the subsequent appointment, executed a deed-poll, declaring that the original appointment, under which the children took equally, was made by mistake:—Held, that though the subsequent appointments were invalid, so far as related to the shares of B., C., and D., yet, as regarded the share of E., the father was bound by the statement in the deed-poll; and that E.'s share, amounting to 7,500*l.*, must be apportioned between B., C., and D., in satisfaction pro tanto of the losses which, through the invalidity of the subsequent appointments, had been sustained by their respective shares. Armytage v. Armytage, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 461; 6 Jur. 790.

8. Power of appointment among three persons, executed by a transfer of one-third to one under an order on petition, stating that the person having the power was desirous that the fund might be equally divided; that person dying without any farther execution, the Court gave the two remaining thirds respectively to another of the objects, and to the administratrix of the third, who was dead, but had survived the person having the power. Fortescue v. Gregor, 5 Ves. 553.

1. A testator gave a fund to four persons, or any of them, in such shares, etc., as A. B. should appoint, and in default equally. He directed that such four persons should bring into hotchpot the amount of advances he might make to any of them in his life:—Held, that the hotchpot clause operated only on the unappointed fund, if any. Brooklehurst v. Flint, 16 Beav. 100.

2. A sum of consols was settled (subject to life estates) for the benefit of the children of A. and B. as they should appoint, and in default for the children equally. There were two children. A. by will gave one child H. an annuity for life, declaring that if no appointment should be made of the sum of consols, or if any appointment should be made of the sum of consols, or if any appointment should be made thereof whereby H. should be benefited, then the bequest of the annuity should be void. Afterwards A. and B. joined in appointing to the other child a moiety of the sum of consols. No other appointment was ever made:—Held, that H. did not lose the annuity. Arnott v. Tyrrell, 21 Beav. 49.

3. Power was reserved under a settlement for husband and wife jointly to appoint a fund amongst the children of the marriage, and in default upon trust to assign the capital and interest, or so much as there should be no joint appointment of, unto the children of the marriage, in equal proportions, but no child taking under any appointment made in exercise of the power was to be entitled to any share of the unappointed part of the fund without bringing his appointed share into hotchpot. The husband and wife executed an appointment directing the trustees to stand possessed of the fund, and the interest which should accrue after their death, "upon the trusts following (that is to say), to appropriate one-fifth of the capital for the benefit of each of the five daughters exclusive of all other the children of the marriage," for their separate use, the share of each daughter dying unto her children or their issue; in case of failure of issue the daughter's share to go to her sisters, but in case all the daughters should die without issue then to divide the capital equally between the sons of the marriage:—Held, that the daughters each took for life one-fifth of the appointed fund, and that the residue of the fund went as in default of appointment. Rucker v. Scholefield, 11 W. R. 137; 32 L. J., Ch., 46; 9 Jur., N. S., 67; 1 Hem. & M. 36; 1 N. R. 48.

The settlement giving the power contained the usual hotchpot clause:—Held, that the life interest given by the appointment must be valued and brought into hotchpot. Ib.

4. D. by his will directed his trustees to raise such sum of money for the younger children of T., not exceeding 8,000*l.*, as T. should appoint; and in default of such appointment, the sum of 8,000*l.* T., being about to marry, irrevocably appointed that 6000*l.* should be raised for the younger children of his then intended marriage; and if he should survive his wife and not have any issue by a future marriage, then 2,000*l.* more to the same children, reserving the power of appointing the same among them. He afterwards appointed to one of these younger children 2,000*l.*, describing it as part of the sum of 8,000*l.* made raisable by the will. He subsequently died in the lifetime of his wife:—Held, that T. having given no direction that no more than 6,000*l.* should be raised, the whole 8,000*l.* must be raised; and that the appointee of the 2,000*l.* was entitled to share in the unappointed 6,000*l.* Walmsley v. Vaughan, 5 W. R. 549; 26 L. J., Ch., 503; 3 Jur., N. S., 497; 1 De G. & J. 114. Varying 5 W. R. 12; 2 Jur., N. S., 1117; 3 Sm. & Giff. 353.

5. An appointment to one of a class of a part of a fund as "her part, share, and proportion," does not prevent her participating in the unappointed fund, limited to the class equally in default of appointment. Wombwell v. Hanrott, 14 Beav. 143; 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 581.

6. Under a marriage settlement, the husband and wife had a power of appointing a fund among their children, and in default of appointment, or so far as it did not extend, the fund was to go to the children equally. There were three children of the marriage. An appointment of one-third of the fund was made in favour of one of the children, yet so as not to affect the same power further than to the extent specified, and also, in case of no complete exercise or execution of the same power or authority as to the share of the fund not affected by the appointment, so as not to prejudice or affect the right or contingent interests of the appointee under the proviso for accruer, in case of the death of any or either of the other children, in such manner as specified in the settlement, and notwithstanding that in case of no complete appointment the then "appointment was intended to be made in lieu of all claims and demands" of the appointee to or for any original or principal share of the fund:—Held, that the appointees must be taken by necessary implication to have appointed the other two-thirds to their two other children, and that the appointee was not entitled to share in such two-thirds. Foster v. Cautley, 6 De G. M. & G. 55; 2 Jur., N. S., 25. Reversing 1 Jur., N. S., 202; 24 L. J., Ch., 252; 3 Sm. & G. 96; 3 W. R. 279. See also Clunc v. Apjohn, 17 Ir. Ch. R. 25; Armstrong v. Lynn, 9 Ir. Eq. R. 186.

7. On the marriage of M. and his wife two deeds were executed, one conveying English estates, the other Irish; in the former a term was created to raise 40,000*l.* portions; in the latter a term to raise 25,000*l.*; in each, after powers of appointment, was a hotchpot clause, declaring that "in default of any appointment to the contrary," no child should take any unappointed part without bringing his appointed share into hotchpot, and the Irish deed referred to the English. Two appointments were made of parts of the 40,000*l.*, and there was a direction in the deeds of appointment that the appointment should not prejudice the appointee's rights in the unappointed part:—Held, that he was not obliged to bring anything into hotchpot, but was entitled to his share in the 25,000*l.* and in the residue of the 40,000*l.*, as if he had taken nothing by appointment. Wellesley (Lady) v. Mornington (Lord), 1 Jur., N. S., 1202; 2 Kay & J. 143.

1. K. by his will gave a fund upon trust for such of the children of his daughter M. (who was then married) as she should by will appoint, and, in default of appointment, for her children equally. The will contained no hotchpot clause. M. had several children, some of whom were illegitimate, having been born before her marriage. By her will she appointed the fund to her "children E. and C., their executors, administrators, and assigns, for their own use and benefit." E. was one of the illegitimate, and C. one of the legitimate children:—Held, reading M.'s testamentary appointment as indicating an intention to appoint the fund in moieties, that one moiety passed to C. under the appointment, and that the other moiety, E. not being an object of the power, was divisible among all the legitimate children, as in default of appointment. Re Kerr, 4 L. R., Ch. D., 600; 46 L. J., Ch., 287; 36 L. T. 356; 25 W. R. 390.

Children born subsequent to Appointment.] 2. A lady having a power to appoint among her issue living at the date of the appointment, by deed appointed to the children of her daughter in equal shares on their attaining twenty-one. The daughter had three children at that date, and three born afterwards:—Held, that each of the children living at the date of appointment would, on attaining twenty-one, take one-sixth of the property plus an accruing share of the sixth appointed or purported to be appointed to any other child who might die under twenty-one. Re Farncombe, 9 L. R., Ch. D., 652; 47 L. J., Ch., 328.

3. By a settlement, lands were conveyed to trustees upon trust, either in the lifetime of M., with his consent in writing, or else not till after his decease, to raise 12,000*l.*, and pay the same unto and between the two daughters of M. as he should by deed, attested by two witnesses, appoint, and in default of appointment, to the two daughters equally, to be vested interests in them at twenty-one or marriage, and to be paid at such age or time if the same should happen after the decease of M., but if the same should happen in his lifetime, then immediately after his decease, "unless he should signify his consent in writing under his hand and seal that the said respective shares should be raised and paid in his lifetime." M., by deed attested by two witnesses, reciting the power, and that he was desirous of making some immediate as well as future provision for his daughter E., appointed that the trustees should raise two sums of 5,000*l.* and 1,000*l.*—the 5,000*l.* immediately, and the 1,000*l.* immediately after his decease—and pay the same to the said E., "to the intent that the payment of the portion or portions of the said E. under the said settlement may as to the said sum of 5,000*l.* be accelerated and take effect according to the true intent and meaning of these presents, anything in the said settlement to the contrary thereof notwithstanding." M. died without making any further appointment:—Held, that E. was entitled to one moiety of the unappointed part of the 12,000*l.*, in addition to the sums so appointed to her. Re Alfreton's Trust Estates, 52 L. J., Ch., 745; 31 W. R. 702.

4. Where by a settlement of 1827, containing no hotchpot clause, a fund was settled (after the usual life interest) on the children of the marriage as their mother, J., should appoint, and in default of appointment, equally, and J., by a deed of 1855, after reciting a desire to appoint to her daughter H. 2,000*l.*, part of the fund, "as and for her full share and proportion thereof," accordingly appointed to her the sum of 2,000*l.*, part of, and as and for, her full share or proportion of and in the fund—the appointment being made by indenture, which was also executed by H.:—Held, that H. was not precluded from claiming her distributive share in the ultimately unappointed residue of the fund. Close v. Coote, 7 L. R., Ir., 564.

Effect of Lapse.] See VI. ante.

IV. PAYMENT POSTPONED. INTERIM INCOME.

5. Bequest, after the death of A., of 2,500*l.* as A. should appoint, with a gift over "of the same" in default, and to be paid with interest from A.'s death; A. appointed a part to B., and 1,630*l.* to other persons, and directed the said sums to be paid at the decease of B., except the one left to himself, which was to be payable at A.'s decease:—Held, that the interest on the 1,630*l.*, accruing between the debts of A. and B., neither passed to the appointees of that sum, nor to B. by implication, but went over, as in default of appointment. Henderson v. Constable, 5 Beav. 297; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 332.

6. Real estate was settled for (inter alia) a term of 1,000 years for raising a capital sum, with interest from A.'s death, for A.'s younger children, as he should appoint; in default, equally. A. by will appointed the capital sum unequally between his two younger children after the death of his mother and himself. His mother survived him:—Held, that the interest accruing in the interval between A.'s death and his mother's was not divisible in proportion to the shares of the children in the capital, but was unappointed and therefore divisible equally. Watts v. Shrimpton, 21 Beav. 97.

7. Where a testator, having a power of appointment over personalty, appoints a share of the fund to an object of the power upon the happening of a certain event, the appointment carries with it all the intermediate accretions to that share, whether in the shape of income or otherwise. Under a settlement made on the second marriage of M., a widow, a trust fund belonging to her was vested in a trustee upon trust for her three children, nominatim, in such shares as she should by deed or will appoint, and in default of appointment, for such three children equally. By her will M. appointed that the trustee of the settlement should stand possessed of the trust fund, as to one-third part thereof, upon trust to pay the income thereof to her son C. (an object of the power) during his life, or until anticipation; and from and after his death or the determination of his estate, upon trust to pay the said one-third part to her grandson (not an object of the power) when he should attain twenty-one; and in case he should die before he should attain twenty-one, upon trust to pay the said one-third part to her daughter S. (an object of the power). C. survived the testatrix and died, the grandson being then an infant:—Held, that, although the appointment to the grandson was void, the appointment over to S. was good, and that the income from C.'s death of the one-third so appointed would pass with the capital to S., if the grandson died under twenty-one; but that, if that event did not happen, both income and capital would pass under the settlement as in default of appointment. Long v. Ovenden, 16 L. R., Ch. D., 691; 50 L. J., Ch., 314; 44 L. T. 462; 29 W. R. 709.

3. In Favour of Creditors, 5802.
4. In Favour of Husband, Wife, or Child, 5803.

1. In General.

1. A court of equity relieves against a defective execution of a power, only when the defect consists in the want of some circumstances in the manner of execution; and it will reform a deed where the intention of the parties is mistaken by the drawer, but will not correct an error in an instrument occasioned by the ignorance of the parties in matter of law. Cockerell v. Cholmeley, 1 Russ. & M. 418.

A plaintiff ought never to come into a court of equity to have an alleged defect in the execution of a power supplied, without admitting, on the record, that at law the power has not been well executed. S. C. 3 Russ. 565; Taml. 435. Affirmed 1 Cl. & F. 60; 6 Bli. N. S. 120.

2. Equity aids a defective execution of a power, if for a valuable consideration, and this against a remainderman, or one not claiming under the power. Cotter v. Layer, 2 P. W. 623.

Where there is a power to declare a use by writing attested by three witnesses, and such use is declared by a writing only attested by two, if for a valuable consideration, equity will help it. Ib.

3. Defective execution of power aided. Gooding v. Gooding, 1 Eq. Abr. 342.

4. Where testator refers to a power, but does not legally execute it, but has other estates to which the will can apply, the defect of the execution cannot be supplied, though, where he could not make the gift but by virtue of the power, he shall be supposed to have intended to execute it, and therefore the defect shall be supplied. Lowson v. Lowson, 3 Bro. C. C. 272.

5. Power over land by deed or will "duly" executed, requires three witnesses; but where will is to operate by way of appointment, taking no effect from the statute, such defect may be cured in equity. Wilkes v. Holmes, 9 Mod. 485.

6. Lands were settled to such uses as A. and B. should, by a joint deed executed in the presence of witnesses, appoint, and in default of appointment to uses in strict settlement, A. and B. being the first tenants for life in succession. In 1845 the S. W. Railway Company contracted with A. and B. for the sale of land, but the price was not named. In 1846 the company advanced part of the consideration money to them upon their joint receipt, in which it was stated that the money was "in respect of the lands, part of our estate required for the uses of the S. W. Railway Company." Before any formal exercise of the joint power by A. and B., A. died:—Held, that the receipt was not such a defective execution of the power as would be aided in equity. Morgan v. Milman, 16 Jur. 755. Affirmed 1 W. R. 134; 3 De G. M. & G. 24; 17 Jur. 193; 22 L. J., Ch., 897.

7. The mere fact that a party, having a power by deed to revoke and make a new appointment of trust funds, has attempted to make such revocation and new appointment by will, owing to her having forgotten the restrictions of the power, and being at the time unable to procure the deeds, is not a ground upon which equity will supply the formal execution required by the terms of the power, or give to the will the effect of a deed, or convert the trustees of the property into trustees for the persons who would be appointees, if the will were a good execution of the power. Buckell v. Blenkhorn, 5 Hare 131.

8. It is the duty of the Court to support a power, if possible, and to give effect to its execution, if it is not exercised from improper motives or for improper objects. Carver v. Richards, 6 Jur., N. S., 410; 29 L. J., Ch., 357; 8 W. R. 349; 2 L. T., N. S., 161.

Where, therefore, a donee of an exclusive power made several successive appointments, reserving powers of revocation and new appointment, and by the last appointment showed an intention to pass the property subject to the power, though she did not thereby expressly state such appointment to be in exercise of the power, and although it was contended that the appointment rested on a vicious deed, the consequence of a vicious bargain, the Court (affirming 27 Beav. 488; 29 L. J., Ch., 169; 1 L. T., N. S., 257) carried out the intention, and declared such appointment to be a valid execution of the power. Ib.

9. A testator gave an estate upon trust for sale, with power of pre-emption to his younger children, and the proceeds were to be held upon such trusts as his widow, by deed, or instrument sealed and delivered before the youngest child attained the age of twenty-five years, should appoint, and in default for his children, except the eldest son, equally The testator's widow, by deed-poll executed within the prescribed period, appointed the proceeds of the estate among all the children equally; but reserved a power of revocation. By her will, which was also executed before the youngest child attained twenty-five, but came into operation by her death after the prescribed period, she appointed the estate by name to the eldest son:—Held, that the will, having come into operation after the prescribed period, could not take effect as a new appointment under the power; and that this was not such a defective execution as would be relieved against in equity. Cooper v. Martin, 3 L. R., Ch., 47; 16 W. R. 234; 17 L. T., N. S., 587.

1. A testatrix bequeathed 5,000*l.* upon trusts for her nephew for life, and then for his wife for life. She then gave to her nephew a power of appointment by will over the 5,000*l.* amongst his children; and in default of appointment, or subject to any such as should not be a complete and entire disposition of the whole sum, she gave the same to all her nephew's children absolutely, to become vested at twenty-one or marriage. The nephew had five children, one of whom, a son, after attaining twenty-one, died unmarried and intestate. Afterwards a daughter, who had also attained twenty-one, married, and on this occasion the father covenanted that he would, in exercise of the power, appoint by will to the trustees of her settlement one-fifth of the 5,000*l.* The daughter also assigned to the trustees all that her fifth part or share in default of any testamentary appointment of and in the 5,000*l.* The father died without having exercised the power in any way. Upon the death of the widow, the trustees of the settlement claimed not only the 1,000*l.*, but also one-fifth of the remaining 4,000*l.*, as being a part of the fund which was not completely and entirely disposed of by the covenant of the appointor:—Held, that the covenant, though not actually performed, had been substantially satisfied; and that they were entitled to no more than 1,000*l* Thacker v. Key, 8 L. R., Eq., 408.

2. A lady, having power to appoint a fund by deed to be sealed and delivered and attested by one witness, in January 1870, signed an unattested memorandum, stating her wish that if she died suddenly her eldest son should have the fund, and that her intention was to make it over to him legally if her life was spared. She died in March 1870, after two days' illness:—Held, that her intention to appoint the property by this memorandum was sufficiently clear, and that the Court would give effect to the memorandum as an execution of the power. Kennard v. Kennard, 42 L. J., Ch., 280; 8 L. R., Ch., 227; 21 W. R. 206; 28 L. T., N. S., 83.

3. A. having in the events that happened power to appoint funds amongst her children by deed, or by her last will in writing, or any writing purporting to be or being in the nature of her last will, or any codicil thereto, to be signed and published in the presence of, and to be attested by, two credible witnesses, died intestate; but left in an envelope, addressed to her son, an unattested memorandum (signed by herself, and dated eight years before her death), "for my son and daughters. Not having made a will, I leave this memorandum, and hope my children will be guided by it, though it is not a legal document. The (funds) I wish divided as follows:"—(amongst her children, followed by bequests out of another fund, and a gift of the residue, and concluding), "this paper contains my last wishes and blessings upon my dear children, and thanks for their love to me":—Held, that this memorandum showed no intention to execute the power, and, consequently, that the Court could not remedy any defects in the execution so as to give validity to it as an appointment. Garth v. Townsend, 7 L. R., Eq., 220.

2. In Favour of Charity.

4. A power well exercised in other respects will, in favour of charities, be deemed to be an effective execution of the power, although the form in which the power has been exercised has not conformed to the requisitions imposed by the instrument creating or giving the power. Innes v. Sayer, 3 Macn. & G. 606; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 274; 16 Jur. 21. Affirming 7 Hare 377; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 274; 13 Jur. 402.

5. An appointment by a tenant in tail to a charity shall bind the reversioner; statute of charitable uses applies to all defects of assurance which the donor was capable of making. Att.-Gen. v. Burdet, 2 Vern. 755.

3. In Favour of Creditors.

6. Equity will supply a defective execution of a power in favour of creditors. Hervey v. Hervey, 1 Atk. 563.

7. Distinction between a power and absolute property. A power, unless executed, not assets for debts. Holmes v. Coghill, 12 Ves. 206.

8. A bond was vested in a trustee in trust, as to income, for a married woman, for her life, for her separate use, with remainder; as to the corpus, in trust for her issue, and, in default of issue, in trust for such persons as the married woman alone, notwithstanding coverture, should, by deed or instrument in writing, to be by her sealed and delivered in the presence of, and to be attested by, two credible witnesses, appoint. The husband being indebted to his bankers on the balance of an account current, the married woman deposited the bond with the bankers, with a letter signed by her, to the effect that in consideration of the bankers paying, or having already paid, the cheques of the husband, or otherwise advancing him sums of money, she thereby guaranteed the repayment thereof; and that she deposited, as a collateral security, the bond, which she undertook to assign to the bankers on request:—Held, that the consideration was sufficient, and that the separate life-interest of the wife was effectually charged; but that, the letter not having been executed and attested as required by the power, the Court would not, under the circumstances, give effect to it as an appointment. Thackwell v. Gardiner, 5 De G. & Sm. 58; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 777; 16 Jur. 588.

9. An original power is extinguished by a reservation of a power of revocation and new appointment. The Court will not aid a defective execution, but distinguishes between the cases of creditors and legatees. Evans v. Saunders, Evans v. Evans, 1 W. R. 529; 1 Drew. 415; 22 L. J., Ch., 471; 17 Jur. 338.

4. In Favour of Husband, Wife, or Child.

1. A husband having a power to make a jointure on his wife by deeds made it by will; she having no other provision, equity will make this good. Tollet v. Tollet, 2 P. W. 489; Sergeson v. Sealey, 2 Atk. 415; Sneed v. Sneed, Ambl. 64; Darlington v. Pulteney, Cowp. 266; Wade v. Paget, 1 Bro. C. C. 633; M'Adam v. Logan, 3 Bro. C. C. 310.

2. Defective execution of power by wife not supplied in favour of husband. Moodie v. Reid, 1 Madd. 516.

3. Defect in a legal conveyance not supplied in favour of a natural child. Blake v. Blake, Beat. 575.

4. Defective execution of a power refused to be supplied in favour of a natural son against persons claiming under a subsequent valid execution of it. Bramhall v. Hall, 2 Eden. 220; Ambl. 467.

5. The defective execution of a power aided in favour of an eldest against younger children, also provided for; probate held not to be conclusive proof that instruments, so far as they affect real estates, are of a testamentary character. Hume v. Rundell, 6 Madd. 331.

6. Defective appointment, by unattested will, to children absolutely, supplied in their favour, though the fund on default of appointment was given to them in equal shares for life, with remainder to their issue, the shares of the daughters to be for their separate use. Lucena v. Lucena, 5 Beav. 249.

7. A father, under a power to appoint to his children, appointed a share to a daughter for life, for her separate use, with remainder as she should by will appoint:—Held, that this was a good execution of the power. The Court aided the defective execution of a power in favour of a daughter, as against her brothers, who, in default of appointment, would participate in the property. Morse v. Martin, 34 Beav. 500.

8. A., having a power of charging portions upon a property and an ultimate reversion in the same property, exercised the power. The power from subsequent events became inoperative:—Held, that the Court would execute A.'s intention to create portions, and would therefore hold that a disposal of the reversion had been effected. Sing v. Leslie, 4 N. R. 17; 2 Hem. & M. 68; 10 Jur., N. S., 794; 11 L. T., N. S., 232; 33 L. J., Ch., 332.

9. A will made by a donee of a special power to appoint by deed, though it shows that the donee supposed the power to have been extinguished, and purports to be an execution of an invalid power, and of all other powers enabling in that behalf, and though it appoints to persons, some of whom are strangers to the power, is a defective execution which equity will aid in favour of a child otherwise provided for, and to the prejudice of other children entitled in default of appointment. Bruce v. Bruce, 40 L. J., Ch., 141; 11 L. R., Eq., 371; 24 L. T., N. S., 212.

10. Equity will supply the defective execution of a power, as well in the case of younger children and a provision for a wife, as in favour of purchasers or creditors; and where such provisions are intended, their being voluntary is no impediment. It has been said, that a wife or child applying for aid in the defective execution of a power, must be wholly unprovided for; but that is not the right rule, for, by the invariable and proper rule, the Court considers a husband or father the most competent judge of what is a reasonable provision; yet, where a wife has not the provision stipulated for her by her jointure, she shall be considered as wholly unprovided for, and, according to the rules of equity, shall be aided in carrying a defective provision into execution. Hervey v. Hervey, 1 Atk. 563; 9 Mod. 225.

5. In Favour of Purchaser.

11. Defective execution of power decreed in favour of valuable consideration. Wilkie v. Holme, Dick 165.

12. Equity aids a defective execution of a power, if for a valuable consideration, and this against a remainderman, or one not claiming under the power. Cotter v. Layer, 2 P. W. 623.

13. A wife, in the event of her surviving her husband, and not having younger children, had a power to dispose of 4,000*l.* by deed or will, executed in the presence of three witnesses; and this sum was a charge on the real estate of the husband. Before her second marriage, she, by articles executed in the presence of two witnesses only, appointed 2,000*l.* out of the 4,000*l.* to be for the use of her intended husband, and the remaining 2,000*l.* she disposed of by will, but did not execute it in the presence of three witnesses:—Held, that the articles were a good appointment of the 2,000*l.* for the benefit of her second husband; for, though the appointment was inaccurately and informally expressed, yet, being executed for a valuable consideration, equity will supply the defect; but the will, under which the 2,000*l.* was given, being a voluntary disposition, and not pursuing the power, was held a void appointment, and the 2,000*l.* shall sink into the real estate. Sergeson v. Sealey, 2 Atk. 414; 9 Mod. 370.

14. Power of appointment over a sum of money to be raised under a trust term executed in favour of volunteers, is assets for creditors; but the equity of purchaser from a party taking under a voluntary deed of appointment, was preferred to that suit, creditors having no specific charge. George v. Milbanke, 9 Ves. 190.

15. Whether, in case of a lease made by tenant for life having leasing power, the lessee at best rent, without fine, is so far a purchaser as to be entitled in equity to relief, as against the remainderman, from a defect in the execution of a power under which the lease was intended to have been made, quære. Donnell v. Church, 4 Ir. Eq. R. 630.

Semble, it is questionable whether the rule laid down in the text books, that equity will aid a defective execution of a power only in behalf of purchasers for valuable consideration, or a child, is a sound one. Ib.

donee should think fit, may be exercised by an exclusive appointment to one child, such one child also being the only survivor of the objects of the power. Woodcock v. Renneck, 1 Ph. 72; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 110; 6 Jur. 138. Affirming 4 Beav. 190.

1. A., having been indebted to the estate of B. in a sum of money, but from which he had been discharged under a commission of bankruptcy, voluntarily executed to C., the widow of B., a bond for the payment of part of such debt, for the use of herself and children, but at her disposal. Two years afterwards, A. executed to C. another bond for the payment of the remainder of such debt, for the use and benefit of herself and children only, in what proportions among the latter she may think proper to direct, but for no other use, purpose, or intent whatsoever:—Held, that the widow took a life interest in the money secured by the bonds, and that the principal, after her decease, became payable among the children, in such manner, and in such proportions, as she should direct; and the widow having made no exclusive appointment in favour of two of her children, it was held that such appointment was void, and that all the children took as tenants in common. Though, generally speaking, an instrument must be construed by the provisions contained in it, and not by anything dehors, yet, under the circumstances of this case:—Held, that the Court might call the language of the second bond into aid in construing the effect of the first. Where there is a general power of appointment among children, and the appointment from any circumstances becomes void, the children take as tenants in common. Fowler v. Hunter, 3 Y. & J. 506.

2. Where by the marriage settlement the husband and wife, or the survivor, in the event of there being two or more younger children, were to appoint the fund amongst them by deed, in such shares as they should think fit, and in default of appointment to be distributed equally:—Held, that the power was not an exclusive one, and that each of the younger children was entitled to participate; and sums having been raised and appointed to three of the children, and the residue appointed to a fourth, to the exclusion of three other of the younger children, the three first appointments were good, and the last void. Young v. Waterpark (Lord), 13 Sim. 202; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 367; 6 Jur. 656.

3. By marriage settlement of 1773, certain estates were limited to the sons of A., in such shares as he should appoint by will, and in default of appointment, to them in fee as tenants in common. A. having three sons, B., C., and D., by his will appointed all the lands to B. for life, remainder to his first and other sons in tail, remainder to C. for life, with limitations to his issue; and gave other valuable properties to his sons C. and D., and made D. his residuary devisee:—Held, that the power of appointment was badly executed. Beere v. Prendergast, Hay. & J. 384.

4. A testator by his will having charged 6,000*l.* on his estates, and directed same to be paid to and among such of his younger children, in such shares and proportions, as his wife should appoint, and the wife having by her will directed the inheritor as follows: "three of the 6,000*l.* I wish to have given to the two elder girls":—Held, that this was a good appointment of 3,000*l.*, and that the appointees took as tenants in common and not as joint tenants. Alloway v. Alloway, 2 Con. & L. 509; 4 Dr. &. War. 380.

5. On the settlement of the family estates upon Sir J. B. Piers attaining his majority, a power was given to each person to whom, under the settlement, a life estate was limited when in possession, to charge, as portions for all younger children, a sum not exceeding the sum of 4,000*l.* In the year 1798, Sir J. B. P. became seised of the life estate under this settlement, and in the year 1815, he married A. K. in the Isle of Man, by whom he had issue only two children, the plaintiffs. Sir J. B. P. being so entitled, and also being in debt on bond, filed his bill in the Court of Chancery, in the year 1828, to restrain his creditors from proceeding at law, alleging usury, and offering to pay whatever, on taking an account, should be found to be due on the bonds. In 1832 a decree was pronounced, referring it to the Master to take the necessary accounts. In 1833 a consent was entered into in this and several other causes, in which Sir J. B. P. was a party, by which, among other things, it was agreed that a sum of 4,207*l.* should be the sum to be found by the Master as due on foot of the bonds for principal and interest, up to the 11th December, 1833. This consent having been embodied in the Master's report, a decree was pronounced in the year 1834, declaring that the said sum of 4,207*l.* was due on foot of the securities, that the same was well charged on the lands in the pleadings mentioned, and that the receiver appointed in the other causes should be extended to this. In the year 1836, Sir J. B. P. executed his power to charge for younger children, by appointing the entire sum of 4,000*l.* in equal moieties between the plaintiffs:—Held, that the power was not duly exercised, the entire 4,000*l.* having been given to the plaintiffs without reserving any part of it for any other children of Sir J. B. P. who might thereafter come in esse. Piers v. Twite, 1 Dr. & Wal. 279.

6. By a petition presented under the 11th section of the Court of Chancery Regulation Act, it appeared that a person entitled to the interest of a legacy of 3,000*l.* during her life, with a power to appoint the principal amongst her children, which power did not authorise an exclusive appointment, having three sons and a daughter, by deed in 1834 appointed that sum equally amongst her two younger sons and her daughter, and made a provision aliunde for the eldest son. Subsequently the daughter married, and the eldest son died in nonage. The petition stated that the donee of the power, having been advised that the appointment in 1834 was not a valid execution of the power by deed made in 1850, appointed 1,900*l.* to one of the surviving sons, 1,000*l.* to the other, and 50*l.* to the daughter, and left 50*l.* unappointed. The petition was presented by the two surviving sons, and prayed that the appointment of 1834 should be declared invalid, and that the appointment of 1850 should be declared valid. Counsel appeared at the hearing for the daughter, and supported the prayer of the petition. Her husband, however, resisted the petition, and in his affidavit stated that his wife was, at the instigation of the donee, living separate from him, and that the donee had executed the later appointment in order to defeat the former appointment, on faith of which he alleged that he had married the daughter; and the affidavit also alleged that the donee of the power was in collusion with her sons for the purpose of obtaining the fund, or a large portion of it, in payment of her own debts. There was not any evidence entered into on either side. The Court refused to make the declaration prayed for, and dismissed the petition without prejudice and without costs. Re O'Reilly, 1 Ir. Ch. R. 497.

1. A father, having a power of appointment among all his children, by his will, purporting to make an appointment of the whole fund, excluded one child, and appointed a portion of the fund to grandchildren, who were not objects of the power:—Held, that the appointment was valid as far as it related to the portion of the fund appointed to the children. But having given other legacies by the will to the children in whose favour he had appointed:—Held, that they were bound to elect in favour of the grandchildren. Exp. Bernard, Re Leigh's Trust, 6 Ir. Ch. R. 133.

2. A. made his will, and gave personalty to B., a married woman, for life, and after her death as she should appoint, and, in default of appointment, to her husband; and if she should survive him, and make no appointment, then to her children. B. had three children, and by her will she appointed, after her husband's death, 2,000*l.* between two of her children, and 1,500*l.* to the other, and she appointed the residue to her three children by name, in such manner as her husband should appoint by will; he, by his will, appointed 500*l.* to one of the children, —l. to another, and the residue to the third:—Held, that the husband had no power to exclude either of the children; that his appointment was therefore bad; and that the appointment of the wife took effect in favour of the three children. White v. Wilson, 1 W. R. 47; 1 Drew. 298; 22 L. J., Ch., 62; 17 Jur. 15.

3. By a marriage settlement, executed in 1784, certain hereditaments were vested in trustees, in trust for the husband and wife successively for life; and on the death of the survivor, to pay the rents in maintenance of "all and every the child or children, until such child or children" should attain twenty-one, "and when and as such child or children respectively should attain twenty-one," upon trust to convey "unto such child or children" as the parents should appoint; and in default "to convey all the same premises unto and amongst such children equally;" and if but one such child, upon trust to convey to such only child, and his or her heirs for ever, with a gift over. By a deed executed in 1835, the surviving parent executed the appointment in favour of some only of the children:—Held, that the word "such" must be taken in the sense of "the said;" and that the power did not warrant an exclusive appointment in favour of some of the children. Strutt v. Braithwaite, 5 De G. & Sm. 369; 16 Jur. 882; 21 L. J., Ch., 609.

4. A power of appointment in a marriage settlement was to be exercised in favour of "all or every and any child or children":—Held, that those words conferred a right of appointing the whole fund to one or more, in exclusion of the others of such children. Bland v. Plummer, 9 L. T., N. S., 825.

5. By marriage settlement of 1791, freehold lands were conveyed to trustees, upon trust, to permit and suffer J. B., the intended husband, during his life, to hold and enjoy the same; and in case S. G., the intended wife, should survive him, to permit her to receive a certain annuity; and after the death of J. B., to permit and suffer the lands to be enjoyed for ever by the issue male of the marriage, in such shares and proprotions as J. B. should by deed or will appoint, and for want of issue male of the marriage attaining the age of twenty-one years, the lands were charged with portions for the daughters of the marriage; and if J. B. should die without issue male attaining the age of twenty-one years by S. G., or any other after-taken wife, the lands were to go in tail male to the heirs of J. B. for ever. J. B. died, leaving four sons, all of whom attained the age of twenty-one years in his lifetime. By deed of 1826, not referring to the settlement of 1791, J. B., in execution of an agreement therein mentioned, conveyed certain lands, not a part of the settled lands, to the use of his second son P. F. B. and his issue; and by another deed, executed by himself alone in 1831, he conveyed the settled lands to the use of himself for life, with remainder to trustees for 200 years, upon trust, for the issue female of the marriage, with remainder to trustees to preserve contingent remainders, with remainder to his eldest son M. B. for life; with remainder to his first and other sons in tail male; remainder to his third son R. B. for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail male; with similar remainders to his fourth son E. B. in tail male; then to his second son P. F. B. and his sons in tail male, with remainder to his own right heirs. Upon bill by P. F. B.:—Held, that the power in the settlement of 1791 did not authorise an exclusive appointment, and that the deed of 1831 was not a good execution of the power of appointment. Barron v. Barron, 2 Jones 226.

Semble, a power to appoint amongst the objects "in such shares and proportions" as the appointor thinks fit, will authorise the appointment of a remainder only to one of the objects; and if such a power be executed by appointing the whole estate to one of the objects for life, with remainders over to persons who are not objects of the power, whereby an illusory share devolves, as in default of appointment, upon the other objects of the power, the case is not within the 1 Will. 4, c. 46, and the whole appointment is bad. Ib.

6. Where there is a primary power, and no default of appointment, a secondary power, or partial exercise of the primary power, does not exclude the exercise of the secondary power. Mapleton v. Mapleton, 4 Drew. 515; 28 L. J., Ch., 785.

Power to a husband to appoint among children and issue of children living at the wife's death; in default of appointment, power to the wife to appoint to children and issue of children living at husband's death. The husband appointed to four children only, leaving a fifth living at his death, with issue. After his death the fifth child died, leaving three children, one of whom, A., was living at the death of the first donee, the other two being born afterwards. The second donee, the wife, then appointed among her four children, and to A., the eldest child of her deceased child: —Held, that although the two others would have been objects of the primary powers, their exclusion by the joint operation of the two powers did not render the execution of either bad. Ib.

1. A testator gave real estate to trustees, to pay the rents to A. for life, and after her decease, "in case she should leave issue, to dispose of his estate in such manner, amongst such issue," as A. should by deed or will appoint, with gifts over, "in default of such issue." A. appointed the property by will amongst some only of her issue living at her decease:—Held, that such appointment was void for exclusiveness, and that all her issue living at her death, of whatever degree, were entitled as tenants in common. Stolworthy v. Sancroft, 10 Jur., N. S., 762; 33 L. J., Ch., 708; 10 L. T., N. S., 223; 12 W. R. 635.

2. A. had a testamentary power to appoint a fund to any one or more of his children. He had, under a distinct instrument, another testamentary power to appoint another fund amongst his children, but not exclusively to any one of them. He had five children. By his will he exercised the first power in favour of Susannah, one of his own children, and the second in favour of two others of his children. The second power was accordingly badly exercised, and Susannah took, in default of appointment, a share in the fund which was subject by the second power:—Held, that no case by election was raised against Susannah. Re Aplin, 13 W. R. 1062.

3. Bequest to A. or such of her children, in such parts, shares, and proportions as B. should appoint, and in default to A. for life, with remainder to her children equally:—Held, to authorise an exclusive appointment to one of several children of A. Turner v. Bryans, 31 Beav. 303.

4. A power to appoint amongst such of the testator's children as should be living at the death of the testator, in such proportions as the donee of the power should direct, does not authorise an exclusive appointment to one or more of the objects. Re Davids, 1 Johns. 495; 6 Jur., N. S., 94; 29 L. J., Ch., 116; 1 L. T., N. S., 130.

A testatrix, having a power of appointment to and amongst three persons over a fund originally invested in 3*l.* 10*s.* per cent. reduced annuities, which at the date of her will were reduced to 3*l.* 5*s.* per cent. annuities, bequeathed to two objects of the power 10*l.* sterling each, and to A., the third, "all the residue of her property to be found in the 3*l.* 10*s.* per cent. reduced bank annuities, now reduced to 3*l.* 5*s.* per cent., and all other property whatsoever and wheresoever to be by A. possessed and enjoyed absolutely during the term of her natural life, and to be disposed of as she should think fit at her death":—Held, first, that the power of appointment was well exercised. Ib.

Held, secondly, that A. was absolutely entitled to the fund, subject to the payment thereout of the two sums of 10*l.* each to the other subjects of the power. Ib.

5. By a settlement, a trust fund was settled, after the death of husband and wife, upon the children equally who should survive them. But if any child should die in the life of the husband and wife, and leaving "issue" then living, his share should go equally between the issue of such child, and when and at such time as the respective shares of such child would become due and payable:—Held, that the "issue" of children took per stirpes, and that the successive generations of "issue" took their respective shares by substitution, and not concurrently, so that grandchildren and great grandchildren could not take together as a class. Robinson v. Sykes, 23 Beav. 40; 2 Jur., N. S., 895; 26 L. J., Ch., 782.

A testator had a power of appointment amongst his issue, which did not warrant an exclusive appointment. By will, after reciting that the trust fund had been invested in land, and reciting (erroneously) that he had advanced 300*l.* towards the purchase, he made an exclusive appointment in favour of one of several objects of "300*l.* or such other sum as he was empowered to appoint":—Held, that the intention was either to appoint the fund contributed (which was trifling, if any), or the whole trust fund, and that in the latter case the appointment was void. Ib.

6. By a marriage settlement, a policy of assurance on the husband's life was assigned to trustees to pay the amount when realised to and amongst the issue of the marriage, in such shares as the husband should appoint, and in default of appointment amongst the issue equally. No notice of the settlement was given to the insurance company. The husband, by his will made in 1862, correctly recited that a certain sum was payable on foot of the policy if the life dropped, and then appointed various sums to all the children save one, leaving unappointed a portion of the sum so recited to be payable. The trustees of the settlement had left the policy with the husband, who, previously to the date of the will, borrowed money on it from a purchaser without notice; so that after his death, when the policy was paid, the sum available for the children was reduced much below the total of the sums appointed:—Held, that the appointments were good, and were not invalidated by the ultimate reduction of the amount of the fund. Barry v. Barry, 10 Ir. R., Eq., 397.

7. An appointment is not void for exclusiveness, if any part is void for another reason. Ranking v. Barnes, 3 N. R. 660.

The donee of a power to appoint amongst children, appointed two-sixths of the fund to a daughter, in order, as to one-sixth, to enable her husband to discharge a liability incurred by him for the benefit of another object of the power:—Held, that the appointment was invalid as to one-sixth, but valid as to the other sixth. S. C. 10 Jur., N. S.. 463; 33 L. J., Ch., 539; 12 W. R. 565.

The donee afterwards made an appointment, which, if the former appointment had been valid, would have exhausted the fund, and have been void, as exclusive:—Held, that the second appointment was not void. Ib.

1. A power was given to A. to appoint a fund, by will, to his wife alone, or to his wife and such of his children as he should direct. The wife died, and A. appointed the fund exclusively to five out of his seven children:—Held, that the appointment was valid. Paske v. Haselfoot, 33 Beav. 125; 9 Jur., N. S., 1047; 11 W. R. 1089; 9 L. T., N. S., 75; 2 N. R. 568.

2. A person, having power to appoint by will a fund amongst all and every of her children and their children, covenanted to appoint a certain sum to one child. She then, by her will, appointed that sum, and appointed other parts of the fund to certain objects of the power, and bequeathed and appointed all the estate ever which she had a disposing power to one object of the power. There were other objects of the power:—Held, that all the appointments were bad, as being exclusive. Bulteel v. Plummer, 6 L. R., Ch., 160; 23 L. T., N. S., 753. Varying 17 W. R. 1058; 8 L. R., Eq., 585; 39 L. J., Ch., 805; 18 W. R. 1091.

3. A mother bequeathed a fund to her daughter for life, and after her death "to and amongst my other children or their issue in such parts, shares, and proportions, manner and form, as my daughter shall by deed or will appoint":—Held, that the daughter's power was exclusive, and not distributive merely, and was well exercised by an appointment to one only of its objects to the exclusion of the rest. Re Veale, 4 L. R., Ch. D., 61; 35 L. T., N. S., 612. Affirmed 5 L. R., Ch. D., 622; 46 L. J., Ch., 799; 36 L. T. 634.

4. By a post-nuptial instrument executed in pursuance of a marriage contract, a fund was directed to be vested in trustees, in trust to pay the interest to the wife for life to her separate use; after her death to the husband for life, and after the death of the survivor to pay the principal to the issue of the marriage in such proportions as the wife might appoint, and failing such appointment, to and among the child or children of the marriage equally among them, and to the issue of any of them who might have died leaving lawful issue per stirpes. There were five childen of the marriage. In 1853 the wife appointed the fund among them. In 1861, after her death, the husband appointed the fund among the same five children. One of these children, a girl, had married, and was, at the time of her father's death, enceinte of a child, which was subsequently born:—Held, that issue in the agreement was used in its extended sense, and therefore, as the power did not authorise an exclusive appointment, both appointments were invalid, and the fund was divisible among the five children in default of appointment. Donoghue v. Brooke, 9 Ir. R., Eq., 489.

5. The 37 and 38 Vict., c. 37, s. 1 applies to cases only where the instrument making the appointment is executed after the passing of the Act. Moynan v. Moynan, 1 Ir. L. R., Ch. D., 382.

Therefore, where a married woman, having a power to appoint a fund among her children by her will, before the Act made an exclusive appointment by will, and died after the Act:—Held, that the appointment was invalid. Ib.

6. An appointment since the Illusory Appointments Act (11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 46), under a non-exclusive power, of an entire fund unto and amongst the objects "and the survivors and survivor of them, and if only one should survive, then unto that one":—Held, valid. Re Capon's Trusts, 10 L. R., Ch. D., 484; 48 L. J., Ch., 355; 27 W. R. 376.

II. APPOINTMENT OF ILLUSORY OR UNEQUAL SHARES.

7. If a man gives his wife power to divide his estate amongst his three children, she must do it equally. Astry v. Astry, Pre. Ch. 256.

8. Personal estate devised to the wife, upon trust not to dispose thereof, but for the benefit of her children; she, by will, gives 5*s.* only to one child:—Decreed, the estate to be divided equally. Gibson v. Kinven, 1 Vern. 66.

9. A. directs his lands shall descend to his three daughters in such shares and proportions as his wife, by deed, shall appoint. She makes a very unequal distribution; whether equity will relieve against it, quære. Wall v. Thurborne, 1 Vern. 355.

10. Power of appointment by mother may be unequally distributed, but not so as to be illusory, unless there is a great misbehaviour. Maddison v. Andrew, 1 Ves. 59.

11. Power to appoint among children, each must have a part, not illusory nor reversionary; but a particular interest, as for life, may be given to one. Such a power will not extend to grandchildren, nor can a discretion be given to another to appoint. But though that would be void, it would not devolve on the Court, which is only where the power is well created, but by accident cannot be executed by the party. Alexander v. Alexander, 2 Ves. 640.

12. Devise of all to wife, that she might give her children such fortunes as she should think proper or they deserve; there being five children, and the eldest being provided for, an appointment of a guinea to him and the rest among the other children, was held a good appointment. Burrell v. Burrell, Ambl. 660.

13. Power to appoint in shares, etc., as P. should think proper, not exceeding estates tail; he appoints to two of his children, one acre for life, then to fall into the residue of the estate, which he gave to his second son for life, with remainders over. This execution of the power is illusory and bad. Pocklington v. Bayne, 1 Bro. C. C. 450.

14. Gift to A. and his issue, to be divided among them as he thinks fit, the issue have an interest in all events, and A. has no authority but as to the proportions; if no appointment, equally. Where to be divided among issue, the proportion must not be illusory. Hockley v. Mawbey, 1 Ves. J. 150.

15. Testator, under a power to appoint among children, appointed to the husband of a daughter for life, and if she survived him, to her for life, and having advanced her in marriage, recited that as a reason for giving her a small share; this is not illusory. Bristow v. Warde, 2 Ves. J. 336.

16. Trusts in marriage articles to pay certain funds, the property of the wife, to all and every her child and children, in such parts, etc., as she should by will give, etc., and for want of such gift, etc., to all and every her child and children, part and share alike, and for want of such issue, over. By her will she gave ten guineas, part of the fund, to her eldest son, declaring that he was otherwise provided for by the will of his uncle; and the remainder she gave to all her other children, naming them, equally, with survivorship in case of the death of any during minority, and before receipt of his, her, or their shares; and in case of the death of her eldest son before he comes to the possession of his uncle's fortune, she gave her second son only ten guineas. The only provision of the eldest son was a remainder in tail after the life estate of his father, who survived his wife. The Court was of opinion, first, that children illegitimate, being born after elopement, and no access, clearly could not take; secondly, that a share appointed to a child who died in the life of her mother, lapsed; but the case was determined upon the third point, that under the circumstances the appointment of ten guineas was illusory, and, therefore, the whole was void; and the fund was distributed among the surviving children and the representative of the deceased child; the interest vesting on the birth, liable to be devested only by appointment. Vanderzee v. Aclom, 4 Ves. 771.

Under a power to appoint to and among several persons, each of the objects must have a part, but a court of law will not enter into the amount of the share appointed. Id. 785.

1. An appointment by a father not illusory where he gives other provisions to the object excluded. Long v. Long, 5 Ves. 445.

2. Appointment giving very small shares to some of the objects, set aside as illusory. Spencer v. Spencer, 5 Ves. 362.

But the rule as to illusory appointments is not to be applied where a sufficient reason appears upon the face of the appointment, perhaps not between parent and child, if clearly proved. Id. 368.

3. Under a power to appoint among several subjects, each must have a share, and by the rule in equity as to illusory appointments, a substantial share, unless a good reason appears, as another provision by the person executing the power, not from any other quarter. Under such a power, an appointment of a fund, nearly 1,900*l.*, among three children the objects, 10*l.* to one, 50*l.* to another, and the remainder to the third, all having other provisions aliunde, was set aside as illusory. Evidence that an appointment was improperly obtained, being executed by a will regularly proved, was rejected. Kemp v. Kemp, 5 Ves. 849.

Power to appoint to the use of such child or children, etc.: an appointment to one or more, good. Id. 857.

4. Out of a fund of 2,500*l.*, appointment of 33*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* to two children, each, and the 33*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* among the children of another child (the power extending to their issue), and 2,400*l.* equally to two other children, the only other objects, established. Mocatta v. Lousada, 12 Ves. 123.

5. Appointment of 55,000*l.* to one child, 1,100*l.* to another, and 500*l.* among the others, seven in number:—Held, not illusory. Dyke v. Sylvester, 12 Ves. 126.

6. Equitable jurisdiction upon illusory appointment discretionary according to the circumstances. Bax v. Whitbread, 16 Ves. 15.

Appointment of 100*l.* S. S. annuities to one child, and 2,400*l.*, the residue, to another, those being the only objects of the power:—Held, not illusory, S. C. 10 Ves. 31.

Execution of a power of appointment among children and grandchildren, by giving 100*l.* to one, 2, 400*l.* the residue of the fund to the only other object, established under the circumstances, the former being at the time of appointment an uncertificated bankrupt, and other interests being given to him and his family by the instrument creating and executing the power. Ib.

7. Appointment of 200*l.* stock, though a very unequal proportion of the fund:—Held, not illusory. Butcher v. Butcher, 1 Ves. & B. 79. Affirming 9 Ves. 382.

The question whether an appointment is or is not illusory, must be determined upon the circumstances of each case, according to a sound discretion; the power, however large the terms, being in some degree coupled with a trust; but an equal distribution is not required, nor any reason for the inequality, unless a share is clearly unsubstantial. Ib.

8. Semble, a power to appoint amongst the objects "in such shares and proportions" as the apportioner thinks fit, will authorise the appointment of a remainder only to one of the objects; and if such a power be executed by appointing the whole estate to one of the objects for life, with remainders over to persons who are not objects of the power, whereby an illusory share devolves. as in default of appointment, upon the other objects of the power, the case is not within the 1 Will. 4, c. 46, and the whole appointment is bad. Barron v. Barron, 2 Jones 226.

9. A., having a power of appointment of 2,000*l.* among younger children, and having two sons and a daughter, his eldest son being an idiot, and the second son having obtained a part of the surplus profits of the estate during the idiot's life, appoints 1,999*l.* to the daughter, and 20*s.* only to the second son. This appointment illusory; perhaps it might have been good, if the second son had had a certain provision aliunde at the time of the execution of the power. Lysaght v. Royse, 2 Sch. & Lef. 151.

10. In case of the execution of a power to appoint to children whether the Court could make a reference to the Master to inquire whether the sum appointed was reasonable in amount, and if not, could authorise him to substitute his discretion for that which the donor had reposed in the donee of the power, quære. Edgeworth v. Edgeworth, Beat. 328.

11. A power of appointment was given for the benefit of all and every the children of A., in such parts and shares as A. should appoint:—Held, that an appointment of the whole to one child for life, with remainders successively to the other children, was a defective exercise of the power. Lloyd v. Lance, 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 456.

12. The donee of a power of appointment of a fund among her children, to whom the fund was limited in default of appointment, had only two daughters, and apportioned nearly the whole of the fund to one of them, who was unmarried, on an understanding, but without any positive agreement, that the appointee would re-settle one moiety of it on trusts for the separate use of the other daughter, who was married, exclusively of her husband, and, after her death, on trusts for her children. A re-settlement was accordingly made, without the privity of the married daughter, who did not hear of the transaction until several years afterwards:—Held, on the suit of her husband, that the appointment was invalid, and a settlement was directed to be made of the married daughter's share. Salmon v. Gibbs, 3 De G. & Sm. 343; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 177; 13 Jur. 355.

1. Upon the construction of an instrument creating a power of raising portions:—Held, that the donee had a right to distribute the portions unequally. Cotgreave v. Cotgreave, 1 De G. & Sm. 38; 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 145; 11 Jur. 51.

2. A testator directed his trustees to divide his property "amongst his first cousins, as they might, in their uncontrolled discretion, think proper, by dividing the whole equally among them, or between two or more of them, or giving the whole to any one of them, and for such estate or estates, interest or interests, and with, under, and subject to such powers, discretions, and limitations as they might think proper, so that the same were in favour of some one or more of his first cousins or their descendants":—Held, that the trustees could not appoint to the cousins in unequal shares. Ward v. Tyrrell, 25 Beav. 563; 4 Jur., N. S., 779; 27 L. J., Ch., 749.

3. A testator bequeathed a legacy to his widow, "to be used for her own and the children's benefit, as she shall in her judgment and conscience think fit, being convinced that it will be disposed of conscientiously and properly by her for the purposes mentioned, recommending her not to diminish the principal." The widow appointed the capital between the children very unequally. The Court (one child opposing) refused to part with the fund, or to declare the right during the life of the widow. Hart v. Tribe, 32 Beav. 279.

4. A testator, having given his daughter a life estate in certain lands, devised them after her death amongst her children as she should by deed or will appoint. It then provided that, in case of alienation or incumbrance by her, her share should go to the persons next in remainder, as if she were actually dead. The donee of the power appointed to one of her sons all the lands and premises except the square yard of ground thereinafter mentioned; and to the other, one square yard of the said lands, in such part thereof as his brother should think fit:—Held, that the power was well executed. Re Stone, 3 Ir. R., Eq., 621. Affirmed 18 W. R. 222.

5. By a settlement the trustees were directed to hold the trust funds in trust for five persons, or their respective issue, in such parts, shares, or proportions as D. should by will appoint. D., by her will, gave to three of the objects of the power 5*l.* each, and gave all the residue of her property of whatever kind, and over which she had any power of appointment, to the two remaining objects absolutely:—Held, that the legacies were charged on the settled property, and that the appointment was a valid exercise of the power. Gainsford v. Dunn, 30 L. T., N. S., 283; 22 W. R. 499; 17 L. R., Eq., 405; 43 L. J., Ch., 408.

I. IN GENERAL.

6. An appointment having been made on an emergency, and not bonâ fide for the end designed by the donor of the power, semble, it is void. Weir v. Chamley, 1 Ir. Ch. R. 295.

7. Agreement by one of the objects of a power to return part in consideration of an appointment in its favour is a fraud in the appointee as well as in the appointor, both on the other objects of the power, and on the party who is to take in default of appointment. Daubeny v. Cockburn, 1 Meriv. 644.

Secus, where the appointee is not privy to the corrupt agreement. Ib.

8. Effect of an agreement between several appointees under different appointments, as between such appointees and the trustees of the property, that one of the appointments, which is invalid, shall not be disturbed. Harrison v. Randall, 9 Hare 409; 16 Jur. 72; 21 L. J., Ch., 294.

A court of equity will not entertain a suit to set aside an appointment of a part of certain trust funds as a fraud upon the power, when it appears that another appointment not impeached by the bill was made of funds subject to the same power, in which regard was had to the appointment complained of, and the object was to equalise the interests of the several appointees; for the Court will not undo part of an entire transaction, the other parts of the same transaction not being brought within its jurisdiction. S. C. 9 Hare 397.

Where there is an appointment to A. and B. by one instrument (and à fortiori by different instruments), the appointment to A. may be good, and the appointment to B. bad, and A. and B. may well agree between themselves that the bad appointment shall not be disturbed. Ib.

9. A power to be validly executed must be executed without any indirect object. The donee of the power must give the property which is the subject of it, as property to the person to whom he affects to give it. Portland

(Duke) v. Topham, 11 H. L. Ca. 32; 34 L. J., Ch., 113; 10 Jur., N. S., 501; 12 W. R. 697; 10 L. T., N. S., 355. Affirming 1 De G. J. & Sm. 517; 31 Beav. 525; 32 L. J., Ch., 81; 32 L. J., Ch., 257; 11 W. R. 507; 8 L. T., N. S., 180.

It makes no difference whether the power is created by another person, or by the donee himself, without valuable consideration, the same rule of equity applying equally to both cases. Ib.

Where an appointment was made in favour of an object of the power, in order that other deeds might be executed by the appointee to raise inducements for a daughter of the donee of the power, who was herself an object of the power, to abstain from marrying a person objected to by the father, the appointment was set aside, as not having been made for a purpose contemplated by the donor of the power. Ib.

A. created a power to appoint a fund between two of his daughters, H. and M., or to appoint it to one, in exclusion of the other, and subject to such restrictions as the donee of the power (A.'s son) might think fit. The donee of the power executed a deed of appointment, which, in form, gave the whole of the fund to one of the sisters, H., but it was understood between the parties that H. was only to receive one moiety of the fund for her own use, and that she was to allow the other to accumulate, subject to some future arrangement; and in pursuance of this understanding, H. gave her brokers directions, to invest, in the name of the donee of the power, of another brother, and of herself, one-half of the fund, and the interest thereon to accumulate:—Held, that this was, in equity, a fraudulent execution of the power, and that the deed of appointment was wholly void. Ib.

1. It is not necessary, in order to render void an appointment as a fraud upon a power, to show that there was a previous agreement between the appointor and the appointee, that the appointee would deal with the property in a manner foreign to the purposes for which the power was intended; but it is sufficient to establish that the appointment was made solely by reason of the well-founded reliance which the appointor placed on his influence over the appointee, that the appointee would act in accordance with the wishes of the appointor. Topham v. Portland (Duke), 8 Jur., N. S., 1083; 7 L. T., N. S., 11.

Evidence was admitted to show the intention with which the appointor made the appointment. Ib.

Where an appointment is set aside as fraudulent and void, the parties making or concurring in the fraudulent appointment must pay the plaintiff's costs, but not the increased costs occasioned by the plaintiff's dealings with the fund. S. C. 12 W. R. 186; 9 L. T., N. S., 526.

2. A tenant for life of an estate had also a power of appointing it, by deed or will, among his children, or to one of them; but he had no power to lease it. He granted a lease, and on the day of the date of the lease he made a will, in exercise of the power, in favour of one of his children, a daughter; she and the appointor at the same time gave the lessee a bond of indemnity against the forfeiture of the lease by the death of the appointor during the term:—Held (affirming 3 L. T., N. S., 876; 9 W. R. 396), that the power was well exercised, as there appeared to be no corrupt bargain between the appointor and his daughter. Pickles v. Pickles, 7 Jur., N. S., 1065; 9 W. R. 763; 4 L. T., N. S., 755; 31 L. J., Ch., 146.

3. A married woman, having power to appoint amongst her five children after her death, appointed the whole to the eldest daughter, then twenty. The appointment was not communicated to the daughter, but it was shown that the appointment was made in the expectation that the daughter would give a portion of the fund to her father, the husband of the donee:—Held, even though the motive was not morally wrong, that the appointment was a fraud on the power, and bad. Re Marsden, 5 Jur., N. S., 590; 28 L. J., Ch., 906; 7 W. R. 520; 33 L. T. 217; 4 Drew. 594.

4 A married woman with an absolute power of appointment over property settled to her separate use having by her acts induced the trustees to lend the fund on an unauthorised security, so that it was lost, and conceiving herself unable to maintain a suit to charge the trustees for loss, executed an appointment of the fund, after it had been lost, in favour of her infant children, to enable them to file a bill to charge the trustees; the Court dismissed the bill. Brewer v. Swirles, 2 Sm. & G. 219; 18 Jur. 1069.

5. Semble, a covenant by a fiduciary donee of a testamentary power, to exercise the power to a certain extent in favour of one of the objects of the power, is illegal and void. Thacker v. Key, 8 L. R., Eq., 408.

6. A., who was unmarried at the death of B., and had under his will a power to appoint the lands of P. and T. to such child or such children as she might have, devised her lands called P. to her eldest son for life, and on his decease to his eldest son living at his death or born in due time after in fee; and if her eldest son had not such eldest son living at the time of his death or born in due time after, she devised the premises to her second son in fee; and she devised her lands of T. to her executor and his heirs, on trust to sell and lay out the produce in the purchase of freehold property in France, and to convey the property so purchased to her second son and his heirs, provided he should previously decide to reside in France; and if he should not decide to reside in France, then she devised the property so purchased to her executor and his heirs:—Held, first, that the limitations of P., subsequent to the life estate of the eldest son, were void for remoteness. D'Abaddie v. Bizoin, 5 Ir. R., Eq., 205.

Held, secondly, that the condition to reside in France could not be separated from the appointment of T., and that it rendered it invalid, as it showed an intention of the testatrix to accomplish by the appointment an indirect purpose not warranted by the power. Ib.

7. An appointment under a general testamentary power, coupled with a covenant not to revoke the will, is not a fraudulent exercise of the power. Robinson v. Ommanney, 21 L. R., Ch. D., 780; 51 L. J., Ch., 894; 47 L. T. 78; 30 W. R. 939. Affirmed 23 L. R., Ch. D., 285; 52 L. J., Ch., 440; 49 L. T. 19; 31 W. R. 525.

II. APPOINTMENT TO SICK OR DYING PERSON.

1. A testator, by will, giving his widow a life interest in his residuary real and personal estate, gave her an absolute power of appointment amongst children; in the event of there being no children, or of their all dying under twenty-one and unmarried, there was an absolute gift over to the testator's brother. The survivor of the three children of the marriage, an infant, being at the point of death, the widow executed the power, by appointing the whole estate, subject to the life interest, to him. The child died four days afterwards. Upon a bill by the representatives of the reversioner, praying that the appointment might be set aside as fraudulent, and for an account of the general personal estate, the defendant, claiming through the appointment, demurred to so much of the bill as is set forth, on the ground that there was no fraud on the power and no title to relief in the lifetime of the tenant for life. Carroll v. Graham, 11 Jur., N. S., 1012; 13 L. T., N. S., 391.

2. Appointment by a father to a son, then in a state of mental and bodily disease, of which he died within a year, set aside, the Court inferring from the evidence as to the father's knowledge of his son's state of health and pecuniary circumstances, as to the circumstances attending the preparation and execution of the appointment, and as to its not having been communicated to the persons to whom it ought to have been communicated, that the appointment was made by the father, not for the benefit of his son, but for his own benefit, and was a fraud upon the power. Wellesley (Lady) v. Mornington (Earl), 2 Kay & J. 143; 1 Jur., N. S., 1202.

III. APPOINTMENT TO INFANT.

3. A residue was bequeathed in trust for A. for life, and after his death for his children as he should appoint; and in default of appointment, for the children equally, with remainder over. Before A. was married or had exercised the power, some of the parties entitled in remainder filed a bill to have the accounts of the testator's estate taken, and the residue ascertained and secured. Before decree, A. married and had a child, and four days after the child was born he exercised his power, and then filed a bill against the plaintiffs in the former suit, stating his marriage, the birth of the child, and the appointment, and insisting that thereby the interests of the plaintiffs in the former suit had been wholly determined and put an end to. The plaintiffs, however, contended that the appointment was fraudulent and void in toto, inasmuch as, though it was made in favour of A.'s children, he would, in the probable event of their dying, become entitled to the property as their next of kin; but the Court held that, under existing circumstances, the appointment was good, and therefore, that no decree ought to be made in the original suit until the happening of events which would entitle A. to the property. Butcher v. Jackson, 14 Sim. 444.

4. Funds were settled on A. for life, with remainder to his children, at such ages, etc., as he should appoint, and in default to them equally, to vest at twenty-one, and there was a power of maintenance until the vesting. There was a gift over, in case there should be no child absolutely entitled. A., having a child four months old, and another en ventre sa mère, appointed the fund to all his children to vest immediately. One of the children survived A. and died an infant, and his share was claimed by his mother as his administrator:—Held, that the appointment was not a fraud on the power, and that she was entitled. Fearon v. Desbrisay, 14 Beav. 635; 21 L. J. N. S., Ch., 505.

5. A married woman, having a power to appoint a fund to her children, appointed, it to an only child of tender years, who died four months afterwards. Her husband attested the deed of appointment as a witness. Twenty-four years afterwards the wife died in the lifetime of the husband, who then claimed the fund as administrator of the child. The Court directed issues to try whether the power had been executed without fraud on the part of the husband and wife. Gee v. Gurney, 2 Colly. 486; 10 Jur. 367.

6. A power in a settlement to raise a portion for a younger child, at such time as the parent should direct; he directs it to be raised when she is fourteen, and she dying, files his bill for it as her administrator. The portion shall not be raised for the father. Hinchinbroke v. Seymour, 1 Bro. C. C. 395.

7. Power of appointment in favour of children in such shares and to be vested at such times as husband and wife shall during their joint lives and after the death of either as the survivor shall appoint, with the usual provision in default of appointment:—Held, that there was nothing unreasonable in husband and wife making a joint appointment between the only two children, the shares to be vested immediately, though one was an infant, and there were no circumstances requiring the exercise of the power; and that in the absence of any appearance of fraud the appointment was valid. Domville v. Lamb, 1 W. R. 246; 9 Hare (App.) lv.

8. Power to husband and wife to appoint in favour of children; in default of appointment children to take vested interests at twenty-one; if no children the fund to go over to the next of kin of the wife, as if she had died a widow and intestate. An appointment in favour of an only child, four years old, to be a vested interest immediately, but payable at twenty-one, with power of revocation and new appointment:—Held, to be a valid execution of the power, although the intention and, in the events which happened, the effect was to prevent the fund going over to the persons entitled in remainder. Beere v. Hoffmeister, 23 Beav. 101; 3 Jur., N. S., 78; 26 L. J., Ch., 177.

9. A father had a power of appointment over trust funds, subject to his life-interest in favour of his children. Upon the marriage of his daughter whilst a minor, he appointed a share of the funds upon her intended husband for life, remainder to the daughter for life, remainder to the children of the marriage:—Held, a valid appointment and settlement of the funds, notwithstanding the infancy of the daughter. Fitzroy v. Richmond (Duke), 5 Jur. N. S., 971; 28 L. J., Ch., 752; 27 Beav. 190.

1. When a father was, by his marriage settlement, empowered to divide at discretion the funds in which the children had an expectant interest:—Held, that he could not deal or negotiate with them in executing the power. Cuninghame v. Anstruther, 2 L. R., H. L. (Sc.), 223.

A parent in such a case purchasing the interests of the children, one of them being only eighteen years of age, is a transaction wholly inconsistent with that protection which the law of every civilised country affords to children, and would not be permitted without the fullest evidence of an intention authorising it, and releases or discharges granted by the children to the father, in consideration of money payments made by him, will form no bar to their subsequent claims under the settlement. Ib.

2. B. P. W. having a power of charging portions for younger children on real estate under a settlement which gave him in the clearest terms power to fix the ages and times at which the portions should vest, and contained no provision for raising portions in default of appointment, and having three daughters aged nine, seven, and one, appointed by deed in 1828 10,000*l.* (being the full amount he was entitled to charge) for the portions of the daughters, to be a vested interest in the three daughters immediately respectively on the execution of the deed, the portions to be paid to them at such times and in such proportions as he should by deed or will appoint, and in default of appointment to be paid to them share and share alike, at twenty-one or marriage, if the same age or time should happen after his decease, but if in his lifetime, then the payment to be postponed till after his death, unless he should signify his consent in writing to their being raised and paid in his lifetime; maintenance at 4*l.* per cent. to be raised from his death; and the deed contained a power of revocation. In 1832 he made by deed a similar appointment by way of confirmation of the former, the portions to be vested immediately on the execution of the deed. One daughter married and attained twenty-one, and in 1851 B. P. W. appointed 5,000*l.*, part of the 10,000*l.*, to her. The other two died infants and spinsters, one in 1836, the other in 1845. B. P. W. assigned to the plaintiff for value in 1875 the 5,000*l.* appointed to the two deceased daughters, and after his death the plaintiff brought this action to have it raised:—Held (reversing the decision of Kay, J., who had dismissed the action as against the owners of the settled estate), that where a donee of a power of charging portions on real estate has, under the terms of the power, clear authority to fix the times at which portions shall vest, and appoints a portion to vest, immediately, there is no rule of law which prohibits its being raised in the event of the child dying under twenty-one and unmarried, and that the decision could not be supported on the ground that the appointment, so far as it made the portions vest immediately, was not within the power. Hinchinbroke (Lord) v. Seymour (1 Bro. C. C. 395) considered and examined. Henty v. Wrey, 21 L. R., Ch. D., 332; 47 L. T. 231; 30 W. R. 850. Reversing 19 L. R., Ch. D., 492; 51 L. J., Ch., 422; 45 L. T., 752; 30 W. R. 317.

Held, also, that the decision could not be supported on the ground that the appointment, so far as it made the portions vest immediately, was a fraud on the power as being made with a view to secure a benefit to the appointor; for that having regard to the fact that if the father had died without making any appointment, the children would have been unprovided for, it was manifestly for the benefit of the children that the father should make an appointment, and that as there was nothing to lead to the conclusion that when the appointments were made the children were likely to die young, and as in the event of the early death of the appointor the children might have derived a benefit from the absolute vesting of their portions, there was no ground for attributing to him an intention to benefit himself by making the portions vest immediately:—Held, therefore, that the plaintiff was entitled to have the 5,000*l.* raised. Ib.

IV. FOR BENEFIT OF APPOINTOR.

2. Other Cases, 5819.

1. Where Antecedent Contract with Appointee.

3. Power of jointuring executed in favour of a wife, but with an agreement that a wife should only receive a part as an annuity for her own benefit, and that the residue should be applied to the payment of the husband's debts:—Held, a fraud upon the power, and the execution set aside, except so far as related to the annuity, the bill containing a submission to pay it, and only seeking relief against the other objects of the appointment. Aleyn v. Belchier, 1 Eden 132.

4. If the donee of a power appoints the fund to one of the objects of the power under an understanding that the latter is to lend the fund to the former, although on good security, the appointment is bad. Arnold v. Hardwicke, 7 Sim. 343; 4 L. J., N. S., Ch., 152.

5. Appointment by father and son, under a power, of money charged on an estate, that in case the son should survive, it should be applied by him in and towards payment of the debts of the father, and subject thereto the residue, if any, should go and be considered as part of the personal estate of the father, and in case the latter should survive it should go and be paid by them, his executors, etc., in and towards satisfaction of his debts, with a similar provision as to the residue; the father surviving appointed in favour of another son for valuable consideration as to part: as to that, the decree directed payment under the appointment. Clinton v. Seymour, 4 Ves. 440.

6. A. having a power to appoint 10,000*l.* amongst his younger children, appoints it to them equally, reserving to himself a power of revocation as to 5,000*l.*, which he afterwards irrevocably appoints to E., one of the children, in consideration of her having agreed to apply part of it in payment of his debts. Afterwards, A., by a deed, to which E. is also a party, revokes, with her consent, the last appointment as to 2,500*l.*, and in pursuance of all powers, appoints that sum to a child by a second marriage, and confirms E.'s title to the remainder under the former appointment:—Held, that the appointment of the 5,000*l.* being void, the appointment of the 2,500*l.* must also fail. Farmer v. Martin, 2 Sim. 502.

1. Tenant for life, with a power to jointure, marries; but does not exercise the power. His wife was seised of real estate for the term of her life, which, on the marriage, was settled to the use of the husband for the joint lives of himself and his wife, remainder to the wife for her life. The husband afterwards became indebted; and agreed with his wife and creditor that he would exercise the power of jointuring in her favour, and that she should grant to the creditor an annuity for the term of her life, equal in amount to the jointure, to be charged upon her estate, and to become payable upon the death of the husband; which agreement was carried into execution. The husband died:—Held, that the execution of the power of jointuring was not a fraud upon the remainderman. Baldwin v. Rooke, 5 Ir. Eq. R. 110.

2. The donee of a power of selection cannot lawfully exercise his power in such a manner, as to secure an advantage to himself, by any stipulation or arrangement with the appointees in whose favour the power is exercised. Ashham v. Barker, 17 Beav. 37; 22 L. J., Ch., 769.

A father had a power of appointing to any of his children. Having obtained part of the trust funds by a breach of trust, he appointed them to his daughters, to the exclusion of his son, under an agreement that they should convey their appointed shares to him in exchange for some real property of equal or superior value to which he was absolutely entitled. This arrangement was carried out. After his death, the son filed a bill to set aside the appointment as a fraud on the power:—Held, that the father having gained no benefit by the arrangement beyond relieving his estate from the breach of trust, the appointment was valid. S. C. 1 W. R. 279.

3. A father, having a power of appointing among his children, cannot, from the execution of it, derive to himself a benefit. Palmer v. Wheeler, 2 Ball & B. 29.

Father, tenant for life, with a power to appoint the fee among his sons, in such shares as he pleased, by one deed, upon the coming of age of his eldest son, appoints the fee to him; by a second deed, dated two days after, the son is made to join the father in a mortgage, to secure a debt due by the father; and by a third deed, dated the next day, the son is made tenant for life of the equity of redemption, with remainder to his issue in tail male, reversion in fee to the father, and an additional charge for the younger children of the father is created. On bill by the son of the appointee, to be relieved from the additional charge and mortgage:—Held, first, that the deed, so far as it charged the additional sum for younger children, was good, but the limitations void, and the excess corrupted; secondly, that the mortgage was a fraud upon the power, the father deriving a benefit to himself, and declared void, the mortgagee having notice of it. S. C. 2 Ball. & B. 18.

Equity will not relieve against a contract entered into by a child with a parent, for an appointment from him; and a purchaser from the parent, with notice of the fraud, will be affected with it. Id. 30.

4. Where tenant for life, with power of appointing to one or more of his children, in consideration of money in part paid on account of his own debts, executed it in favour of his son in tail male, and a few days after they joined in a demise of part of the estate for lives therein named and to be added, and nearly four years after the son executed a reconveyance to the father, in consideration of debts paid by the latter:—Held, that the transaction was sufficiently doubtful as to render the validity of the appointment fit to be inquired into; and decree below, in favour of a party claiming under the will of the father, reversed. Jackson v. Jackson, West 575; 7 Cl. & F. 977.

Where a power is vested in a father, and a stipulation is made by him for his own benefit in the exercise of it, this Court considers such a disposition as a fraud upon the power; the fraud consists, not in the selection by the father of one child in preference to another, but in the arrangement which makes the appointment, though in form to one child, in effect an appointment to the father himself. To render such appointment fraudulent, it is not necessary that it should be wholly for the benefit of the father; it is enough that it is partially so. S. C. Dr. 91.

5. A power to jointure having been executed under an agreement that the creditor of the husband should have part of the jointure, the appointment was set aside, as far as the creditors were to benefit. Lane v. Page, Ambl. 233.

And see Wicherley's case, Ambl. 234. n.

6. Appointment to one of several objects of a power, in payment of a debt due to her from the appointor:—Held, void. Reid v. Reid, 25 Beav. 469.

An appointment was made to a person not an object of a power, with remainder to an object. The first appointment being void:—Held, that the second was not accelerated, but failed with the first. Ib.

7. An appointment made as part of an arrangement between the appointor and appointee, for improving the subject matter of the appointment for the benefit of all the objects of the power, is not invalid by reason of the appointment being also incidentally for the benefit of the appointor. Re Hwish's Charity, 39 L. J., Ch., 499; 10 L. R., Eq., 5; 18 W. R. 817; 22 L. T., N. S., 565.

A tenant for life of lands, under a power to appoint to his children, who also were entitled in default of appointment, appointed the whole to his eldest son for the purpose of having them resettled substantially upon the same trust, but subject to a power for granting building leases to be exercised by trustees, with the consent of the tenant for life and the eldest son:—Held, a valid exercise of the power. Ib.

8. A husband and wife lived apart, and the wife had the care of one of their two younger children. The husband being desirous of raising money by mortgage of his settled estates, and being unable to do so on account of the existing charges thereon, applied to the wife to postpone her pin-money and jointure annuities to his proposed mortgages. The wife consented, provided that the husband would exercise a power of appointment which he had over a sum of 30,000*l.*, in favour of his younger children, to the extent of appointing 5,000*l.* to the child under her care. He accordingly did so by a revocable deed; and by a similar deed, dated the next day, reciting the former appointment, he appointed the rest of the fund to his only other younger child. The former deed only was communicated to the wife, and she objecting to the power of revocation, it was cancelled, and a new irrevocable deed was prepared and executed of the same date as the former. The husband died before the mortgage which he proposed to make was effected. On an attempt being made to prove that the deeds were given to the family solicitor as escrows, not to take effect until the mortgage transaction was completed:—Held, that though, à priori, it was probable that the appointment of the 5,000*l.* might have been so made, there was not the same probability as to the other appointment of the 25,000*l.*, and although a purchaser in the position of the wife would not have expected to have the deed of appointment of the 5,000*l.* delivered to him until the consideration was paid, that rule would not apply to the case of a mother seeking the benefit of one of her children by inducing the father to exercise a power of appointment in the child's favour; and the evidence of the solicitor who prepared the deeds, to the effect that they were delivered to him as escrows, being unsupported by any other witness, being given fourteen years after the transaction, not very exactly, and being entirely contradicted by his conduct at the time of their execution, and subsequently, it was discredited, and the deeds were considered to have been duly sealed and delivered:—Held, also, that although the bribe to the husband would affect the validity of the appointment of the 5,000*l.*, yet that the appointment of the 25,000*l.* was not so connected with the former appointment as to be also invalid; nor indeed was the motive for the latter appointment the same as in the former case, for instead of being an inducement to the wife to consent to the proposed arrangement, the second appointment, if sealed to her, would probably have prevented her concurring in postponing her pin-money and jointure. Rowley v. Rowley, 1 Kay 242; 18 Jur. 306; 23 L. J., Ch., 275; 2 Eq. Rep. 241.

If a power of jointuring be exercised on a corrupt bargain for some benefit to be given to the husband, the fraud being only upon the donor of the power, the Court will sever the appointment, and hold it to be good so far as it is for the benefit of the jointress, and bad as to the rest. Ib.

But although, under a power of distribution among children, the fund is to be considered as a gross fund, to be fairly apportioned among all the objects; yet the donee, by appointing one share corruptly, has only to that extent diminished the common fund; and the Court will not, on that account, in consideration of the rights of the objects of the power, hold the whole to be invalid. Ib.

1. A tenant for life, with remainder to his children as he should appoint, in default of appointment to them equally, appointed to his eldest son, subject to certain charges for his adult younger children. The tenant for life and the appointees joined in executing to A. a mortgage, to secure a debt of the tenant for life. The eldest son afterwards filed a petition, alleging the appointment to have been made in pursuance of an agreement between the tenant for life and A., and that the mortgage was a fraud on the power. The petition also contained charges of actual fraud by A. upon the appointees. The petition prayed that the mortgage might be set aside as fraudulent, and as a fraud on the power:—Held, that, at the hearing, the petition might be amended, by praying that the deed of appointment might be set aside. Skelton v. Flanagan, 14 Ir. Ch. R. 484.

H. being tenant for life of real estate, with remainder to his children as he should appoint, and, in default of appointment, to them equally, and being indebted to F., who had obtained a receiver over his life estate, entered into an agreement with F. that he and his children should join in a mortgage to secure the sum due to F., and that the receiver over the life estate should be removed. H. accordingly appointed the lands to his eldest son, J., subject to certain charges for his younger children; and H. and all his children, except one, who was a minor, joined in a mortgage to F. A sale of the lands was had in the Landed Estates Court, where the personal representative of the minor, who had died without issue, and leaving her father, H., her heir-at-law, claimed the charge appointed to her. J., the eldest son, filed a petition, praying that the appointment might be set aside as a fraud on the power. To this suit, the mortgagee, the father, and the younger children, or their representatives, were made respondents. No actual fraud or undue influence by H. on his children was proved:—Held, that J. and the other children, except the minor, having concurred in the mortgage, and the real and personal representatives of the minor having concurred or acquiesced in the transaction, the appointment could not be impeached. S. C. 1 Ir. R., Eq., 362.

2. When a father was, by his marriage settlement, empowered to divide at discretion the funds in which the children had an expectant interest:—Held, that he could not deal or negotiate with them in executing the power. Cunninghame v. Anstruther, 2 L. R., H. L. (Sc.), 223.

A parent in such a case purchasing the interests of the children, one of them being only eighteen years of age, is a transaction wholly inconsistent with that protection which the law of every civilised country affords to children, and would not be permitted without the fullest evidence of an intention authorising it, and releases or discharges granted by the children to the father, in consideration of money payments made by him, will form no bar to their subsequent claims under the settlement. Ib.

3. Under a marriage settlement made in 1820, a father had a power of appointment among his children. He afterwards borrowed the funds subject to the power, amounting to 6,000*l.*, from the trustees of the settlement, on the security of a freehold estate which was his own property. On the marriage of his only daughter in 1853 he settled 3,000*l.* upon her out of his own property. In 1863 the father executed three deeds of even date. By the first, he made a voluntary settlement of the freehold estate with some other property on his eldest son, E., for his life, with remainder for the benefit of E.'s children or remoter issue, as he should appoint, and in default of appointment, E.'s children equally, and in default of children, to himself in fee. By a second deed, the father appointed the whole of the 6,000*l.* under his marriage settlement to E., absolutely; and the same deed contained a release by the father and his wife, and also by E., and the surviving trustee of the settlement, of the mortgage debt of 6,000*l.*, and a conveyance by the same parties of the freehold estate discharged from the mortgage to the uses of the voluntary settlement of even date. By a third deed, the father gave the residue of his property to his only other son, R. The father made his will, bearing the same date, and thereby confirmed the three deeds of even date, and charged his ultimate remainder under the first deed with 3,000*l.* in favour of his only daughter, M., and subject thereto, gave the same to R. The father died in 1864. E., although made a party to the two first-mentioned deeds of even date, was not consulted on their preparation, and he at first refused to execute them, but he did in fact execute them in the year 1871:—Held, that in the opinion of the Court the arrangement by which the mortgage debt of 6,000*l.* had been released and the ultimate remainder reserved to the father had not been made for the purpose of benefiting the appointor; and that the appointment was not fraudulent or invalid. Roach v. Trood, 3 L. R., Ch. D., 429; 24 W. R. 803; 34 L. T., N. S., 105. Reversing 31 L. T., N. S., 666.

Held, also, that the condition annexed to the appointment, that E. should release the estate from the mortgage debt, was not binding upon E. until he assented to the arrangement; and that he might have claimed the benefit of the absolute appointment in his favour discharged from the condition, but that, having executed the deeds, he had by his voluntary act assented to be bound by the conditions. Ib.

1. The donee of a power appointed the whole trust fund to her daughter, one of the objects. The money was paid by the trustee at the daughter's written request of even date with the appointment to the mother's banking account; the daughter was married soon after, and her husband received a portion only of the fund:—Held, that the representatives of the trustee were liable to replace the trust fund. Mackechnie v. Marjoribanks, 39 L. J., Ch., 604; 18 W. R. 993; 22 L. T., N. S., 841.

2. Other Cases.

2. Strong suspicion that an appointment by a father to his son was for the benefit of the father, and fraud upon the power of appointment, is not sufficient to avoid the transaction. Hamilton v. Kirwan, 2 J. & L. 393; 8 Ir. Eq. R. 178.

3. A father, having a power of appointment amongst children, cannot take any benefit himself, but must appoint to a child or children, and cannot give any interest to a stranger; but if a further advantage is given to the child than he could have under the power, and the father sells part of his own interest, the Court will not weigh the consideration. Langston v. Blackmore, Ambl. 289. See Tucker v. Sanger, M'Clel. 449; 13 Price 609.

4. A father was tenant for life of certain estates, with remainder among his children, in such shares, etc., as he should appoint, and was also absolute owner of other property. Having two daughters, on the marriage of the elder, the other being very young, he limited all his estates in trust to secure himself an annuity until certain scheduled debts were paid, and then to divide the rents equally between him and his daughter's husband, during his life; remainder for a term to secure 2,000*l.* for the younger daughter; remainder, subject to a jointure for his widow, to his daughter's husband and herself, and their issue, in strict settlement:—Held, a good execution, not being a fraud on the power from the benefit the donee took himself as he settled the additional property, and the limitations to the daughter's issue being good, as made with the consent of the object of the power. Conolly v. M'Dermott, Beat. 601.

5. A power of appointing a fund between A., B., and C. is well executed by an appointment between A., B., and the husband of C.; but an appointment to such husband of a share of the fund, after deducting therefrom a debt due to the appointor, is an invalid execution of the power, so far as regards the direction to deduct. Hewitt v. Daore (Lord), 2 Keen 622; 7 L. J., N. S., Ch., 295; 2 Jur. 836.

6. Father, having power to appoint among children, and purchasing the share of one, cannot by appointment entitle himself to more than the share of that child in default of appointment. Smith v. Camelford (Lord), 2 Ves. 714.

7. Freeholds were, by marriage settlement, conveyed upon trust for the issue male in such shares as the father should appoint. By indenture reciting the settlement, the father conveyed to a trustee for the eldest son and his issue certain other lands in consideration of his releasing all his right under the settlement:—Held, that the father was entitled to that share of the settled property to which the son was entitled in default of appointment. Barron v. Barron, 2 Jones 798.

8. Appointment by a mother, under a power contained in her marriage settlement, in favour of one of her daughters, set aside, the evidence showing that such appointment had not been determined on, prepared, and executed solely with a view to the benefit of the daughter, but that it was intended, in part at least, for the benefit of the appointor. Humphrey v. Olver, 5 Jur., N. S., 946; 28 L. J., Ch., 406; 7 W. R, 334; 33 L. T. 83. Reversing 5 Jur., N. S., 111.

9. Certain policies of insurance effected by a father on his life as a provision for his daughters, were assigned to a trustee, upon trust for such of the daughters as the father should appoint; and certain estates were demised to the same trustee, upon trust, out of the rents and profits to secure the payment of the premiums. The trustee advanced some sums of money in payment of the premiums, and the father appointed the bonuses which had accrued upon the policies to three of his daughters; and the three daughters soon afterwards authorised the trustees to receive the sum paid by the office for the bonuses, and invest part thereof as a fund to keep down the premiums, and a part of the sum was applied in satisfaction of the arrears of such premiums. A subsequent appointment was made in favour of the other daughters of the residue of the sums to be received on the policies, and which was intended to equalise the shares:—Held, that the first appointment was a fraud upon the power, its immediate object being to relieve the father, and its necessary consequences to relax the diligence of the trustee in enforcing the rights of the daughters against the father. Harrison v. Randall, 9 Hare 397; 16 Jur. 72; 21 L. J., Ch., 294.

1. A tenant for life had power to appoint to any of his children, an estate, which, in default, was limited to his eldest son in fee. The eldest son attained twenty-one in January 1841, and in February the father appointed the estate to him absolutely. In May, the father and the son mortgaged the estate for the father's debts, and in July the father and eldest son conveyed the estate to a trustee, to indemnify the son against the mortgage debts, and then to sell and divide the surplus between all the children equally. Semble, that the latter deed was not void as part of a transaction constituting a fraud on the power; but held, that the deed of July must be treated as void until set aside by an independent proceeding for that purpose in a suit by a younger child to carry it into execution. Beddoes v. Pugh, 26 Beav. 407.

2. A father, in exercise of a power, appointed part of a fund to one of his daughters, not twenty-one. She immediately mortgaged her interest so appointed, and part of the purchase money was applied to the use of the father and his daughters:—Held, that the transaction was so doubtful that a purchaser under the mortgagee was not compelled to accept the purchase. Warde v. Dickson, 5 Jur., N. S., 698; 28 L. J., Ch., 315.

3. A tenant for life with a power of appointment among his children appointed to two, and then joined with them in a mortgage, the money being expressed to be advanced to all three:—Held, that this was no fraud on the power of appointment. Cockroft or Cockcroft v. Sutcliffe, 2 Jur., N. S., 323; 25 L. J., Ch., 313.

Lands being limited to a father for life, with an exclusive power of appointment among his children, remainder over, the two eldest sons, being of full age, and desirous of being established in the world, set up in business as millers in partnership. At their request the father joined the partnership. In order to procure capital for the business, the father appointed the lands to his two sons exclusively, and joined with them in mortgaging the fee for 800*l*., which was placed to the credit of the partnership generally, other property belonging to the father of the value of 600*l*. being included in the security. There were five other children, three of whom were still infants, and two of age. These two had confirmed the transaction. There was no evidence of any bargain, or any mala fides on the part of the father, or any advantage except such as he derived from the produce of the mortgage being employed in the trade in which he was a partner:—Held, that it was a good appointment. Ib.

4. A will valid in its inception as an execution of a power of appointment, will not be afterwards avoided by being made the basis of transactions amounting to a fraud on the power. Pares v. Pares, 12 W. R. 231.

P., who had a power of appointment, by deed or will, in favour of her children, executed a will in February 1853 by which she appointed the property to her two daughters. In March 1853 she made a similar appointment by deed, and immediately afterwards P. and her daughters raised money by an assignment of the property, by way of mortgage, and the money was applied for P.'s benefit. The solicitor of the mortgagee acted for P. in the preparation of the will and deeds:—Held, that though it was a case of suspicion, the deeds being clearly bad, yet as no fraud was proved and the facts were consistent with honesty, the will was a good execution of the power. S. C. 10 Jur., N. S., 90; 33 L. J., Ch., 215.

5. The donees of a power of appointment amongst their children over a trust fund in which they had life interests, executed a deed poll in contemplation of the marriage of one of the daughters, then a minor, and thereby, after reciting that upon the treaty for the marriage it was agreed that they should execute the power in favour of the daughter, in order that the appointed share might be settled in the manner mentioned in an indenture of even date, appointed a share of the trust fund to the daughter; and by the settlement referred to the appointed share, together with a sum of nearly equal amount, secured by the bond of the father, was settled upon the usual trusts for the husband and wife and other children of the marriage, with ultimate trusts in default of children for the father, one of the donees of the power:—Held, that the appointment was a valid execution of the power, notwithstanding the contingent interest which the father obtained under it by the arrangement. Cooper v. Cooper, 39 L. J., Ch., 240; 5 L. R., Ch., 203; 18 W. R. 299; 22 L. T., N. S., 1. Affirming 38 L. J., Ch., 622; 8 L. R., Eq., 312; 17 W. R. 1007; 21 L. T., N. S., 197.

6. A marriage settlement gave to the parents a power, with the consent of the trustees, to make void the trusts, and of appointing the estate to new uses. This power was exercised for the purpose of mortgaging the estate to one of the trustees for a sum advanced to the father. The estate was afterwards sold under a power of sale contained in the mortgage deed:—Held, that a good title could not be made under it. Eland v. Baker, 29 Beav. 137; 7 Jur., N. S., 956; 9 W. R. 444.

A father of a lady on her marriage conveyed property to trustees, upon trust for the wife and husband successively for life, and after the death of the survivor, upon trust for the children of the marriage. The settlement empowered the father, the son-in-law, and the daughter, with the consent in writing of the trustees, to revoke the uses and trusts of the settlement, and to re-limit and declare new uses and trusts. There were children of the marriage. One of the trustees having advanced a sum of money to the husband, an indenture of mortgage was executed, whereby the donees of the power of revocation, with the consent of the trustees, concurred in the exercise of the power of revocation contained in the settlement, and revoked the uses of the settlement, and re-limited the estate to the trustee by way of mortgage:—Held, that the deed was a fraud upon the power, and that the mortgagee could not, under the power of sale contained therein, make a good title to a purchaser. Ib.

1. By a marriage settlement a power of appointment over a trust fund was given to the husband (the plaintiff) in favour of the children of the marriage, to be exercised by deed or will. In default of appointment the property was to be divided equally among the children. There were four children of the marriage, of whom one died in 1869, a bachelor and intestate. The plaintiff was his personal representative. In 1876 the plaintiff appointed by deed in favour of his three surviving children, but reserved a power of revocation. In 1880 he revoked by deed the appointment made in 1876, so that the property might stand limited as theretofore. The plaintiff proposed to execute an absolute release of the power of appointment, and submitted that he would thereby become entitled to a share of the trust fund. The defendants contended that the plaintiff executed the deed of revocation in 1880 in order that he might claim the share for his own benefit, and that his intention was to commit a fraud on the power:—Held, that the donee of a power might deal with it in any lawful way he pleased. He might exercise the power and reserve to himself a power of revocation. Although, in this case, by an accident, namely, the death of one of the objects of the power, the donee had derived benefit from so doing, he could not be regarded as having committed a fraud on the power, and upon executing a proper release, he would be entitled to the share he claimed. Shirley v. Fisher, 47 L. T. 109.

V. FOR BENEFIT OF STRANGERS TO THE POWER.

2. Appointment to Objects and Contemporaneous Settlement by them, 5823.
3. Interests given to Grandchildren or Parent by Way of Settlement, 5824.

1. Where Antecedent Contract with Objects of the Power.

2. A. being desirous of voluntarily settling property on the female descendants of D. then in existence, by deed reciting this desire, and that certain persons therein named were the only descendants of D. then in life, settled a part of the property amongst such several persons so named, and reserved to himself a power of appointing the remaining part of the property amongst such several persons before named which, in default of appointment, was given to those several persons named. He afterwards discovered that there were other descendants of D. in existence, who had been omitted; and to remedy that omission, he appointed a part of the fund to an object of the power, upon his executing bonds for the payment to the persons newly discovered of the amount when received:—Held, that the appointment was void, and that the Court would not, in a suit to have the rights of the parties to the appointed fund declared, determine whether the case was such as to entitle the parties to have the settlement reformed according to the intention of the settlor. Lee v. Fernie, 1 Beav. 483.

3. P., a tenant for life of an estate, had a power of appointment over it in favour of his children, or any one or more of them. No power of leasing was given to him. He had granted a lease to F., and the term became vested in G., and to the latter he agreed to grant a new lease for a term commensurate with the remainder of the old term. P. and his daughter executed a joint bond to indemnify G. against the determination of the lease by P.'s death before the end of the term, and on the same day P. executed his will, by which he made an appointment of the whole estate in favour of his daughter. Thereupon G. surrendered the whole term, and the lease was executed to him for the remainder of the original term. A son of P. filed a bill to set aside the transaction as being a corrupt bargain between P. and his daughter, and a fraud upon the power, but Kindersley, V.-Ch. (3 L. T., N. S., 876; 9 W. R. 396), dismissed the bill with costs; and on appeal:—Held, that the will formed no part of the arrangement with reference to the lease and the bond. Pickles v. Pickles, 31 L. J., Ch., 146; 7 Jur., N. S., 1065; 9 W. R. 763; 4 L. T., N. S., 755.

4. Where a donee exercises a power of appointment in favour of one of several objects of the power, with a view to the benefit of a stranger, the appointment is fraudulent and void, even although the appointee is ignorant of the fraud, and the motive of the donee is not morally wrong. Re Marsden, 4 Drew. 594; 5 Jur., N. S., 590; 28 L. J., Ch., 906; 7 W. R. 520; 33 L. T. 217.

Therefore, where a married woman having a power to appoint a fund, of which she received the income for her life, among her children, appointed the whole fund at her death to her eldest daughter, in order that thereout the daughter should benefit her father, but the daughter was not informed of the mother's intention until after her mother's death:—Held, that such appointment was void. Ib.

5. An appointment is not void for exclusiveness, if any part is void for another reason. Ranking v. Barnes, 3 N. R. 660.

The donee of a power to appoint amongst children, appointed two-sixths of the fund to a daughter, in order, as to one-sixth, to enable her husband to discharge a liability incurred by him for the benefit of another object of the power:—Held, that the appointment was invalid as to one-sixth, but valid as to the other sixth. S. C. 10 Jur., N. S., 463; 33 L. J., Ch., 539; 12 W. R. 565.

1. Voluntary settlement of personal property, in trust for such one or more of his children as the settlor shall appoint. Appointment to one child, exclusively, upon a secret understanding that that child shall re-assign a part of the fund to, or in favour of, a stranger. This appointment is a fraud upon the settlement, and void, not only to the extent of the sum assigned back, but in toto. Bill, by purchaser for valuable consideration without notice, under this appointment, dismissed as against the person entitled under the settlement in default of appointment, such person having also the legal estate in the fund which was the subject of the appointment. Daubeny v. Cockburn, 1 Meriv. 626.

Agreement, by one of the objects of a power, to return part in consideration of an appointment in its favour, is a fraud in the appointee as well as in the appointor, both on the other objects of the power, and on the party who is to take in default of appointment. Id. 644.

Secus, where the appointee is not privy to the corrupt agreement. Ib.

2. The donee of a power of appointment of a fund among her children, to whom the fund was limited in default of appointment, had only two daughters, and apportioned nearly the whole of the fund to one of them, who was unmarried, on an understanding, but without any positive agreement, that the appointee would re-settle one moiety of it on trusts, for the separate use of the other daughter, who was married, exclusively of her husband; and after her death, on trusts for her children. A re-settlement was accordingly made, without the privity of the married daughter, who did not hear of the transaction until several years afterwards:—Held, on the suit of her husband, that the appointment was invalid, and a settlement was directed to be made of the married daughter's share. Salmon v. Gibbs, 3 De G. & Sm. 343; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 177; 13 Jur. 355.

3. In 1813 a married woman who was entitled for life to estates, including the L. estate, with a power of appointing them after her death to all or any of her children, appointed them by deed to her eldest son in fee. This appointment was made upon a bargain between the husband and wife, and the eldest son, that the estates should be settled, subject to the wife's life estate, to the use that the husband should receive a rent charge for his life, and subject thereto to the use of all or any of the children of the marriage as the husband and wife should jointly appoint, or as the wife, if she survived, should by deed or will appoint; and the estates were so settled accordingly. In 1820, the husband and wife made a joint appointment of the estates among their children, by which they gave the L. estate to the eldest son, and they made slight variations of these dispositions in 1826, reserving on each occasion a power of revocation and new appointment to them jointly and to the wife if surviving. In 1827 the husband died. In 1829, the widow, who had not married again, by a deed not noticing the invalidity of the appointment of 1813, and expressed to be made in exercise of the powers given her by the deeds of 1820 and 1826, or by the deeds recited in them, and of all other powers vested in her, made some slight variations of the dispositions made by the deeds of 1820 and 1826, and subject thereto, confirmed the dispositions of those deeds:—Held, that although the appointment of 1813 was invalid as being made on a bargain for the benefit of the husband, and the appointments of 1820 and 1826 were therefore invalid, as made under a power which was ill created, the original power of the wife was well exercised by the appointment of 1829, and that the title of the eldest son to the L. estate was good. Carver v. Richards, 1 De G. F. & J. 548. And see S. C. 6 Jur., N. S., 410; 5 Jur., N. S., 1412; 29 L. J., Ch., 357; 8 W. R. 349; 2 L. T., N. S., 161.

4. If a power of appointment is exercised in favour of an object of the power, upon the understanding that deeds shall be executed by the appointee, settling the property upon persons not objects of the power, in furtherance of the desire of the donee of the power to appoint to those persons, the appointment, although made without any corrupt motive, is void in equity as a fraud upon the power. Pryor v. Pryor, 32 L. J., Ch., 731; 11 W. R. 873; 9 L. T., N. S., 78; 4 N. R. 82.

Secus, where a bonâ fide appointment is made to an object of the power, with a view to an immediate settlement of the appointed property with the approbation of the appointee; as an appointment by a parent to a child in contemplation of a settlement on the marriage of the latter, in which case the parental influence of the donee of the power may be legitimately exerted in procuring a proper settlement. Ib.

Parents having a power of appointing an estate to all or any of their children, appointed it absolutely to two of their sons, upon the understanding that the appointees should re-settle the estate upon certain trusts for the benefit of all the children then living during their respective lives, and subject thereto for the benefit of the children of the sons. This re-settlement was made by a contemporaneous deed:—Held, that the transaction could not be supported by analogy to the common case of an appointment to a daughter in contemplation of her marriage, accompanied by a contemporaneous settlement of the appointed fund, but that the appointment was void in equity, as made upon a bargain for the benefit of persons not objects of the power. S. C. 2 De G. J. & S. 205; 10 Jur., N. S., 603; 33 L. J., Ch., 441; 12 W. R. 781; 10 L. T., N. S., 360; 4 N. R. 440.

An appointment to an object of a power upon a bargain to make a settlement in favour of another person, also an object thereof, is valid, semble. Ib.

5. The execution of a power in favour of a stranger, confirmed by the only object of the power, was held to be valid; and though the deed contained a power of revocation, it was not revoked by a subsequent appointment in favour of the object of the power, it being proved that the second deed was executed for a specific purpose only, and by mistake included the whole property comprised within the power. Wright v. Goff, 2 Jur., N. S., 481; 25 L. J., Ch., 803.

A. B., a tenant for life, had a power of appointing a fund amongst her children. There being only one object of the power, viz., C. D., who was a married woman, an arrangement was come to between A. B. and C. D., and her husband, whereby the whole fund was appointed to C. D. and then resettled, giving an interest to C. D.'s children, and to E. F., a stranger. The husband survived:—Held, that the transaction was binding on him and his representatives. S. C. 22 Beav. 207.

1. An absolute appointment was made to an object of a power, under a prior understanding between the appointor and appointee, to hold in trust for persons, some of whom were objects and some not:—Held, that the whole was void. Tucker v. Sawyer (M'Clel. 424) observed upon. Birley v. Birley, 25 Beav. 299; 4 Jur., N. S., 315; 27 L. J., Ch., 569; 6 W. R. 400.

A parent had a power to appoint to children alone. She appointed to two children absolutely. The next year the appointees settled the property on children and grandchildren of the parent, by a deed reciting that when the appointment was made, it was understood between the appointor and appointees that the latter should consider themselves as possessed of the property upon the trusts of settlement:—Held, that the transaction was a fraud on the power, and wholly void. Ib.

2. K., by his will dated in 1862, after reciting that he had two children, namely, his son F. and his daughter M., and that under a codicil of his father he had power, by deed or will, to appoint to his children, in such proportions as he might think fit, the principal share wherein he took a life interest in the residuary estate of his father, in exercise of such power directed and appointed that such share should, from and after his decease, go and belong absolutely to his daughter M., but in case she should die in his lifetime, then to his son F. The testator's daughter was married to B. By a settlement dated in 1866, and made upon her marriage, it was declared that K., in consideration of the marriage, appointed his daughter to receive the property over which he had a power of appointment, only reserving to himself the faculty of disposing in favour of his wife of the reversion of 10,000 francs during her life. K., by a codicil to his will, dated in 1871, and made in France, where he was then residing, stated as follows: "When I married my daughter . . . I expressed the desire of leaving to my wife . . . a small revenue at my death . . . but not having it in my power to do so, my daughter and her husband . . . proposed to me as follows: that if I would consent to leave to them the whole of the sum of my share of the residue of my father's estate . . . which I have power to dispose of in favour of my children, they would take the engagement at my death to have placed in my said wife's name, for her life, the sum of 10,000 francs . . . and at my wife's death the said sum to return to my said daughter. . . . In the case that my said daughter . . . and her husband should respect my memory and their signature, then it is my will and desire that my daughter and her husband should and may have the whole of the sum of my aforesaid share." This codicil was written and signed by the testator, but was unattested. It was, however, admitted to probate under 24 & 25 Vict., c. 114:—Held, that the appointment under the settlement and codicil were invalid, as being respectively frauds upon the power; that neither the settlement nor the codicil operated so as to revoke the will of 1862, but that the bargain which had been made had, in equity, the effect of preventing the appointee from taking under the appointment in the will, and consequently the fund must go as in default of appointment. Re Kirwan's Trusts, 52 L. J., Ch., 952; 49 L. T. 292; 25 L. R., Ch. D., 373; 32 W. R. 581.

See also Next Subdivision.

2. Appointment to Objects and Contemporaneous Setttlement by Them.

3. An appointment of parties not objects of the power by the direction of a party who is, is valid, operating as an appointment to and settlement by the latter. Goldsmid v. Goldsmid, 2 Hare 187; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 113; 7 Jur. 11.

A valid appointment may be made to persons not objects of the power, with the concurrence of those who are objects; and by an extension of this principle, it was held that, in a settlement grounded upon an appointment to one who was an object of the power, and made with the concurrence of such appointee, a power might be reserved to such appointee to appoint to the wives or husbands of the objects of the original power. Ib.

4. If a father, having a power to appoint to a child, without making an actual appointment connive with the child in making a settlement which cannot have effect unless through a previous appointment, that very disposition is considered first as an appointment to the child, and then as a settlement by the child of the property appointed; but if the intention of the parties be not to execute the power of appointment, but to operate on the estate in default of appointment, and if the transaction considered as an appointment would be a fraud on the power, the Court will not imply an appointment, none such having been actually made. Thompson v. Simpson, 2 J. & L. 110; 8 Ir. Eq. R. 55. See S. C. 1 Dr. & War. 459.

5. A. having a power, by deed or will, to appoint the lands of D. (which were held with other lands, and were subject to a proportioned rent of 19*l.*) to the use of such child or children of his marriage, in such shares, or the whole to one of such children, for such estates, and with such conditions, and limitations over, for the benefit of some or one of such children, and subject to such charges for the other or others of such children as he should appoint, purchased the reversion of the lands of D., and afterwards, by a settlement on the marriage of B., his eldest son, reciting that he was seised in fee of the lands of D., and that it had been agreed that an annuity, to be thereby granted and charged on the lands of D., should be assigned upon the trusts of the settlement, granted an annuity of 100*l.*, to be charged on the lands of D. for 100 years, upon trust, after death of the survivor of A. and his wife, to pay the same to B. for life, and after his decease to C. (B.'s intended wife), so long as there should be issue of the marriage, and she should remain a widow; and after the death of the survivor, or in case C. should survive B., and there should have been no issue of the marriage, or she should marry again, in trust for the executors, etc., of A. By will, A., reciting his power, devised all his right to the lands of D. to his three sons, in trust by sale, etc., to raise a sum for his younger children:—Held, that the settlement operated as an appointment to B., and a settlement by him on C., and that she was therefore, though not an object of the power, entitled to the annuity after B.'s death. Irwin v. Irwin, 10 Ir. Ch. R. 29.

1. A father, in exercise of a power, appointed part of a fund to one of his daughters, not twenty-two. She immediately mortgaged her interest so appointed, and part of the purchase money was applied to the use of the father and his daughters:—Held, that the transaction was so doubtful that a purchaser was not compelled to accept the purchase. Ward v. Dickson, 5 Jur., N. S., 1698; 28 L. J., Ch., 315.

2. A tenant for life had the power of appointing the settled property amongst such of his children as he should think fit. The trustees had, in breach of trust, lent him part of the trust moneys, without taking any security. In 1834 the tenant for life appointed to his daughters the money so lent, and 500*l.*, in exclusion of his son. Contemporaneously, the daughters exchanged the sum so appointed for an estate of the father, and the old trustee retired. The transaction was supported, the estate being worth the amount given in exchange. Askham v. Barker, 17 Beav. 37; 22 L. J., Ch., 769; 1 W. R. 279.

3. A testator gave real and personal estate to his widow for life, and after his death to his two daughters "in such proportions" as she should appoint, and in default equally. The will also contained a direction that the fortune of each daughter should go to her children after her decease, in such proportions as she should direct, and in default equally. By a deed poll the widow appointed the estates in equal moieties to such uses as her two daughters, who were both then married women, should appoint, and in default to them absolutely; and directed the appointment to take effect immediately. By a mutual settlement executed the following day the two daughters appointed their respective shares to themselves and their husbands for life, with remainder to their children as they should appoint, and in default equally; and if either daughter should die without issue, her moiety was to go over upon the trusts declared of the other moiety:—Held, that the widow had power to determine the nature of the interests as well as the proportion of the property which each daughter should take; and that the deed of appointment was therefore valid:—Held, also, that the deed of settlement was valid so far as it determined the interests of the daughters and their children; but whether the life interests given to the husbands were good, quære. Jebb v. Tugwell, 4 W. R. 157; 25 L. J., Ch., 109; 20 Jur. 54; 8 De G. M. & G. 663. S. C. 3 W. R. 278; 24 L. J., Ch., 433; 1 Jur., N. S., 460; 20 Beav. 84, 97. n.

4. Under a power to appoint to children, an appointment was made by deed poll to trustees upon the trusts of a contemporaneous settlement on the marriage of one of the daughters. This settlement, to which the daughter was a party, declared trusts for the daughter for life, with limitations over to her husband and children:—Held, that the appointment was good, being equivalent to an appointment to the daughter, and a settlement by her. Daniel v. Arkwright, Courthope v. Daniel, Daniel v. Courthope, 2 Hem. & M. 95; 10 Jur., N. S., 764; 11 L. T., N. S., 18; 4 N. R. 418.

Another appointment was made in favour of another daughter already married, and the deed of appointment itself declared trusts in favour of the daughter, her husband, and children:—Held, that this appointment was bad; but on the evidence of intention the appointment was rectified. Ib.

See also Preceding Subdivisons.

3. Interests given to Grandchildren or Parent by Way of Settlement.

5. Under power to appoint amongst children, interests may be given to grandchildren, by way of settlement on their mother, with her consent and her husband's. White v. St. Barbe, 1 Ves. & B. 399.

6. A tenant for life had a power to appoint to children. By a post-nuptial settlement, to which his married daughter and her husband were parties, he appointed the reversionary interest to his daughter, and her husband and children:—Held, that the appointment to the husband and grandchildren was valid. Re Gosset, 19 Beav. 529.

7. Where a party has a right to appoint an estate to one of his children, and that child joins his father in a settlement of the estate upon his children, although the grandchildren thus provided for are not objects of the power, yet the Court holds such a dealing as an appointment of the estate to the child, and then a disposition of it by him in favour of the grandchildren. Thompson v. Simpson, 1 Dr. & War. 459.

8. A. B., a tenant for life, had a power of appointing a fund amongst her children. There being only one object of the power, viz., C. D., who was a married woman, an arrangement was come to between A. B. and C. D., and her husband, whereby the whole fund was appointed to C. D. and then resettled, giving an interest to C. D.'s children, and to E. F., a stranger. The husband survived:—Held, that the transaction was binding on him and his representatives. Wright v. Goff, 22 Beav. 207; 2 Jur., N. S., 481; 25 L. J., Ch., 803; 4 W. R. 522.

9. Parents had a life interest in a sum of money, with power to appoint it to their children. On the marriage of an infant daughter, by a settlement to which she and her intended husband were parties, the parents appointed the reversionary fund to trustees, on trust for the daughter, the intended husband, and the child of the marriage. The daughter and her husband survived the parents:—Held, that the appointment to the husband and children, though not objects of the original power, was valid, notwithstanding the infancy of the daughter. FitzRoy v. Richmond (Duke), 27 Beav. 190; 5 Jur., N. S., 971; 28 L. J., Ch., 752.

VI. EXCESS. WHEN SEVERABLE.

1. A. having a power to appoint 10,000*l.* amongst his younger children, appoints it to them equally, reserving to himself a power of revocation as to 5,000*l.*, which he afterwards irrevocably appoints to E., one of the children, in consideration of her having agreed to apply part of it in payment of his debts. Afterwards, A., by a deed, to which E. is also a party, revokes, with her consent, the last appointment as to 2,500*l.*, and in pursuance of all powers, appoints that sum to a child by a second marriage, and confirms E.'s title to the remainder under the former appointment:—Held, that the appointment of the 5,000*l.* being void, the appointment of the 2,000*l.* must also fail. Farmer v. Martin, 2 Sim. 502.

2. Power of jointuring executed in favour of a wife, but with an agreement that a wife should only receive a part as an annuity for her own benefit, and that the residue should be applied to the payment of the husband's debts:—Held, a fraud upon the power, and the execution set aside, except so far as related to the annuity, the bill containing a submission to pay it, and only seeking relief against the other objects of the appointment. Aleyn v. Belchier, 1 Eden 132. And see Lane v. Page, Ambl. 233.

3. Voluntary settlement of personal property, in trust for such one or more of his children as the settlor shall appoint. Appointment to one child, exclusively, upon a secret understanding that the child shall re-assign a part of the fund to, or in favour of, a stranger. This appointment is a fraud upon the settlement, and void, not only to the extent of the sum assigned back, but in toto. Bill, by purchaser for valuable consideration without notice, under this appointment, dismissed as against the person entitled under the settlement in default of appointment, such person having also the legal estate in the fund which was the subject of the appointment. Daubeny v. Cockburn, 1 Meriv. 626.

4. The Court will not entertain a suit to set aside an appointment of a part of certain trust funds, as a fraud upon the power, when it appears that another appointment not impeached by the bill was made of funds, subject to the same power, in which regard was had to the appointment complained of, and the object was to equalise the interests of the several appointees; for the Court will not undo part of an entire transaction, the other part of the same transaction not being brought within its jurisdiction. Harrison v. Randall, 9 Hare 397; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 294; 16 Jur. 72.

Where there is an appointment to A. and B. by one instrument (à fortiori by different instruments), the appointment to A. may be good and the appointment to B. bad, and A. and B. may well agree between themselves, that the bad appointment shall not be disturbed. Ib.

5. When an appointment is partly within the power, and partly in excess of it, but the lawful intention is not so connected with or so dependent on the wrong intention as to be affected by it, the Court will give effect to so much of the appointment as is within the power. Topham v. Portland (Duke), 1 N. R. 496.

6. A father had a power of appointing to any of his children. Having, in breach of trust, obtained possession of part of the trust funds, he, in 1834, appointed that part to his daughters, in exclusion of his son, under an agreement that that part should afterwards be conveyed to him, in exchange for an estate of less value. In 1844 he executed a second appointment, reciting the previous dealing with the fund, and he thereby appointed the remaining portion of the trust property, "and all other" the property comprised in the settlement, to his daughters:—Held, that the first appointment was void; and, secondly, that the portion of the property comprised therein was not appointed by the second deed. Askham v. Barker, 12 Beav. 499.

7. Father, tenant for life, with a power to appoint the fee among his sons, in such shares as he pleased, by one deed, upon the coming of age of his eldest son, appoints the fee to him; by a second deed, dated two days after, the son is made to join the father in a mortgage, to secure a debt due by the father; and by a third deed, dated the next day, the son is made tenant for life of the equity of redemption, with remainder to his issue in tail male, reversion in fee to the father, and an additional charge for the younger children of the father is created. On bill by the son of the appointee, to be relieved from the additional charge and mortgage:—Held, first, that the deed, so far as it charged the additional sum for younger children, was good, but the limitations void, and the excess corrupted. Palmer v. Wheeler, 2 Ball. & B. 18.

8. Under a marriage settlement 3,000*l.* consols were vested in trustees for the husband and wife for life successively, and afterwards to pay the principal (in case there should be any children) among such children in such manner as the husband and wife should jointly appoint by deed, or the survivor by deed or will, and in default of appointment, for the children equally, with benefit of survivorship. There were six children, and, after the father's death (there having been no joint appointment), the mother appointed two-sixths to a married daughter, it being in evidence that the daughter's husband had become liable to pay the penalty of a bond as surety for his wife's brother, and that he had negotiated with his mother-in-law to make the 3,000*l.* consols available to relieve him from such debt. One-sixth only was applied to pay the debt, and, subsequently, the mother appointed the remainder of the fund (four-sixths) to two of her sons, leaving a son and daughter to whom no appointment was made. A bill was filed to carry out the trusts of the settlement, and declare the rights as to the 3,000*l.*, and a reference directed as to the circumstances attending the appointments:—Held, that the appointment to the wife to relieve the husband was invalid as to one-

to be charged on the lands of D. for 100 years, upon trust, after death of the survivor of A. and his wife, to pay the same to B. for life, and after his decease to C. (B.'s intended wife), so long as there should be issue of the marriage, and she should remain a widow; and after the death of the survivor, or in case C. should survive B., and there should have been no issue of the marriage, or she should marry again, in trust for the executors, etc., of A. By will, A., reciting his power, devised all his right to the lands of D. to his three sons, in trust by sale, etc., to raise a sum for his younger children:—Held, that the settlement operated as an appointment to B., and a settlement by him on C., and that she was therefore, though not an object of the power, entitled to the annuity after B.'s death. Irwin v. Irwin, 10 Ir. Ch. R. 29.

1. A father, in exercise of a power, appointed part of a fund to one of his daughters, not twenty-two. She immediately mortgaged her interest so appointed, and part of the purchase money was applied to the use of the father and his daughters:—Held, that the transaction was so doubtful that a purchaser was not compelled to accept the purchase. Ward v. Dickson, 5 Jur., N. S., 1698; 28 L. J., Ch., 315.

2. A tenant for life had the power of appointing the settled property amongst such of his children as he should think fit. The trustees had, in breach of trust, lent him part of the trust moneys, without taking any security. In 1834 the tenant for life appointed to his daughters the money so lent, and 500*l.*, in exclusion of his son. Contemporaneously, the daughters exchanged the sum so appointed for an estate of the father, and the old trustee retired. The transaction was supported, the estate being worth the amount given in exchange. Askham v. Barker, 17 Beav. 37; 22 L. J., Ch., 769; 1 W. R. 279.

3. A testator gave real and personal estate to his widow for life, and after his death to his two daughters "in such proportions" as she should appoint, and in default equally. The will also contained a direction that the fortune of each daughter should go to her children after her decease, in such proportions as she should direct, and in default equally. By a deed poll the widow appointed the estates in equal moieties to such uses as her two daughters, who were both then married women, should appoint, and in default to them absolutely; and directed the appointment to take effect immediately. By a mutual settlement executed the following day the two daughters appointed their respective shares to themselves and their husbands for life, with remainder to their children as they should appoint, and in default equally; and if either daughter should die without issue, her moiety was to go over upon the trusts declared of the other moiety:—Held, that the widow had power to determine the nature of the interests as well as the proportion of the property which each daughter should take; and that the deed of appointment was therefore valid:—Held, also, that the deed of settlement was valid so far as it determined the interests of the daughters and their children; but whether the life interests given to the husbands were good, quære. Jebb v. Tugwell, 4 W. R. 157; 25 L. J., Ch., 109; 20 Jur. 54; 8 De G. M. & G. 663. S. C. 3 W. R. 278; 24 L. J., Ch., 433; 1 Jur., N. S., 460; 20 Beav. 84, 97. n.

4. Under a power to appoint to children, an appointment was made by deed poll to trustees upon the trusts of a contemporaneous settlement on the marriage of one of the daughters. This settlement, to which the daughter was a party, declared trusts for the daughter for life, with limitations over to her husband and children:—Held, that the appointment was good, being equivalent to an appointment to the daughter, and a settlement by her. Daniel v. Arkwright, Courthope v. Daniel, Daniel v. Courthope, 2 Hem. & M. 95; 10 Jur., N. S., 764; 11 L. T., N. S., 18; 4 N. R. 418.

Another appointment was made in favour of another daughter already married, and the deed of appointment itself declared trusts in favour of the daughter, her husband, and children:—Held, that this appointment was bad; but on the evidence of intention the appointment was rectified. Ib.

See also Preceding Subdivisons.

3. Interests given to Grandchildren or Parent by Way of Settlement.

5. Under power to appoint amongst children, interests may be given to grandchildren, by way of settlement on their mother, with her consent and her husband's. White v. St. Barbe, 1 Ves. & B. 399.

6. A tenant for life had a power to appoint to children. By a post-nuptial settlement, to which his married daughter and her husband were parties, he appointed the reversionary interest to his daughter, and her husband and children:—Held, that the appointment to the husband and grandchildren was valid. Re Gosset, 19 Beav. 529.

7. Where a party has a right to appoint an estate to one of his children, and that child joins his father in a settlement of the estate upon his children, although the grandchildren thus provided for are not objects of the power, yet the Court holds such a dealing as an appointment of the estate to the child, and then a disposition of it by him in favour of the grandchildren. Thompson v. Simpson, 1 Dr. & War. 459.

8. A. B., a tenant for life, had a power of appointing a fund amongst her children. There being only one object of the power, viz., C. D., who was a married woman, an arrangement was come to between A. B. and C. D., and her husband, whereby the whole fund was appointed to C. D. and then resettled, giving an interest to C. D.'s children, and to E. F., a stranger. The husband survived:—Held, that the transaction was binding on him and his representatives. Wright v. Goff, 22 Beav. 207; 2 Jur., N. S., 481; 25 L. J., Ch., 803; 4 W. R. 522.

9. Parents had a life interest in a sum of money, with power to appoint it to their children. On the marriage of an infant daughter, by a settlement to which she and her intended husband were parties, the parents appointed the reversionary fund to trustees, on trust for the daughter, the intended husband, and the child of the marriage. The daughter and her husband survived the parents:—Held, that the appointment to the husband and children, though not objects of the original power, was valid, notwithstanding the infancy of the daughter. FitzRoy v. Richmond (Duke), 27 Beav. 190; 5 Jur., N. S., 971; 28 L. J., Ch., 752.

VI. EXCESS. WHEN SEVERABLE.

1. A. having a power to appoint 10,000*l.* amongst his younger children, appoints it to them equally, reserving to himself a power of revocation as to 5,000*l.*, which he afterwards irrevocably appoints to E., one of the children, in consideration of her having agreed to apply part of it in payment of his debts. Afterwards, A., by a deed, to which E. is also a party, revokes, with her consent, the last appointment as to 2,500*l.*, and in pursuance of all powers, appoints that sum to a child by a second marriage, and confirms E.'s title to the remainder under the former appointment:—Held, that the appointment of the 5,000*l.* being void, the appointment of the 2,000*l.* must also fail. Farmer v. Martin, 2 Sim. 502.

2. Power of jointuring executed in favour of a wife, but with an agreement that a wife should only receive a part as an annuity for her own benefit, and that the residue should be applied to the payment of the husband's debts:—Held, a fraud upon the power, and the execution set aside, except so far as related to the annuity, the bill containing a submission to pay it, and only seeking relief against the other objects of the appointment. Aleyn v. Belchier, 1 Eden 132. And see Lane v. Page, Ambl. 233.

3. Voluntary settlement of personal property, in trust for such one or more of his children as the settlor shall appoint. Appointment to one child, exclusively, upon a secret understanding that the child shall re-assign a part of the fund to, or in favour of, a stranger. This appointment is a fraud upon the settlement, and void, not only to the extent of the sum assigned back, but in toto. Bill, by purchaser for valuable consideration without notice, under this appointment, dismissed as against the person entitled under the settlement in default of appointment, such person having also the legal estate in the fund which was the subject of the appointment. Daubeny v. Cockburn, 1 Meriv. 626.

4. The Court will not entertain a suit to set aside an appointment of a part of certain trust funds, as a fraud upon the power, when it appears that another appointment not impeached by the bill was made of funds, subject to the same power, in which regard was had to the appointment complained of, and the object was to equalise the interests of the several appointees; for the Court will not undo part of an entire transaction, the other part of the same transaction not being brought within its jurisdiction. Harrison v. Randall, 9 Hare 397; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 294; 16 Jur. 72.

Where there is an appointment to A. and B. by one instrument (à fortiori by different instruments), the appointment to A. may be good and the appointment to B. bad, and A. and B. may well agree between themselves, that the bad appointment shall not be disturbed. Ib.

5. When an appointment is partly within the power, and partly in excess of it, but the lawful intention is not so connected with or so dependent on the wrong intention as to be affected by it, the Court will give effect to so much of the appointment as is within the power. Topham v. Portland (Duke), 1 N. R. 496.

6. A father had a power of appointing to any of his children. Having, in breach of trust, obtained possession of part of the trust funds, he, in 1834, appointed that part to his daughters, in exclusion of his son, under an agreement that that part should afterwards be conveyed to him, in exchange for an estate of less value. In 1844 he executed a second appointment, reciting the previous dealing with the fund, and he thereby appointed the remaining portion of the trust property, "and all other" the property comprised in the settlement, to his daughters:—Held, that the first appointment was void; and, secondly, that the portion of the property comprised therein was not appointed by the second deed. Askham v. Barker, 12 Beav. 499.

7. Father, tenant for life, with a power to appoint the fee among his sons, in such shares as he pleased, by one deed, upon the coming of age of his eldest son, appoints the fee to him; by a second deed, dated two days after, the son is made to join the father in a mortgage, to secure a debt due by the father; and by a third deed, dated the next day, the son is made tenant for life of the equity of redemption, with remainder to his issue in tail male, reversion in fee to the father, and an additional charge for the younger children of the father is created. On bill by the son of the appointee, to be relieved from the additional charge and mortgage:—Held, first, that the deed, so far as it charged the additional sum for younger children, was good, but the limitations void, and the excess corrupted. Palmer v. Wheeler, 2 Ball. & B. 18.

8. Under a marriage settlement 3,000*l.* consols were vested in trustees for the husband and wife for life successively, and afterwards to pay the principal (in case there should be any children) among such children in such manner as the husband and wife should jointly appoint by deed, or the survivor by deed or will, and in default of appointment, for the children equally, with benefit of survivorship. There were six children, and, after the father's death (there having been no joint appointment), the mother appointed two-sixths to a married daughter, it being in evidence that the daughter's husband had become liable to pay the penalty of a bond as surety for his wife's brother, and that he had negotiated with his mother-in-law to make the 3,000*l.* consols available to relieve him from such debt. One-sixth only was applied to pay the debt, and, subsequently, the mother appointed the remainder of the fund (four-sixths) to two of her sons, leaving a son and daughter to whom no appointment was made. A bill was filed to carry out the trusts of the settlement, and declare the rights as to the 3,000*l.*, and a reference directed as to the circumstances attending the appointments:—Held, that the appointment to the wife to relieve the husband was invalid as to one-sixth, but valid as to the other one-sixth, and that the appointment to the two sons, although it exhausted the whole fund apparently, was valid, inasmuch as in fact one-sixth remained unappointed by reason of the invalidity of the first appointment as to that one-sixth. Ranking v. Barnes, 12 W. R. 565; 3 N. R. 660; 10 Jur., N. S., 463; 33 L. J., Ch., 539.

1. Distinction between the appointment exceeding the limits of a power, and void for the excess only, and one which being a fraud on the power is void altogether. Agassiz v. Squire, 18 Beav. 431; 1 Jur., N. S., 50; 23 L. J., Ch., 985.

A. B. had a power to appoint a rent charge in favour of her sons, and a power to appoint policy moneys in favour of her children. On the 13th August, 1838, she appointed the rent charge to her son G., who, on the following day, settled it, not only in favour of himself and other objects of the power, but also of A. B.'s husband and others, not objects of the power. On the same day A. B. appointed the policy moneys partly in favour of objects of the power, and partly in favour of her husband and other persons, not objects of the power. The deed contained a proviso, that if any of the objects should refuse to accede to the arrangements as to the rent charge and policy moneys, he should forfeit the benefits intended. On the same day G. gave a bond to A. B.'s husband for securing him a benefit out of the policy moneys. The Court being of opinion that the transaction must be taken as a whole:—Held it altogether void, both as against the objects of the power and the rest, considering it an entangled transaction to effect a fraudulent execution of the power in favour of persons who were not objects. Ib.

2. A husband and wife lived apart, and the wife had the care of one of their two younger children. The husband being desirous of raising money by mortgage of his settled estates, and being unable to do so on account of the existing charges thereon, applied to the wife to postpone her pin-money and jointure annuities to his proposed mortgages. The wife consented, provided that the husband would exercise a power of appointment which he had over a sum of 30,000*l.*, in favour of his younger children, to the extent of appointing 5,000*l.* to the child under her care. He accordingly did so by a revocable deed; and by a similar deed, dated the next day, reciting the former appointment, he appointed the rest of the fund to his only other younger child. The former deed only was communicated to the wife, and she objecting to the power of revocation, it was cancelled, and a new irrevocable deed was prepared and executed of the same date as the former. The husband died before the mortgage which he proposed to make was effected. On an attempt being made to prove that the deeds were given to the family solicitor as escrows, not to take effect until the mortgage transaction was completed:—Held, that though à priori it was probable that the appointment of the 5,000*l.* might have been so made, there was not the same probability as to the other appointment of the 25,000*l.*, and although a purchaser in the position of the wife would not have expected to have the deed of appointment of the 5,000*l.* delivered to him until the consideration was paid, that rule would not apply to the case of a mother seeking the benefit of one of her children by inducing the father to exercise a power of appointment in the child's favour; and the evidence of the solicitor who prepared the deeds, to the effect that they were delivered to him as escrows, being unsupported by any other witness, being given fourteen years after the transaction, not very exactly, and being entirely contradicted by his conduct at the time of their execution, and subsequently, it was discredited, and the deeds were considered to have been duly sealed and delivered. Held, also, that although the bribe to the husband would affect the validity of the appointment of the 5,000*l.*, yet that the appointment of the 25,000*l.* was not so connected with the former appointment as to be also invalid; nor indeed was the motive for the latter appointment the same as in the former case, for instead of being an inducement to the wife to consent to the proposed arrangement, the second appointment if revealed to her would probably have prevented her concurring in postponing her pin-money and jointure. Rowley v. Rowley, 1 Kay 242; 23 L. J., Ch., 275; 18 Jur. 306; 2 Eq. Rep. 241.

3. If a power of jointuring be exercised on a corrupt bargain for some benefit to be given to the husband, the fraud being only upon the donor of the power, the Court will sever the appointment, and hold it to be good so far as it is for the benefit of the jointress, and bad as to the rest. Ib.

But although under a power of distribution among children, the fund is to be considered as a gross fund, to be fairly apportioned among all the objects; yet the donee, by appointing one share corruptly, has only to that extent diminished the common fund; and the Court will not, on that account, in consideration of the rights of the objects of the power, hold the whole to be invalid. Ib.

VII. EVIDENCE AND BURDEN OF PROOF.

4. Though a party is not permitted to execute a power for his own benefit, and the objection cannot be waived by a party participating in the benefit as against other interests, the Court will not act against the title upon a mere suspicion that a transaction was of that nature, appearing fair both upon the instruments and the abstract, viz., purchase under the execution of a power of appointment by a father, subject to estates for life, in him and his wife, in favour of their son; all three joining; and receiving the money, the fair value; which is presumed to be received according to their interests in the estate, and the purchaser not bound to see to the application. M'Queen v. Farquhar, 11 Ves. 467.

5. Strong suspicion that an appointment by a father to his son was for the benefit of the father, and fraud upon the power of appointment, is not sufficient to avoid the transaction. Hamilton v. Kirwan, 2 J. & L. 393; 8 Ir. Eq. R. 278.

6. The burden of proving the invalidity of an appointment lies on the person who seeks to set it aside; and not only the deed, but the whole matter, and all the accompanying facts must be examined, in order to ascertain the real nature and character of the transaction. Askham v. Barker, 17 Beav. 37; 22 L. J., Ch., 769; 1 W. R. 279.

1. The intentions of the donor are to be collected from the instruments, and not from parol evidence, but parol evidence is admissible to show the purposes for which the power is exercised, although they may not appear on the deeds. Topham v. Portland (Duke), 32 L. J., Ch., 257; 11 W. R. 507; 8 L. T., N. S., 180; 1 De G. J. & S. 577. S. C. 31 Beav. 525; 32 L. J., Ch., 81; 8 Jur., N. S., 1083; 7 L. T., N. S., 11; and on appeal to House of Lords, 11 H. L. Ca. 32; 34 L. J., Ch., 113; 10 Jur., N. S., 501; 12 W. R. 697; 10 L. T., N. S., 355.

2. When an appointment, valid on the face of it, had been set aside by reason of what has taken place between the donee of the power and the appointee, a second appointment by the same donee to the same appointee cannot be sustained otherwise than by clear proof on the part of the appointee, that the second appointment is perfectly free from the original taint which attached to the first. Topham v. Portland (Duke), 39 L. J., Ch., 259; 5 L. R., Ch., 40; 18 W. R. 235; 22 L. T., N. S., 847. Affirming 38 L. J., Ch., 573; 17 W. R. 911.

3. A will valid in its inception as an execution of a power of appointment, will not be afterwards avoided by being made the basis of transactions amounting to a fraud on the power. Pares v. Pares, 12 W. R. 231; 10 Jur., N. S., 90; 33 L. J., Ch., 215.

To substantiate a charge of fraud strict evidence is requisite; therefore, where a will purporting to be made in execution of a power of appointment, was prepared one month before a deed of appointment, which amounted to a fraud on the power, and which repeated almost identically the provisions of the will, and also referred to and kept alive the will, the will and deeds having been all prepared by one solicitor:—Held, that there was not sufficient evidence to show that the will was made with the intention of committing a fraud on the power. Ib.

4. Where the evidence establishes that it was at one time intended by the appointor that an appointment should be exercised for his own benefit, the onus of proving that such intention was subsequently abandoned lies on the appointee, or those who support the appointment. Humphry v. Olver, 5 Jur., N. S., 946; 28 L. J., Ch., 406; 7 W. R. 334; 33 L. T. 83. Reversing 5 Jur., N. S., 111.

VIII. CONFIRMATION.

5. Effect of an agreement between several appointees under different appointments, as between such appointees and the trustees of the property, that one of the appointments, which is invalid, shall not be disturbed. Harrison v. Randall, 9 Hare 409; 16 Jur. 72; 21 L. J., Ch., 294.

6. Husband and wife, who had under their marriage settlement a power of appointment over a fund in favour of such one or more, exclusively of the others or other of the children of the marriage, as they should jointly by deed appoint, made certain appointments nominally in favour of objects of the power, but in reality for their own benefit. By a deed, to which all the children of the marriage were parties, and which they all executed, these appointments were subsequently ratified and confirmed. On a bill by a child of the marriage who had not attained his majority at the date of the deed of confirmation, but had executed the deed some months after he came of age, to set aside the appointments and the deed of confirmation:—Held, that the appointments were not ipso facto void, but only voidable, and that he having deliberately executed the deed of confirmation could not after the lapse of nearly seven years rip open the transaction. Preston v. Preston, 21 L. T., N. S., 346.

7. H. being tenant for life of real estate, with remainder to his children as he should appoint, and, in default of appointment, to them equally, and being indebted to F., who had obtained a receiver over his life estate, entered into an agreement with F. that he and his children should join in a mortgage to secure the sum due to F., and that the receiver over the life estate should be removed. H. accordingly appointed the lands to his eldest son, J., subject to certain charges for his younger children; and H. and all his children, except one, who was a minor, joined in a mortgage to F. A sale of the lands was had in the Landed Estates Court, where the personal representative of the minor, who had died without issue, and leaving her father, H., her heir-at-law, claimed the charge appointed to her. J., the eldest son, filed a petition, praying that the appointment might be set aside as a fraud on the power. To this suit, the mortgagee, the father, and the younger children, or their representatives, were made respondents. No actual fraud or undue influence by H. on his children was proved:—Held, that J. and the other children, except the minor, having concurred in the mortgage, and the real and personal representatives of the minor having concurred or acquiesced in the transaction, the appointment could not be impeached. Skelton v. Flanagan, 1 Ir. R., Eq., 362.

IX. RIGHTS OF PURCHASERS FOR VALUE.

8. Though a party is not permitted to execute a power for his own benefit, and the objection cannot be waived by a party participating in the benefit as against other interests, the Court will not act against the title upon a mere suspicion that a transaction was of that nature, appearing fair both upon the instruments and the abstract, viz., purchase under the execution of a power of appointment by a father, subject to estates for life in him and his wife, in favour of their son; all three joining; and receiving the money, the fair value; which is presumed to be received according to their interests in the estate, and the purchaser not bound to see to the application. M'Queen v. Farquhar, 11 Ves. 467.

9. Equity will not relieve against a contract entered into by a child with a parent, for an appointment from him; and a purchaser from the parent, with notice of the fraud, will be affected with it. Palmer v. Wheeler, 2 Ball. & B. 30.

10. Where property was settled on the husband and wife for life, with power of appointment to children, and after having incumbered their life estate, they executed the power in favour of one who joined with them immediately in a mortgage, with power of sale under which a contract sale took place; but previously to the completion, notice was given to the purchaser, by one on behalf of the other children, that the appointment was in fraud of the marriage settlement, but no further proceedings took place:—Held, that the mere notice was not a ground for refusal to complete the purchase, a good title being shown. Green v. Pulsford, 2 Beav. 70.

1. A conveyance to a purchaser for valuable consideration, set aside, on the ground that it proceeded upon an appointment by a father to his eldest son, made in fraud of the power. Hall v. Montague, 8 L. J., Ch., 167.

2. Payment of a valuable consideration by a person not having the legal estate, and not being an object of the power, cannot set up an invalid appointment in favour of such purchaser. Daubeny v. Cockburn, 1 Meriv. 638.

Seous, where the power is unlimited as to its objects, and the appointment is only impeachable on the ground of its being voluntary. Ib.

3. A father, having a power of appointment among his children, appointed a large portion of the property to one son, and by deed bearing date shortly after the son mortgaged it. Both deeds were prepared by the mortgagee's solicitor, but were both altered by the family solicitor of the father and son. The mortgage and receipt indorsed treated the money as paid to the son, but the father, who had a legal estate, was a party to the mortgage, and the mortgagee wrote a letter of the same date to the father, promising not to call in the money for three years. Both father and son joined in a collateral bond. The draft mortgage furnished to the family solicitor differed in date from that executed. An underhand agreement was alleged, but not proved, to have been made by the mortgagee's solicitor, against whom the bill was dismissed by consent. There was no proof that the father received the money, except a transfer to his credit at a banker's a considerable time after:—Held, that although the transaction was suspicious, it must be supported in favour of the mortgagee. Hamilton v. Kirwan, 8 Ir. Eq. R. 278; 2 J. & L. 393.

4. A. was tenant for life, with remainder to his children as he should appoint, with remainder in default of appointment among them equally. A. joined with his eldest son in fines and a recovery, and afterwards, by an innocent conveyance, which the son signed, conveyed to a purchaser, the entire purchase money being paid to his father:—Held, that as the transaction, if formal, would have been in fraud of the power, it could not be aided so as to give it operation, first as an appointment, and then as a conveyance to a purchaser; but that whatever interest the son had at the time passed by the deed. Thompson v. Simpson, 8 Ir. Eq. R. 55; 2 J. & L. 110. See S. C. 1 Dr. & War. 459.

5. A father, in exercise of a power, appointed part of a fund to one of his daughters, not twenty-two. She immediately mortgaged her interest so appointed, and part of the purchase money was applied to the use of the father and his daughters:—Held, that the transaction was so doubtful that a purchaser under the mortgagee was not compelled to accept the purchase. Warde v. Dickson, 5 Jur., N. S., 698; 28 L. J., Ch., 315.

X. LIABILITY OF TRUSTEES.

6. A trustee is not, in all cases, to be made liable upon the mere ground of having deviated from the strict letter of his trust; for such deviation may be necessary or beneficial to the interests of the cestui que trust; but when a trustee ventures to deviate from the letter of his trust, he does so under the obligation and at the peril of afterwards satisfying the Court that the deviation was necessary or beneficial. Harrison v. Randall, 9 Hare 397; 16 Jur. 72; 21 L. J., Ch., 294.

The existence of a suit in which an appointment of trust funds made in execution of a power is brought before the Court, and directions consequential thereto are obtained, and the trustees retire and are succeeded by others, but in which material facts connected with such appointment of the trust funds are not brought to the knowledge of the Court, does not protect the retiring trustees from the liabilities which result from such facts, if they involve a breach of trust; but, on the contrary, renders such breach of trust less excusable. Ib.

Certain policies of insurance effected by a father on his life as a provision for his daughters, were assigned to a trustee, upon trust for such of the daughters as the father should appoint; and certain estates were demised to the said trustee, upon trust out of the rents and profits to secure the payment of the premiums. The trustee advanced some sums of money in payment of the premium, and the father appointed the bonuses which had accrued upon the policies to three of his daughters; and the three daughters soon afterwards authorised the trustee to receive the sum paid by the office for the bonuses, and invest part thereof as a fund to keep down the premiums, and a part of the sum was applied in satisfaction of the arrears of such premiums. A subsequent appointment was made in favour of the other daughters, of the residue of the sums to be received on the policies, and which was intended to equalise the shares:—Held, that the first appointment was a fraud upon the power, its immediate object being to relieve the father, and its necessary consequences to relax the diligence of the trustee in enforcing the rights of the daughters against the father; and that the application of the trust funds, in pursuance of the appointment by the trustee, who knew that the appointment was fraudulent, was a breach of trust, for which he was responsible to the objects of the power. Ib.

A trustee who, having good reason to doubt the validity of an appointment, thinks proper to act upon it, must be affected by the consequences which follow upon the Act. S. C. 9 Hare 407; 16 Jur. 72; 21 L. J., Ch., 294.

7. A father having a power of appointment subject to his own life estate among his children and their issue, appointed the whole fund to his eldest son immediately on his attaining twenty-one; and the father and son then applied to the trustees to transfer the fund into their joint names. The trustees not being satisfied that no undue influence had been exercised, and fearing that the interests of the son would be imperilled, took the opinion of counsel, who advised that they might transfer under certain conditions. These conditions were complied with, but the trustees were not satisfied, and declined to transfer without the sanction of the Court. The father and son therefore filed a bill praying for a transfer, and that the trustees might pay the costs:—Held, that the trustees were, under the circumstances, justified in refusing to transfer without the sanction of the Court; and although the Court ordered the transfer, the trustees were allowed their costs. King v. King, 6 W. R. 85; 1 De G. & J. 663; 27 L. J., Ch., 29.

1. The donee of a power appointed the whole trust fund to her daughter, one of the objects. The money was paid by the trustee at the daughter's written request of even date with the appointment to the mother's banking account; the daughter was married soon after, and her husband received a portion only of the fund:—Held, that the representatives of the trustee were liable to replace the trust fund. Mackechnie v. Marjoribanks, 39 L. J., Ch., 604; 18 W. R. 993; 22 L. T., N. S., 841.

XVI. Excessive Execution in Respect of Estates and Interests Appointed.

I. Substantial Compliance with Terms of Power, 5829.
II. Absolute Interests Cut Down, 5832.
III. Clause Against Anticipation Annexed, 5834.
IV. Conditions Annexed, 5835.
V. Power Annexed, 5837.
VI. Perpetuity and Remoteness. See also Preceding Subdivisions.
VII. Excess when Severable. See also Preceding Subdivisions.

I. SUBSTANTIAL COMPLIANCE WITH TERMS OF POWER.

1. In General, 5829.
2. Estates or Interests created by Appointment, 5830.

1. In General.

2. An affirmative power must be strictly pursued, but a negative one by way of restriction need not. Churchman v. Harvey, Ambl. 340.

3. Power to appoint land is well executed by a charge. Kenworthy v. Bate, 6 Ves. 796.

Power of appointing real estate is well executed by a devise to trustees to sell, and an appointment of money produced by the sale. Id. 793.

4. A. settles land to the use of himself for life, remainder to such of his four children, and in such shares and proportions, as A. by any writing shall appoint. A. may not only limit the land to any of his children, but may charge the land with any rent charge or sums of money for any of his children. Thwaytes v. Dye, 2 Vern. 80.

5. A person having a limited interest, such as a power of appointment, cannot elect to appoint in specie that which the donor of the power has directed to be converted. Cooper v. Martin, 12 Jur., N. S., 887; 15 W. R. 5; 15 L. T., N. S., 268.

6. Two sums were charged on real estate to be divided among the younger children of A., one sum in such parts and porportions, etc., the other in such shares and proportions, manner, and form, as he should appoint. By his will he recited the powers, and directed his executors to raise the two sums, and apply them, together with the rest of his personal estate, in discharge of certain legacies bequeathed to his younger children. Semble, a good execution of the powers. Van Reitzenstein v. Magan, 12 Ir. Eq. R. 415.

7. Power for husband to appoint estates to children of marriage, for such estates, and in such parts, and in such manner and form as he should by deed or will appoint, is exercised by appointment to trustees for term of 500 years, upon trust to raise sums by way of portions for children, and words, "manner and form," enable husband to give them equitable estate. Trollope v. Linton, 1 Sim. & S. 477; 2 L. J., Ch., 3.

8. Covenant to settle an estate in strict settlement, subject to a power to the father, tenant for life, in case there should be any younger child or children, to charge such sum or sums for such younger child or children, payable in such proportions, and at such times, as he should appoint. The power was held well executed by a will directing a sale and appointing the money. Long v. Long, 5 Ves. 445.

9. A power to appoint an estate authorises an appointment to trustees to sell and divide the produce between the objects. Fowler v. Cohen, 21 Beav. 360; 2 Jur., N. S., 315.

10. In a marriage settlement, by which real estates were settled to the use of the children of the settlor by a former marriage, power was reserved to the settlor, "during his life," by deed to devise, limit, or appoint any of the settled lands to trustees for terms of years upon trust, by sale or otherwise, to raise any sum or sums for the better advancement, etc., of such children, to be raised and paid at such times and subject to such limitations, etc. (for the benefit of the children) as the settlor should by such deed appoint. By deed reciting the powers, the settlor limited the estates to trustees for a term of 1,000 years, "to commence after his decease," and "without impeachment of waste," upon trust to sell the premises comprised in the terms, and out of the proceeds to pay certain specified sums to the several children by name:—Held, a valid execution of the power, and that two of the children having died intestate and without issue in the settlor's lifetime, the sums appointed to them devolved to the settlor, and were subject to the dispositions of his will. Ricketts v. Loftus, 4 Y. & Coll. 519.

1. Realty was entitled to such uses as A. should appoint, so only that every such appointment should be made in favour of a child or children or other issue of A. to be born in his lifetime. A., by will, devised all his real and personal estate, whereof he had power to dispose, to trustees, upon trust to sell (with power to give receipts and to discharge purchasers), and apply the proceeds in payment of his debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, and, subject thereto, to stand possessed of the proceeds in trust for his children, in certain shares:—Held, that the will amounted to an execution of the power of appointment, notwithstanding the invalid attempt to throw the burthen of the testator's debts on the settled property. Cowx v. Foster, 1 John. & H. 30; 6 Jur., N. S., 1051; 29 L. J., Ch., 886.

2. Power to appoint estates, to be purchased with money produced by the sale of other estates, well executed by an appointment operating directly on the original estates. Bullock v. Fladgate, 1 Ves. & B. 471.

Power to appoint an estate includes a power to dispose of the estate and appoint the produce. The same effect has been given in the more doubtful case of a power to charge; and a power to appoint the money produced by an estate directed to be sold, has been considered as a power to appoint the estate itself. Id. 478.

3. A power to appoint an estate amongst a class will be executed in equity by giving the whole of the estate to one of the class, and a part of the produce thereof, or money charged thereupon, to the other. Crozier v. Crozier, 2 Con. & L. 294; 5 Ir. Eq. R. 540; 3 Dr. & War. 373.

In considering whether a will be a valid execution of a power, the intention of a testator is always to be considered and effectuated as far as possible. Ib.

4. A power, to appoint the interest of a fund, held to authorise the appointment of the capital, notwithstanding subsequent powers over and limitation of the said "trust moneys, and the interest." Phillips v. Brydon, 26 Beav. 77.

5. A., by will, devised his collieries, etc., to trustees, upon trust to dispose and convey the same in such manner as his daughter M., whether sole or covert, should direct or appoint; and for want of such direction or appointment, to apply the money arising thereby to certain purposes in his will mentioned. He then declared, that "though his meaning was to give his said daughter the absolute disposal of the said collieries, etc., to prevent the expenses and trouble that must attend the management of affairs of such a nature, under the direction of the Court of Chancery, he requested his said daughter to direct the money arising therefrom to be applied in such manner as he had directed the same in default of her direction and appointment." The daughter made an appointment in favour of her husband absolutely. But this appointment was held to be void, as being contrary to the testator's intention. Bute (Earl) v. Stuart, 1 Bro. P. C. 476.

6. Power to appoint to children, "with such directions or regulations for maintenance, education, and advancement as their mother should appoint." The mother appointed the income to the children's father until the younger attained twenty-one, "in or towards the maintenance and education" of all her children:—Held, that the appointment was invalid. Lloyd v. Lloyd, 26 Beav. 96.

7. A testator by his will having charged 6,000*l.* on his estates, and directed same to be paid to and among such of his younger children, in such shares and proportions, as his wife should appoint, and the wife having by her will directed the inheritor as follows: "three of the 6,000*l.* I wish to have given to the two elder girls":—Held, that this was a good appointment of 3,000*l.*, and that the appointees took as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants. Alloway v. Alloway, 2 Con. & L. 509; 4 Dr. & War. 380.

8. Trustees under a discretionary power to purchase an annuity for A. did not purchase the annuity, but the acting trustees paid, from time to time, various small sums, amounting in the aggregate to more than the total income, but less than the principal:—Held, that this was a proper exercise of the discretionary power pro tanto. Messena v. Carr, 39 L. J., Ch., 216; 9 L. R., Eq., 260; 18 W. R. 415; 22 L. T., N. S., 3.

2. Estates or Interests created by Appointment.

9. Power by will to J., to appoint "to use of such child or children, and for such estate, and in such parts, and in such manner and form, as the said J. should, by deed or will, limit or appoint, or give or devise; and in default of such appointment, to the children equally, as tenants in common." J. orginally appointed the trust estate to the grandchild of testator absolutely in fee; but by subsequent deed, and pursuant to an agreement made prior to the execution of the power, a term of two hundred years was created and vested in trustees, to provide for the costs of the appointee in the original suit, and the costs of the parties to that instrument in another suit to be instituted by them in the name of the appointee, and for his benefit, and to raise and pay annuities to the other objects of the power; and subject to the term and its trusts, the estate was re-settled to the use of the appointee for life, remainder in fee to his children; and if no son should attain twenty-one or no daughter attain that age, or marry, then to appointee in fee:—Held, a good appointment. Tucker v. Sanger, M'Clel. 439; 13 Price 607.

10. A power of appointing a fee may be executed at several times, viz., at one time to pass an estate for life, and the fee at another. Bovey v. Smith, 1 Vern. 85; 2 Ch. Ca. 124.

11. Lands were settled to the use of a man for life, remainder in fee to such one or more of his children as he should by deed or will appoint, and in default of appointment to the children equally. The father, by his will, devised the lands to his wife for her life, upon condition that she should thereout maintain and educate his children in such manner as his executors should think proper; and that, at the end of every year, whatever sum should be in her hands, after defraying all necessary expenses, should be accumulated in order to form a fund for payment of the legacies thereinafter given by him; and he gave to each of his younger children 500*l*., and devised the lands to his eldest son in tail, with a direction that if, at the death of his wife, there should not be accumulated a sufficient fund for the payment of the legacies, those lands, together with certain other lands not the subject of the power, should stand charged with the deficiency:—Held, that the direction for the maintenance of the younger children, and the gift of the legacies to them were, pro tanto, a good execution of the power. Crozier v. Crozier, 5 Ir. Eq. R. 540; 3 Dr. & War. 353; 2 Con. & L. 294.

Held, also, that during the wife's life, so much of the rents as was not required for the maintenance of the younger children, and the payment of the legacies, went as in default of appointment. Ib.

1. A real estate was settled to the use of a father for life with remainder to the use of all and every, or such one or more of his children, for such estate and estates, and in such parts, shares, and proportions, and with such limitations over, and charged with such annual or gross sums, such limitations over and charges to be to or for the benefit of the same children, some or one of them, and in such manner and form as the father should appoint. The father afterwards appointed the estate to trustees and their heirs, upon trust to pay the rents and profits thereof to his daughter, who was a married woman, for her sole and separate use, during the life of her husband, without power of anticipation:—Held, that the appointment to the trustees was a good execution of the power. Thornton v. Bright, 2 Myl. & Cr. 320; 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 121.

2. A daughter being entitled, under the marriage settlement of her father and mother, to such share and interest in lands and money as the surviving mother should appoint, provides, by her own marriage settlement, that all such share and interest to which she should become entitled under her mother's settlement, should be vested in trustees to the use of her intended husband for life, remainder to herself for life, remainder to the children of the marriage. Four years after the marriage, the mother appoints a sum of 3,000*l*. to be paid to the trustees of the daughter's settlement, upon the uses therein expressed, in satisfaction of the daughter's share and interest under the marriage settlement of the father and mother:—Held, that this was substantially an appointment to the daughter, and therefore valid. Limbard v. Grote, 1 Myl. & K. 1; 2 L. J., N. S., Ch., 10.

3. A testator, having a special power of appointment over 10,000*l*., in exercise of her power appointed that it should be held by the trustees of her will and upon the trusts therein mentioned for the benefit of the objects of the power. She also appointed that the said sum of 10,000*l*. "should be paid and transferred unto" the trustees of her will:—Held, that the proposed transfer was not authorised by the power. Busk v. Aldam, 31 L. T., N. S., 370; 23 W. R. 21.

4. A tenant for life of a trust fund, with power to appoint the reversion to a child, appointed a portion of the reversionary fund to a daughter absolutely, by a deed, to which the daughter, the daughter's husband, and the trustees of the fund were parties; and by the same deed, she assigned her life interest in the appointed portion to the daughter absolutely. By a subsequent witnessing part, it was expressed to be agreed and declared, by and between all the parties, that the appointed portion should be held on trust for the daughter's separate use, during her life, and afterwards on trusts for her husband and children:—Held, that (independently of any question as to the merger of the life estate) the trust for the separate use was good. But, quære, whether the limitations of the subsequent interests were effectual. Trollope v. Routledge, 1 De G. & Sm. 662; 11 Jur. 1002.

5. If a fund is given in trust for all and every the children of A., in such parts and shares, and in such manner, etc., as A. shall appoint, an appointment of the whole income of the fund to the children for their lives successively, is invalid. Lloyd v. Lavor, 14 Sim. 645.

6. Under his marriage settlement, A. had a power of appointing a fund amongst his children. By his will he appointed the fund equally amongst his eight children; but he afterwards postponed the payment of the capital, partly until the majority of the children, and partly until after the death or marriage of his last surviving unmarried daughter, the unmarried daughters being in the meanwhile entitled to the income:—The appointment held valid. Wilson v. Wilson, 21 Beav. 25.

7. Under a power to appoint to children, an appointment to a child for life, remainder to his children, who are incapable of taking, may give the child an estate tail. Line v. Hall, 22 W. R. 124; 29 L. T., N. S., 568.

A father having power to appoint an estate to any one or more of his children by will, gave it with other proproty, of which he was owner in fee, to trustees for a term of 1,000 years, to raise portions for grandchildren (not objects of the power), with the usual proviso for cesser in case the term should be incapable of taking effect, with remainder after the expiration of the term, and in the meantime subject thereto, to one of his sons (an object of the power) for life remainder to his issue in tail. The objects of the term were not satisfied:—Held, that the will operated as an execution of the power, and that the son took under the cy près doctrine an estate tail. S. C. 43 L. J., Ch., 107.

8. B., by will, directed his trustees to convert his property into money, and after investing the same, to pay the interest, etc., unto his daughter E. for her life; and after her death he gave all his estate to her children in such shares as she should appoint; and in default of appointment, unto all of them in equal shares; but in case she should die without leaving any child, then he directed his trustees to raise 3,000*l*., and to pay the same to the grandchildren, living at the time of the death of his daughter, of his cousin R. B., in equal shares; and after the same should be raised, the testator directed his trustees to convey his estate unto such person as E. should by deed or will appoint; and in default of appointment, he gave the same unto the persons who at the decease of E. should be her next of kin. B. empowered his daughter by her will to apportion all or any interest, etc., to be paid to her husband for his life. E. intermarried with N., and by her will appointed that the estate made subject to her appointment should become vested in her husband for his own absolute use, and appointed the rents, etc., to be paid to him. The chief clerk certified that there were four grandchildren of R. B. living at the time mentioned, and they (not parties to the suit) presented a petition praying that they might be at liberty to attend and take part on the hearing of the cause, and might be paid their costs of substantiating their claim as if they had been parties:—Held, that E. had no power to abridge the right of the four grandchildren to the legacy of 3,000*l.* which became raisable on B.'s death, by a sale or mortgage. Boycott v. Newman, 2 Jur., N. S., 702.

Held, also, that the costs of the grandchildren in proving that they composed the class entitled must be borne by the fund, and not by the general estate; but that the costs of all parties, and the costs of the petition, must be paid out of the general estate. Ib.

1. A wife had under a settlement a power to appoint the income of a fund to her husband as long as he should continue a widower, with a proviso that he was to apply it to the maintenance of her children:—Held, that the husband took a beneficial interest under an appointment by his wife, and was entitled to the income of the fund till he married again, though there were no children of the wife. Re Main, 15 W. R. 216.

II. ABSOLUTE INTERESTS CUT DOWN.

2. One having a power of appointing a fund amongst her children, or remoter issue, appointed a sum to one of her children absolutely, and then attempted to limit it over to the unborn children of such child. The appointment to the grandchildren being too remote:—Held, that the prior absolute gift to the child was effectual. Kampf v. Jones, 2 Keen 756; 7 L. J., N. S., Ch., 63; 1 Jur. 814.

3. Power to appoint amongst children, or some or one of them, with limitations over for benefit of one or more of such children, or his or their issue. The donee of the power appointed equal shares to his daughters respectively for life, for their separate use; then to their issue, as they (the daughters respectively) should appoint; in default, amongst the issue equally:—Held, that, subject to the life interest of the wives for their separate use, the shares appointed to the daughters belonged to them and to their husbands in their right. Carver v. Bowles, 9 L. J., Ch., 91.

4. Testratrix gave a sum of money to her children, who should be living at the time of her decease, and in case she should die without leaving any such issue over, and having a power to appoint to the children of D., she gave 2,000*l.*, to the separate use of A. (one of the children), and if she died without issue by her then present husband or any other she might thereafter take, the 2,000*l.* to be divided amongst other objects of the power:—Held, that A. was absolutely entitled to the 2,000*l.* Caulfield v. Maguire, 2 J. & L. 141; 8 Ir. Eq. R. 164.

5. A testator, by virtue of a power, appointed a fund to trustees for his four children, in four equal portions, and subject to the trusts thereinafter contained respecting his own residuary estate. Some of those trusts were to the children for life, with remainder to their children, and (as regarded the fund subject to the power) the appointment to grandchildren was void for remoteness:—Held, that the children took absolutely in the first instance, and that the subsequent attempt to limit the absolute gift being void, the children took the fund absolutely. Stephens v. Gadsden, 20 Beav. 463.

6. Where there is an absolute appointment by will in favour of a proper object of the power, and that appointment is followed by attempts to modify the interest so appointed, in a manner which the law will not allow, the Court reads the will as if all the passages in which such attempts are made were swept out of it, for all intents and purposes, i.e., not only so far as they attempt to regulate the quantum of interest to be enjoyed by the appointee in the settled property, but also so far as they might otherwise have been relied upon as raising a case of election. Woolridge v. Woolridge, 1 John. 63; 5 Jur., N. S., 566.

7. Where there is an absolute appointment to A., an object of the power, followed by a qualification limiting the interest of A. to a life interest, with remainder to persons not objects of the power, the latter being void, A. takes absolutely, under the prior appointment. Gerrard v. Butler, 20 Beav. 541.

A testatrix, having a power to appoint a fund to her children, appointed it in this form: Among my children, A., B., C., and D., the share of A. to be upon the trusts of her marriage settlement, and to be paid to the trustees thereof. A. was the only person in the marriage settlement within the power:—Held, that she took her share absolutely. Ib.

8. Where there is a valid appointment to an object of power, with additional words of appointment in favour of the appointee's children, by which, in excess of the power, those children are also made appointees, so as to cut down the previous absolute interest:—Held, that the words in excess of the power are to be altogether rejected, and that the appointee, who is an object of the power, takes absolutely. Re Sonde's (Lord) Will, 2 Sm. & G. 417.

9. Appointment to A., an object of a power, to be settled for her separate use, and to be divided at her death amongst her children. The gift to the children being void, they not being objects:—Held, that A. took for life only, and not an absolute interest ineffectually attempted to be cut down. Reid v. Reid, 25 Beav. 469.

10. Donees of a power, authorising the appointment of personal estate amongst the children of the donees, or the issue of such children born during the lives of the donees or the life of the survivor, appointed it "upon the trusts following; that is to say," trusts for the benefit of some of the children, and to pay the interest to them for life; and after the decease of each child, to dispose of her share amongst her children:—Held, that the whole appointed trust must be read together; that the appointees took only life interests, and the residue of the fund was unappointed. Rucker v. Scholefield, 1 Hem. & M. 36; 9 Jur., N. S., 17; 32 L. J., Ch., 46; 1 N. R. 48; 11 W. R. 137.

1. Where an absolute gift or an appointment in a will is attempted to be cut down by a subsequent inoperative modification or restriction, the original gift remains unaffected by the intended restriction. Churchill v. Churchill, 16 W. R. 182; 5 L. R., Eq., 44.

2. A marriage settlement comprised a sum of 20,000*l.* South Sea Annuities, 7,000*l.* 3 per cent. reduced, and 3,150*l.* new 4 per cents.; also certain shares in a company, and 54,000*l.* French rentes. These were settled on trust to raise an annuity of 500*l.* for the life of the wife for her separate use, subject thereto, for the husband and wife for their joint lives; if the wife should predecease her husband, then on trust, to raise 3,000*l.*, over which a general power of appointment was given to the wife, and as to the rent, after the death of the wife so predeceasing her husband, for him for life, and after his death, in trust for all and every, or such one, or more, exclusively of the other or others of the relations in blood to the said Sarah Harvey (the wife) at the time of her decease, within the eighth degree of consanguinity to her, at such age, day, or time, or respective ages, days, or times, and, if more than one, in such shares and proportions, and with such annual sums of money, and future, or executory, or other trusts (such annual sums of money, and future, or executory, or other trusts, being for the benefit of the said relations in blood of the said Sarah Harvey, within the degree aforesaid, or such, or one of them), and in such manner as the said Sarah Harvey should, notwithstanding her coverture, by her last will and testament in writing, or any codicil or codicils in writing, or any writing or writings in the nature of or purporting to be a will or codicil, to be signed and published by her in the presence of, and to be attested by, two or more credible witnesses, direct or appoint; and in default of such direction, or appointment, and so far as any direction or appointment should not extend, in trust for such person, or persons, as under the Statute for the Distribution of the Effects of Intestates would at the decease of the said Sarah Harvey have become entitled thereto as her next-of-kin, in case the said Archibald Morrison (the husband) had died in her lifetime, and she had died possessed thereof, his widow, and intestate. The settlement also comprised certain plate, linen, china, etc., over which a general power of appointment was given to the wife, to take effect after the death of the husband. It comprised also certain shares in a public library, and tickets of admission to a theatre, and jewellery, etc., and as to these the settlement gave to the wife a general power of gift and appointment, either during her life, or after her death, as well as over what she should save out of her separate income. The wife died many years before her husband. By her will she said: "I do, by virtue of the power and authority reserved to me in and by the deed of settlement made, etc., hereby make, publish, and declare this my last will and testament, in manner and form following, that is to say." She then referred particularly to the power to dispose of 3,000*l.*, and made a disposition of a great part of it. She gave to her husband for life all the benefit of her shares in the public library, of her admission to the theatre, and of her books. After his death, she disposed of these things to various persons; she disposed also of her jewels, china, and other things, and her will concluded as follows:—"And after payment of my just debts, funeral expenses, the charges of proving this my will, and of carrying the trust thereof into execution, I direct and appoint, give and bequeath, after the decease of my said husband, all the rest, residue, and remainder of my moneys, and other my personal estate, of whatever description the same may be, unto and among all and every, the daughters of my said brother John Harvey, the said Charles Day, and Louisa Day, the children of my deceased niece, and the two daughters of my said brother Charles Savile Onley, or to such of them as shall be living at my said husband's death, and to the issue of such of them as shall then happen to be dead, to be equally divided amongst them, share and share alike. But it is my will that the said Charles Day, and Lousia Day, and the children of any other of my nieces who may be dead, shall only be entitled to the share in the said residue which his or her mother would have had if living at the death of my said husband. And further it is my will that the shares of each of my said nieces, of each of the residue of my personal estate, shall be placed and continue out at interest by my surviving executor, his executors or administrators, on Government or real security, during the respective lives of my said nieces, and the dividend or interest on each share, as the same shall from time to time become due, shall be paid to each of my nieces during her life, on her own receipt, for her own sole and separate use, and not be subject to the debts or control of her present or any future husband. And as to the share of my niece Caroline Onley, I will and desire that the same shall after her decease be paid to all my other nieces who shall be living at the decease of the said Caroline Onley, and to the issue of such of them as shall then happen to be dead, equally, share and share alike, but the issue of any deceased niece is only to be entitled to the share which his or their mother would have had if living at the decease of the said Caroline Onley; and after the death of each of my other nieces, I direct that the dividends and interest of her share shall, if she die married, be paid to her husband during his life, for his own use. And I further will and direct that after the several deceases of my said last-mentioned nieces, or their respective husbands, that the share of each of the said last-mentioned nieces shall be paid to her child, children, or grandchildren, or any other relation in blood to my said niece, in such parts and proportions, manner, and form as she may, by her last will and testament, duly executed, and which she shall have power to make, notwithstanding her coverture, give and bequeath the same, and in default thereof then unto the next of kin in blood of my said niece, according to the Statute of Distribution of Intestate Personal Estates":—Held, first, that the will was an execution of all th powers, that is of the power to appoint each portion of property comprised in the settlement; secondly, that the appointment in favour of the daughters of John Harvey was not void ab initio because it might comprise persons not living at the death of the testatrix and within the eighth degree, nor did it become void in toto because it did in fact at the time of distribution include such persons, but that it was good pro tanto; thirdly, that the attempted limitation to the husbands of the nieces was bad, as they were strangers, and the limitations to their children, grandchildren, or other relations in blood was void for remoteness; fourthly, that the attempt to cut down the estate given to the nieces in the first instance failing, the attempted remainders over did not go as unappointed to the next of kin, but failed wholly and left absolute interests subsisting in the nieces. Harvey v. Stracey, 1 Drew. 73; 22 L. J., N. S., Ch., 23; 16 Jur. 771.

III. CLAUSE AGAINST ANTICIPATION ANNEXED.

1. Under a power to charge an estate with a sum not exceeding 1,000*l.* for the portion or portions of a younger child or younger children, the donee of the power appointed the 1,000*l.* to a married daughter for her separate use, with a restraint upon anticipation during the coverture; and it was held, that the interest of the appointee might lawfully be so restricted by the terms of the appointment. Dickinson v. Mort, 8 Hare 178.

2. A real estate was settled to the use of a father for life, with remainder to the use of all and every, or such one or more of his children, for such estate and estates, and in such parts, shares, and proportions, and with such limitations over, and charged with such annual or gross sums, such limitations over and charges to be to or for the benefit of the same children, some or one of them, and in such manner and form as the father should appoint. The father afterwards appointed the estate to trustees and their heirs, upon trust to pay the rents and profits thereof to his daughter, who was a married woman, for her sole and separate use, during the life of her husband, without power of anticipation:—Held, that the appointment to the trustees was a good execution of the power. Thornton v. Bright, 2 Myl. & C. 230; 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 121.

3. Under a power of appointment of a trust fund among children in the usual form, the share of a married daughter, who was unborn at the creation of the power, was limited to trustees upon trust for her separate use, for life, without power of anticipation, and, after her decease, to her general appointees by deed or will, and in default, to her executors or administrators:—Held, that such an appointment was not void as fettering the property beyond the legal limits, but that the restraint upon anticipation might be rejected, and the rest of the appointment sustained. Fry v. Capper, 1 Kay 163; 2 W. R. 136.

4. By a settlement upon marriage, funds were vested in trustees upon trust, after the death of the husband and wife, for the children of the marriage, as the husband and wife or the survivor of them should appoint. After the death of the wife the husband made an appointment, subject to his own life interest, in favour of one of the children of the marriage, who was a married woman, and he directed that it should be held for her separate use without power of anticipation:—Held, that the restraint upon anticipation was void, but that the rest of the appointment was good. Re Cunynghame, 40 L. J., Ch., 247; 19 W. R. 381; 11 L. R., Eq., 324; 24 L. T. 124.

5. By a marriage settlement a fund was settled in trust for the wife for her separate use during the joint lives of her and her husband, with remainder to the children of the marriage in such shares as the wife, if surviving, should appoint. The wife survived her husband, and appointed one-fifth part of the fund to a married daughter for her separate use without power of anticipation:—Held, that the appointment was good, but the restraint upon alienation was bad, as it infringed the rule against perpetuities. Re Teague, 22 L. T., N. S., 742; 18 W. R. 752; 10 L. R., Eq., 564.

6. A testator gave his property to trustees to pay the income to two persons for life, and after the death of the survivor to divide the capital between the children of A. B. and C. D., two females, the shares of sons to be paid on their attaining twenty-one, and the shares of daughters to be invested and the interest paid to such daughters for life for their separate use without power of anticipation, and on their deaths the capital to go as the daughters should by will appoint. A. B. was dead at the date of the will, and C. D. was sixty years of age, and therefore past child-bearing:—Held, that if the children of A. B. and C. D. had not necessarily been lives in esse at the date of the will, the restraint on anticipation in respect of the daughters' shares would have been bad, as infringing the rule against perpetuities; but as A. B. was dead and C. D. past child-bearing, all the children were lives in esse, and the restraint on alienation was valid. Cooper v. Larooke, 17 L. R., Ch. D., 368; 43 L. T. 794; 29 W. R. 438.

7. By indenture made in December 1874, S. and J. S., wife and husband, who had at the date of the indenture been married many years, and had two children, daughters, both married, assigned to trustees a sum of money in trust to invest for the benefit of the settlors, and after their deaths the trustees were to stand possessed of the moneys upon trust for their children as they or the survivor should appoint, and in default of appointment, for all the children or any the child of S. by J. S. who being a son should attain twenty-one, or being a daughter should attain twenty-one or marry under that age, if more than one in equal shares, and if daughters for their separate use, and without power to alienate or anticipate the same. There were no other children of the marriage. S. died in 1876, and J. S. in 1879, without having made any appointment:—Held, that, notwithstanding the rule against perpetuities, the shares of the two daughters were subject to restraint on anticipation. Herbert v. Webster, 15 L. R., Ch. D., 610; 49 L. J., Ch., 620.

IV. CONDITIONS ANNEXED.

1. A father having a power to appoint an estate to the use of all and every his child or children for any estates or interests, and in any shares, and subject to any charges and incumbrances, to one or more of them, devised the estate to trustees in trust to apply the rents, until the eldest son attained age, to the maintenance and education of all the children, and further thereout to pay the interest of his debts and so much of the principal as the surplus would reach; and he charged the estate with 3,000*l.* for the younger children; and in case the eldest son should, by business or marriage, or otherwise, be enabled to pay off the 3,000*l.*, that the trustees should convey the lands to him; and in case the eldest son should not pay it, to the second or third son on the same conditions; and in case none of the sons should take or accept the estate, that the trustees should sell the estate and pay off the father's debts and divide the surplus among all the children:—Held, that the will was a good equitable execution of the power, the portion of it which exceeded the power being separable, and the 3,000*l.* being a charge and not a personal condition. Richardson v. Simpson, 9 Ir. Eq. R. 367; 3 J. & L. 540.

2. Part of a fund was appointed under a power to an object of the power, subject to a charge not within the power:—Held, that though the charge was void, the appointment was valid. Re Jeaffreson, 35 L. J., Ch., 622.

3. C., having power to appoint a money fund to all and every or any child or children of hers, and to the exclusion of any one or more of them, in such shares and payable at such times as she should appoint, and in default of appointment to be equally divided between them, by her will appointed different sums to several of her children; and reciting that her daughter M. had declared her intention of becoming a nun, and had retired into a convent preparatory thereto, she declared that she deemed her patrimony in that case sufficient for her maintenance, but in case M. should change her mind, and return to her family and friends, she bequeathed to trustees 1,000*l.* in trust for M. to receive the interest of the same during her life, and at her decease to be divided amongst her children, if any; or in either case of her not leaving the convent or not leaving issue, the 1,000*l.* to be divided amongst her three daughters therein named, and she bequeathed to her said three daughters any residue of the fund that might be after paying the several legacies in her will mentioned:—Held, that the power authorised an appointment to take effect upon the happening of a contingency; that the interest which should accrue on the 1,000*l.*, while the contingency was undetermined, passed under the residuary bequest in the will. Caulfield v. Maguire, 2 J. & L. 141; 8 Ir. Eq. R. 164.

4. W., by a deed of settlement, vested stock and money in trustees, upon trust to pay the interest, dividends, and annual produce to W. for life, and after his death to pay the trust moneys, stock, funds, and securities unto and amongst all and every his child or children, or the child or children of any deceased child, in such shares and proportions as he should by deed or will appoint. W., by will, dated in 1848, in execution of the power, after directing certain sums to be raised and paid out of the trust funds for the benefit of certain of his children, appointed the residue of the trust funds to his son absolutely. He further directed, that within one year after any of his children or grandchildren should become entitled to the residuary trust funds comprised in such settlement, and should be competent so to do, such person or persons should settle the same in the manner therein prescribed; and if such child or children, grandchild or grandchildren, should neglect or refuse to make such settlement within a year, then and in every such case the trusts declared in favour of such child or grandchild should cease, as if such child or grandchild had died in his lifetime without leaving issue:—Held, that the condition was not an integral part of the appointment, and that the power had been well exercised in favour of his son. Watt v. Creyke, 3 Jur., N. S., 56; 26 L. J., Ch., 211; 3 Sm. & G. 362.

5. Under a power of appointment and selection among children, if an appointment be made upon a condition to be performed by the appointee, the appointment is good, but the condition is void. But an appointment to child A. upon a certain contingency, and if that contingency should not happen, then the same share to go to child B., is a good conditional limitation under the power. So it is, if the event on which the shifting limitation is to take effect, be some act to be done by A., if such act be consistent with the scope of the power; as if the limitation over be to take effect if A. do not upon the request in writing of the appointor, make over another fund derived from a different source to the other subjects of the power; for this is consistent with the intention of the power, which was, that the donee should, according to his view of the exigencies of the objects of the power, appoint the whole fund to all of them or to some only in exclusion of the others. If the condition be in form that A. should do this upon the request, not only of the appointor, but of his executors and administrators, it will be construed as if the limitation were inserted in the instrument creating the power; and where that provides that the appointment must be made so as to take effect within twenty-one years after the death of the appointor, the condition will be valid. A bill in such case, by a married woman, and the trustees of her settlement, claiming to be entitled to the share so appointed to her, freed from the conditional limitation, or, if bound to elect, for an inquiry whether it would be most beneficial for the persons entitled under the settlement to take under the appointment or not, is not an election. Stroud v. Norman, 1 Kay 313; 18 Jur. 264; 23 L. J., Ch., 443; 2 Eq. Rep. 308.

6. A settlement contained a power to a tenant for life to appoint to children, or any one or more of them, two sums, one in consols, the other in new 3*l.* per cents. The tenant for life by will, not referring to the power, gave to three of seven surviving children the money that he had in consols and in the new 3*l.* per cents.; and he gave 100*l.* to his grandson, directing that the three appointees should contribute it. The only property he had was 144*l.* consols, his title to which was disputed at the date of the will, but which was afterwards assigned to him, and his interest in the one-eighth share of a trust fund of a son deceased during his life:—Held, that the gift of the 100*l.* to the grandson was a condition imposed on the appointees, and, as such, void; and that the appointees took the whole fund. Rooke v. Rooke, 2 Dr. & Sm. 38; 31 L. J., Ch., 636; 10 W. R. 435; 6 L. T., N. S., 527.

1. Husband and wife had a joint power of appointment over real estate amongst the children of the marriage. In default of appointment, the estate was to be held, subject to the parents' life interests, in trust for all the unappointed children, the shares to vest at twenty-one or marriage. The settlement contained a power of sale and exchange, but no trust for sale. A son attained twenty-one and died intestate. Afterwards the husband and wife appointed two-fourths of the real estate, and declared that the shares of the persons beneficially interested in the capital arising from any sale of the premises should be of the quality of personal estate. A sale having taken place under the power in the settlement:—Held, that the interest of the heir of the deceased son was defeated by the conversion. Webb v. Sadler, 14 L. R., Eq., 533; 20 W. R. 740.

2. A testator, having power to appoint by will a sum of 3,000*l.*, made his will, giving his general estate to his children for life, with remainder to their issue; and after referring to the above power, he appointed the fund amongst his children, and requested them not to spend their shares thereof, but to leave the same for the benefit of their children:—Held, that these words did not constitute a trust for the grandchildren, so as to put the children to their election, but that they amounted to a condition annexed to the appointment in favour of children, and that such condition was void, as inconsistent with the power. Blacket v. Lamb, 14 Beav. 482; 16 Jur. 142; 21 L. J., Ch., 46.

3. Under the terms of a marriage settlement B. was given a power to dispose of a fund "to and amongst her lawful issue in such shares and proportions as she shall by her last will and testament direct, limit, or appoint." By her will she directed 180*l.* of the fund to be paid to her daughter E., then in America, "if she applies for the same within twelve months after my decease," and, in default, that the sum should be divided amongst the children of F., another daughter:—Held, that the appointment was valid as within the power. Graham v. Angell, 17 W. R. 702.

4. A gift made under a power accompanied by directions and conditions ultra vires will be valid, but the directions void. McDonald v. McDonald, 2 L .R., H. L. (Sc.), 482.

Where there is an appointment authorised by the power, but with a superadded wish, desire, or condition not authorised by the power, the appointment is valid; but the superadded wish, desire, or condition necessarily fails, unless the appointee elects to give effect to it, which he may do without vitiating the appointment. Ib.

A mere purpose or direction unwarranted by the power, though it may have operated as a motive to the appointment, will not bind the appointee. Ib.

5. A., who was unmarried at the death of B., and had under his will a power to appoint the lands of P. and T. to such child or such children as she might have, devised her lands called P. to her eldest son for life, and on his death to his eldest son living at his death or born in due time after, in fee; and if her eldest son had not such eldest son living at the time of his death or born in due time after, she devised the premises to her second son in fee; and she devised her lands of T. to her executor and his heirs, on trust to sell and lay out the produce in the purchase of freehold property in France, and to convey the property so purchased to her second son and his heirs, provided he should previously decide to reside in France; and if he should not decide to reside in France, then she devised the property so purchased to her executor and his heirs:—Held, that the condition to reside in France could not be separated from the appointment of T., and that it rendered it invalid, as it showed an intention of the testatrix to accomplish by the appointment an indirect purpose not warranted by the power. D'Abbadie v. Bixoin, 5 Ir. R., Eq., 205.

6. Under a power of appointment by will among a certain class, a testator appointed to A. and B., objects of the power upon trust for various purposes, some of which were not within the scope of the power, and appointed the ultimate residue, including all such portions the appointment whereof should from whatever cause fail of taking effect, to A. and B. absolutely:—Held, that it was a valid, legal, and equitable appointment, and that A. and B. could give a good discharge for the whole fund. Wilson v. Wilson, 17 W. R. 220.

7. S devised and bequeathed his real and personal property upon trust for his wife for her life, and after her death in trust for his children who should be living at her death, and the issue then living of his children, as she should appoint, and in default of appointment, as therein mentioned. The wife having survived her husband, by will appointed two-fifths of the residue of the trust fund in trust for a son, for his life, subject as therein provided, and after his death to his children as he should appoint, so that the benefit of every such appointment should vest before or upon the expiration of twenty-one years from the death of the son; and if there should be no child of his who should acquire a vested interest, then in trust for the son absolutely. Provided that if he should alien or dispose of his share, or should become bankrupt, the trust in his favour should cease and determine, and the property subject to the trust should be held by the trustees for the support, maintenance, or otherwise for the benefit of his wife and children, as the trustees in their discretion should think proper. S. died, and the son became bankrupt. The gift over in the proviso for cesser on his bankruptcy was held void as being in excess of the power, and the prior limitation to his children, as he should appoint, was also held void as being a delegation of a power. Stockbridge v. Story, 19 W. R. 1049.

Held, also, that the shares of the trust fund appointed in favour of the son became his absolutely under the provisions of his mother's will, and consequently went to his assignee on his bankruptcy. Ib.

V. POWER ANNEXED.

1. By a marriage settlement, a fund was vested in trustees, in trust for all and every the child and children of the marriage, in such shares, at such age or ages, time or times, and subject to such conditions, restrictions, and limitations as the wife, in case she survived her husband, should appoint. There was one child only of the marriage. The wife appointed the fund to that child for her separate use for life, and after her decease, to such persons as the child should appoint; and in default of such appointment, to the executors or administrators of the child:—Held, that the power in the settlement was well exercised. Bray v. Hammersley, 3 Sim. 513. Affirmed sub. nom. Bray v. Bree, 26 Cl. & F. 453; 8 Bli. N. S. 453.

2. By articles, the wife's fortune, and an equal sum advanced by the husband, were agreed to be settled for the husband for their joint lives, and if he should die first leaving issue by her, for her life; after her decease as to the capital in such manner as he should appoint; in default of appointment to be divided equally among the issue at twenty-one, with maintenance and survivorship after marriage. In pursuance of the articles, an estate purchased with the fund was settled upon the husband for the joint lives of him and his wife; remainder to trustees to preserve, etc.; remainder in case of his death first, without issue, to certain uses; remainder, in case of his death first, leaving any child or children, to the wife for life; remainder to the child or children in such shares as the husband should appoint; for want of appointment, equally in tail, with cross-remainders; remainder to the heirs of the husband. Children only are the objects; and an appointment to a child for life, remainder to his children as he shall appoint, is an excess of power; and the doctrine of cy près, by giving the child an estate tail, is not applicable; but the appointment is void for the excess only; and what is ill appointed, goes as in default of appointment. Bristow v. Warde, 2 Ves. J. 336.

3. Where a fund was given by will in trust for A. for life, with power to appoint among her children or their issues, remainder over in default of appointment, and A. appointed a portion of the fund to her daughter for life, remainder over as the daughter should appoint:—Held, that the last-mentioned power was well created, being in the nature of an interest, and therefore within the terms of the first power. Phipson v. Turner, 9 Sim. 227; 2 Jur. 414.

There being three objects of a power, a lady and her two brothers, and an appointment having been made to the former for life, remainder as she should by will appoint, and in default of appointment to the two latter, a deed was executed by them reciting doubts as to the validity of the appointment, so far as it gave a testamentary power, and accordingly making a new disposition of the fund. The Court considered such deed was only to take effect in case such power was invalid, or should not be executed; and being of opinion that it was valid, supported a subsequent execution of it in favour of the lady's husband. Ib.

4. Power to appoint amongst children, or some or one of them, with limitations over for benefit of one or more of such children, or his or their issue. The donee of the power appointed equal shares to his daughters respectively for life, for their separate use; then to their issue, as they (the daughters respectively) should appoint; in default, amongst the issue equally:—Held, that, subject to the life interest of the wives for their separate use, the shares appointed to the daughters belonged to them and to their husbands in their right. Carver v. Bowles, 9 L. J., Ch., 91.

5. A testator gave all his property to his widow for life, and after her death to his two daughters, in such proportions as his wife should appoint; and in default of appointment, equally between them; and in case only one survived the widow, the whole to the survivor, unless the deceased daughter should have any children, in which case they should inherit the portion intended for their mother; and he directed that the fortune of each of his daughters should go to her children after her decease, in such proportions as she might direct; but if no appointment, to be equally divided between them. The daughters were both married. The widow by deed-poll appointed the property (subject to her life estate) in moieties, to such uses as the daughters should respectively appoint; and in default of appointment, to them absolutely. By a settlement, dated the following day, each daughter appointed her moiety to her separate use for life, with remainder to her husband for life, with remainder to her children, with cross limitations, in the event of a daughter dying without having children who attained a vested interest, to the other daughter and her family. Both daughters survived the widow:—Held, that the power given to the widow enabled her not only to determine the shares which the daughters were to take, but to model their interests in such shares; and that the appointment and the settlement were effectual, subject to the question whether the limitations of life interests to husbands were valid. Jebb v. Tugwell, 2 Jur., N. S., 54; 25 L. J., Ch., 109; 8 De G. M. & G. 663; 4 W. R. 157. Reversing 20 Beav. 84, 97. n.; 1 Jur., N. S., 460; 24 L. J., Ch., 433; 3 W. R. 278.

6. A father, under a power to appoint to his children, appointed a share to a daughter for life, for her separate use, with remainder as she should by will appoint:—Held, that this was a good execution of the power. The Court aided the defective execution of a power in favour of a daughter, as against her brothers, who, in default of appointment, would participate in the property. Morse v. Martin, 34 Beav. 500.

7. A mother having a power to appoint to children, appointed by her will part of the settled fund to her son for life, with remainder to such persons as he should by will appoint, and in default of appointment to her three daughters equally, to whom she gave other benefits by the will:—Held, first, that the power of appointment given to the son was void for remoteness. Wollaston v. King, 17 W. R. 641; 38 L. J., Ch., 392; 20 L. T., N. S., 1003; 8 L. R., Eq., 165.

Held, secondly, that the fund went, after the son's death, to the three daughters under the trust in default of appointment in the mother's will, and not as unappointed under the original settlement. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that the daughters need not be put to their election. Ib.

1. Under a common power in a marriage settlement to appoint amongst children, an appointment may be made to such uses as a child may appoint; but such power to appoint must be given so as necessarily to become effectually exercisable within the time allowed by the law of perpetuities. Morgan v. Gronow, 42 L. J., Ch., 410; 16 L. R., Eq., 1; 28 L. T., N. S., 434.

Under these circumstances, therefore, a power for a child to appoint by will is void for remoteness, and a power for an unmarried child to make an appointment to take effect on marriage is also void for remoteness. Ib.

But where the donee of a power to appoint among children had given an unmarried child a power to make appointments to take effect only in case of the child's marriage, and after the child's marriage he executed a further deed, in the operative part of which he was expressed to confirm the prior appointment:—Held, that this second deed operated as a new appointment, and gave the child a valid general power of appointing exercisable immediately. Ib.

2. When, under a special power, an appointment is made giving an invalid power of appointment, with a gift over in certain events, the gift over is not invalidated by the invalidity of the power. Slark v. Dalyns, 10 L. R., Ch., 35; 44 L. J., Ch., 205; 31 L. T., N. S., 712; 23 W. R. 118. Affirming 15 L. R., Eq., 307; 42 L. J., Ch., 524.

A power to appoint is not bad because it may be so exercised as to render the appointment void as being too remote. Ib.

A power to appoint to children absolutely may be exercised by giving a child an estate for life with power to appoint by will. Ib.

A father gave property upon trust for his granddaughter A. for life, and after her death for her children, or some of them, as she should by deed or will appoint. A., by her will, appointed one-fifth of the fund to each of five children (all of whom were living at the death of the original testator) for life, and directed that, after the death of each child, the share in which the child had a life interest should be held in such manner as the child might by will appoint, with limitations over in default of appointment in favour of the survivors in different events:—Held, a good exercise of the power of appointment. Ib.

3. Parents having under their marriage settlement a power of appointment over a trust fund in favour of their children, appointed a portion of the fund upon such trusts as S., one of the children, should, with the consent of the trustees of the father's will, appoint, and in default of appointment, upon trust for S. for life, or until he should become bankrupt within the joint lives of the parents, or twenty-one years from the death of the survivor of them; and after his decease, if his interest should not have determined, upon trust for his executors or administrators, as part of his personal estate:—Held, first, that the words requiring the consent of the trustees of the father's will to the exercise of the power by S., being inseparably connected with the power, rendered the whole power void. Webb v. Sadler, 42 L. J., Ch., 498; 8 L. R., Ch., 419; 21 W. R. 394; 28 L. T., N. S., 388. Varying 14 L. R., Eq., 533; 20 W. R. 740.

Held, secondly, that the gift over in default of appointment amounted to an absolute appointment in favour of S., subject to the contingency of his becoming bankrupt, etc., within twenty-one years after the death of the surviving parent. Ib.

VI. PERPETUITY AND REMOTENESS.

4. A money fund was settled in trust for the issue of the marriage of M. and his wife; after their deaths, in such shares, etc., and at such times, as M. should appoint. M., by his will, appointed the fund to his sons in equal shares, "their respective portions to be paid to them as and when they should attain their respective ages of twenty-five years, and not before":—Held, that the appointment was void for remoteness. Massey v. Barton, 7 Ir. Eq. R. 95.

5. A widow, having a power of appointing a fund amongst her children, by her will appointed shares to certain of her children, for life, with remainder to their children; and in case any of her children died in her lifetime, she gave the share to his or her issue; and in case there should be no issue, the survivors of A.'s children were to take:—Held, that the appointment to the grandchildren was void, but that the alternative gift over to the surviving children, in case any died in the testatrix's lifetime without issue, was valid. Hewitt v. Dacre (Lord), 2 Keen 622; 7 L. J., N. S., Ch., 295; 2 Jur. 836.

6. By a marriage settlement, dated in 1821, real estate was conveyed to trustees to the use of the settlor, M., for life, and after his death to the use of all or any exclusively, of the children, grandchildren, or other issue of M. (to be born before the appointment was made), as he should by deed or will appoint, and in default to the uses therein declared. By will dated in 1867, M. appointed the estate to his son W. in fee, but in case he should have no child who should attain twenty-one, then to the settlor's grandson B. in fee:—Held, that the executory gift over to B. was void for remoteness. Re Brown, 3 L. R., Ch. D., 156.

7. A., who was unmarried at the death of B., and had under his will a power to appoint the lands of P. and T. to such child or such children as she might have, devised her lands called P. to her eldest son for life, and on his decease to his oldest son living at his death or born in due time after in fee; and if her eldest son had not such eldest son living at the time of his death or born in due time after, she devised the premises to her second son in fee; and she devised her lands of T. to her executor and his heirs, on trust to sell and lay out the produce in the purchase of freehold property in France, and to convey the property so purchased to her second son and his heirs, provided he should previously decide to reside in France, and if he should not decide to reside in France, then she devised the property so purchased to her executor and his heirs:—Held, that the limitations of P., subsequent to the life estate of the eldest son, were void for remoteness. D'Abbadie v. Bizoin, 5 Ir. R., Eq., 205.

1. Personal estate settled on marriage for the husband for life, then for the wife for life, then to and among all and every the children and grandchildren, or issue in such shares, under such restrictions, at such times and in such manner, as they or the survivor should appoint by deed or deeds, or by will; for want of appointment to all and every the children and grandchildren or issue living at the decease of the survivor, equally, payable at twenty-one or marriage; if but one, to that one, provided that, in case of no appointment, the issue of any children dead should not have a greater share than their parents would have had, Issue only are within the power, but in any degree; but an appointment to any issue not living must be restrained to twenty-one years after lives in being at the creation of the power, otherwise it is void even as to such as come in esse within those limits: but on marriage of a daughter interests may be given to her children generally, and to her husband. What is ill-appointed goes as in default of appointment: but children of a living parent cannot take under the proviso. Routledge v. Dorril, 2 Ves. J. 357.

2. G. P., a tenant for life of real estate, with remainder for all and every, or any one or more, to the exclusion of the other or others of his children as he should by deed or will appoint, made an appointment to trustees, upon trust for his son G. S. P., his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, and to be conveyed to him when and as he should attain the age of twenty-three years; and in case his son G. S. P. should die before he had attained the age of twenty-one years, to the use of the second, third, and fourth, and every other son of the testator successively in tail, with remainder to his daughters in tail, with remainder to his brother in fee. And after directing the payment of two annual sums of money during the minority of his son, he directed his trustees to invest the clear residue of the rents and profits, to accumulate until G. S. P. or such other sons as aforesaid should attain the age of twenty-three, and on his or their first attaining that age then upon trust to pay over all such securities and accumulations unto G. S. P. or to such other sons, his executors, administrators, and assigns, for his and their absolute use and benefit:—Held, that the power of appointment was duly exercised; that G. S. P. took an estate in fee upon the death of the testator, liable to be devested in case of his death under twenty-one; and that the trust for accumulation was valid until G. S. P. attained the age of twenty-three. Peard v. Kekewich, 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 456; 15 Beav. 166.

3. Where there is a gift to a class, some of whom are within the rule against perpetuities, and some not, but the class itself and the shares of each cannot be ascertained within the legal limits as to time, the whole gift is void. But where the individual shares of the members of the class can be ascertained within the proper periods, the gift is valid as to those within the rule against perpetuities, though invalid as the rest. Wilkinson v. Duncan, 30 Beav. 111; 9 W. R. 915; 7 Jur., N. S., 1182; 5 L. T., N. S., 161; 30 L. J., Ch., 938.

If a stated sum is given to each member of a class, wholly independent of the same, or a similar gift to every other member of a class, and cannot be affected whether the others receive their legacies or not, the gift as to those who are within the limits allowed by law. Ib.

4. A power of appointing lands amongst all the children of B. "begotten and to be begotten, and their issue," and in default of appointment amongst the children equally; B. had six children, all living at the time of the power being created, and by will directed that the share which every child of B. begotten, etc., was entitled to, in default of appointment, should be held in trust for that child for life, and after its death for its children:—Held, valid, and not void for remoteness. Griffith v. Pownall, 13 Sim. 393.

5. A power to appoint by will is a general power within the scope of the Wills Act, 7 Will. 4 and 1 Vict., c. 26, s. 27, so that where a person having a power to appoint real or personal estate by will makes a residuary disposition of his property without reference to the power, the will will be construed as an execution of the power. Re Powell, 18 W. R. 228; 39 L. J., Ch., 188.

But such a general power does not constitute ownership; so that, for the purpose of considering the question whether the exercise of the power be or be not void for remoteness, the real or personal estate subject to the power will be deemed to be the property of the donor, and not of the donee of the power. Ib.

P. bequeathed sums amounting to 5,000*l.* after the deaths of certain persons mentioned, upon trust, for H. for life, and after her death upon trust for such person or persons as H. should, by her last will and testament, appoint. H. made a will not referring in any way to the power, but leaving the residue of her property in trust for her daughter L. for life, for her separate use, without power of anticipation, and after her death in trust for the children of L., who, being a son or sons, should attain the age of twenty-one, or, being a daughter or daughters, should attain that age or marry. L. was born after the death of P.:—Held, that the exercise of the power was void for remoteness. Ib.

6. A gift of all the residue, real and personal, to A. upon trust to divide it into two moieties, the income of one moiety to go to A. for life, and the testator empowered his trustees to set apart out of this moiety 5,000*l.*, and to advance, by way of loan or absolute gift, the whole or any part of such sum to B., or all or any of his children, in such manner as to A. or other of the testator's trustees should seem meet; and when B. and his children were all dead, then the said sum to be subject to the trusts of the other moiety of the residue; and he appointed A. sole executor and inserted in the will a power of appointing new trustees:—Held, that the power was divisible, and was to be considered as two powers, one to be exercised by A., and the other by the succeeding trustees in default of A. exercising his power, and that the former power was valid whatever might be said of the latter. Held, also, that such power was not bad, because it contemplated an appointment to objects, some of whom were too remote, but that a valid appointment thereunder might be made to such of its objects as were within the proper limits. Attenborough v. Attenborough, 1 Kay & J. 296.

1. A testatrix by will, dated in 1845, limited to a daughter an exclusive power of appointment by will amongst her children. The daughter, by her will, dated in 1874, in exercise of the power, appointed the fund amongst the objects of the power in certain shares, giving to two of her daughters life interests only, and declared that if either during her life or after her death any son or daughter of hers should marry a person who did not profess the Jewish religion, or was not born a Jew though converted to Judaism, or should forsake the Jewish and adopt the Christian or any other religion, then such son or daughter should forfeit all share in the fund, and in case of forfeiture the forfeited share was to accrue and go over to the other or others of the children living at the time of the forfeiture. Julius, a son of the appointor, married a Christian in his mother's lifetime, but without her consent. The plaintiff, one of the two daughters of the appointor, to whom a life interest only was appointed, became a Christian after the mother's death. Both Julius and the plaintiff were born after the death of the creator of the power:—Held, first, that the forfeiture clause was not void as against public policy: secondly, that it was effectual as to the shares of children marrying Christians or becoming Christians during the lifetime of the appointor, and therefore that the share of Julius was forfeited: thirdly, that the forfeiture clause must be read in conjunction with the gift over, and therefore that, so far as it affected, after the death of the appointor, the share of a child born after the death of the creator of the power, it was void for remoteness, whether such share was appointed for life only or absolutely, and consequently that the plaintiff had not forfeited her share. Hodgson v. Halford, 11 L. R., Ch. D., 959; 48 L. J., Ch., 548; 27 W. R. 545.

VII. EXCESS. WHEN SEVERABLE.

2. Where there has been an excess in the execution of a power, it is void quoad the surplus, but good within the limits of the power. Hervey v. Hervey, 1 Atk. 569. Parry v. Bowen, Nel. 87; 2 Ves. 644.

3. Power may be good and bad in part, and the excess only void where the execution is complete, and the bounds between it and excess clear. Alexander v. Alexander, 2 Ves. 644.

Where interest in appointment under power is given to those not capable, together with another who is capable, the latter will take the whole. Under such power, it cannot be given free from debts of the appointee. Id. 640.

4. An appointment exceeding the power by a limitation to objects not within the power, is void as to the excess. Crompe v. Barrow, 4 Ves. 681.

5. A testator had power, under his marriage settlement, to divide 2,000*l.* between his children as he should direct "by any deed or writing, to be sealed and delivered in the presence of two witnesses." By his will, which was "sealed, signed, published, and declared," in the presence of three witnesses, the testator recited the power, and divided the 2,000*l.* between his three children living at his death and the survivor of them, excluding a deceased child, and then amongst their issue; and in default of issue of his three children, then to his nephews and nieces:—Held, that the power was well executed amongst the children and the survivor of them; but beyond that, the residue to go as in default of appointment. De la Hooke v. Hill, 4 Jur. 765.

6. Excess in the execution of a power, if capable of separation, will be corrected. Palmer v. Wheeler, 2 Ball. & B. 28.

7. When a power is exceeded in the execution, in order to reject the excess, and let the appointment stand, the Court must see distinctly what the person executing the power had in view, and be satisfied that if he had rightly understood the extent of his power, he would so have executed it. Hamilton v. Royse, 2 Sch. & Lef. 315.

8. Quære, whether if the estate, limited to an object of a power, be preceded by a limitation of a term of years to trustees to raise money for persons who are not objects of the power, the whole appointment is bad, or merely the limitation of the term. Barron v. Barron, 2 Jones 226.

9. Words in excess of a power rejected where there is a valid appointment to an object of the power, and in such a case:—Held, that the appointee, being object of the power, takes absolutely. Re Sondes' (Lord) Will, Re Watson's Will, 2 Sm. & Gif. 416.

10. An appointment to take effect at a future period is not void in toto because it may include, or in the event turns out to include, strangers as well as objects of the power; but it fails only as to those appointees who are not objects. Re Farncombe, 47 L. J., Ch. D., 328; 9 L. R., Ch. D., 652.

11. A marriage settlement comprised a sum of 20,000*l.* South Sea Annuities, 7,000*l.* 3 per cent. reduced, and 3,150*l.* new 4 per cents.; also certain shares in a company, and 54,000 French rentes. These were settled on trust to raise an annuity of 500*l.* for the life of the wife for her separate use, subject thereto, for the husband and wife for their joint lives; if the wife should predecease her husband, then on trust, to raise 3,000*l.*, over which a general power of appointment was given to the wife, and as to the rent, after the death of the wife so predeceasing her husband, for him for life, and after his death in trust for all and every, or such one, or more, exclusively of the other or others of the relations in blood to the said Sarah Harvey (the wife) at the time of her decease, within the eighth degree of consanguinity to her, at such age, day, or time, or respective ages, days, or times, and, if more than one, in such shares and proportions, and with such annual sums of money, and future, or executory, or other trusts (such annual sums of money, and future, or executory, or other trusts, being for the benefit of the said relations in blood of the said Sarah Harvey, within the degree aforesaid, or such, or one of them), and in such manner as the said Sarah Harvey should, notwithstanding her coverture, by her last will and testament in writing, or any codicil or codicils in writing, or any writing or writings in the nature of or purporting to be a will or codicil, to be signed and published by her in the presence of, and to be attested by, two or more credible witnesses, direct or appoint; and in default of such direction, or appointment, and so far as any direction or appointment should not extend, in trust for such person, or persons, as under the Statute for the Distribution of the Effects of Intestates would at the decease of the said Sarah Harvey have become entitled thereto as her next of kin, in case the said Archibald Morrison (the husband) had died in her lifetime, and she had died possessed thereof, his widow, and intestate. The settlement also comprised certain plate, linen, china, etc., over which a general power of appointment was given to the wife, to take effect after the death of the husband. It comprised also certain shares in a public library, and tickets of admission to a theatre, and jewellery, etc., and as to these the settlement gave to the wife a general power of gift and appointment, either during her life, or after her death, as well as over what she should save out of her separate income. The wife died many years before her husband. By her will she said: "I do, by virtue of the power and authority reserved to me in and by the deed of settlement made, etc., hereby make, publish, and declare this my last will and testament, in manner and form following, that is to say." She then referred particularly to the power to dispose of 3,000*l.*, and made a disposition of a great part of it. She gave to her husband for life all the benefit of her shares in the public library, of her admission to the theatre, and of her books. After his death, she disposed of these things to various persons; she disposed also of her jewels, china, and other things, and her will concluded as follows: "And after payment of my just debts, funeral expenses, the charges of proving this my will, and of carrying the trust thereof into execution, I direct and appoint, give and bequeath, after the decease of my said husband, all the rest, residue, and remainder of my moneys, and other my personal estate, of whatever description the same may be, unto and among all and every, the daughters of my said brother John Harvey, the said Charles Day, and Louisa Day, the children of my deceased niece, and the two daughters of my said brother Charles Savile Onley, or to such of them as shall be living at my said husband's death, and to the issue of such of them as shall then happen to be dead, to be equally divided amongst them, share and share alike. But it is my will that the said Charles Day, and Louisa Day, and the children of any other of my nieces who may be dead, shall only be entitled to the share in the said residue which his or her mother would have had if living at the death of my said husband. And further it is my will that the shares of each of my said nieces of each of the residue of my personal estate, shall be placed and continue out at interest by my surviving executor, his executors or administrators, on Government or real security, during the respective lives of my said nieces, and the dividend or interest on each share, as the same shall from time to time become due, shall be paid to each of my nieces during her life, on her own receipt, for her own sole and separate use, and not to be subject to the debts or control of her present or any future husband. And as to the share of my niece Caroline Onley, I will and desire that the same shall after her decease be paid to all my other nieces who shall be living at the decease of the said Caroline Onley and to the issue of such of them as shall then happen to be dead, equally, share and share alike, but the issue of any deceased niece is only to be entitled to the share which his or their mother would have had if living at the decease of the said Caroline Onley; and after the death of each of my other nieces, I direct that the dividends and interest of her share shall, if she die married, be paid to her husband during his life, for his own use. And I further will and direct that after the several deceases of my said last-mentioned nieces, or their respective husbands, that the share of each of the said last-mentioned nieces shall be paid to her child, children, or grandchildren, or any other relation in blood to my said niece, in such parts and proportions, manner, and form as she may, by her last will and testament, duly executed, and which she shall have power to make, notwithstanding her coverture, give and bequeath the same, and in default thereof then unto the next of kin in blood of my said niece, according to the Statute of Distribution of Intestate Personal Estates":—Held, first, that the will was an execution of all the powers, that is of the power to appoint each portion of property comprised in the settlement; secondly, that the appointment in favour of the daughters of John Harvey was not void ab initio because it might comprise persons not living at the death of the testatrix and within the eighth degree, nor did it become void in toto because it did in fact at the time of distribution include such persons, but that it was good pro tanto; thirdly, that the attempted limitation to the husbands of the nieces was bad, as they were strangers, and the limitations to their children, grandchildren, or other relations in blood was void for remoteness; fourthly, that the attempt to cut down the estate given to the nieces in the first instance failing, the attempted remainders over did not go as unappointed to the next of kin, but failed wholly and left absolute interests subsisting in the nieces. Harvey v. Stracey, 1 Drew. 73; 22 L. J., N. S., Ch., 23; 16 Jur. 771.

1. A lady having four children by her first husband, and three by her second, and having power to appoint a fund amongst the former only, appointed it amongst all her children equally, and declared that if her children by her first husband should refuse to share the fund with her other children, the whole fund should go to her youngest child by her first husband:—Held, that the appointment was not wholly void, but that the first class of children took each one-seventh of the fund under it, and the other shares went to them, as in default of appointment. Sadler v. Pratt, 5 Sim. 632.

1. By settlement upon the marriage of C., certain fee simple lands were conveyed to C. for life, and, after his decease, to such of his children as he should by deed or will appoint, and to their heirs and assigns, and, in default of appointment, to such children equally. C., having several children, devised these lands to his wife for her life, upon condition that she should support, maintain, and educate the children; and after her decease, to C.'s son, John:—Held, that the gift to the wife was void, but the trusts in favour of the children valid, and that the gift to the son was good, the execution of the power being void only for the excess, and not in toto. Crozier v. Crozier, 2 Con. & L. 294; 5 Ir. Eq. R. 540; 3 Dr. & War. 373.

2. An appointment good in itself is not rendered invalid by the annexation of a condition subsequent not authorised by the power. Settlement upon trust for all and every the children or child of R., in such shares, at such age, etc., as R. should appoint. Appointment by will by R. in trust for his son F. absolutely, with a direction that he should within one year settle the trust funds upon trusts therein declared, and that on refusal the provisions in his favour should cease:—Held, that the condition was to be merely rejected, and did not vitiate the appointment. Watt v. Creyke, 26 L. J., Ch., 211; 3 Jur., N. S., 56; 3 Sm. & G. 362.

3. A will made by the donee of a special power to appoint by deed, though it shows that the donee supposed the power to have been extinguished, and purports to be an execution of an invalid power, and of all other powers enabling in that behalf, and though it appoints to persons, some of whom are strangers to the power, is a defective execution which equity will aid in favour of a child otherwise provided for, and to the prejudice of other children entitled in default of appointment. Bruce v. Bruce, 40 L. J., Ch., 141; 11 L. R., Eq., 371; 24 L. T., N. S., 212.

4. Parents having under their marriage settlement a power of appointment over a trust fund in favour of their children, appointed a portion of the fund upon such trusts as S., one of the children, should, with the consent of the trustees of the father's will, appoint, and in default of appointment, upon trust for S. for life, or until he should become bankrupt within the joint lives of the parents, or twenty-one years from the death of the survivor of them; and after his decease, if his interest should not have determined, upon trust for his executors or administrators, as part of his personal estate:—Held, that the words requiring the consent of the trustees of the father's will to the exercise of the power by S. being inseparably connected with the power, rendered the whole power void. Webb v. Sadler, 42 L. J., Ch., 498; 8 L. R., Ch., 419; 21 W. R. 394; 28 L. T., N. S., 388. Varying 14 L. R., Eq., 533; 20 W. R. 740.

5. Conditions annexed to appointments made in pursuance of a power, though in themselves void:—Held, not to invalidate the appointments. Palsgrave v. Atkinson, 1 Colly. 190.

6. A person having a power of appointing a sum of money among his younger children, by his will, reciting the power, bequeathed as follows: "I leave and bequeath unto my said daughter Harriet, a further sum of 200*l.*, to have me properly buried, and to pay what small debts I may owe at my decease":—Held, that this was a bad exercise of the power, and that the 200*l.* should go as if unappointed. Hay v. Watkins, 2 Con. & L. 157; 3 Dr. & War. 339; 5 Ir. Eq. R. 273.

When there is an appointment, with a condition annexed, if there appear to be a clear intention to benefit the appointee, the Court will hold the appointment good discharged of the condition. Ib.

7. A father, having a power to appoint an estate to the use of all and every his child and children for any estates or interests, and in any shares and subject to any charges and incumbrances, to one or more of them, devised the estate to trustees in trust to apply the rents, until the eldest son attained age, to the maintenance and education of all the children, and further thereout to pay the interests of his debts and so much of the principal as the surplus would reach; and he charged the estate with 3,030*l.* for the younger children; and in case the eldest son should, by business or marriage, or otherwise, be enabled to pay off the 3,000*l.*, that the trustees should convey the lands to him; and in case the eldest son should not pay it, to the second or third son on the same conditions; and in case none of the sons should take or accept the estate, that the trustees should sell the estate and pay off the father's debts and divide the surplus among all the children:—Held, that the will was a good equitable execution of the power, the portion of it which exceeded the power being separable, and the 3,000*l.* being a charge and not a personal condition. Richardson v. Simpson, 9 Ir. Eq. R. 367; 3 J. & L. 540.

8. Part of a fund was appointed under a power to an object of the power, subject to a charge not within the power:—Held, that though the charge was void, the appointment was valid. Re Jeaffreson, 35 L. J., Ch., 622; 2 L. R., Eq., 276; 12 Jur., N. S., 660; 14 W. R. 759.

9. When an absolute gift or an appointment in a will is attempted to be cut down by a subsequent inoperative modification or restriction, the original gift remains unaffected by the intended restriction. Churchill v. Churchill, 16 W. R. 182; 5 L. R., Eq., 44.

10. A., who was unmarried at the death of B., and had under his will a power to appoint the lands of P. and T. to such child or such children as she might have, devised her lands called P. to her eldest son for life, and on his decease to his eldest son living at his death or born in due time after in fee; and if her eldest son had not such eldest son living at the time of his death or born in due time after, she devised the premises to her second son in fee; and she devised her lands of T. to her executor and his heirs, on trust to sell and lay out the produce in the purchase of freehold property in France, and to convey the property so purchased to her second son and his heirs, provided he should previously decide to reside in France; and if he should not decide to reside in France, then she devised the property so purchased to her executor and his heirs:—Held, that the condition to reside in France could not be separated from the appointment of T., and that it rendered it invalid, as it showed an intention of the testatrix to accomplish by the appointment an indirect purpose not warranted by the power. D'Abbadie v. Bicoin, 5 Ir. R., Eq., 205.

I. CHILDREN. OF WHAT MARRIAGE.

1. A., a widower, settles lands to raise 100*l.* a year for his eldest son, and 100*l.* apiece for his younger children, and afterwards marries again, and has children by his second wife. Decreed, the children by his second wife were equally entitled with the other younger children; though portions of the younger children were by the settlement to ce paid according to their seniority, yet in case of a deficiency they shall be paid in average. The portions of the younger children, who died in the life of their father, not to be raised in favour of the administrators; otherwise, if any of the daughters had married in the lifetime of their father, and afterwards died. Brathwaite v. Brathwaite, 1 Vern. 334.

2. A. B. on his second marriage executed a deed of settlement, whereby certain lands were vested in trustees to the use of the settlor for life; then to secure a jointure for his intended wife, and subject thereto to the use of the first and every other son of the settlor by his said intended wife; and in the same deed, there was a power, if the settlor should have more than one son, by deed or will to prefer such son to the whole or part of said lands, subject to said jointure of 60*l.* per annum to his wife, and also subject to all such sums as he might think fit to charge, in the whole not exceeding 4,000*l.* Shortly after the execution of the settlement, the settlor executed the power, and charged the said lands with a sum of 4,000*l.* in favour of the children of his former marriage, and subsequently made his will, and thereby devised certain estates, of which he was seised, to the defendant, who was the only son of the second marriage then living, and reciting, that "by his settlement he was empowered to charge the settled lands with 4,000*l.*, and that he had accordingly charged them," etc., and further declaring that, inasmuch as he had, by the deed of 3rd September, 1819, fully provided for the sons of his first marriage, he left the residue of his real and personal estate to his son by his second marriage." A bill having been filed by the assignee of the share of one of the children of the first marriage:—Held, that the power of charging could not be exercised, save in favour of the children of the second marriage; also, that it was not an absolute power, but a power dependent upon the event of there being more sons than one of that marriage, and any one of such sons being preferred to the settled lands according to the terms of the primary power. Cooke v. Briscoe, 1 Dr. & Wal. 596.

3. A. person having a power to charge 500*l.* and appoint it among his younger children, by articles on first marriage, charged it for the benefit of the younger children of that marriage. He married again. There were younger children of both marriages. By his will he appointed nominal shares to the children of the first, and the entire substantially to those of the second marriage:—Held, that the power included all younger children, and the articles therefore became invalid as an appointment after the second marriage, and that the power might be re-exercised; but held, also, that the articles were a contract to exercise it substantially for the children of the first marriage, and controlled the power, and that the testamentary appointment was therefore also invalid, and the fund should be divided equally among the younger children of the first marriage and the younger children of the second marriage as a class. Alleyne v. Alleyne, 3 Ir. Eq. R. 493; 2 J. & L. 544.

4. Testator devised lands to P. upon trust to convey them to his three sons, in such shares as P. should appoint; and in default of appointment he gave the lands to them equally, as tenants in common. In 1786 P., in execution of the trust, conveyed part of the lands to the use, that in case S. (one of the sons) should marry, with the consent of P. first obtained, but not otherwise, such woman or women as he should so marry, in case she should survive him, should, during her life, receive for jointure such annuity (not exceeding a certain sum) as S. should appoint: and to the further use, in case S. should marry with such consent, but not otherwise, that he might by deed or will charge the lands with 500*l.* for portions for his younger children, payable in such shares as he should appoint. In 1788, S. married with consent, and, reciting his power, covenanted that the trustees of his settlement, in case there should be one or more younger children of the marriage living at his death, should raise 500*l.* out of the lands; the said sum to be divided in such shares and proportions amongst such younger children as he should by will appoint, and for want of appointment, equally. There was issue of this marriage three younger children. S., after the death of P., married a second wife, and charged the lands with an annuity for her jointure; and died, leaving his wife and four children of the second marriage, and the three younger children of his first marriage, surviving. By his will in 1842 he appointed 1*s.* to each of the children of the first marriage, and the residue among the children of the second marriage:—Held, upon the construction of the settlement in 1786, and the circumstances that the consent of P. was only requisite to any marriage of S. which should take place in his lifetime; and that the children of the second marriage were objects of the power; that the settlement of 1788 amounted to a contract, that so far as S. could bind his power, the children of the first marriage should take the fund equally between them, if he did not otherwise apportion it amongst them; that, upon there being issue of the second marriage, S.'s power of appointment was gone; and that the children of both marriages were entitled to the fund equally between them as one class. Green v. Green, 2 J. & L. 529; 8 Ir. Eq. R. 473.

1. By a marriage settlement, certain stock in the funds was settled upon the intended husband and wife for their joint lives, and the life of the survivor, and then upon the children of the marriage, with a power to the trustees, with the consent of the wife, to advance part of the fund for the benefit of the children in her lifetime. There were four children of the marriage; the husband died; the wife married again; the second husband assigned the wife's life interest for value; after the assignment the trustees, with the consent of the wife, exercised the power of advancement in favour of the children of the first marriage:—Held, that the power was well executed as against the assignee of the second husband. Whitmarsh v. Robertson, 1 Colly. 571; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 157; 9 Jur. 125. And see S. C. 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 715; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 404; 6 Jur. 921.

II. GRANDCHILDREN.

2. Appointment void as far as it exceeds the power, viz., to grandchildren under a power to appoint to children. Butcher v. Butcher, 1 Ves. & B. 79. Affirming 9 Ves. 382.

3. A power to appoint among children does extend to grandchildren. The appointment being bad under the power, the party taking benefit of it not obliged to make satisfaction out of the personal estate which he took under the same will. Robinson v. Hardcastle, 2 Bro. C. C. 344.

4. Execution of a power of appointment to children:—Held, good, though it extended to the issue of one of them, under the special circumstances of the case. Langston v. Blackmore, Ambl. 289. See Tucker v. Sanger, M'Clel. 449; 13 Price 609.

5. Power to appoint among children, each must have a part, not illusory nor reversionary; but a particular interest, as for life, may be given to one. Such a power will not extend to grandchildren, nor can a discretion be given to another to appoint. But though that would be void, it would not devolve on the Court, which is only where the power is well created, but by accident cannot be executed by the party. Alexander v. Alexander, 2 Ves. 640.

6. Testator appoints to grandchildren, under a power to appoint to children, a fund, to go, and in default of appointment, equally: the appointment being bad, the children having legacies must elect. Whistler v. Webster, 2 Ves. J. 366.

7. Testator bequeathed a sum of 6,000*l.* in trust for his daughter for life, "and on her decease, I give the said 6,000*l.* to the children, or their descendants, of T. F. in such proportions to each as my daughter may direct." The daughter died without having made any appointment:—Held, that the children of T. F. were entitled to the fund to the exclusion of their issue. Jones v. Torin, 6 Sim. 255.

8. By articles, the wife's fortune and an equal sum advanced by the husband were agreed to be settled for the husband for their joint lives; and if he should die first, leaving issue by her, for her for life; after her decease, as to the capital, in such manner as he should appoint; in default of appointment, to be divided equally among the issue at twenty-one without maintenance and survivorship. After marriage, in pursuance of the articles, an estate purchased with the fund was settled upon the husband for the joint lives of him and his wife, remainder to trustees to preserve, etc.; remainder, in case of his death first, without issue, to certain uses; remainder, in case of his death first, leaving any child or children, to the wife for life; remainder to all the child or children in such shares as the husband should appoint, for want of appointment equally in tail, with cross-remainder; remainder to the heirs of the husband. Children only are the objects, and an appointment to a child for life, remainder to his children as he shall appoint, is an excess of power, and the doctrine of cy près, by giving the child an estate tail, is not applicable; but the appointment is void for the excess only, and what is ill-apportioned goes as in default of appointment. Bristow v. Warde, 2 Ves. J. 336.

9. Upon marriage articles, 15,000*l.* was vested in trustees on trust, together with 5,000*l.* covenanted by the husband to be paid, to be laid out in land to be settled upon the husband for life, remainder to the wife for life, remainder to the use of such child and children, in such shares, for such estates, and subject to such powers, limitations, and provisions as the husband and wife, or the survivor, should appoint; in default of appointment, to the children in tail; in default of issue, to the husband in fee. The husband and wife joined in a direction to the trustees, reciting their resolution to invest the trust fund in an estate lately purchased by the husband for 16,300*l.*, and directing them to deliver the said stock, etc., to him, at the price they were at on the day of the purchase, which was done. The wife died; there were two daughters; the father, by will, reciting the purchase, and that he had not conveyed it to the uses of the settlement, and that it was not his intention, that the said purchase should be an investment of the trust fund, but that the said fund, with its increase, should be taken out of his personal estate, gave 10,000*l.*, part of the trust fund, in trust to be laid out in land, to be conveyed to one daughter for life for her separate use, remainder to her children in tail, remainder to the other daughter in fee, for whom he also appointed the residue of the fund, but revoked that by codicil reciting a portion given on her marriage: —Held, first, that grandchildren are not objects of the power, but the excess only would be void; secondly, the fund, with its increase, was invested in the purchase; thirdly, there was no appointment of the estate or money due on the covenant; fourthly, the remainders in default of appointment are vested subject to be devested by appointment, and will take effect as to what is ill appointed or unappointed: fifthly, the share of the daughter, to whom the portion was advanced on marriage, was thereby satisfied. Smith v. Camelford (Lord), 2 Ves. J. 698. See further this case, nom. Pitt v. Jackson, 2 Bro. C. C. 51.

1. A power to appoint among children, "subject to such regulations and directions with regard to the settling the shares in trust for their separate use, and with, under, and subject to such powers, provisoes, conditions, and other restrictions and limitations over (such limitations over being for the benefit of some or one of them)," does not authorise an appointment to grandchildren. Hewitt v. Dacre (Lord), 2 Keen 622; 7 L. J., N. S., Ch., 295; 2 Jur., 836.

2. A. K. by will gave all his realty and personalty to his wife O. to bring up his children, and when they came of age "to settle" on them what she would deem "prudence," reserving to herself maintenance. If she married again, T. P. was to become trustee for the children of the testator. At his wife's death what property remained was to be equally divided among the children of the testator then living. The wife and five children survived the testator; two children afterwards died under twenty-one. The widow settled part of the property on one of the children and her issue:—Held, that this was a bad execution of the power, so far as it gave any interest to grandchildren. Kennerly v. Kennerly, 16 Jur. 649.

3. "Child or children" may mean "issue." A testator bequeathed property to trustees upon trust to pay the income thereof to his daughter during her life, and directed that, in case she should leave any issue living at her death, the property should be disposed of, and the produce thereof paid to and amongst such child or children as she should appoint, and in default of appointment to and amongst such issue as tenants in common, or if there should be but one child the whole to be paid to such one; and if there should be no issue of his daughter living at her decease, or they should die infants, then over:—Held, that the words "child or children" must be construed "issue," and, therefore, that an appointment to the exclusion of the grandchildren was void. Dalzell v. Welch, 2 Sim. 319.

4. Where the words "children" and "issue" are used interchangeably in a will, the operation of the word "children" may be extended to "issue generally," to effectuate the intention. Harley v. Mitford, 21 Beav. 280.

A testator declared, that in case his daughters should "leave issue," they might appoint a fund "unto such children" in "such manner" as they should choose, and in default of any child, they might appoint it to their sisters and their children; and in case all his daughters should die without issue," then over: —Held, that "children" must be construed "issue," and that an appointment to a grandchild was within the power. Ib.

Held, also, that the word "such" did not refer to the issue a daughter might leave, but to such of the class as she might choose. Ib.

5. Devise to A. for life, with remainder to the use of all and every, or such one or more, of his children, and their, his, or her heirs, for such estate and estates, and in such shares and proportions, as A. should by deed or will appoint; and in default of appointment, to the use of all and every such child or children, and the respective heirs of their bodies:—Held, that an appointment to a grandchild of A. was a valid exercise of the power. Fowler v. Cohen, 21 Beav. 360; 2 Jur., N. S., 315; 4 W. R. 412.

By Way of Settlement when not Objects of the Power.] See XV. v. 3 ante.

III. ILLEGITIMATE CHILDREN.

6. One devises 3,000*l.* to all the natural children of his son by J. S.; the bastards born after making the will shall not take; nay, the child in ventre sa mere shall not take; and, though in the principal case the money was to be paid by the executors, as the testator by deed should appoint, and the testator afterwards made the deed of appointment, the deed of appointment, referring to the will, was held as part of the will. Metham v. Devonshire (Duke), 1 P. W. 529. See 8 Price 22.

7. Trusts in marriage articles to pay certain funds, the property of the wife, to all and every her child and children, in such parts, etc., as she should by will give, etc., and for want of such gift, etc., to all and every her child and children, part and share alike, and for want of such issue, over. By her will she gave ten guineas, part of the fund, to her eldest son, declaring that he was otherwise provided for by the will of his uncle; and the remainder she gave to all her other children, naming them, equally, with survivorship in case of the death of any during minority, and before receipt of his, her, or their shares; and in case of the death of her eldest son before he comes to the possession of his uncle's fortune, she gave her second son only ten guineas. The only provision of the eldest son was a remainder in tail after the life estate of his father, who survived his wife. The Court was of opinion, that children illegitimate, being born after elopement, and no access, clearly could not take. Vanderzee v. Aclom, 4 Ves. 771.

1. A married woman, having several legitimate children, and one illegitimate child, and being separated from her husband, and enceinte with a second illegitimate child, appointed a fund to her illegitimate child then born, reserving a power of revocation, as to a moiety, in favour of any after-born children she might have born of her body. After the birth of the second illegitimate child, she revoked the appointment of the moiety, and appointed the entire fund equally between the two illegitimate children:—Held, that the after-born children, for whose benefit the revocation might be made, must be taken in the primary and legal sense as applying to legitimate children only; that, therefore, the second illegitimate child was not an object of the reserved power, and could not take under the latter appointment. Dover v. Alexander, 2 Hare 275; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 175; 7 Jur. 124.

The objection to the validity of a limitation to unborn illegitimate children is not founded exclusively on the uncertainty of description, nor semble is there any distinction between the validity of a limitation in favour of such persons, whether described as the children of a man or the children of a woman. Ib.

2. A husband by his will gave his property in trust for the use of his wife for life, with power to dispose of it by will at her death "among our children," and if she died intestate the property to be divided equally between "my children by her." The testator was twice married. By his first wife he had two children, both of whom died in his life, one of them leaving an only child. By his second wife he had two children, both born before the marriage:—Held, that the two illegitimate children did not take. Dorin v. Dorin, 7 L. R., H. L., 568; 45 L. J., Ch., 652; 33 L. T. 281; 23 W. R. 570. Reversing 17 L. R., Eq., 463; 43 L. J., Ch., 462; 29 L. T. 731; 22 W. R. 217.

3. K. by his will gave a fund upon trust for such of the children of his daughter M. (who was then married) as she should by will appoint, and, in default of appointment, for her children equally. The will contained no hotchpot clause. M. had several children, some of whom were illegitimate, having been born before her marriage. By her will she appointed the fund to her "children E. and C., their executors, administrators, and assigns, for their own use and benefit." E. was one of the illegitimate and C. one of the legitimate children:—Held, reading M.'s testamentary appointment as indicating an intention to appoint the fund in moieties, that one moiety passed to C. under the appointment, and that the other moiety, E. not being an object of the power, was divisible among all the legitimate children, as in default of appointment. Re Kerr, 4 L. R., Ch. D., 600; 46 L. J., Ch., 287; 25 W. R. 390; 36 L. T., N. S., 356.

4. An illegitimate child whom the testator had treated and recognised as a child was included as an object of a power to appoint testator's "family." Humble v. Bowman, 47 L. J., Ch., 62.

IV. ISSUE.

5. Issue will extend to any remote degree, as a description of objects of the power of A. to distribute among them as he thinks fit; but they must all be in existence during his life. Hockley v. Mawbey, 1 Ves. J. 150.

Gift to A. and his issue, to be divided among them as he thinks fit, the issue have an interest in all events, and A. has no authority but as to the proportions; if no appointment, equally. Where to be divided among issue, the proportion must not be illusory. Ib.

6. Where, in a deed, a power is given to appoint among issue, followed by a limitation over in their favour, and then it is declared that the children shall take in equal shares, the word "children" does not cut down the strict technical meaning of the word "issue." Harrison v. Symons, 14 W. R. 959.

7. By marriage articles a reversionary interest in a fund was agreed to be settled on the husband for life, remainder to the wife for life, and after the death of the survivor on the issue of the marriage living at the death of the survivor of the husband and wife, in equal shares, if more than one, and if but one then the whole was to go to such only child; and if there should be no issue of the marriage living at the death of the survivor of the husband and wife, then the fund was to go as the husband should appoint. The only child of the marriage died in the father's lifetime, leaving a child:—Held, that the word "issue" was to be construed "child," and therefore that an appointment of the fund made by the father to herself was valid. Swift v. Swift, 8 Sim. 168; 5 L. J., N. S., Ch., 376.

8. Personal estate settled on marriage for the husband for life, then for the wife for life, then to and among all and every the children and grandchildren, or issue in such shares, under such restrictions, at such times and in such manner, as they or the survivor should appoint by deed or deeds, or by will; for want of appointment, to all and every the children and grandchildren, or issue, living at the decease of the survivor, equally payable at twenty-one or marriage; if but one, to that one; provided, that in case of no appointment, the issue of any children dead should not have a greater share than their parents would have had. Issue only are within the power, but in any degree; but an appointment to any issue not living must be restrained to twenty-one years after lives in being at the creation of the power, otherwise it is void, even as to such as come in esse within those limits; but on marriage of a daughter, interest may be given to her children generally, and to the husband. What is ill appointed, goes as in default of appointment; but children of a living parent cannot take under the proviso. Routledge v. Dorril, 2 Ves. 356.

9. Intention necessary to restrain issue to children. Leigh v. Norbury, 13 Ves. 340.

1. Where in marriage articles there is no limitation over in default of appointment among the "issue," the word "issue" is confined to children of the marriage. Lees v. Lees, 5 Ir. R., Eq., 549.

2. By a settlement, a trust fund was settled after the death of husband and wife, upon the children equally who should survive them. But if any child should die in the life of the husband and wife, and leaving "issue" then living, his share should go equally between the issue of such child, and when and at such time as the respective shares of such child would become due and payable:—Held, that the "issue" of children took per stirpes, and that the successive generations of "issue" took their respective shares by substitution, and not concurrently, so that grandchildren and great-grandchildren could not take together as a class. Robinson v. Sykes, 23 Beav. 40; 2 Jur., N. S., 895; 26 L. J., Ch., 782.

V. NEPHEWS AND NIECES.

3. Power to appoint among nephews and nieces does not extend to great-nephews, etc.; and if part be appointed, not pursuant to the power, the money so appointed lapses into, and passes under, the appointment of the residue which was properly appointed. Falkner v. Butler, Ambl. 514.

4. A power by will, after a life estate, to the testator's widow, to appoint to "nephews and nieces, grand-nephews and nieces," in such shares and on such trusts, etc., as the widow should appoint:—Held, in the absence of any indication to include the children of the latter class, that an appointment to the children of grand-nieces was invalid. Waring v. Lee, 8 Beav. 247; 9 Jur. 170.

5. Devise to three sisters for life, and subject thereto the survivor to divide and devise "to such of my nieces and other relations as shall be unprovided for at the decease of such survivor, in such proportions as she, in the goodness of her heart, shall think fit"; appointment by survivor to all her nieces living at her decease equally:—Held, that the nieces were entitled either as appointees or as the next of kin of the first testatrix. Paclow v. Laurie, 2 Jur. 804.

VI. FAMILY.

6. Power to appoint for the benefit of a married woman and her family, would not include the husband in general; but upon the whole will, an appointment in his favour was established. M'Leroth v. Bacon, 5 Ves. 159.

7. Where a donor recommends or directs that the donee, at her death, shall give personal property to such of his family, or such of his relations, as he shall think fit, the donee has a power to select the objects of her bounty amongst his relations or family, though not within the degree of next of kin. But if the donee does not exercise the power, the word "relations" or the word "family" will be construed "next of kin," unless the special expressions of the donee have a different import. Grant v. Lynam, 4 Russ. 292; 6 L. J., Ch., 129.

8. Testatrix bequeathed to her sister B. for life, declaring that it was her absolute desire that B. bequeathed to those of her own family what she has power to dispose of, provided they behave well to her; B., by her will, declared she meant to make no disposition of her sister's property: it was held a trust for next of kin of B. Cruwys v. Colman, 9 Ves. 319.

9. Construction of a testamentary power to donee to appoint to "whatever existing member of my family he may be disposed." Sinnott v. Walsh, 5 L. R., Ir., 27.

10. A power to an unmarried woman to appoint a fund amongst "her own family or next of kin," is not confined to her statutory next of kin, but is capable of extension to any relative. Snow or Sum v. Teed, 9 L. R., Eq., 622; 23 L. T., N. S., 303; 39 L. J., Ch., 420; 18 W. R. 623.

11. Under a power to appoint to testator's "family":—Held, that an illegitimate child whom the testator had treated and recognised as a child was an object of the power. Humble v. Bowman, 47 L. J., Ch., 62.

12. A testator gave his estate to his widow "to be at her disposal in any way she may think best, for the benefit of herself and family." The widow by her will gave a part of the estate to an illegitimate son of one of the testator's sons:—Held, that the gift was valid. Lambe v. Eames, 6 L. R., Ch., 597; 40 L. J., Ch., 447; 25 L. T., N. S., 175; 19 W. R. 659. Affirming 40 L. J., Ch., 15.

13. A testamentary gift by a married man to his "family" should be read as a gift to his "children," to the exclusion of his wife. Re Hutchinson, 8 L. R., Ch. D., 540; 39 L. T. N. S., 86; 26 W. R. 904.

VII. WIFE. OF WHAT MARRIAGE.

14. A marriage was dissolved by the Divorce Court, but before the decree had become absolute, the husband married A. abroad, and by a settlement, reciting that marriage, a power was reserved to him to appoint a life interest to any surviving wife:—Held, that A. was an object of the power, whether the second marriage was valid or not. Dolby v. Powell, 30 Beav. 534.

15. A testator devised an estate, pur autre vie, in the funds of B. and G., and a term for years in the lands of S., upon trust for his son for life, remainder over; and also empowered that son to make a settlement for the use of any wife he might marry, and to incumber the said properties for that use, and to the use of any issue lawfully begotten. The donee of the power exercised it on his marriage in 1805 in favour of his first wife, and reserved a power to charge a jointure for any future wife. The first wife having died, he, on his second marriage in 1815, executed a settlement reciting his title to the premises under the will, but without allusion in that recital to the power contained in the will, and also reciting the settlement of 1805 and the reservation therein of a power to grant a jointure to a future wife, and then granting to trustees for the second wife a jointure of 100*l.* per annum chargeable upon the lands of B. and S., and chargeable, in case the said lands should be insufficient for payment thereof, upon all and every other property, real or personal, of which he was then, or should thereafter be possessed, or which he should die possessed of, in lieu of dower, etc.:—Held, that the power contained in the will must be exercised in favour of the first wife; held, also, that the settlement of 1815 was a valid execution of the power in favour of the second wife, although that settlement contained no reference to that power, and only alluded to the reservation in the settlement of 1805; held, also, that the lands of G., although not specified by name in the settlement of 1815, were charged thereby with the jointure in favour of the second wife; held, also, that it was within the jurisdiction of this Court to appoint a receiver over the lands for the purpose of collecting the arrears of that jointure. Maultby v. Maultby, 2 Ir. Ch. R. 32.

1. A. on his marriage put the lands of Blackacre in settlement upon himself for life, remainder to the sons of the intended marriage in tail male, remainder to B., his brother, in tail male, and, in default of such issue, to the use of all daughters of the intended marriage. There was no issue of the marriage, and by a subsequent deed, executed upon a second marriage, A. purported to charge the lands with an annuity of 50*l.* by way of jointure for his second wife D. A. having died, B. barred the entail, and D. claimed her annuity:—Held, that under the first settlement, A. had no power to jointure an after-taken wife, and that the limitation to B. in the first settlement was valid as against subsequent purchasers for value, inasmuch as it was interposed between the two limitations to different classes of the issue of the marriage, and, consequently, that D. was not entitled to the jointure. Re Sheridan, 1 L. R. Ir. 54.

2. A direction, after a devise to the testator's three sons during their lives, that "in case all or any of my three sons should think of marrying, I empower and direct my trustees or the survivor of them to settle and secure the share or shares of such son or sons so marrying as a jointure on the wife of such marriage during her life and to their issue share and share alike," enures for the benefit of any wife, whether in the case of a first or of any subsequent marriage, and whether there is or is not any issue of such marriage, at any rate if there is a gift over in case of the son dying "without children." Mason v. Mason, 19 W. R. 741.

3. The execution of a power to appoint a jointure and portions for children by deed, supported in equity, though executed by will. By marriage articles, a provision was made for the intended wife and the children of the marriage, and a power was given to the husband to appoint a jointure for any wife or wives he might marry, and in like manner to appoint portions for younger children:—Held, that the power to appoint jointure and portions was confined to the children of a second or subsequent marriage. Mills v. Mills, 8 Ir. Eq. R. 192.

4. A power was given by will to successive tenants for life to limit a rent-charge for any woman whom they may respectively marry by way of jointure, and in bar of dower to be in proportion to the marriage portion they shall respectively receive with their respective wife or wives, i.e., 100*l.* jointure for every 1,000*l.* they shall so actually receive as a marriage portion with their respective wife or wives if they shall so think fit, not exceeding 500*l.* such grant, limitation of appointment to be made either before or after marriage:—Held, that the wife of a tenant for life, who afterwards came into possession, but who had been married previous to the will, was not an object of the power, there being no ground from the rest of the will for giving a past meaning to the words of futurity; and, semble, that money of the wife, which had been settled to her separate use with remainders to the husband and children of the marriage, was not "received" by the husband within the meaning of the power. Dillon v. Dillon, 11 Ir. Eq. R. 423.

VIII. RELATIONS.

5. J. S. gave "all his real and personal estate" to trustees on certain trusts, remainder "to such of his relations on his mother's side who were most deserving, and in such manner as they should think fit," and for such charitable uses and purposes as they should also think most proper and convenient:—Held, per Master of the Rolls, that the limitation over of the personal estate was good, and his Honour (deciding by the known rule of equity) directed that one-half of the said estates should go to the testator's relations on his mother's side, and the other half to charitable uses; his Honour could not judge of the merits of the testator's relations, nor prefer the one to the other, but he should exclude those beyond the third degree:—Held, also, that the representatives of those relations who died in testator's lifetime could have no claim. Doyley v. Att.-Gen., 4 Vin. Abr. 485 (C) Pl. 16.

6. Bequest to relations confined to next of kin according to Statute of Distributions. Crawys v. Colman, 9 Ves. 323.

Though upon bequests to relations with a power of selection, the party may go beyond those included in Statute of Distributions; the contrary is adhered to whenever the execution devolves on the Court. Id. 324.

Bequest to testator's relations, with power of selection, is, if that power is not exercised, a trust for next of kin at death of party who had the power. Id. 325.

7. Testator expressing his will and desire, that one-third of the principal of his estate and effects should be left entirely to the disposal of his wife, among such of her relations as she may think proper after the death of his sisters; a trust for her next of kin at the time of her death, having made no disposition. Birch v. Wade, 3 Ves. & B. 198.

8. Word "relations," in a will means "next of kin;" bequest of residue to testator's wife for life with a direction to dispose of the residue amongst his relations "in such manner as she should think fit." Appointment to relations not being next of kin, void, and the residue decreed to be distributed amongst those who were next of kin to the testator at the time of his death. Pope v. Whitcombe, 3 Meriv. 689. But see Sugden on Powers, App. No. 29.

9. Residuary devise and bequest for such of the testator's relations and kindred in such proportions, etc., as his executors should think proper, recommending and advising his said trustees and executors to give the greatest share to such person and persons who in their opinion and judgment should appear to them to be his nearest relations and most deserving, declaring his intention not to control their discretion, but that everything relative to that disposition, who were his relations, and the proportions, should be entirely in the discretion of the said trustees and executors, and the heirs, executors, and administrators of the survivor of them:—Held, a trust and a power: the ground of the power being personal confidence, it is primâ facie limited to the original trustees, not without express words passing to others to whom by legal transmission the same character may happen to belong; and cannot be executed by the devisees and executors, for that specific purpose only, of the surviving trustee: a trust, therefore, executed by the Court for the next of kin at the death of the testator according to the Statute of Distributions. Cole v. Wade, 16 Ves. 27.

1. Bequest of residue to a brother in trust to dispose of among such of testator's relations, and in such manner, etc., as he shall think fit, without regard to the legacies before given:—Held, the power extended to the relations at large, and not confined to next of kin. Supple v. Lowson, Ambl. 729.

2. Where a donor recommends or directs that the donee, at her death, shall give personal property to such of his family, or such of his relations, as he shall think fit, the donee has a power to select the objects of her bounty amongst his relations or family, though not within the degree of next of kin; but if the donee does not exercise the power, the word "relations," or the word "family," will be construed "next of kin," unless the special expressions of the donee have a different import.' Grant v. Lynam, 4 Russ. 292; 6 L. J., Ch., 129.

3. Testator bequeathed a sum of money to his executors upon trust to pay the interest to his niece A. for life; and, after her decease, to pay the principal to her son, or to any of the testator's relations, in such shares and proportions as the executors, or the survivor of them, might think fit. By a deed-pool, reciting the will, the surviving executor appointed the principal sum in certain shares to the son of A., and two nephews of the testator:—Held, that the appointment was valid. Lee v. Okey, 1 Y. & Coll. 550; 10 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 44.

4. A testatrix, after devising real estate to her three sisters for their lives, and the life of the survivor, directed that the surviving sister should divide and devise the estate among such of the testatrix's nieces and other relations, particularly female, as should be unprovided for at the decease of the surviving sister, in such shares as she should think fit. The surviving sister, after reciting this power, directed her executor to sell the estate, and divide the proceeds among her nieces, who should be living at her death, in equal shares. These nieces were, at the death of the surviving sister, the sole next of kin of the first testatrix:—Held, that either under the appointment contained in the last will, or as next of kin of the first testatrix, the nieces were entitled to the estate in question. Cracklow v. Norie, 7 L. J., N. S., Ch., 278.

5. A testator gave real and personal estate to A. for life, and afterwards to his own relations, in such shares as A. should by will appoint. A. appointed it amongst the testator's relations living at her death, and who were not the testator's next of kin at his death:—Held, upon the authority of Pope v. Whitcombe (3 Meriv. 689), that the appointment was valid. The report of Pope v. Whitcombe is incorrect in Merivale, but correct in Sugden on Powers, App. No. 29. Finch v. Hollingsworth or Hollingworth, 21 Beav. 112; 1 Jur., N. S., 718; 25 L. J., Ch., 55; 3 Eq. Rep. 993; 3 W. R. 589.

6. A testator gave to the tenant for life of his general residuary estate a power of appointment by will among her relations and friends. The donee of the power made a general bequest of her residuary estate, without reference to the power:—Held, that the power of appointment was special and not general. And, therefore, being not well exercised by the will of the donee, the Court would imply a trust in favour of the relations of the testator, and that this term must be limited to his next of kin under the statute. Re Caplin, 11 Jur., N. S., 383; 34 L. J., Ch., 578; 13 W. R. 646; 12 L. T., N. S., 526; 2 Dr. & Sm. 527; 6 N. R. 17.

IX. APPOINTMENT TO SURVIVORS.

7. Power to divide a fund among all and every the children, to be vested at twenty-one, and in default, or part execution, the whole, or part unappointed, to go to all. There were two children, a son and a daughter; a partial provision was made for the son, who died unmarried, and without issue. A subsequent appointment of the whole residue to the daughter is a good execution of the power. Boyle v. Peterborough (Bishop), 3 Bro. P. C. 243; 1 Ves. J. 299.

8. Devise in trust to dispose of the premises unto and amongst the devisee's four children, in such manner, shares, etc., as he should, by deed or will, appoint. One dying in the life of his father before appointment, was held entitled to a fourth; the father, after that child's death, having appointed three-fourths to his three surviving children respectively. Reade v. Reade, 5 Ves. 744. This decision, as far as it leaves one-fourth to the deceased child, is questioned by Lord Eldon. Butcher v. Butcher, 1 Ves. & B. 92.

9. Appointment to a deceased child, or its representatives, void. Butcher v. Butcher, 1 Ves. & B. 91.

The old practice of executing a power of appointment after the death of one of the objects, by giving part to the survivors, and letting the rest go, as in default of appointment, among all, incorrect. Ib.

Under a general power of appointment, among all the children by deed or will from time to time, etc., in default of appointment equally at twenty-one, etc., the death of one above that age does not prevent an appointment to the survivors. Id. 79.

10. A father, upon his second marriage, settled lands to the use of the children of his first marriage (naming them), for such estates, and in such shares and proportions, manner, and form, as he should from time to time by deed or will appoint, and in default of appointment to the use of said children (except the eldest), as tenants in common in tail. All the children, except two, viz., the eldest son and a daughter, died in the lifetime of the settlor. By his will, reciting the power, the settlor appointed a rent charge out of the estates to the daughter, and the estates, subject to the rent charge, to the son in fee:—Held, the appointment so made to the surviving children was a valid execution of the power. Ricketts v. Loftus, 4 Y. & Coll. 519.

1. A testator bequeathed 1,700*l.* stock to trustees, in trust to pay the dividends to J. C. and S. his wife during their lives and the life of the survivor; and after their decease, then in trust to transfer or pay over the stock unto their children, in such shares and proportions as the survivor of them, J. C. and S. his wife, by his or her last will, should direct or appoint. At the death of the testator J. C. and S. had three children living. After the deaths of S. and two of those children, J. C. by will appointed the whole fund to the only surviving child:—Held, a good appointment. Woodcock v. Renneck, 1 Ph. 72; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 110; 6 Jur. 138. Affirming 4 Beav. 190.

2. Property was settled, subject to an estate for life to the parents, to the use of all and every the child and children of the marriage, as the parents should by deed appoint, and in default equally. There were nine children, and one-eighth was duly appointed to one of such children, who afterwards died. After the death of four of the other children, the remaining seven-eighths were appointed to the surviving four children:—Held, that this appointment was good; and, secondly, that the property having been appointed by two deeds, formed no objection to the due execution of the power. Colston v. Pemberton, 5 L. J., N. S., Ch., 181.

3. Testator bequeathed 12,000*l.* stock to trustees for his son for life, then for the son's wife for life, then unto and amongst his wife and children in such shares, for such interest, etc., as the son should appoint, and, in default of appointment, unto the children equally; and if there should be no child, then to the son's next of kin in blood. The son died, leaving his wife surviving, but never having had a child:—Held, that an appointment made by the son of part of the stock to his wife, was good, though there was only one object of the power in existence. Houstoun v. Houstoun, 4 Sim. 611; 1 L. J., N. S., Ch., 50.

4. A power was given to A. to appoint a fund, by will, to his wife alone, or to his wife and such of his children as he should direct. The wife died, and A. appointed the fund exclusively to five out of his seven children:—Held, that the appointment was valid. Paske v. Haselfoot, 33 Beav. 125; 9 Jur., N. S., 1047; 11 W. R. 1089; 9 L. T., N. S., 75; 2 N. R. 568.

Where there is a power to divide a fund amongst the members of a particular class, the death of some of the members of that class, before the exercise of the power, will not prevent its exercise in favour of the survivors. Ib.

5. An appointment since the Illusory Appointments Act (11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 46), under a non-exclusive power of an entire fund unto and amongst the objects "and the survivors and survivor of them, and if only one should survive, then unto that one":—Held, valid. Re Capon's Trusts, 10 L. R., Ch. D., 484; 48 L. J., Ch., 355; 27 W. R. 376.

X. SUBSTITUTION OF CHILDREN FOR PARENTS.

6. Bequest of residue in trust, after the death of the testator's wife to be divided amongst all his children, including his son A., if then living, in such manner and in such proportions as the testator's wife should by will appoint, provided that the share assigned to A. should not be less than those of any of the other children; and in default of appointment to be divided equally among all the testator's children living at his wife's death, including his said son A. Moreover, if any child should happen to die previously to the death of the testator's wife, leaving children, such children to have the "share" of their late parent. And if all the testator's children should die under age, and without leaving children, gift over. The wife appointed the fund by will amongst all the children who should be living at her death. A. died in her lifetime, leaving children:—Held, that the power was well exercised in favour of the surviving children of the testator, and that the clause commencing "moreover" did not apply to the preceding limitation, but only to the gift in default, and therefore A.'s children were properly excluded. Fox v. Gregg (2 Sugd. Pow. App., No. 23) distinguished. Neatherway v. Fry, 1 Kay 172; 23 L. J., Ch., 222.

XI. CLASS OF OBJECTS. WHEN ASCERTAINED AND VESTING.

1. Where Gift to Objects only through the Power, 5850.
2. Where Gift to Objects Subject to Exercise of the Power, 5852.
3. Where Express Gift to Objects in Default of Appointment, 5854.

1. Where Gift to Objects only through the Power.

7. Bequest to A. for life, and after her death to divide it in portions for children as she should please; and in case of A.'s death before testator, to be divided equally:—Held, children living at A.'s death were only objects of power, and as such entitled to share lapsed by death of a child to whom it had been appointed. Kennedy v. Kingston, 2 Jac. & Walk. 431.

8. Where there is no appointment under a power, and no gift over in default of appointment, those persons only will take who could take by appointment. A testator gave the residue of his personal estate to his wife, for her own sole use and disposal, trusting that she would thereout provide for his family, and particularly his only son; and, at her decease, give and bequeath the same to her children by him, as she should appoint:—Held, that the wife could appoint only by will, and that children living at her death were alone entitled to share in an unappointed portion of the fund. Walsh v. Wallinger, 2 Russ. & M. 78; Taml. 425; 9 L. J., Ch., 7.

1. Gift to wife for life, "to be disposed of at her death amongst my children as she shall think proper":—Held, to confer a power to appoint, by will, amongst his children living at his death and an implied gift in default of appointment. Reid v. Reid, 25 Beav. 469.

2. Bequest to trustees to pay the dividends to A. and B. his wife, during their lives, and the life of the survivor; and after their decease, in trust to transfer and pay over unto their children, in such shares and proportions as the survivor of A. and B. should by will appoint:—Held, that the objects of the power and of the gift were the children living at the death of the surviving parent; and therefore that the representative of a child who died in the life of A. had no interest in the fund. Woodcock v. Renneck, 4 Beav. 190. Affirmed 1 Ph. 72; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 110; 6 Jur. 138.

3. Power to charge lands for portions for younger children living at the father's death: a child en ventre sa mere, is a child within the power. Beale v. Beale, 1 P. W. 246.

4. Power of appointment in a marriage settlement:—Held, to comprehend, as its objects, all the children of the marriage, and not to be confined to such of the children only as should be living at the death of the survivor of the parents. Howgrave v. Cartier, Coop. 66; 3 Ves. & B. 79.

5. Power to appoint amongst testator's present or future grandchildren, or their respective issues, does not authorise the donee to exclude the children of a deceased grandchild, who were living at the donee's death. Garthwaite v. Robinson, 2 Sim. 43.

6. Power to appoint sum of money in such shares to children as appointor should think proper, with direction as to the time they should take such appointed shares. Two children dying before appointor, held not to have vested interests. M'Ghie v. M'Ghie, 2 Madd. 368.

7. Bequest to executors in trust, that they shall pay, etc., unto and amongst the testator's two brothers and his sisters, or their children, in such shares, etc., as the trustees, or the major part of them, or the survivor, his executors, etc., shall think fit. All the children living at the death of the testator held entitled with the parents, per capita, the Court not having a discretion. Longmore v. Broom, 7 Ves. 124.

8. A testator empowered his widow, with the assistance of his trustees, to sell his estates, and the money arising therefrom "she, his said wife, should and might divide and appoint among his children, as she should think fit and proper, or as she should direct and order by any will":—Held, that this was a trust for the children, and that, no valid appointment having been made by the widow, the children were entitled equally. Grieveson v. Kirsopp, 2 Keen 653; 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 261.

9. Bequest to trustees for A. for life, and if he should die childless, upon trust to apply the sum to the benefit of such of the testator's children, or their issue, as the trustees should think fit, for the interest and good of the testator's family; with no gift in default of appointment. No appointment having been made, and the tenant for life having survived the donees of the power, and died childless:—Held, that children and remoter issue took in equal shares per capita, and that the period for ascertaining the class was the death of the tenant for life. Re White, 1 Johns. 656.

10. A testator gave all his property to his wife for life, and directed her to pay his debts, and, "at her decease, to make such a distribution and disposal of his then remaining property among his children as might seem just and equitable, according to her discretion":—Held, a power to the wife, exercisable by will only, to appoint in favour of the testator's children living at her death. Freeland v Pearson, 3 L. R., Eq., 658; 15 W. R. 419; 36 L. J., Ch., 374.

11. Settlement of a fund after the death of A. and B., for such descendants of C. as B. should by will appoint:—Held, to create a power in the nature of a trust for descendants of C. living at B.'s death, entitling such descendants in equal shares in default of appointment. Re Susanni, 47 L. J., Ch. D., 65; 20 W. R. 93.

Held, also, that an appointment to the legal personal representatives of descendants dying before the death of the donee of the power was unauthorised. Ib.

12. Devise of 30,000*l.* to testator's wife for life, and afterwards to be distributed among his children as she, by deed, will, or instrument in nature of a will, should appoint. She having married again, appoints, by will (inter alia), unto two of the children, who died in her lifetime:—Held, that their representatives were not entitled, and that the shares so appointed to them lapsed and fell into the residue. Marlborough (Duke) v. Godolphin, 2 Ves. 61.

13. A. having a power under a will to charge a sum of money on B.'s estate, as and for a provision for his lawful issue, exercised the power by a deed merely charging the estate with the sum, as a provision for his lawful issue. A. had several children, one born at the testator's death, others at the date of the deed, and others subsequently:—Held, that all the children were entitled to shares, which vested seriatim on their successively attaining twenty-one, the share of each proportioned to the number of children in esse when it vested, and not before provided for, the children attaining twenty-one being regarded as successive new periods of distribution; though this produced considerable inequality in the shares, and would wholly disappoint any child born after the others had all attained twenty-one; grandchildren to be considered as provided for by their parents' shares. This principle is not applicable to a legacy, the rule being, that whenever a legacy is given to a class of persons, if the gift is immediate, those only take who answer the description at the testator's death; and when the enjoyment is deferred, as by the intervention of a life estate, or appointment of a future time for payment, those take who answer the description at the prescribed period. Norman v. Norman, Beat. 430.

and in such shares and proportions, manner, and form, as he should from time to time by deed or will appoint, and in default of appointment to the use of said children (except the eldest), as tenants in common in tail. All the children, except two, viz., the eldest son and a daughter, died in the lifetime of the settlor. By his will, reciting the power, the settlor appointed a rent charge out of the estates to the daughter, and the estates, subject to the rent charge, to the son in fee:—Held, the appointment so made to the surviving children was a valid execution of the power. Ricketts v. Loftus, 4 Y. & Coll. 519.

1. A testator bequeathed 1,700*l.* stock to trustees, in trust to pay the dividends to J. C. and S. his wife during their lives and the life of the survivor; and after their decease, then in trust to transfer or pay over the stock unto their children, in such shares and proportions as the survivor of them, J. C. and S. his wife, by his or her last will, should direct or appoint. At the death of the testator J. C. and S. had three children living. After the deaths of S. and two of those children, J. C. by will appointed the whole fund to the only surviving child:—Held, a good appointment. Woodcock v. Renneck, 1 Ph. 72; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 110; 6 Jur. 138. Affirming 4 Beav. 190.

2. Property was settled, subject to an estate for life to the parents, to the use of all and every the child and children of the marriage, as the parents should by deed appoint, and in default equally. There were nine children, and one-eighth was duly appointed to one of such children, who afterwards died. After the death of four of the other children, the remaining seven-eighths were appointed to the surviving four children:—Held, that this appointment was good; and, secondly, that the property having been appointed by two deeds, formed no objection to the due execution of the power. Colston v. Pemberton, 5 L. J., N. S., Ch., 181.

3. Testator bequeathed 12,000*l.* stock to trustees for his son for life, then for the son's wife for life, then unto and amongst his wife and children in such shares, for such interest, etc., as the son should appoint, and, in default of appointment, unto the children equally; and if there should be no child, then to the son's next of kin in blood. The son died, leaving his wife surviving, but never having had a child:—Held, that an appointment made by the son of part of the stock to his wife, was good, though there was only one object of the power in existence. Houstoun v. Houstoun, 4 Sim. 611; 1 L. J., N. S., Ch., 50.

4. A power was given to A. to appoint a fund, by will, to his wife alone, or to his wife and such of his children as he should direct. The wife died, and A. appointed the fund exclusively to five out of his seven children:—Held, that the appointment was valid. Paske v. Haselfoot, 33 Beav. 125; 9 Jur., N. S., 1047; 11 W. R. 1089; 9 L. T., N. S., 75; 2 N. R. 568.

Where there is a power to divide a fund amongst the members of a particular class, the death of some of the members of that class, before the exercise of the power, will not prevent its exercise in favour of the survivors. Ib.

5. An appointment since the Illusory Appointments Act (11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 46), under a non-exclusive power of an entire fund unto and amongst the objects "and the survivors and survivor of them, and if only one should survive, then unto that one":—Held, valid. Re Capon's Trusts, 10 L. R., Ch. D., 484; 48 L. J., Ch., 355; 27 W. R. 376.

X. SUBSTITUTION OF CHILDREN FOR PARENTS.

6. Bequest of residue in trust, after the death of the testator's wife to be divided amongst all his children, including his son A., if then living, in such manner and in such proportions as the testator's wife should by will appoint, provided that the share assigned to A. should not be less than those of any of the other children; and in default of appointment to be divided equally among all the testator's children living at his wife's death, including his said son A. Moreover, if any child should happen to die previously to the death of the testator's wife, leaving children, such children to have the "share" of their late parent. And if all the testator's children should die under age, and without leaving children, gift over. The wife appointed the fund by will amongst all the children who should be living at her death. A. died in her lifetime, leaving children:—Held, that the power was well exercised in favour of the surviving children of the testator, and that the clause commencing "moreover" did not apply to the preceding limitation, but only to the gift in default, and therefore A.'s children were properly excluded. Fox v. Gregg (2 Sugd. Pow. App., No. 23) distinguished. Neatherway v. Fry, 1 Kay 172; 23 L. J., Ch., 222.

XI. CLASS OF OBJECTS. WHEN ASCERTAINED AND VESTING.

1. Where Gift to Objects only through the Power, 5850.
2. Where Gift to Objects Subject to Exercise of the Power, 5852.
3. Where Express Gift to Objects in Default of Appointment, 5854.

1. Where Gift to Objects only through the Power.

7. Bequest to A. for life, and after her death to divide it in portions for children as she should please; and in case of A.'s death before testator, to be divided equally:—Held, children living at A.'s death were only objects of power, and as such entitled to share lapsed by death of a child to whom it had been appointed. Kennedy v. Kingston, 2 Jac. & Walk. 431.

8. Where there is no appointment under a power, and no gift over in default of appointment, those persons only will take who could take by appointment. A testator gave the residue of his personal estate to his wife, for her own sole use and disposal, trusting that she would thereout provide for his family, and particularly his only son; and, at her decease, give and bequeath the same to her children by him, as she should appoint:—Held, that the wife could appoint only by will, and that children living at her death were alone entitled to share in an unappointed portion of the fund. Walsh v. Wallinger, 2 Russ. & M. 78; Taml. 425; 9 L. J., Ch., 7.

1. Gift to wife for life, "to be disposed of at her death amongst my children as she shall think proper":—Held, to confer a power to appoint, by will, amongst his children living at his death and an implied gift in default of appointment. Reid v. Reid, 25 Beav. 469.

2. Bequest to trustees to pay the dividends to A. and B. his wife, during their lives, and the life of the survivor; and after their decease, in trust to transfer and pay over unto their children, in such shares and proportions as the survivor of A. and B. should by will appoint:—Held, that the objects of the power and of the gift were the children living at the death of the surviving parent; and therefore that the representative of a child who died in the life of A. had no interest in the fund. Woodcock v. Renneck, 4 Beav. 190. Affirmed 1 Ph. 72; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 110; 6 Jur. 138.

3. Power to charge lands for portions for younger children living at the father's death: a child en ventre sa mere, is a child within the power. Beale v. Beale, 1 P. W. 246.

4. Power of appointment in a marriage settlement:—Held, to comprehend, as its objects, all the children of the marriage, and not to be confined to such of the children only as should be living at the death of the survivor of the parents. Howgrave v. Cartier, Coop. 66; 3 Ves. & B. 79.

5. Power to appoint amongst testator's present or future grandchildren, or their respective issues, does not authorise the donee to exclude the children of a deceased grandchild, who were living at the donee's death. Garthwaite v. Robinson, 2 Sim. 43.

6. Power to appoint sum of money in such shares to children as appointor should think proper, with direction as to the time they should take such appointed shares. Two children dying before appointor, held not to have vested interests. M'Ghie v. M'Ghie, 2 Madd. 368.

7. Bequest to executors in trust, that they shall pay, etc., unto and amongst the testator's two brothers and his sisters, or their children, in such shares, etc., as the trustees, or the major part of them, or the survivor, his executors, etc., shall think fit. All the children living at the death of the testator held entitled with the parents, per capita, the Court not having a discretion. Longmore v. Broom, 7 Ves. 124.

8. A testator empowered his widow, with the assistance of his trustees, to sell his estates, and the money arising therefrom "she, his said wife, should and might divide and appoint among his children, as she should think fit and proper, or as she should direct and order by any will":—Held, that this was a trust for the children, and that, no valid appointment having been made by the widow, the children were entitled equally. Grieveson v. Kirsopp, 2 Keen 653; 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 261.

9. Bequest to trustees for A. for life, and if he should die childless, upon trust to apply the sum to the benefit of such of the testator's children, or their issue, as the trustees should think fit, for the interest and good of the testator's family; with no gift in default of appointment. No appointment having been made, and the tenant for life having survived the donees of the power, and died childless:—Held, that children and remoter issue took in equal shares per capita, and that the period for ascertaining the class was the death of the tenant for life. Re White, 1 Johns. 656.

10. A testator gave all his property to his wife for life, and directed her to pay his debts, and, "at her decease, to make such a distribution and disposal of his then remaining property among his children as might seem just and equitable, according to her discretion":—Held, a power to the wife, exercisable by will only, to appoint in favour of the testator's children living at her death. Freeland v Pearson, 3 L. R., Eq., 658; 15 W. R. 419; 36 L. J., Ch., 374.

11. Settlement of a fund after the death of A. and B., for such descendants of C. as B. should by will appoint:—Held, to create a power in the nature of a trust for descendants of C. living at B.'s death, entitling such descendants in equal shares in default of appointment. Re Susanni, 47 L. J., Ch. D., 65; 20 W. R. 93.

Held, also, that an appointment to the legal personal representatives of descendants dying before the death of the donee of the power was unauthorised. Ib.

12. Devise of 30,000*l.* to testator's wife for life, and afterwards to be distributed among his children as she, by deed, will, or instrument in nature of a will, should appoint. She having married again, appoints, by will (inter alia), unto two of the children, who died in her lifetime:—Held, that their representatives were not entitled, and that the shares so appointed to them lapsed and fell into the residue. Marlborough (Duke) v. Godolphin, 2 Ves. 61.

13. A. having a power under a will to charge a sum of money on B.'s estate, as and for a provision for his lawful issue, exercised the power by a deed merely charging the estate with the sum, as a provision for his lawful issue. A. had several children, one born at the testator's death, others at the date of the deed, and others subsequently:—Held, that all the children were entitled to shares, which vested seriatim on their successively attaining twenty-one, the share of each proportioned to the number of children in esse when it vested, and not before provided for, the children attaining twenty-one being regarded as successive new periods of distribution; though this produced considerable inequality in the shares, and would wholly disappoint any child born after the others had all attained twenty-one; grandchildren to be considered as provided for by their parents' shares. This principle is not applicable to a legacy, the rule being, that whenever a legacy is given to a class of persons, if the gift is immediate, those only take who answer the description at the testator's death; and when the enjoyment is deferred, as by the intervention of a life estate, or appointment of a future time for payment, those take who answer the description at the prescribed period. Norman v. Norman, Beat. 430.

1. A. K., by will, gave all his realty and personalty to his wife O., to bring up his children, and when they came of age, "to settle" on them what she should deem "prudence," reserving to herself maintenance. If she married again, T. P. was to become trustee for the children of the testator. At his wife's death, what property remained was to be equally divided among the children of the testator then living. The wife and five children survived the testator; two children afterwards died under twenty-one. The widow settled part of the property on one of the children and her issue:—Held, first, that this was a bad execution of the power, so far as it gave any interest to grandchildren. Secondly, that the shares vested in all the children living at the death of the testator, and not in those only who lived to attain twenty-one, or who survived the widow. Kennerley v. Kennerley, 16 Jur. 649.

2. A testator gave his wife a power of appointment in favour of his children, including grandchildren and more remote issue, such issue coming into being in the lifetime of his wife:—Held, that under an appointment to grandchildren, a grandchild born after the decease of the testator's widow might take. Thomas v. Lloyd, 25 Beav. 620.

3. A husband directed that after the death of his wife his trustees should pay and divide 1,000*l.* equally between such ten of the children or remoter issue of H. as the trustees should think fit. At the death of the widow there were only six descendants of H. living:—Held, that the sum was to be divided equally amongst them. Carthew v. Enraght, 20 W. R. 743.

4. E., wife of T., being seised of fee-simple lands, E. and T. conveyed them, by fine and deed leading its uses, to a trustee and his heirs, to the use of E. and T., and the survivor for life; with remainder to enable E. to devise the lands to and among the issue of E. and T., in such shares as she should appoint, "it being, however, expressly declared that E. is to have power only to devise such shares and proportions in strict settlement upon such child or children, and their lawful issue, whether male or female; but that if such child should die without having such lawful issue, who should attain twenty-one, or be married, that then and in such case the lands should be devised, go to and among the surviving children and their issue who should attain twenty-one, in such shares and proportions as E. should by will appoint;" in default of appointment, to the children, and such of their lawful issue as should attain twenty-one, or be married, share and share alike. The deed contained a further provision, in case of E. not making a will, that it should be lawful for T., by will, "to give, devise, and bequeath the lands to and among their issue, in the manner aforesaid, in such shares and proportions as he should thereby direct, limit, and appoint:" in default of appointment, to go equally among the said children, and their lawful issue, for ever:—Held, that T. had power to appoint life estates to his children in esse at the date of the deed, with remainders to their issue in strict settlement. Bell v. Bell. 13 Ir. Ch. R. 517.

5. Testamentary power to appoint to "what ever existing member of my family he may be disposed":—Held, that "existing" meant living at the date of the will creating the power. Sinnott v. Walsh, 5 L. R., Ir., 27.

2. Where Gift to Objects subject to Exercise of the Power.

6. Devise to testator's wife for life, and after her decease, unto and among all and every their children, in such manner, etc., as she should, in her life, or by will, appoint, empowering her to sell and receive the interest for life, and appointing, after her decease, both principal and interest to and among their children, in such proportions as aforesaid; all the children having died in the life of their mother, who died without appointment, were held entitled as tenants in common, to several estates of inheritance. Casterton v. Sutherland, 9 Ves. 445.

7. By the settlement made on the marriage of B. F. with E. C., a sum of 5,000*l.* consols was settled, in trust, for the husband for life; and if the wife survived, for her absolutely; but if she died in his lifetime, leaving children then living, for all and every the children, in such shares as she should appoint by deed or will; and if there should be no children living at her decease, then over. There were seven children of the marriage, five of whom survived their mother, who had not exercised the power given to her:—Held, that the five children who had survived the mother were entitled to the fund. Winn v. Fenwick, 11 Beav. 438; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 337; 13 Jur. 996.

8. Where property is settled on husband and wife for life, remainder to the issue, subject to a power of appointment, interest vests in an only child, though no appointment was made. Madoo v. Jackson, 2 Bro. C. C. 588.

9. Bequest to A. for life, with power on her marriage to appoint the interest to her husband for life, and a recommendation to dispose of the principal after her own death, and the determination of the preceding trusts among the children of B.; the recommendation being held an absolute trust, it is a vested interest in all the children, subject to be devested by appointment; and there being no appointment, children born after the death of the testator, and those who died in the life of A., are entitled with the rest. Malim v. Barker, 3 Ves. 150.

10. The testator, by his will, gave to trustees a sum of stock, upon trust to pay the dividends to his daughter B. for life, and after her decease to pay both principal and interest to and amongst her children as she should, by deed or will, direct; but if she should leave no children living at her decease, or all should die before their ages of twenty-five years, then over. B. died without having exercised the power of appointment, having had two children, one of whom died in her lifetime, at the age of twenty-eight years, and the other survived her, and died at the age of fifty-three years:—Held, that the respective representatives of the two children of B. were entitled to the stock in moieties. Faulkner v. Wynford, (Lord), 15 L. J., N. S., Ch., 8; 9 Jur. 1006.

11. The rule, that none can take by implication upon the non-execution of a power of appointment who cannot take under an execution of the power, only applies where there are no means of ascertaining the persons intending to take other than the terms of the power. Lambert v. Thwaites, 2 L. R., Eq., 151; 35 L. J., Ch., 406; 14 L. T., N. S., 159.

Therefore, where real estate was settled upon trust for the settlor for life, with remainder to his wife for life, and after the death of the survivor, upon trust for sale and division amongst all and every the children of the settlor, lawfully begotten or to be begotten, in such shares and proportions, manner and form, as should be directed by any will or codicil then already, or at any time thereafter to be, duly executed by the settlor, with no gift over in default of appointment, and the settlor died without exercising the power:—Held, that the above rule did not apply; that all the children took vested estates, liable only to be divested by the execution of the power; and, therefore, that a child who died before the settlor, took in default of appointment, equally with those who survived. Ib.

1. Under a devise of the entire residue, real and personal, to A., B., and C. (children of the testator), and all their younger children, their heirs, executors, etc., for ever; A., B., and C. to receive the yearly interests for their respective lives of such parts thereof as were intended for their respective younger children; and in case of the death of A., B., and C., the share of any of them so dying to go to his or her younger children; and in case of the death of A., B., and C., or any of them, without leaving younger children, the share of such child so dying to go to the survivors and their younger children, with power of appointment amongst their respective younger children; and in case of the death of any of the younger grandchildren before twenty-one or days of marriage, the shares of such to go to the brethren of the child so dying. At the time of the will, and of the testator's death, A. had one younger child; B., several; C., none; each had several since: on bill by after-born grandchildren:—Held, first, that the residue was divisible into three parts, the yearly interests of each to go to A., B., and C., for their respective lives; secondly, that after-born grandchildren were entitled, subject to the power of appointment in their parents; thirdly, that the share of a younger child dying under twenty-one and unmarried, goes over to the brothers and sisters of such child; fourthly, that the share of A., B., and C., dying without leaving younger children, goes over to the survivors for the same estate as their own original shares; fifthly, that a younger grandchild dying in the lifetime of its parent, under twenty-one and unmarried, had not a vested interest in its share, transmissible to its representatives. Crone v. Odell, 1 Ball & B. 449, 450. Affirmed 3 Dow 61.

2. By a post-nuptial settlement—reciting that A. had a large family, and was anxious to make a provision for it in the case of his death or of the death of his wife, and, for that purpose, had determined to execute the settlement—leaseholds were assigned to trustees upon trust, in case the wife should survive A., to permit her to take one-third of the profit rents, the other two-thirds to go the maintenance, etc., of such of their children as should require it; and after the death or second marriage of the wife the entire to be expended on the education and putting to trade or business of such of the children as should require it; and in case A. should survive his wife, upon trust to permit him to receive the entire of the rents during his life, one-half to be expended on the maintenance, etc., of such of the children as should require it; and in case A. should neglect so to apply the one-half of the rents, the trustees should receive it and so apply it; and after the death of A. the property to go and become the property of the children of A. as B. and A. should appoint; and in case of the death of any of the children before they should become entitled to the property, then his or her share to go to be equally divided among the survivors of such children, and if but one, the whole to that one. A. appointed a share to a child who died in his lifetime:—Held, that the children who survived the father took the share so appointed—the word "entitled" being construed "entitled in possession." Beale v. Connolly, 8 Ir. R., Eq., 412.

3. A gift by will to A. for life, and "at," or "after," his decease to such persons as he shall appoint, gives A. a life interest with a power of appointment either by instrument inter vivos or by will; there being no rule of construction under which a gift in such terms, unless controlled by the context, can be held to confer a testamentary power only. Bequest of residue to A. for life, "the whole principal at her death to be divided amongst her children, if she has any, in such proportions as she shall think proper; and if she dies without leaving children," then over. A. died without having exercised her power of appointment, and having had three children, of whom one only survived her:—Held, that the three children took vested interests liable to be divested by the exercise, either by instrument inter vivos or by will, of A.'s power of appointment; and accordingly that on A.'s death the residue became divisible in equal thirds between the surviving child and the representatives of the two deceased children. Re Jackson's Will, 13 L. R., Ch. D., 189; 49 L. J., Ch., 82; 41 L. T. 499; 28 W. R. 209.

4. Leaseholds were assigned to trustees upon trust after the decease of the survivor of A. and B. his wife to assign the same unto and amongst such of the children of the said A. and B. his wife, then living, in such manner, shares, times, and proportions as the said A. and B. his wife, jointly, or the survivor of them separately, should by any writing appoint, and in case there should be no such child or children, then upon trust for C. for life, and after his decease upon trust to assign the same unto and amongst such of his children, and in such manner, shares, times, and proportions, as he should by any writing appoint. A. and B. died without issue, B. in 1876, A. in March 1880. C. died in 1863, having had ten children, of whom some predeceased him, and some died between his death and the death of A., and the rest survived A.:—Held, that all the children of C. took, as tenants in common, in equal shares. Wilson v. Duguid, 24 L. R., Ch. D., 244; 49 L. T. 124; 31 W. R. 945; 53 L. J., Ch., 52.

3. Where Express Gift to Objects in Default of Appointment.

1. Limitation of a leasehold estate in a marriage settlement after the decease of husband and wife, in trust for such child and children as they should appoint, and in default of appointment to all and every the child and children equally:—Held, to be a vested remainder, which opened to take in the issue, as they came in esse. Lawrence v. Maggs, 1 Eden 453.

2. Vesting not suspended by power to appoint. Twynham (Lord) v. Webb, 2 Ves. 208.

3. A limitation in default of appointment over to the objects of the power, is a vested interest in all the objects who come in esse, though the appointment is to be by will only. Heron v. Stokes, 1 Con. & L. 270; 2 Dr. & War. 89; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 284. Reversing 3 Ir. Eq. R. 163.

When, by marriage settlement, lands are settled upon the husband for life, remainder to the issue of the marriage in such shares as the husband should by will appoint, and in default of appointment to the issue, share and share alike:—Held, that the children of the marriage, as they respectively came in esse, took immediate vested interests in the lands, liable to be devested by the husband's exercise of the power of appointment. Ib.

4. Settlement of 10,000*l.*, the interest to be paid to the husband and wife for their lives, and after their death the principal to all or such of their children as the husband should appoint, and in default as the wife should appoint, and for want of such appointment, to all the children equally at twenty-one or marriage. There were two children; one died in the lifetime of her father, then the father:—Held, the other was entitled to the money after the death of the mother, and to have it secured in her lifetime; held, a contingent vested interest in the children, subject to be devested on appointment. Gordon v. Levi, Ambl. 364.

5. Power to appoint to or among one or more younger children; in default of appointment, equally. One of two objects being removed by effect of express satisfaction by way of advancement, the other takes the whole, as in the case of death, by analogy to customs of York and London. Folkes v. Western, 9 Ves. 456.

6. Bequest of 3,000*l.* to Jane, the wife of C., for the use of her younger children, to be distributed as she should appoint; in default equally. All Jane's children by C. being born at the time of the will and death of the testator, it was held vested as a present legacy to them, subject to variation as beween them, but not to extend to her children by a future marriage. The period of vesting being as above; one who was a younger child at the testator's death, and became an elder afterwards, was held entitled. Coleman v. Seymour, 1 Ves. 209.

7. By marriage settlement 1,500*l.* was provided for younger children, in such shares as the parents should appoint; in default of appointment to all the children after the death of the wife. The parents afterwards made an appointment excluding one child; this deed vests the portions in the children born or to be born; except the one excluded. Mayhew v. Middleditch, 1 Bro. C. C. 162.

8. Bequest to such of the children of A. as B. shall, by will, direct, and in default of such direction among the children, share and share alike. B.'s disposition, by will, in favour of the children living at her death, established against the claim of one born afterwards, under the general words. Paul v. Compton, 8 Ves. 375.

9. Devise to A. for life of an estate pur autre vie, with power to will it to B. and his lawful issue, in such manner as A. shall think proper: and in case A. shall die intestate, then to B. and his lawful issue, with remainder over to plaintiff. This is a vested estate tail in B., liable to be devested by the execution of the power in A. A. and B. can, by deed conveying their estates, bar the remainders over. Osbrey v. Bury, 1 Ball & B. 53.

10. Under marriage articles, 15,000*l.* was vested in trustees on trust, together with 5,000*l.* covenanted by the husband to be paid, to be laid out in land, to be settled upon the husband for life, remainder to the wife for life, remainder to the use of such child and children, in such shares, for such estates, and subject to such powers, limitations, and provisoes, as the husband and wife, or the survivor, should appoint; in default of appointment, to the children in tail; in default of issue, to the husband in fee. The husband and wife joined in a direction to the trustees, reciting their resolution to invest the trust fund in an estate lately purchased by the husband for 16,300*l.*, and directing them to deliver the said stock, etc., to him, at the price they were at on the day of the purchase, which was done. The wife died. There were two daughters. The father, by will reciting the purchase, and that he had not conveyed it to the uses of the settlement, and that it was not his intention that the said purchase should be an investment of the trust fund, but that fund, with its increase, should be taken out of his personal estate, gave 10,000*l.*, part of the trust fund, in trust to be laid out in land, to be conveyed to one daughter for life, for her separate use, remainder to her children in tail; remainder to the other daughter in fee, for whom he also appointed the residue of the fund, but revoked that by codicil, reciting a portion given on her marriage:—Held, first, that grandchildren are not objects of the power, but the excess only would be void; secondly, the fund, with its increase, was vested in the purchase; thirdly, there was no appointment of the estate, or money due on the covenant; fourthly, the remainders, in default of appointment, are vested subject to be devested by appointment, and will take effect as to what is ill appointed or unappointed; fifthly, the share of the daughter, to whom the portion was advanced on marriage, was thereby satisfied. Smith v. Camelford (Lord), 2 Ves. J. 698. See this case, nom. Pitt v. Jackson, 2 Bro. C. C. 51.

11. A testator gave a fund to his wife for life, with a power for her to appoint it by will, amongst "A., B., and C., and their respective children," and in default of appointment, he directed "the same, at his wife's death, to go amongst all the said children equally. The wife made no appointment:—Held, first, that the children alone took, to the exclusion of the parents. Pattison v. Pattison, 19 Beav. 638.

Held, secondly, that they took per capita. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that the fund vested in the children living at the death of the testator, subject to its being divested by the exercise of the power, or by the birth of other children before the death of the tenant for life. Ib.

1. Trust, in case husband and wife shall, at death of survivor, have any child or children, and such child or children attain twenty-one, to convey to such child if but one, and if more than one who shall attain twenty-one according to appointment, if father or mother surviving, in default of appointment equally at twenty-one, with survivorship; and if both parents die without leaving any child, etc., remainder to the father:—Held, vested in children having attained twenty-one, who died in the life of one parent, with those who survived both. King v. Hake, 9 Ves. 438.

2. T. H. by marriage articles covenanted to provide 30,000*l.* for an eldest son; and in case there should be issue of the marriage an only son and an only daughter living at the time of his decease, to provide 10,000*l.* for such only daughter, to be paid to her at twenty-one or day of marriage; but in case there should be other issue of the marriage living at the time of his decease, besides one son and one daughter, then 20,000*l.* for all and every the child and children of the marriage, other than an only son, to be paid and payable to such child or children, and at such time, as T. H. should appoint, and in default of appointment to such child or children, share and share alike amongst them, if more than one, at twenty-one or day of marriage. There were living at the decease of T. H., one son and two daughters; one of the daughters died under age and unmarried:—Held, that the other daughter who attained twenty-one, being the survivor of a class, was entitled to the entire sum of 20,000*l.* provided for that class. Hynes v. Redington, Ll. & G. temp. Plunk. 33.

3. By marriage settlement, a sum of money was vested in trustees upon trust to pay the interest to the wife for life, for her separate use; and after her decease, in case she should leave issue by her intended husband one or more children, upon trust to apply the interest to their maintenance until they should attain the age of twenty-one, or their days of marriage; and from the time such child or children should attain their age or day of marriage, upon trust to pay the principal unto such child or children, if more than one, subject to such limitations as the husband should by deed or will appoint; and in default of such appointment, as the wife should by deed or will appoint; and in default to such child or children in equal shares, if more than one, absolutely; and in case the husband should survive the wife, and there should be no child of the marriage, or issue of such child, living at the time of her death, then in trust for the husband absolutely; and if the wife should survive the husband, and there should be no child of the marriage, or issue of such child, living at the time of his death, then to the wife absolutely. The husband died, leaving his wife and one child surviving. The child afterwards attained the age of twenty-one years and married, and died in the lifetime of the wife:—Held, that she took a vested interest in the trust fund. Wynne v. Brady, 5 Ir. Eq. R. 239.

The word "leave" construed "have," to favour the vesting of portion. Ib.

4. By the marriage settlement of A. and B., a sum of 3,300*l.* was assigned to trustees, upon trust for the husband and wife, for their respective lives, and after the decease of the survivor of them, in case there should be any child or children who should be then living, in such shares, etc., as the husband and wife should jointly appoint, and, for want of such appointment, the same to go and be equally divided among such children, if more than one, as should not be inheritable to the real estate of the husband, share and share alike; and to be paid to him, her, or them, at his, her, or their respective age or ages of twenty-one years or days of marriage, which should first happen; and in case there should be no such child or children living at the time of the death of the survivor of A. and B., or, if such, and they should happen to die before their respective ages of twenty-one years or days of marriage as aforesaid, then the said sum was to go to such person or persons as B. by deed or will should appoint. A. and B. died without executing the joint power of appointment, having had several children, some of whom survived them:—Held, that a son of the marriage who attained twenty-one, but died, without having been married, in the lifetime of one of his parents, acquired a vested interest in the fund, but that two children who died infants and without having been married, in their parents' lifetime, were excluded from the fund. Mostyn v. Mostyn, 1 Colly. 161; 8 Jur. 456.

5. By settlement on marriage, reciting an intention to provide for the wife and children, certain tolls were granted for the remainder of grantor's term, in trust to raise an annuity for the lives of the wife and her mother, and the survivor, then reciting that the remainder of the term might expire in the life of the wife or her children, therefore to make a provision for her and her children by her then or any future husband: the trustees should be possessed of the said tolls for the remainder of the term, upon trust to raise after the deaths of the grantor and the mother of the wife 100*l.* annually, to be placed out in the purchase of freehold lands, or hereditaments, or leasehold estates, for two or three lives, as often as a competent sum should be raised for that purpose; and until convenient purchases should offer, to be invested in Government securities upon trust, in case the wife should survive the term, to pay the rents and profits of such estate or estates so to be purchased, or the interest, produce, and profits to arise from the money so intended to be placed out, until such purchase should be made to the wife for life; and after her decease, to apply the said rents and profits or interest money towards the support and maintenance of such child and children of her as should be living at her death, till the youngest should be twenty-one, and then to be possessed of such estates so to be purchased, or of the money arising from the annuity not placed out in one or more purchase or purchases, to the use of such child or children, in such share and proportions, payable at twenty-one, as the survivor of the husband and wife should by will or deed direct, limit, and appoint; in default thereof, to the use of all such children, equally to be divided at their respective ages of twenty-one; but if she should die without leaving any child or children, or all should die under twenty-one, then to the use of the grantor, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns; and after paying the said annuities, to be possessed of all the surplus money arising from the said tolls during the remainder of the term, for the use of the grantor, his executors, etc. From the death of the grantor, who survived the wife's mother, the trustees received 100*l.* a year, and laid out in stock the sums received and the produce. One son was the only issue. He attained twenty-one in the life of his mother, and survived her. The Court would not invest the fund in land, but held it, with the accumulations from the death of the grantor, and the future payments, a vested interest in the son at twenty-one, and as personal estate belonging to his administrator. Swann v. Fonnereau, 3 Ves. 41.

1. On the marriage of A. and B. personalty was limited to them for their lives, and after the decease of the survivor, "leaving one or more child and children then living," on trust "for all and every the child and children" of A. and B. as B. should by will appoint, and, in default of appointment, "upon trust for all and every such child and children" equally:—Held, that, to entitle a child to take in default of appointment, it was not necessary that he should survive his parents. Re Gratwick, 35 Beav. 215.

2. A fund was limited by a settlement in trust after the death of the survivor of husband and wife for the benefit of the child or children or other issue of the marriage then in being, as the husband and wife should jointly appoint by deed, and in default of such appointment as the survivor should by deed or will appoint, and in default of any appointment pay the fund to such of the children of the marriage as should be living at the decease of the survivor of the husband and wife at twenty-one or marriage:—Held, that those children only who survived both parents were objects of the power. Cooney v. Holland, 17 Ir. Ch. R. 201.

3. W. and G. (two brothers) being absolutely entitled in certain events (which happened), as tenants in common, to leasehold houses, by deed made in 1840 assigned the premises to S., upon trust for M. for life, and after the death of M. to the use of S., and after the death of S. in trust for the children of W. and G. "respectively," in such shares and proportions as they, or either of them, should appoint, and in default of such appointment, then to and amongst the said children equally share and share alike. W., by will, purported to appoint all the premises to his then only child W., and died in 1869, without leaving any other child surviving. G. died, leaving several children, and without making any appointment, and M. and S. having also died:—Held, that the children of both brothers, living at the date of the deed of 1840, and subsequently born, were the objects of the non-exclusive power, and also the objects to take in default of appointment, and that there having been only an exclusive exercise of the power such children became entitled, and that they took per capita. Fletcher v. Fletcher, 9 L. R., Ir., 301.

XII. IMPLIED GIFT IN DEFAULT OF APPOINTMENT.

4. The Court cannot execute a mere power, but will execute a trust which fails by the death of the trustee, or accident. Brown v. Higgs, 8 Ves. 570.

Power, which by the will the party is required to execute as a duty, he is a trustee for the exercise of it, and has no discretion whether he will exercise it or not. The Court adopts the principle as to trusts, and will not permit his negligence, accident, or other circumstances, to disappoint the interest of those for whose benefit he is to execute it. Id. 574.

5. A power to appoint the proportions in which definite objects are to take, tacitly includes a gift to them in default of appointment. Kennedy v. Kingston, 2 Jac. & Walk. 434.

6. A. devised the residue of his property to his wife, in trust to divide it among their children in such manner as they should deserve. One of the seven children sold her share, and covenanted to make it up a full seventh; this is good: and on a specific performance, she can make a good conveyance without the mother joining. Musprat v. Gordon, 1 Anstr. 34.

7. Where property is settled on husband and wife for life, remainder to the issue subject to a power of appointment, an interest vests in an only child though no appointment was made. Madoc v. Jackson, 2 Bro. C. C. 588.

8. Jewels, etc., to A. for life, then to such grandchildren as she should appoint: in default of appointment, they shall go equally. Witts v. Bodington, 3 Bro. C. C. 95.

9. Gift to A. and his issue, to be divided among them as he thinks fit; the issue have an interest in all events, and A. has no authority but as to the proportions. If no appointment, equally. Where to be divided among issue, the proportions must not be illusory. Issue will extend to any remote degree, as a description of objects of the power of A., to distribute among them as he thinks fit; but they must all be in existence during her life. Hockley v. Mawby, 1 Ves. J. 150.

10. The sum of 2,500*l.* is provided by settlement for the issue of the marriage, in such proportion as the husband should appoint; he dies, leaving a daughter only, and makes no appointment: she shall have the 2,500*l.* Davy v. Hooper, 2 Vern. 665. Affirmed 6 Bro. P. C. 51.

11. R., on his marriage, settled Exchequer annuities for ninety-nine years, amounting to 300*l.* per annum, in trust to himself for life, remainder to his wife for life, remainder to his children in such manner as he should appoint. By the marriage there was an only child, a daughter:—Held, that she was entitled to the Exchequer annuities under the settlement, and that the father had no power of disposing of them otherwise. Bellasis v. Uthwatt, 1 Atk. 427.

1. Settlement to such uses as husband and wife should jointly appoint, and in default of such appointment to them for life, and after decease of survivor to the use of all or any of the child or children of them, in such shares and proportions, and for such estate and estates, term or terms, and payable at such time or times, and in such manner and form, as the husband should by deed or will appoint, and in default thereof to him and his heirs. The event upon which the last limitation depends, is in default of appointment, not of children. Jenkins v. Quinchant, cited 5 Ves. 596.

2. Testator devised a freehold estate to his wife for her life, and then directed that she should dispose of the same amongst the testator's children by her at her decease, as she should think proper; the wife made no disposition of the estate: the children took no interest in the estate under the will. Crossling v. Crossling, 2 Cox 396.

3. Where there is no appointment under a power, and no gift over in default of appointment, those persons only will take who could take by appointment. A testator gave the residue of his personal estate to his wife, for her own sole use and disposal, trusting that she would thereout provide for his family, and particularly his only son; and at her decease, give and bequeath the same to her children by him, as she should appoint:—Held, that the wife could appoint only by will, and that children living at her death were alone entitled to share in an unappointed portion of the fund. Walsh v. Wallinger, 2 Russ. & M. 78; Taml. 425; 9 L. J., Ch., 7.

4. Testator bequeathed a sum of 6,000*l.* in trust for his daughter for life, "and on her decease, I give the said 6,000*l.* to the children, or their descendants, of T. F. in such proportions to each as my daughter may direct." The daughter died without having made any appointment:—Held, that the children of T. F. were entitled to the fund, to the exclusion of their issue. Jones v. Torin, 6 Sim. 255.

5. A., having been indebted to the estate of B. in a sum of money, but from which he had been discharged under a commission of bankruptcy, voluntarily executed to C., the widow of B., a bond for the payment of part of such debt, for the use of herself and children, but at her disposal. Two years afterwards, B. executed to C. another bond for the payment of the remainder of such debt, for the use and benefit of herself and children only, in what proportions among the latter she may think proper to direct, but for no other use, purpose, or intent whatsoever:—Held, that the widow took a life interest in the money secured by the bonds, and that the principal, after her decease, became payable among the children, in such manner, and in such proportions, as she should direct; and the widow having made an exclusive appointment in favour of two of her children, it was held that such appointment was void, and that all the children took as tenants in common. Though, generally speaking, an instrument must be construed by the provisions contained in it, and not by anything dehors, yet, under the circumstances of this case:—Held, that the Court might call the language of the second bond into aid in construing the effect of the first. Where there is a general power of appointment among children, and the appointment from any circumstance becomes void, the children take as tenants in common. Fowler v. Hunter, 3 Y. & J. 506.

6. Testatrix gave a weekly sum to A. for his life, or until he should attempt to assign, etc., the same, and she directed a sum of stock to be set apart to answer the payments; and she gave to A. the power of leaving the stock, after the payments to him should cease, to and for the benefit of his wife and children as he should, by will duly executed, give and bequeath the same. A. died, having made an invalid appointment of the stock:—Held, that there was an implied gift to his wife and children, in default of appointment. Brown v. Pocock, 6 Sim. 257.

7. A widow, by the settlement on her second marriage, settled 2,300*l.*, which had belonged to her first husband, in trust for her separate use for life; and declared that, subject thereto, the fund should, as or whenever she should think fit or be advised, be settled upon trust for the benefit of her daughter and only child by her first husband, and of her daughter's intended husband and her child or children, in such manner and for such rights and interests as should be agreed upon either previously to or after her daughter's marriage with her consent, and that she (the mother) should have full power to settle the fund or any part of it in trust for the immediate benefit of her daughter and her child and children in manner aforesaid, to take effect either upon such marriage, or upon or immediately after her own death as she should think fit; but, if the daughter should not be married in the mother's lifetime and should survive her, then the fund should be assigned to the daughter at twenty-one, or on marriage: but, if the daughter should die in her mother's lifetime without having been married, then the fund should be held in trust for the children of the mother's second marriage:—Held, that a trust, and not a power, was created in favour of the daughter, her husband, and children; but that the mother, if she thought fit, might modify the interests of the cestui que trust, on the daughter marrying with her consent. Croft v. Adam, 12 Sim. 639; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 386; 6 Jur. 522.

8. A testator directed that certain stock should stand in his name, and certain real estates remain unalienated "until the following contingencies are completed." And, after giving life interests in such stock and estates to his two children, with remainder to their issue, he declared that, in case his two children should both die without leaving lawful issue, the same should be disposed of as after mentioned; that was to say, the survivor of his two children should have power to dispose by will of his real and personal estate, "amongst my nephews and nieces, or their children, either all to one of them, or to as many of them as my surviving child shall think proper":—Held, that a trust was created in favour of the testator's nephews and nieces, and their children, subject to a power of selection and distribution in his surviving child. Burrough v. Philcox, 5 Myl. & C. 72; 5 Jur. 453. And see Ahearne v. Ahearne, 9 L. R., Ir., 144.

1. Upon a gift to the testator's sisters or their children, as his mother should by deed or will appoint:—Held, on default of appointment, to be a gift to the whole class of sisters and their children equally; and that the word "or" being referable to the discretion of the part appointment, the Court could not assume to exercise the power. Penny v. Turner, 2 Ph. 493; 15 Sim. 368; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 133.

2. Under the following clause: "I empower my wife to give away at her death 1,000*l.*, to A. and B. 100*l.* each, the rest to be disposed of by her will":—Held, that there is not an absolute legacy but a naked power to the wife; who being dead without any disposition, the objects specified are not entitled. Bull v. Vardy, 1 Ves. J. 270.

3. By a marriage settlement, a fund was limited to the husband for life, with remainder to his wife absolutely, if she survived; but if she predeceased him, then for all the children of the marriage, in such shares as she should appoint; and if there should be no issue of the marriage living at her death, upon trust as she should appoint generally, and in default to the husband absolutely; but there was no express gift to the children in default of appointment. The husband survived, and there were children living:—Held, that such children, notwithstanding the mother never appointed, were entitled to the fund. Fenwick v. Greenwell, 10 Beav. 412; 11 Jur. 620.

4. A sum of money, the property of the intended husband, was vested in trustees upon trust, during the joint lives of husband and wife, to pay the interest to the husband, and after his decease to permit the wife during her life to receive the same, subject, however, to the control and limitations as the husband should by will appoint amongst the issue of the marriage living or likely to come forth, and in default of such issue or of such will to the wife for her life, and after her decease as she should appoint amongst such of the issue as should be then living, and in default of appointment equally, and if no issue living at the death of the wife over. The wife died, leaving the husband and several issue of the marriage her surviving. The husband is not, in the events which happened, entitled to the trust fund for his own benefit. Smith v. Doolan, 2 J. & L. 747.

5. A testator, having by his will, bearing date in 1837, bequeathed certain legacies, proceeded as follows: "To my son I give, devise, and bequeath all my lands and tenements, rights and credits, subject to the legacies aforesaid and my debts, the remainder of my property to be disposed of by him to and amongst his children in such shares and proportions as he shall think fit." The words in italics were inserted by interlineation. By the last clause in the will, the interlineations, as well as the original text, were declared to be in the handwriting of the testator. In 1839 he added a codicil to his will, by which he merely made a declaration with reference to one of the legacies given by the will. In 1845 the son died in the lifetime of the testator and without having made any appointment among his children:—Held, that the will gave to the son a power, coupled with a trust, and that accordingly his children were entitled as well to the real as to the personal estate of the testator in equal shares. Hutchinson v. Hutchinson, 13 Ir. Eq. R. 332.

6. Where a fund is given to A. to be by him employed at his discretion upon certain objects, a trust in favour of those objects, and not a mere power, is created. Salusbury v. Denton, 3 Jur., N. S., 740.

Where a fund is given to A. to be applied for the benefit of B. or C., as A. shall think fit, and A. does not make any appointment, the bequest is void for uncertainty. Ib.

Where a fund is given to A. to apply part for B. and part for C., as he shall think fit, and A. does not make any appointment, B. and C. shall be declared to be entitled in equal shares. Ib.

Testator gave a fund to be at the disposal of his wife by her will, therewith to apply a part to the foundation of a charity school or such other charitable institution for the benefit of the poor of O. as she might prefer, and under such regulations as she might prescribe, and the remainder of the fund to be at her disposal among the testator's relatives, in such proportions as she might be pleased to direct. No appointment having been made by the widow of the testatrix:—Held, that the gift to charity was not illegal, and that the fund became divisible in equal moieties for charitable purposes according to a scheme as to one; for the testator's next of kin at the death of the widow as to the other. S. C. 5 W. R. 865.

7. A testatrix bequeathed stock to trustees, to pay the interest, and also all or any portion of the capital, to the widow of her son and her three children, in such shares, as they in their absolute discretion should think fit; but she directed, that upon the widow marrying again, her interest under the will should cease:—Held, that, in default of appointment, the widow was entitled to an equal share in the capital, and not a life interest only. Izod v. Izod, 9 Jur., N. S., 1216; 1 N. R. 462.

8. A testator died leaving a widow and seven children (all of whom were minors except one), and by a will dated in November 1837 he bequeathed to his wife all his property "for the benefit of herself and my children;" if she married she was to get 100*l.*, and the remainder of his property to be divided, share and share alike, among his children or their survivor. He appointed her to execute the will according to its real meaning and spirit, and recommended her to be guided by the Rev. H. H. in all matters relating to the disposal of his property and the education and advancement of his children:—Held, that the children took no interest in possession, but that the wife was, during her widowhood, tenant for life, with the power of appointment amongst the children. Mill v. Mill, 9 Ir. R., Eq., 104. Affirmed 11 Ir. R., Eq., 158.

9. A testatrix gave her real estate in trust for her grandchildren (by name) and their issue, as F. should appoint, and in default of such appointment, upon trust, for "my aforesaid nephews and nieces, and their respective lawful issue, and also the issue (if any) of F., and their several and respective heirs and assigns for ever," as tenants in common. No nephews or nieces were mentioned in the will. F. died without appointing:—Held, that there was no gift by implication to the grandchildren and their issue; secondly, that the words, "my aforesaid nephews and nieces," could not be read "my aforesaid grandson and granddaughters;" thirdly, that the gift to the nephews and nieces was not void for uncertainty, and lastly, that they took it in tail. Campbell v. Bouskell, 27 Beav. 325.

1. Gift of a share of residue to trustees, at their discretion, to apply the whole or part of the capital or income for the benefit of J., or, at the option of the trustees, to apply the whole to the augmentation of the other shares. J. died, and the trustees refused to exercise their option:—Held, that the share was undisposed of. Re Eddowes, 1 Dr. & Sm. 395; 7 Jur., N. S., 354; 5 L. T., N. S., 389.

2. Devise, in 1817, of a freehold estate for lives, renewable for ever, "to my son W. during his life, and after his death to his lawful issue, in such manner, shares, and proportions as he, by deed or will, shall appoint, and for want of such appointment, then to his issue equally, if more than one, and, if only one child, to said child, and in failure of issue of W." to J. Another estate, consisting of fee-simple lands, was devised in the same terms to another son, J.; and on failure of issue of J., it was to go to W. J. and W., before the birth of any child to W. (J. himself never married), joined in a recovery as to the lands devised to J., and to which W. afterwards succeeded in possession on J.'s death without issue. W. died, leaving four children; he had not executed any appointment, but during his life disposed of both descriptions of lands to creditors for value:—Held, that under these devises each of the first devisees took an estate tail by implication. Roddy v. Fitzgerald, 6 H. L. Ca. 823.

The remainders were contingent, and therefore the recovery suffered as to the fee-simple lands operated as a bar to them, whether the first devisee did or did not take an estate tail. Ib.

3. A. devised all his estates, copyhold and freehold, to his wife for life, and directed that, immediately upon her death, his brother, in case he should survive her, should "part and share out, or divide, all and singular the estates in such manner, amongst all my children, sons and daughters, as they shall severally arrive at their ages of twenty-one, as my brother shall think proper and fair." He also directed that, in case his wife should survive his brother, she should "make her will, and devise all and singular the estates amongst all my children, in the best and fairest manner that she can." The testator died, leaving him surviving his wife, three children, a son and two daughters, and his brother. Two only of the children, the son and one daughter, attained twenty-one, and all three died in the lifetime of the wife. The brother survived the wife, and died without having ever exercised the power of appointment:—Held, that as there was no devise to the children, and all of them died before any power to appoint in their favour had accrued, no estate of inheritance vested, by implication, under the will, in both or either of the two younger children. Halfhead v. Sheppard, 1 El. &. El. 918.

4. D. devised to trustees freehold premises, to pay the rents to her grandniece P. for life, and after her decease, for such person or persons, being a child or children of P., as she should by will appoint; and in case she should die without leaving children her surviving, or in default of appointment, so far as the same, if incomplete, should not extend, for her nephew J. in fee. P. died in 1860, leaving eight children surviving, but without having exercised the power of appointment:—Held, that J. was entitled to the property, there being no gift at all, express or by implication, to the children of P., as they could only have taken by virtue of an appointment. Goldring v. Inwood, 8 Jur., N. S., 206; 3 Giff. 139; 5 L. T., N. S., 17.

5. A father, who had power to appoint to his children and their issue born in his life, appointed 5,000*l.* to his daughter O., who, on the next day, settled it on herself, her husband, and her children generally. Afterwards, by a deed, stating the appointment of 5,000*l.* to O., for her separate use, with power to appoint it, the father appointed another fund to O. "and her children, upon the trusts and subject to the same provisions as are hereinbefore declared of and concerning the sum of 5,000*l.* hereinbefore appointed unto and for the benefit of O., or as near thereto as circumstances will admit":—Held, that O. took the second fund for her separate use, with power to appoint it, and that the children took nothing. Hanbury v. Tyrell, 21 Beav. 322.

6. A testator gave a fund to his wife for life, with a power for her to appoint it by will, amongst "A., B., and C., and their respective children," and in default of appointment, he directed "the same at his wife's death, to go amongst all the said children equally." The wife made no appointment:—Held, first, that the children alone took, to the exclusion of the parents. Pattison v. Pattison, 19 Beav. 638.

Held, secondly, that they took per capita. Ib.

7. A testator gave all his real estate to trustees to pay the rents to A. for life, and after her decease, in case she should leave issue, upon trust to dispose of his estate, in such manner, amongst such issue as A., by deed or will, should appoint, and in default of such issue, then over. A., who left several children and grandchildren, made an appointment by will in favour of some, and excluding others:—Held, that an exclusive appointment was not authorised by the power, and that the children and grandchildren of A. living at her decease took as tenants in common. Stolworthy v. Sanoroft, 10 Jur., N. S., 762; 12 W. R. 635; 10 L. T., N. S., 223; 33 L. J., Ch., 708.

8. Bequest to trustees for A. for life, and if he should die childless, upon trust to apply the sum to the benefit of such of the testator's children, or their issue, as the trustees should think fit, for the interest and good of the testator's family; with no gift in default of appointment. No appointment having been made, and the tenant for life having survived the donees of the power, and died childless: Held, that children and remoter issue took in equal shares per capita, and that the period for ascertaining the class was the death of the tenant for life. Re White, 1 Johns. 656.

1. A testator gave 3,000*l.* to his executors for the benefit of M. during her life, and from and immediately after her death "in trust for the benefit of her children, to do that which they, my executors, may think most to their advantage." The executors died in the lifetime of M.:—Held, that the children of M. who were living at the time of her death were entitled to the fund in equal shares as tenants in common. Re Phene, 5 L. R., Eq., 346.

2. Devise of copyholds to a married woman to be her sole and separate property, and with power to her to appoint the same to her children and her husband, in such way and in such proportions as she may think fit:—Held, that she was devisee in fee, and that the execution of the power was not made a duty, and therefore no trust in favour of the husband and children. Brook v. Brook, 3 Sm. & G. 280.

3. Gift to wife for life, "to be disposed of at her death amongst my children as she shall think proper":—Held, to confer a power to appoint, by will, amongst his children living at his death, and an implied gift in default of appointment. Reid v. Reid, 25 Beav. 469.

4. A fund was settled upon the deaths of I. and E. for such descendants of X. as E. should by will appoint:—Held, that an appointment to the legal personal representatives of descendants who died before E. was an excess of the power, and that power was created in the nature of a trust for descendants of X. living at the death of E., and that in default of appointment they would take in equal shares. Re Susanni, 26 W. R. 93; 47 L. J., Ch., 65.

5. A father gave his trustees power, if his daughter should marry with their consent, to give her husband a life interest in her fortune in the event of his surviving her. She married, in her father's lifetime, with his consent, and had recently died. The trustees had died without having exercised the power:—Held, that the husband was entitled to a life interest in her fortune. Tweedale v. Tweedale, 47 L. J., Ch. D., 530; 7 L. R., Ch. D., 633; 38 L. T. 137; 26 W. R. 457.

6. A testator in his will stated that he had already provided for his children (except one son, to whom he left a substantial legacy), and did not intend thereby to make any further provision for them. He then bequeathed certain personal property and chattels real to his wife in trust to receive the interest for life, with the power to appoint the property to his children. There was no gift over in default of appointment, but the testator bequeathed the residue of his property to his wife:—Held, that the recital in the will negatived any implication of a gift to the children in default of appointment; that the power was not a power coupled with a trust, and that the widow was absolutely entitled to the property. Carberry v. McCarthy, 7 L. R., Ir., 328.

7. A father gave residuary personalty to trustees in trust for his daughter for life, and after her death in trust for her children as she should by deed or will appoint, and in default of such appointment in trust for such persons generally as she should appoint, and in default, in trust for next of kin, according to the Statute of Distributions. The daughter by her will, after reciting that, as the fact then was, there were no children of the marriage, exercised her general power of appointment in favour of her husband. After the date of the will she had several children, but died without having altered it, or otherwise exercised the power. Upon a petition by the husband for payment out to him of the fund:—Held, first, that in default of exercise of the limited power, the children took by implication. Re Jeffery, 42 L. J., Ch., 17; 20 W. R. 667; 14 L. R., Eq., 136; 26 L. T., N. S., 821.

Held, secondly, that if not, the motive for the exercise of the general power being the failure of children, the appointment based upon such motive could not take effect, and the children took in default of appointment as next of kin under the Statute of Distributions to the exclusion of the husband. Ib.

8. A father bequeathed a legacy to each of his two daughters, and directed that if either of them should remain unmarried, she should have power to dispose of her property by will as she pleased, but no power of diminishing the principal sum during her life; and that they should, in the event of their dying unmarried, dispose of their legacies to their brothers or sisters, nephews or nieces, but to no other person or persons whatever. One of the daughters having died unmarried and intestate:—Held, that the direction of the testator gave her a power coupled with a trust, and that the capital of her legacy was divisible in equal shares among the persons pointed at. Re Hargroves, 8 Ir. R., Eq., 256.

9. A testator gave his residuary estate to be equally divided amongst his children. He afterwards gave the dividends for the use of each of his children during their respective lives, and if they had children, then the principal to be at the disposal of the parent to such children:—Held, that the children took their respective shares for their lives, and had power to appoint to their respective children, if any. Butler v. Gray, 5 L. R., Ch., 26; 39 L. J., Ch., 291.

One of the daughters, by her will, after expressing her intention to appoint her share to her children, gave a part only to her children, and, after directing her debts and legacies to be paid, gave to one of her children the residue of the personal estate which belonged to her, or which she had any general power to dispose of:—Held, that the unappointed part of the share was not appointed by the residuary bequest, and was divisible amongst the children equally. Ib.

10. By a settlement dated in May 1833, a leasehold house was assigned to trustees upon trust for A. for life, and after her decease for B., her husband, for life, and after the decease of the survivor of A. and B. upon trust to assign the premises unto and amongst such of the children of A and B. then living, in such manner, shares, times, and proportions as A. and B. jointly, or the survivor of them separately, should by any writing appoint; and in case there should be no such child or children, then upon trust for C. for life, and after his decease upon trust to assign the premises unto and amongst such of his children, and in such manner, shares, times, and proportions, as he should by any writing appoint. A. died in 1876 without leaving issue. B. died in 1880. C. died in 1863 without having exercised the power of appointment, having had ten children, of whom three died before him, two after and before the death of A., one after the death of A. and before that of B.:—Held, that all the children of C. took as tenants in common in equal shares. Wilson v. Duguid, 24 L. R., Ch. D., 244; 49 L. T. 124; 53 L. J., Ch., 52; 31 W. R. 945.

Bankruptcy of Donee. Void Limitation in default of Appointment.] 1. S. bequeathed residue to children in equal shares, then directed that a part of each son's share should be set apart on trust for the son until bankruptcy, then for such of his children as he should appoint, and in default of appointment for such children as should attain twenty-five. One son became bankrupt, and without having exercised his power of appointment:—Held, that the fund set apart, vested in his trustee, and not in his children by implication in default of appointment. Re Sprague, Miley v. Cape, 43 L. T. 236.

All the testator's children had executed a settlement reciting that the trust in default of appointment was void, and declaring that the son's shares should be held on the trusts of the will:—Held, that this was a valid resettlement by the sons on themselves until bankruptcy, and their children at twenty-five. Ib.

XIII. APPOINTMENT TO NON-OBJECTS IN OTHER CASES.

2. A., by will, devised his collieries, etc., to trustees, upon trust, to dispose and convey the same in such manner as his daughter M., whether sole or covert, should direct or appoint: and for want of such direction or appointment, to apply the money arising thereby to certain purposes in his will mentioned. He then declared, "that though his meaning was to give his said daughter the absolute disposal of the said collieries, etc., to prevent the expenses and trouble that must attend the management of affairs of such a nature, under the direction of the Court of Chancery, he requested his said daughter to direct the money arising therefrom to be applied in such manner as he had directed the same in default of her direction and appointment." The daughter made an appointment in favour of her husband absolutely: but this appointment was held to be void, as being contrary to the testator's intention. Bute (Earl) v. Stuart, 1 Bro. P. C. 476; 2 Eden 88.

3. The donee of a power cannot appoint to any persons not the objects of the power. Palmer v. Wheeler, 2 Ball & B. 27.

4. Power to husband and wife to charge a term in lands, with sum or sums, not exceeding 200*l.*, for their daughters A. and B., as the husband and wife should appoint; and in failure of their joint appointment, as the survivors should appoint, with interest from such time as the term should commence in possession, and not before. The term was not to commence in possession until after the death of the survivor. The husband and wife, in execution of the power, direct the 200*l.* to be equally divided between the two daughters, six months after the decease of the father and mother; and if either of them die before payment, or the money become due, then the share of her so dying to be laid out for the benefit of her executors; one of the daughters died after the appointment, and before the time of payment:—Held, a good appointment to the daughters themselves, but the appointment to executors is void; but as one of the appointees died before the time of payment, her share sinks into the estate. The joint appointment having appointed the whole, the share of the daughter who died is not subject to any further appointment. Brown v. Nisbett, 1 Cox 13.

5. A lady having four children by her first husband, and three by her second, and having power to appoint a fund amongst the first only, appointed it amongst all her children equally, and declared that, if her children by her first husband should refuse to share the fund with her other children, the whole fund should go to her youngest child by her first husband:—Held, that the appointment was not wholly void, but that the first class of children took each one-seventh of the fund under it, and the other shares went to them as in default of appointment. Sadler v. Pratt, 5 Sim. 632.

6. A sum of 8,000*l.* was bequeathed in trust for E. for her separate use for life, and at the decease of E. that two-thirds of the sum should be and remain for the use of the child and children of the said E., and the remaining third thereof she should be at liberty to dispose of by her last will and testament; and failing such disposition, that the said remaining third should go to the use and benefit of the said child or children in equal proportions. By a settlement executed upon E.'s marriage, she, according to her right and interest therein, and in consideration of the marriage, assigned to trustees the said sum of 8,000*l.* in trust, after the decease of the survivor of E. and her husband, in case there should be issue of the marriage one or more children, to pay it over among such issue in equal shares; and be covenanted for further assurances. There were two children of the marriage. E., by her will, in virtue of the power and authority given her by the will of her father, and of all other powers and authorities enabling her in that behalf, devised and bequeathed one-third of said sum of 8,000*l.* in trust to pay legacies to strangers, and as to the residue of said one-third in trust for the use of one of the children, whom she also appointed residuary legatee:—Held, that the will of E. was inconsistent with the trust of the settlement, and therefore the appointment of the two legacies to strangers was void, but the appointment of the residue to the child of E. was valid. Re Chambers, 11 Ir. Eq. R. 518.

7. In 1809 certain estates were conveyed to trustees, in trust for J. H. the younger for life, then to his wife for life, or until the only one or youngest child of the marriage should attain the age of twenty-one: and after the decease of J. H. and his wife, and after the attainment of twenty-one by the youngest child, to the use of all and every the children and child of J. H. by his said wife, for such estates, in such shares, with such limitations, and subject to such charges (the same limitations and charges, if any, being for the benefit of some other or others of the said children) as the said J. H. should by deed or will appoint; and in default of appointment, to all the children of the marriage in tail, with cross-remainders. J. H., by his will in 1854, made in execution of the power, devised the settled estates upon trusts for sale, and he declared the trusts of the proceeds to be, as to one-sixth part thereof, to pay the income in the manner therein mentioned; as to one other sixth part thereof, in trust thereout to pay to T. H. (a son of the testator) 150*l.*, to T. B. (a son-in-law of the testator) 120*l.*, and to S. H. (a son of the testator) 30*l.*; and as to the residue of the said sixth, to pay the interest thereof to the testator's daughter, S. R., the wife of W. R., for her separate use for life; and after her decease, the share to which she should become entitled during her life in the said trust funds, etc., to be in trust for all and every her children and child, in equal shares if more than one; and as to all the remaining sixth parts, in trust for all his, J. H.'s, other children by his then wife, and the child or children of any then deceased, or who might die in the testator's lifetime, as tenants in common. The testator had six children, all of whom survived him, except M. (the wife of T. B.), who left one son:—Held, first, that the appointment of 120*l.* to T. B. (the son-in-law of J. H.) was invalid, he not being an object of the power. Secondly, that the gift of the life interest to S. R., the testator's daughter, was good, but that, subject to the same, the share was unappointed, except as to the two gifts of 150*l.* and 30*l.* appointed to T. H. and S. H. respectively; and, thirdly, that the sixth share to which M. B. would have been entitled had she been living was unappointed, and passed under the limitation in default of appointment. Ratcliffe v. Hampson, 1 Jur., N. S., 1104; 4 W. R. 67.

1. By the settlement of A. and in the events which happened two-thirds of the fund were limited to certain persons, and three-fifths to the children of B. "living at the time of the death of B., and in default, to B.'s next of kin. Power was given to A. to revoke these trusts, and to appoint the trust fund among the persons who, under the trusts aforesaid, would have become entitled to the funds, "in the proportion and manner aforesaid, or in such manner and form, in all respects, as A. should think fit." A. appointed to a child of B., who survived A., but died in the lifetime of B.:—Held, that such child was not an object of the power. Denning v. Ellerton, 26 Beav. 231.

2. S. left all his property, real and personal, including trust and mortgage estates, to his wife in trust, as to his beneficial estates and effects, for herself and the children of the marriage as she should by deed or will appoint:—Held, that this was a power to appoint to the children and not to herself, and that an appointment of the property to herself, reserving only one-millionth part to the children, was bad. Re Sinclair, 16 W. R. 420; 2 Ir. R., Eq., 45.

3. A testator gave real and personal estate to his trustees for his son for life, and after his death "for all and every or such one or more exclusively of the other or others of the child or children and remote issue born in wedlock of his son, provided he should marry an English lady or one approved of by the testator's trustees, not being a New Zealand native," as he should appoint, and in default of such appointment "for all and every the children of his (the testator's) son, to be divided between them if more than one in equal shares as tenants in common, or the whole to one only child as the case might be, and in default of such issue" over:—Held, that the children of a marriage between the testator's son and a woman, concerning whom there was not sufficient evidence before the Court to show that she was not a New Zealand native, were entitled to the property under the gift in default of appointment. Armitage v. Armitage, 16 W. R. 643; 3 L. R., Eq., 343.

4. B., being possessed of an estate in D., conveyed it to his daughter in fee, with livery of seisin, who by a memorandum of the same date agreed to hold it for such one or more of B.'s children, herself being one, as he should by deed or will appoint, and in default in trust equally for their benefit. B., notwithstanding this transaction, continued in possession of the property till his death. By his will he devised his estate in D. to trustees, his son being one, upon trust that they should, out of the rents, issues, and profits, raise 300*l.*, and pay the interest to his daughter for her life, and after her decease to her children, and subject thereto he gave the estate to his son A. for his life, with remainder to his children as he should appoint. He devised estates he was possessed of in another county to his other son for life, with remainder to A. in fee. The testator was possessed of a small property in D. worth about 6*l.* a year which was not subject to the power:—Held, that the charge in favour of the daughter and the devise of the estate in D., so far as it was given to A., was a good exercise of the power, but beyond that every gift of the estate in D. was void, and that the sons were put to their election. Fox v. Charlton, Charlton v. Hall, Hall v. Fox, 10 W. R. 506; 6 L. T., N. S., 743.

Appointment to Parent or Husband of Object.] 5. A mother had a power of appointing a reversionary fund to her daughters. A daughter, who was under age, being about to marry, the mother appointed that a moiety of the fund should, on the marriage, become the portion of the daughter, and be vested in her or her intended husband in her right, and to be paid to the husband, his executors, administrators, or assigns, on the death of the tenant for life:—Held, although the husband was not an object of the power, and the fund was reversionary, and the daughter an infant, that there was a valid appointment. Wombwell v Hanrott, 14 Beav. 143; 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 581.

6. Property was settled on the wife for life for her separate use, without power of anticipation, with remainder to the husband for life, with remainder to their children, with remainder over; and a power was given to the wife during her life to dispose of the principal, for the purpose of educating, etc., the children, or to answer any other occasion. The wife executed her power in favour of her husband, and gave him the property:—Held, that this was a due execution, and that the husband was entitled. Sutton v. Southern, 5 L. J., N. S., Ch., 185.

1. Testator gave 7,000*l.* stock to trustees, in trust to pay the dividends to his son for life, and after his death to pay the capital and dividends to and amongst all his children, at such time or times, age or ages, and in such proportions, manner, and form, and for such intents and purposes in all respects, as the son should appoint; and, in default of appointment, to pay and divide the same unto and equally amongst all the children as they should severally attain twenty-one; and in the meantime to apply the dividends for their maintenance, as the trustees should think fit. The son, by his will, directed that the stock should not be divided amongst his children until their mother's death, and that she should receive the dividends during her life, and apply the same in the exercise of her sound discretion, for the best interest and advantage of his children, and that, on her death, the capital should be divided amongst the children in certain proportions. The son left eleven children, some of whom were adults:—Held, that the son's will was not a good execution of the power, so far as it directed the dividends of stock to be paid to wife during her life. Chester v. Chadwick, 13 Sim. 102.

2. Power to appoint to children, "with such directions or regulations for maintenance, education, and advancement as their mother should appoint." The mother appointed the income to the children's father until the younger attained twenty-one, "in or towards the maintenance and education" of all her children:—Held, that the appointment was invalid. Lloyd v. Lloyd, 26 Beav. 96.

3. By a settlement made on the marriage of a father and mother of the plaintiffs, certain personal property was settled upon trust for the wife for life, and after her death for her children, for such interests and in such manner as she should appoint, and in default upon trust for all the children equally. The settlement contained a power to the trustees to apply the income of the presumptive shares of the children in their maintenance during their minorities, notwithstanding their father might be of ability to maintain them. The wife died, having executed an appointment whereby she appointed the property among the children equally, and directed the income to be paid to her husband during his life for the maintenance of the children:—Held, that the direction to pay the income to the husband was not justified by the power; and the Court directed inquiries as to the proper amount of maintenance to be allowed under the power in the original settlement. White v. Grane, 2 W. R. 320, 328.

4. Semble, under a power to appoint a sum of money to a daughter, an appointment to her husband is invalid. Hanbury v. Tyrell, 21 Beav. 322.

I. CREATION AND RESERVATION OF.

5. A person having only an authority to execute, cannot annex a power of revocation when he executes it. Wall v. Thurborne, 1 Vern. 355.

6. Power of revocation and to appoint new uses; express revocation must be reserved; or it is executed. Marlborough (Duke) v. Godolphin (Lord), 2 Ves. 76.

7. Power without revocation reserved, once executed, is not to be revoked and executed anew. Teynham (Lord) v. Webb, 2 Ves. 211.

8. A partial appointment by will under a power is revocable by a subsequent appointment by deed, though no power of revocation is reserved by the will, or the instrument which created the power. Lisle v. Lisle, 1 Bro. C. C. 533.

9. Deed executed according to power, containing no clause for power to revoke it, cannot be revoked, though original power gave such clause. Worrall v. Jacob, 3 Meriv. 256.

A wife having a power of appointment by deed or will, with power to revoke the uses of such deed or will, executes the power by deed, which she retains in her possession, and afterwards alters, and re-executes:—Held, that the deed of appointment containing no power of revocation, although it was contained in the instrument creating the power, the re-execution was void, and the original appointment was therefore decreed to be carried into execution. Ib.

10. By a marriage settlement a power of appointment over a trust fund was given to the husband (the plaintiff) in favour of the children of the marriage, to be exercised by deed or will. In default of appointment the property was to be divided equally among the children. There were four children of the marriage, of whom one died in 1869, a bachelor and intestate. The plaintiff was his personal representative. In 1876 the plaintiff appointed by deed in favour of his three surviving children, but reserved a power of revocation. In 1880 he revoked by deed the appointment made in 1876, so that the property might stand limited as theretofore. The plaintiff proposed to execute an absolute release of the power of appointment, and submitted that he would thereby become entitled to a share of the trust fund. The defendants contended that the plaintiff executed the deed of revocation in 1880 in order that he might claim the share for his own benefit, and that his intention was to commit a fraud on the power:—Held, that the donee of a power might deal with it in any lawful way he pleased. He might exercise the power and reserve to himself a power of revocation. Although, in this case, by an accident, namely, the death of one of the objects of the power, the donee had derived benefit from so doing, he could not be regarded as having committed a fraud on the power, and upon executing a proper release, he would be entitled to the share he claimed. Shirley v. Fisher, 47 L. T. 109.

1. Where the Court directed a deed of appointment as to the respective interests of a father and his children to be made within a limited time, and a deed was executed within the time containing a power of revocation, it was held that the intention of the Court was defeated, and that the deed was consequently void. Piper v. Piper, 3 Myl. & K. 159.

2. A settlement was made, in pursuance of articles previous to the marriage, to convey to the use of the husband for life, remainder to the wife for life, remainder upon trust to convey unto and amongst all or any of the children, in such parts and proportions, etc., as the husband and wife, or the survivor, should, by deed or writing, with or without power of revocation, or by will, appoint, and in default of appointment, to the first and other sons in tail male; remainder, subject to trusts that failed, to the heirs of the husband. A joint appointment by deed, subject to a proviso for revocation and re-appointment by the husband and wife, and the survivor, was held well revoked by the wife surviving; and by the same deed a re-appointment to the daughter and two sons successively for life, with remainders in tail to the grandchildren, and the ultimate remainder to the daughter in fee, was held void for the excess beyond the power, viz., the estates to the grandchildren, and the ultimate limitation upon them to the daughter, and the principle of cy près is not applicable: all beyond the life estate of the children, therefore, shall go as in default of appointment. Brudenell v. Elwes, 7 Ves. 382.

3. Where person had power of appointment, and at the end of the settlement it was declared that every appointment made by her by virtue of the power in the deed, might from time to time be revoked and a new appointment made. She made an appointment without reserving a power of revocation, and then executed another appointment. Lord Hardwicke inclined to think both powers might be executed once, as they seemed to be distinct and separate powers. Langley v. Brown, 2 Atk. 199.

4. Power of new limitation, when incident to power of revocation, though not expressly reserved. Witham v. Bland, 3 Swan. 277.

5. The donee of a power of appointment over personal estate exercised the same, and reserved a power of revocation merely:—Held, that the power of revocation included in it the power of limiting new uses. Sheffield v. Von Donop, 7 Hare 42; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 481; 12 Jur. 672.

6. One makes a settlement, with power by deed to revoke it, and by the same deed, or any other, from time to time, to limit new uses; he revokes the settlement, and limits new uses, but reserves no further power to himself: he cannot, by virtue of the first power, limit any other uses. Hele v. Bond, Pre. Ch. 474.

7. A. and B., having a joint power of revocation and new appointment, by deed and fine, reciting an agreement that A. should in manner thereinafter mentioned secure to B. payment within twelve months of the principal sum of 12,000*l.* and the interest of a sum of 8,000*l.* irrevocably, revoked the uses of the former settlement, and appointed the lands to trustees for a term of 550 years, upon trust, as soon as conveniently might be (but with the consent in writing of A., if during or within twelve months from the date of the deed, and afterwards of their own authority) to raise 20,000*l.* by sale or mortgage, provided that if the 20,000*l.* thereinbefore directed to be raised within twelve months should not, within or at the expiration of that time, be raised, or if A. should die before the 20,000*l.* should be actually raised, then the deed and every clause and thing therein should be void, and the fine should enure to confirm the several estates and interests in the lands subsisting immediately before the execution of the deed of revocation:—Held, upon the whole deed, that the money was to be raised within twelve months; and that if it were not raised within that time, or A. should die before it was raised, and within the twelve months, the deed should be void. The money not having been raised within the time:—Held, that the old uses, including the power of revocation, revived. Langford (Lord) v. Little, 2 J. & L. 613; 8 Ir. Eq. R. 546.

II. CONSTRUCTION OF.

8. General power of revocation in preamble of deed may be abridged by special power in operating part of it. Fitzgerald v. Fauconberge, Fitzg. 214. And see S. C. 6 Bro. P. C. 295.

Where owner of estate in voluntary deed reserves power to himself: it is to be construed more favourably than power reserved to a stranger. Id. 220.

9. A., tenant for life, remainder to B. in tail, confesses a judgment, and afterwards A. and B. suffer a recovery, and by deed of July 1810, declare the uses as to Blackacre, that the recoverers should stand seised thereof in trust to sell, and apply the money in discharge of incumbrances affecting Blackacre and Whiteacre, and subject thereto to the use of A. in fee; and as to Whiteacre, to secure an annuity to B. during the joint lives of A. and B., and subject thereto to the use of A. for life, and after his decease to secure a jointure for his wife, and then to trustees for a term, and subject thereto to B. and his issue in strict settlement: and A. and B. were empowered, jointly, to revoke all or any of the uses or estates thereinbefore limited or declared of the said lands, or any part thereof, save as to the jointure and the term, and to appoint new uses:—Held, in the construction of the whole instrument, that the power did not authorise the revocation of the uses as to Blackacre. Brown v. Cavendish, 1 J. & L. 606; 7 Ir. Eq. R. 369.

10. In 1812, under a power to raise portions for younger children, A. B., tenant for life, charged the estates and demised the same to trustees for 500 years, upon trust to raise the amount, and to stand possessed thereof on the trusts to be afterwards declared. Power was then reserved to A. B. to revoke, alter, or vary all, every, or any of the trusts, powers, and provisions thereinbefore contained, etc.:—Held, that this power of revocation did not extend to a revocation of the term, but only of the trusts of the money. Vyvyan v. Vyvyan, 30 Beav. 65; 7 Jur., N. S., 891; 9 W. R. 879. Affirmed 8 Jur., N. S., 3; 31 L. J., Ch., 158; 5 L. T., N. S., 511.

1. The donee of a power executed a deed whereby he was expressed to confirm a prior appointment, and also to appoint certain further funds, and the deed contained a power to revoke the appointment thereby made. The confirmation was in law an appointment:—Held, that the power of revocation applied only to that part of the deed which was expressed in terms of appointment, and not to that part which was expressed in terms of confirmation. Morgan v. Gronow, 42 L. J., Ch., 410; 16 L. R., Eq., 1; 28 L. T., N. S., 434.

2. A donee of a power of appointment by deed or will appointed by deed the whole fee, reserving a power of revocation and new appointment exercisable by deed. By a subsequent deed she revoked the uses, trusts, and powers limited and appointed by the former appointment, and appointed the whole fee, reserving a power of revocation and new appointment, exercisable by deed. By a third deed she revoked the uses, trusts, and powers limited and appointed by the last appointment, but declared no new uses:—Held, that she was not by these deeds precluded from exercising the original power by way of testamentary appointment. Evans v. Saunders, Evans v. Evans, 6 De G. M. & G. 654; 1 Jur., N. S., 265; 24 L. J., Ch., 609; 3 W. R. 323; 3 Eq. Rep. 462. Affirmed sub nom. Sanders v. Evans, Sanders v. Price, 8 H. L. Ca. 721; 31 L. J., Ch., 233; 7 Jur., N. S., 1293; 9 W. R. 501; 5 L. T., N. S., 129. Reversing 18 Jur. 256; 1 Drew. 415, 654; 22 L. J., Ch., 471, 1024; 1 W. R. 220; 1 Eq. Rep. 444.

A power is not necessarily exhausted by a revocable appointment; and if such an appointment is revoked without having been acted upon, the power is generally, if not universally, still exercisable. Ib.

A power of appointment by deed or will is a single power. Ib.

A power of revocation and new appointment confers two distinct powers, which may be exercised at different times. Ib.

When Testamentary and Liable to Legacy Duty.] See REVENUE, III. 1.

III. DURATION AND TIME FOR EXERCISE.

3. A papist, having a power of revocation under a settlement made prior to the Irish Popery Acts, executes that power after the Acts passed:—Held, that the revocation was good. French v. Caddell, 3 Bro. P. C. 266.

4. A proviso in a settlement, if the wife survive her husband, they not having issue between them, then she may revoke the settlement; husband dies, leaving a son, who dies in the life of his mother: she may revoke the settlement. Holt v. Burley, 2 Vern. 651; Pre. Ch. 293.

5. A. and B., father and son, executed deeds for the settlement of some of their family estates, and for payment of the debts of A. There was a power of revocation to be exercised by A. and B. A. died without exercising it:—Held, that the power of revocation was then at an end. Montefiore v. Browne, 7 H. L. Ca. 241.

6. T. and his wife, in exercise of a joint and several power contained in their marriage settlement, appointed by deed certain funds to their daughter. This deed contained a power to T. and his wife, or the survivor of them, by deed, from time to time, during their joint lives, to revoke the trusts of the then appointment and to limit new trusts. After the death of the wife, T. executed a deed affecting to revoke the appointment to the daughter, and appointing the funds to trustees, on trust for the daughter for life with remainders over:—Held, that this last deed was inoperative, inasmuch as it was not executed during the joint lives of T. and his wife. Re Twiss, 15 W. R. 540; 16 L. T., N. S., 139.

7. A testator by his will gave certain property, including the P. H. estate, to trustees to pay the income to his wife for life, with power to them to sell upon her consent, and invest the proceeds, and apply them upon the trusts of his residuary personal estate, which were that, as soon as each and every of his children should have attained twenty-five, or died under that age, leaving issue, the trustees should sell the unconverted portion, with a right of pre-emption to his younger sons, according to seniority, and that the produce and all other his personal property should be in trust for his children and other issue as his wife should, before each and every of his children should have attained the age of twenty-five, by any deed or deeds, instrument or instruments, in writing, sealed and delivered, direct or appoint, with a gift over in default of such appointment. He died in 1840, leaving three sons and his widow surviving, and in 1841 she by a deed, which contained a power of revocation, appointed the general residuary fund among her children as tenants in common. By her will, made later in the same year, the widow devised the P. H. estate in specie to her eldest son. The youngest of the testator's children attained twenty-five in 1851; the widow did not die until 1863:—Held, that the time within which the appointment was to be made by the widow was of the substance and essence of the power, and not mere matter of form; that although the will of the widow was in form a sufficient execution of that power, yet as it had not within the period prescribed by the testator any effect whatever, and (being a will) was of course revocable, the appointment, whatever it purported to make, was invalid; and that, as there was no revocation of the deed of 1841, the interests conferred by that deed took effect upon the youngest son attaining twenty-five. Cooper v. Martin, 17 L. T., N. S., 587; 3 L. R., Ch., 47; 16 W. R. 234.

If the appointment had been in other respects good, the proceeds of the sale of the estate would have passed under the appointment of the estate. Ib.

IV. EXECUTION OF.

8. A deed of appointment, containing a power of revocation and new appointment, must be acted on, although there is evidence of a subsequent appointment having been made, the contents of which it is impossible to ascertain. Rawlings v. Richards, 28 Beav. 370.

1. Imperfect conveyances may, as evidence of intent, operate as revocations. Vawser v. Jeffery, 2 Swan. 274.

2. Mortgage in fee is a revocation pro tanto only of a settlement, with power of revocation. Thorne v. Thorne, 1 Vern. 182.

3. Conveyance to trustees inconsistent with former uses, and that trustees shall recover residue, after satisfying such uses, is a revocation of all the old uses, and not pro tanto only. Fitzgerald v. Fauconberge, Fitzg. 207. Affirmed 6 Bro. P. C. 295.

4. Power to revoke uses substituting other estates: quære, whether a substitution of equitable for legal estates, though a bad execution at law, is sufficient in equity; as where it is done by appointing under a power, and declaring uses upon the appointment which are consequently mere trusts. Cox v. Chamberlain, 4 Ves. 632.

5. Charge well created by settlement, though for volunteer, not revoked by general revocation of the uses under a power for the mere purpose of partition of joint estate and resettling to the same uses, the separate part to be taken on partition. Uxbridge (Earl) v. Bayly, 1 Ves. J. 499; 4 Bro. C. C. 13.

6. A., having a power of revocation and new appointment over an estate, of which B., his heir, was tenant in tail, by his will directed the estate "to be attached to his title as closely as possible":—Held, that the estate of B., and those of all other tenants in tail in esse at A.'s death (living in the line of the title), were abridged to estates for life only. Dorchester (Lord) v. Effingham (Earl), 3 Beav. 180. n.

7. A. settled lands, with power of revocation by writing in the presence of three witnesses, and in her last illness, by letter, desired a deed of revocation to be prepared, but died before it was done, having by will given the lands to charitable uses:—Held, a good appointment, though no revocation. Piggot v. Penrice, Gilb. Eq. Rep. 137; 1 Com. 250.

8. If one has made himself tenant for life of lands in Dale, with a power by any writing, etc., to revoke these uses and limit new ones, and he afterwards by will devises all his lands in Dale, etc., to S., having no other lands in Dale, excepting these, they shall pass if the will be circumstanced as the power requires, though no mention be made of the power. Deg v. Deg, 2 P. W. 415.

9. W. having made a settlement with a general power of revocation, made a will, by which, after reciting that he had been induced to execute the settlement contrary to his intentions and wishes, and that it was fraudulently and wickedly obtained from him, he directed the trustees and executors of the will to use their best exertions and take all steps necessary to have the deed set aside and cancelled, and then disposed of the property included in the deed:—Held, a good revocation under the power. Irwin v. Rogers, 12 Ir. Eq. R. 159.

10. It is the duty of the Court to support a power, if possible, and to give effect to its execution, if it is not exercised from improper motives or for improper objects. Carver v. Richards, 6 Jur., N. S., 410; 29 L. J., Ch., 357; 8 W. R. 349; 2 L. T., N. S., 161.

Where, therefore, a donee of an exclusive power made several successive appointments, reserving powers of revocation and new appointment, and by the last appointment showed an intention to pass the property subject to the power, though she did not thereby expressly state such appointment to be in exercise of the power, and although it was contended that the appointment rested on a vicious deed, the consequence of a vicious bargain, the Court (affirming 27 Beav. 488; 29 L. J., Ch., 169; 1 L. T., N. S., 257) carried out the intention, and declared such appointment to be a valid execution of the power. Ib.

11. Property was settled by A. with power for him to revoke the settlement by deed. A., by a deed which did not profess to execute the power, conveyed the property to his nephews beneficially:—Held, that the deed operated as a revocation. Cowlishaw v. Hardy, 25 Beav. 169.

A. settled mortgages on himself for life, with remainder to B., with a power of revocation by deed. A. transferred the mortgages to his nephew C., by a deed expressed to be made in consideration of the mortgage money. C. never paid the consideration, but alleged that A. intended a gift to him:—Held, that there was no revocation, and that either the mortgage, or the consideration money, was subject to the settlement. Ib.

12. Under a power to alter uses, the new use will not arise except in the very circumstances prescribed by the contract. M'Queen v. Farquhar, 11 Ves. 475.

13. An appointment expressed to be made in exercise of every power enabling the appointor, does not extend to property to which the appointor cannot appoint the exercise of a power of revocation, if there is other property to which the appointment can apply. Pomfret v. Perring, 5 De G. M. & G. 775; 1 Jur., N. S., 113; 24 L. J., Ch., 187. S. C. on appeal 3 W. R. 81; 24 L. J., Ch., 187; 1 Jur., N. S., 173; 3 Eq. Rep. 145. And see 18 Beav. 618; 18 Jur. 989; 24 L. T. 48.

Where a general power to appoint had been exercised as to a portion of the fund subject to it, but not as to the other part, and the deed exercising the appointment reserved a power of revocation and new appointment over the portion of the fund appointed, it was held that general words in a subsequent deed of appointment, executed by the same appointor, purporting to exercise all powers of appointment given or limited to him, or under or by virtue of which he had power to appoint, did not operate as an exercise of the power of revocation of the appointment of the portion of the fund already appointed, but only of the power to appoint the portion still remaining unappointed. Ib.

14. By a deed life annuites were granted to seven persons, to commence from the death of the grantor, and secured on land, the annuities given to such of the persons as were married women being limited to their separate use. By a deed executed more than twelve years afterwards, the grantor gave to five of the annuitants life annuities of smaller amount, to commence from the same period, but not secured on land, not given to the separate use of the grantees, and determinable on a contingency. The grantor stood in loco parentis to four of the five grantees in the second deed, but not to the fifth. The first deed was subject to a power of revocation; the second deed did not refer to the first deed, nor profess to exercise this power:—Held, that whatever probability there might be that the grantor had forgotten the execution of the first deed, the Court could not judicially attribute to a man forgetfulness of a solemn instrument executed by himself. Palmer v. Newell, 20 Beav. 32; 2 Jur., N. S., 268; 25 L. J., Ch., 461.

Held, also, that assuming the grantor to have remembered the first deed when he executed the second, the fact that the second deed did not exercise the power of the revocation, and the differences between the provisions made by the two instruments, showed an intention not to make the provisions of the second deed substitutionary for those of the former. Ib.

1. Lands were settled on A. for life, remainder to his wife for life, remainder to their children, with a power of revocation and appointment to new uses by the husband and wife jointly: proviso, that if A. should become bankrupt, etc., then the limitation to him for life should cease, and the lands should go to trustees during his life, for the benefit of his wife and children. A. agreed for the sale of his estate, and proposed to make title to the purchaser by executing this power of revocation. The conveyancer, on the part of the purchaser, required an indemnity against A. having committed any secret acts of bankruptcy, for that the power of revocation would be extinguished by the forfeiture of the life interest of A. On a bill filed by A. to compel the performance of this contract, the Court thought there was no ground for the objection, and that the mistake in opinion of the conveyancer could not save the defendant from costs. Maling v. Hill, 1 Cox 186.

2. A voluntary settlement in favour of several persons contained a power, authorising the tenant for life (a volunteer) to revoke the trusts of the property, and again re-settle the same upon such trusts as to her should seem meet:—Held, that this general power could not be controlled, and that an appointment of the property to herself absolutely, to the exclusion of the other persons entitled under the settlement, was a good execution of the power. Meade King v. Warren, 32 Beav. 111.

3. A tenant in tail under a will, with power to charge portions, and for the purpose of raising them to demise the devised hereditaments to trustees for a term, charged the estate with the payment of 4,000*l.* for the benefit of his younger children as he should appoint, and subject to appointment equally, and he appointed the hereditaments to trustees for a term, with a proviso for cesser, and reserved to himself a power of revoking any of the trusts of the money, and to declare any new trusts. He executed a subsequent deed, not noticing the former, purporting to charge part of the hereditaments with 2,000*l.* in favour of a younger child, and to create a term to secure it:—Held, that the trusts of the money were well revoked and re-appointed, but that the re-appointment of the term was void, so that the trustee of it could not give a good receipt to mortgagees for the money raised. Vyvyan v. Vyvyan, 4 De G. F. & J. 183; 8 Jur., N. S., 3; 7 Jur., N. S., 891; 31 L. J., Ch., 158; 10 W. R. 179.

4. By a marriage settlement, containing the usual limitations, the husband, having a life estate in reversion, expectant upon the death of his father, was empowered, when in possession under the limitations of the settlement, to revoke, etc., as to so much and to such part of the premises conveyed, "as shall be then in possession of any one or more tenants, by virtue of any one or more lease or leases, whereon a rent or rents, not exceeding 300*l.* by the year in the whole, shall be reserved, etc., so as there shall not, at the time of such revocation, be less than twenty years, or three lives, unexpired of such lease or leases." The clause of the settlement conferring the power concluded with a declaration, that it was the true intent and meaning of the parties that the husband should, at any time during his life, after he should come into, and be in the actual possession of, the premises (settled), have absolute power and dominion over so much thereof as should be of the clear yearly value of 300*l.* sterling, and be at full liberty to dispose of the same in such manner, and to such uses and purposes, as he should think proper. The husband (donee of the power), after the death of his father, when he was in possession under the trusts of the settlement, by a deed of revocation, purporting to be an execution of the power, and reciting that certain lands therein specified then produced a clear yearly rent of 300*l.* or thereabouts, revoked the uses of the settlement as to those lands, and appointed the same in trust for him (the donee), his heirs, and assigns. Afterwards the donee died, indebted to an amount exceeding the value of the lands so appointed, and having no other estate or effects. By his will, duly attested, and reciting his title and power to dispose of the lands specified in the deed of revocation and appointment, he devised to trustees his right and interest therein, upon trust, to sell the same, and out of the purchase money to pay his debts, etc. The lands revoked, appointed, and devised, except a very small part to the value of 8*l.* a year, were not (as recited in the deed of revocation) under lease at the time of the appointment by that deed, nor at the date of the will, but, in a suit instituted in behalf of creditors and legatees to carry the trusts of the will into execution, it was found, and reported by the officers of the court, that the lands so appointed and devised were of the value of 300*l.* a year. By the decree in that suit, the will was established, and the revocation and appointment held valid; and, upon appeal to the House of Lords against the decree, it was held that the power was rightly applied to the subject, and that the appointment was well executed. Lidwell v. Holland, 2 Bligh 99.

5. By a settlement, made in 1810, by lease and release, on the marriage of Henry K. and Mary R., certain landed estates, then limited to one F. R. for life, with remainder in fee to the said Mary R., were settled to the use of Henry K. for life, remainder to the use of Mary R., his intended wife, in like manner, with remainder to the use of all or any of the children of the marriage, with such limitations or remainders over as Henry K. and Mary K. his wife should from time to time, by any deed or deeds, writing or writings with or without power of revocation and new appointment direct, limit, or appoint; and in default of such joint direction, limitation, or appointment, or in case any such should be made which should not be a complete disposition of the said hereditaments thereby settled, then as the survivor of them, the said Henry K. and Mary K. his wife, by deed or by will should direct, limit, and appoint; and in default of such appointment, joint or several, to certain uses which would give a title to the eldest son. There were two sons of this marriage; and by a deed, dated 1832, Henry K. and Mary K., in exercise of the joint power, appointed the hereditaments, subject to their own life estates, to their youngest son (the defendant) in fee, subject to a power for them jointly by deed to revoke such appointment, and by the same or any other deed to be by them jointly executed to limit or appoint any other uses in favour of their children which might be warranted by the several powers contained in the settlement of 1810. By a deed of the 4th February, 1833, Henry K. and Mary K. jointly revoked the uses contained in the deed of 1832, but made no new appointment. On the 19th February, 1833, Mary K. died; and in the following month of May, Henry K. by will, did, in execution of the powers vested in him, direct, limit, and appoint the hereditaments to the defendant in fee:—Held, that the revocation of the joint appointment was to restore the uses of the original settlement, including the joint and several powers of appointment; and consequently that the appointment by the will of Henry K. was a valid exercise of the power by the survivor, and that the defendant was entitled to the property. Montagu v. Kater, 8 Exch. 507; 22 L. J., Exch., 154.

1. A power was limited by a settlement to H. E. to charge 3,000*l.* for his own benefit; and the settlement contained a joint power of revocation and re-appointment of uses by H. E. and G. E. They executed a deed whereby they revoked the uses, trusts, limitations, intents, and purposes, by the indenture of, etc., limited; and declared that the manors, etc., subject to the several charges and incumbrances created thereby, should be," etc.:—Held, not to be a revocation of the power to charge the 3,000*l.* Evans v. Evans, 1 W. R. 215; 22 L. J., Ch., 785.

2. If there is an original power of appointment, and then an execution of that power, reserving a power only to revoke, followed by a revocation, the original power remains unaffected; and if in the first instrument executing the original power there is reserved a power of revocation and of new appointment, such instrument does not constitute a new settlement destructive of the first, nor is the original power thereby exhausted and at an end, but, upon the revocation of such instrument, exists in full force. Saunders v. Evans, Saunders v. Price, 8 H. L. Ca. 721; 31 L. J., Ch., 233; 7 Jur., N. S., 1293; 9 W. R. 501; 5 L. T., N. S., 129. Affirming S. C. nom. Saunders v. Evans, Evans v. Evans, 6 De G. M. & G. 654; 3 W. R. 323; 1 Jur., N. S., 265; 3 Eq. Rep. 462; 24 L. J., Ch., 609. Reversing 18 Jur., N. S., 256; 1 Drew. 415, 654; 22 L. J., Ch., 471, 1024; 1 W. R. 220; 1 Eq. Rep. 444.

If there is a power of appointment to be exercised by deed or will, and the first instrument executing the power is a deed which contains the reservation of a power to revoke and to appoint anew by deed, and then there is a simple revocation of this instrument, the original power, on such revocation, being in full force, there may be a valid execution of it by will as well as by deed. Ib.

In 1794 an estate was made the subject of a settlement, under which two persons about to be married were to have life interests, remainder to the use of such person for such estate as A., the intended wife, by any deed, with or without power of revocation, attested by two or more witnesses, or by will attested by three witnesses, should from time to time, and as often as she should think fit, appoint. In 1830 she, by deed, exercised this power, and the deed contained a power, by deed, to revoke and to make a new appointment. In 1833, a deed revoking that of 1830, and newly appointing, and also reserving power, by deed, to revoke and newly appoint, was executed. This course was exactly repeated in 1835, by a deed of that date. In 1836 she executed another deed, simply revoking that of 1835. In 1848, by a will reciting the power of 1794, A. declared the uses of the estate:—Held, that the deed of 1830 had not exhausted the power of 1794, and substituted a new power for it, to be executed only by deed; and that therefore, on the revocation, in 1836, of the last preceding deed, the power of 1794 was capable of being exercised by A., either by deed or will. Ib.

3. Power to charge includes power to sell. Kenworth v. Bate, 6 Ves. 797.

4. Under a power to charge any sum for younger children, the whole estate may be disposed of. Muskerry v. Chinnery, Ll. & G. temp. Sugd. 226.

5. Husband and wife, by a post-nuptial settlement, convey part of the wife's estate to a trustee, to the use of the husband for life, remainder to their eldest son for life, etc., with an ultimate remainder in fee to the husband, and a power to him "to lease, for any time, or term of years, or lives, and with or without covenants for renewal, and in case of the determination of all or any of the aforesaid lease or leases, to make new or other leases, thereof in manner aforesaid, and with or without any fine or fines as he should think fit." He was also empowered "to raise or levy, by sale or mortgage, any sum or sums of money, not exceeding in the whole 20,000*l.*, or to charge the premises therewith," for such uses as he should appoint, and to charge to any amount for younger children. The husband and wife afterwards executed three leases of portions of the estates comprised in the settlement, for terms of 999 years, upon which fines were taken. The amount of the fines received upon the making of these and other leases, were 10,208*l.* The husband consequently mortgaged these estates, subject to the afore said leases, for a sum of 10,500*l.* The mortgagee filed a bill of foreclosure in the Court of Exchequer, and obtained a decree, in pursuance of which the lands were sold subject to the leases. The first tenant in tail under the settlement filed a bill impeaching the said decree, and also the leases, as having been made contrary to the leasing power:—Held, that the leases were not a valid execution of the power to lease, or the power to raise 20,000*l.*:—Held, also, that a vendor having sold an estate subject to impeachable leases, has a right to set them aside. Muskerry v. Chinnery, Ll. & G. temp. Plunk. 182. Reversing Ll. & G. temp. Sugd. 185. And on the last point see Sheehy v. Muskerry, 7 Cl. & F. 1; Macl. & R. 493; Ll. & G. temp. Plunk. 568.

1. Power to appoint estates, to be purchased with money produced by the sale of other estates, well executed by an appointment operating directly on the original estates. Bullock v. Fladgate, 1 Ves. & B. 471.

Power to appoint an estate includes a power to dispose of the estate and appoint the produce. The same effect has been given in the more doubtful case of a power to charge; and a power to appoint the money produced by an estate directed to be sold, has been considered as a power to appoint the estate itself. Id. 478.

2. Covenant to settle an estate in strict settlement, subject to a power to the father, tenant for life, in case there should be any younger child or children, to charge such sum or sums for such younger child or children, payable in such proportions, and at such times, as he should appoint. The power was held well executed by a will directing a sale and appointing the money. Long v. Long, 5 Ves. 445.

3. The words, "to be raised by rents and profits," will imply a power to sell. Green v. Belchier, 1 Atk. 506. Okeden v. Okeden, 1 Atk. 551, and notes.

4. Trust of a term to raise portions out of the rents and profits, to be paid as soon as conveniently may be. By virtue of the word "profits," trustees may sell or mortgage; secus, if said "annual profits." Trafford v. Ashton, 1 P. W. 415.

5. Words in will, "rents and profits," extended beyond their natural meaning, viz., "annual profits," to mortgage or sale, when necessary to effect the object, such as raising a gross sum for fines on renewal, as well as portions; and are not controlled by apparent intention to preserve estate entire. Allan v. Blackhouse, 2 Ves. & B. 65. Affirmed Jac. 631.

Devise of "profit" will pass land. S. C. 2 Ves. & B. 74.

6. Whether a sum directed to be raised out of the rents and profits of a real estate is to be raised by annual rents and profits, or by sale or mortgage, is a question of intention to be collected from the context of the will, and from the purposes to which the money is to be applied. Wilson v. Halliley, 1 Russ. & M. 590; 8 L. J., Ch., 171.

7. A gross sum to be paid out of rents and profits; the trustees, if the trust requires it, are not confined to annual profits. Booth v. Blundell, 19 Ves. 528.

II. INTEREST, CHARGE OF. WHEN AUTHORISED.

8. Power to charge lands with sum of money imports interest thereof also. Kilmurry (Lord) v. Geery, 2 Salk. 538.

9. Power to charge a sum in gross implies power to give interest also. Roe v. Pogson, 2 Madd. 457.

10. Where there is a power of charging land with a gross sum, it imports interest of course. Hall v. Carter, 2 Atk. 358; 9 Mod. 347.

11. It appears to be the established rule, that if a man has power to charge lands with a sum of money, not exceeding a certain specified sum, he may charge it with that sum and interest. Simpson v. O'Sullivan, 3 Dr. & War. 446.

12. Where there is a power to charge an estate with a gross sum, it implies a power to charge with interest likewise. Boycot v. Cotton, 1 Atk. 552.

13. A power to charge a sum in gross implies a power to give any rate of legal interest, and the rule of the Court to give 4 per cent. applies only where no rate is specified by the party having power to fix it. Lewis v. Freke, 2 Ves. J. 507.

The reason of the rule in Chancery to give interest at 4 per cent. only, is, that money is generally to be had at that rate, but the rule is not invariable. Id. 511.

14. By a settlement made in England on the marriage of D. certain real estates in Ireland were limited to trustees for 1,000 years, upon trust by mortgaging the said estates, or out of the rents and profits thereof, to raise 15,000*l.*, to be divided among the younger children of the marriage, as D. should appoint. D. appointed the whole of the portions among his children, appointing 4,000*l.* to his daughter, to be raised at certain specified times, with interest in the meantime at 5 per cent. The trustees being unable to raise the portions by mortgage, an action was brought to carry the trusts into effect:—Held, that D. having only a power of distributing the portions and not of charging them, had no power to fix the rate of interest; but that the land being in Ireland, 5 per cent. was the proper rate to be fixed by the Court. Lewis v. Freke (2 Ves. J. 507) and

Young v. Waterpark (Lord) (13 Sim. 199) distinguished. Balfour v. Cooper, 23 L. R., Ch. D., 472; 52 L. J., Ch., 495; 48 L. T. 323; 31 W. R. 569.

Held, also, that under the terms of the settlement the trustees of the term had right to apply the rents and profits, first in payment of the interest, and secondly in reduction of the capital. Ib.

Interest on Portions.] See PORTION, III.

III. OTHER CASES.

1. Power by marriage settlement to husband to charge, is not confined to the immediately preceding limitations of the reversion to him, but held to overreach all the prior limitations. Construction of a charge by will, if the reversion should never fall to testator, viz., if it should not come to him personally in his life; the charge is, therefore, ineffectual, though the reversion come to his heir. Stackhouse v. Barnston, 10 Ves. 453.

2. Trustees having laid out the fund upon a bad security obtained from the debtor, under circumstances unfavourable, and to the prejudice of other creditors, a charge on his estate under a power, their bill to enforce the charge against his son, tenant in tail under the marriage settlement, was dismissed with costs. Bradbury v. Hunter, 3 Ves. 187.

3. Power was contained in a settlement to charge the settled property by deed attested by two witnesses. 250*l.* was charged in accordance with the power, but two subsequent charges of 50*l.* and 60*l.* were created, not in accordance with the power:—Held, that the subsequent charges being invalid, the payment of interest for twenty-three years did not bind the estate of the mortgagor, who was a feme covert, in respect of these subsequent charges. Blandy v. Kimber, 24 Beav. 148.

4. In general, if a tenant for life, with power of charging, makes a charge, his personal estate is not liable to exonerate the land. Exp. Digby (Earl), Jac. 235.

5. An estate being settled to A. for life, then as to part to B. for life, remainder as to the whole to uses under which the defendant takes as tenant for life with powers to A. to charge (but not to encumber B.'s estate for life), the estate given in remainder falls in during B.'s life, and interest of the charges exhausts the rents and profits. Upon B.'s life estate falling in, the first rents and profits of that portion of the estate shall be applied in discharge of the arrear which shall not be a charge upon the inheritance. Tracy v. Hereford, 2 Bro. C. C. 129.

6. On the marriage of A. leasehold property was settled on him for life, and after his death to secure a jointure to his wife, and subject thereto to the use of the heirs male of their bodies, with liberty for A. to raise by deed, mortgage, or other writing 1,000*l.*, to be applied to any purpose he should please, but not to be raised by sale; A. assigned his interest in the leasehold property and in the 1,000*l.* to H., for securing a debt, and became bankrupt. The bankrupt's interest was sold to S., under an order in bankruptcy, made on the petition of H.:—Held, that by the assignment of A.'s estate and interest in the premises, H. became entitled to hold the mortgage as a first charge upon the estate, as well after as before the death of A., and until by payment of principal and interest it should be satisfied. Simpson v. O'Sullivan, West 337; 7 Cl. & F. 550.

7. A father and son, successive tenants for life of settled estates, in exercise of a joint power of appointment given them by the deed of settlement, raised 15,000*l.* by mortgage of the estates. The deed contained a joint and several covenant by the mortgagors for payment of the debt, and a proviso fixing, as between themselves, the proportion in which each was to be liable for payment of interest and principal. By a deed executed two days after the mortgage, the estates were vested in trustees for a term of 150 years (determinable on the death of either tenant for life), for the management of the property, to pay out of the rents and profits annuities and interest on incumbrances, and to accumulate the surplus for the purpose of paying off incumbrances, and ultimately for the tenants for life in their respective proportions. The trustees of the deed of settlement were not parties to either of those deeds:—Held, that the effect of the two deeds was not to exonerate the inheritance from the 15,000*l.*, and that, upon the death of the father, a fund in court, arising from accumulations, was payable to the son as his sole legatee. Salt v. Standish, 9 L. T., N. S., 167.

8. Lands are settled (by voluntary settlement) to such uses as A. (the settlor) shall appoint, and subject thereto to A. for life, with remainders over in strict settlement. A., in exercise of the power, creates a charge by way of mortgage on the settled property for 15,000*l.*:—Held, that the settled property was not exonerated, and that the remaindermen had no equity to call upon the personalty of A. to bear the burden of the charge created by him under the power. Jenkinson v. Harcourt, 2 W. R. 688.

9. An absolute power to charge an estate with a definite sum of money is "an incumbrance" upon the estate. Evans v. Evans, 22 L. J., Ch., 785.

10. S. being tenant for life of real estate, with remainder over, and an ultimate remainder to him in fee, and having power to charge the estate with 6,000*l.*, charged the estate with 6,000*l.* by deed, and declared that it should be held upon the trusts declared by his will. By his will he declared trusts for accumulation by investment in real estate beyond the legal period:—Held, that the deed and will could not be construed together, that the 6,000*l.* did not sink into the estate for the benefit of the inheritance, but was raisable under the deed, and must be treated as personal estate. Simmons v. Pitt, 21 W. R. 860; 43 L. J., Ch., 267.

11. A tenant for life under a power charged the estate with portions for younger children varying according to the number, being, if there were four or more, 5,000*l.* There were four younger children born, two of whom died, before the portions were raisable. The tenant for life subsequently made an appointment of the full amount of 5,000*l.*:—Held, that the appointment was effectual, notwithstanding the death of the children. Knapp v. Knapp, 12 L. R., Eq., 238; 24 L. T. 540.

IV. POWER TO MORTGAGE.

1. A power to raise or levy by sale or mortgage, or to charge, is not well exercised by taking fines on leases. Muskerry v. Chinnery, Ll. & G. temp. Plunk. 203. Reversing on this point Ll. & G. temp. Sugd. 226. And see Sheehy v. Muskerry (Lord), 1 H. L. Ca. 576; Ll. & G. temp. Plunk. 568.

2. Where tenant for life is directed to renew, with power to raise fine by mortgage, and Court directs fine to be raised by sale or mortgage, if money cannot be raised on mortgage, parties cannot be compelled to insure life of cestui que vie for better security of mortgage, but must sell. Grantley v. Garthwaite, 6 Madd. 96.

3. A., being tenant in tail of an estate in remainder expectant on the death of B., entered into articles, on his marriage, by which, after reciting that it had been agreed that the estate should, subject to B.'s life interest therein, and to the raising, by mortgage or otherwise, of any sum or sums not exceeding 15,000*l.* for A.'s use, be settled to the uses thereinafter expressed, he covenanted that he would, subject to the raising, by any ways or means, and at any time or times he should think proper, of the sum or sums before mentioned, by mortgage, annuity, or otherwise for his own benefit, and to any deed or deeds he might make for the repayment thereof and interest, do all necessary acts for settling the estate, subject to B.'s life interest, in the manner agreed upon:—Held, that A. was authorised to raise the 15,000*l.* by sale, and that he was justified in selling his interest in remainder in the whole of the estate, as the 15,000*l.* was nearly the full value of such interest. Tasker v. Small, 6 Sim. 625; 5 L. J., N. S., Ch., 321.

4. By a deed of disentail and resettlement of real estates power was given to the father and son, and for the son if he should survive, to mortgage the estate to raise such sums as might be requisite to redeem several prior mortgages: the father and son exercised their joint power of appointment, creating various charges: the son was the survivor, and he mortgaged the estates to secure 600*l.* advanced at various times to the grandfather, father, and son, during the lifetimes of the two former, on the faith of an agreement that those sums should be secured to them by a mortgage:—Held, that this mortgage was a valid execution of the power, and compound interest allowed as provided for by the prior charges. Gepp v. Majendie, 21 L. T., N. S., 168.

5. W. D., having an absolute power of appointment by deed or will over an estate, devised it to her husband, R. D., with power to sell and dispose of the same, or to raise any sum of money thereon, by mortgage or otherwise as he should think proper; "provided that such part of all and every sum and sums of money so, as aforesaid, raised by the said R. D. either by sale or mortgage, as shall be unexpended at my (his) decease, shall be charged upon the houses belonging to R. D., situate, etc., to be disposed of immediately after the decease of the said R. D., the sum to be paid to my four nieces." And she devised the reversion of the estate to her four nieces, in case it should be in mortgage; and if the estate should not be sold or mortgaged by R. D., then she devised the same to her four nieces as tenants in common in fee. R. D. mortgaged the estate, and died, never having charged his houses with any part of the mortgage money:—Held, affirming the decision below, that the condition was not a condition precedent, and that the mortgage by R. D. was a valid mortgage. Watkins v. Williams, Havard v. Church, 3 Macn. & G. 622; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 601; 16 Jur. 181.

6. A testator devised real estates in strict settlement, and empowered tenants for life (who were unimpeachable for waste) to grant mining leases for such terms, and under and subject to such rents or reservations or agreements, as to them should "seem reasonable and proper." A tenant for life, in 1843, demised mines for a term of ninety-nine years at a peppercorn rent, by way of mortgage to secure 6,000*l.* and interest:—Held, that this was a valid lease under the power, and binding on the inheritance. Mostyn v. Lancaster, Taylor v. Mostyn, 51 L. J., Ch., 696; 46 L. T. 648; 31 W. R. 3. Affirming 23 L. R., Ch. D., 583; 52 L. J., Ch., 848; 48 L. T. 715; 31 W. R. 686.

7. A power in trustees to raise by mortgage a fixed sum implies a power to raise also the incidental costs of the mortgage. Armstrong v. Armstrong, 18 L. R., Eq., 541; 43 L. J., Ch., 719.

Trustees of a marriage settlement made in 1802 were empowered to raise and levy the sum of 6,000*l.* for portions on the security of a term of 300 years in certain freeholds. Part of the 6,000*l.* was raised. In 1872 it became necessary to raise the residue, which then amounted to 3,290*l.* 8*s.* 4*d.* By an order then made in a suit which was instituted for the execution of the trusts of certain indentures of settlement, the trustees were authorised to advance this amount out of their trust funds upon the security on the term. Considerable costs had to be incurred in effecting the security, and it was asked that the lastly-named trustees might be at liberty to advance a further sum out of their trust funds upon the same security to cover the costs so incurred:—Held, that the term of 300 years might properly be taken as a security, not only for the whole amount of 6,000*l.*, but also for the costs. Ib.

I. CREATION AND EXISTENCE OF.

1. A power to let is the same as a power to lease. Parker v. Sowerby, 1 W. R. 404.

2. The grant of a lease is primâ facie inconsistent with an express trust for sale; but circumstances may justify a departure from the words of the trust. Evans v. Jackson, 8 Sim. 217; 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 8.

3. A testator devised lands to trustees upon trust, out of the rents and profits, to pay two annuities, and subject thereto to permit A., and after him his wife, to receive and take the rents and profits during their respective lives; and after the decease of the survivor, he devised the lands to their children:—Held, that the trustees could grant a valid lease of the lands for a term of ten years. Naylor v. Arnitt, 1 Russ. & M. 501.

4. The Court cannot (independent of the statute) authorise trustees for infants to grant a mining lease, although the legal estate is vested in such trustees, and such leases would be beneficial to the infants. Wood v. Patteson, 10 Beav. 541.

5. A trustee in whom the legal estate is vested, and who has active duties to perform, may, without any express leasing power, make a yearly or other reasonable letting of tenantable lands. Naylor v. Arnitt (1 Russ. & M. 501) followed; Wood v. Patteson (10 Beav. 541), and Re Shaw's Trusts (12 L. R., Eq., 124) explained and distinguished. Fitzpatrick v. Waring, 11 L. R., Ir., 35.

6. Upon a special case presented under 22 & 23 Vict., c. 35, and the 23 & 24 Vict., c. 38, the Court declined to give power to trustees to grant leases of real estate for a term not exceeding ten years. Re Shaw's Trusts, 25 L. T., N. S., 22; 12 L. R., Eq., 124; 19 W. R. 1025.

7. Power under an Act of Parliament to lessee, his executors, administrators, and assigns, to grant building leases, does not extend to the tenant in the renewed lease, according to the usual course of church leases. Collett v. Hooper, 13 Ves. 255.

8. A tenant for life, with a leasing power, remainder to B. in tail, executed a disentailing deed, whereby they conveyed the estate to the use of A. for life, remainder to the use of B. in fee:—Held, that A.'s leasing power was not extinguished. O'Fay v. Burke, 8 Ir. Ch. R. 225.

Discretionary.] 9. A testator gave to his trustees a special power of leasing at their absolute discretion; which formed part of a special scheme of management of his mansion house and estate for a limited period:—Held, in a suit for the execution of the trusts of the will, that the Court would compel the trustees to exercise the power of leasing. Tempest v. Camoys (Lord) (No. 1), 21 L. R., Ch. D., 576.

II. EXECUTION OF.

1. By Agreement to Lease, 5872.
2. Confirmation of Invalid Leases, 5873.
3. Statutory Relief, 5874.

1. By Agreement to Lease.

10. Tenant for life, with power to lease by deed, does not execute power by a written agreement for lease. Symons v. Symons, 6 Madd. 207.

11. Tenant for life, with a leasing power, enters into an agreement by article, to make a lease pursuant to the power. This agreement shall bind the remainderman. Shannon v. Bradstreet, 1 Sch. & Lef. 52.

12. A., tenant for life, with a power to lease by deed, duly executed under her hand and seal, reserving the best yearly rent; plaintiff enters into possession, and expends money in building under an agreement for a lease evidenced only by the memorandum in writing, entered in the book of A.'s authorised agent, signed, not by the agent himself, but by his clerk, although in evidence to have been approved by him, and according to the usual course of business; A. died; and on a bill for specific performance against the remainderman:—Held, first no sufficient agreement in writing; also, the plaintiff not entitled to compensation from A.'s representatives for money laid out by him on the faith of the alleged agreement. Blore v. Sutton, 3 Meriv. 237.

13. An agreement by feme covert to execute a power of leasing over lands settled to her separate use:—Held, to be a valid execution of the power, without deciding whether the married woman was personally bound by the agreement. Dowell v. Dew, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 345; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 158; 7 Jur. 117.

14. Though a contract to lease by a tenant for life with a leasing power cannot be enforced as an execution of the power, it may be partially enforced by decreeing a lease for the life of the tenant for life, if the contract was bonâ fide, and more especially if there has been an outlay on the faith of it. Dyas v. Crwise, 8 Ir. Eq. R. 407; 2 J. & L. 460.

15. A bill for specific performance of an agreement for a lease signed by the grantor only, and contrary to his leasing power, of which the plaintiff had notice afterwards, amended, praying an execution of the agreement for the life of the grantor, without requiring compensation for the difference of interest, dismissed, the case proved for the plaintiff creating doubts and suspicions of the fairness of the transactions. O'Rourke v. Percival, 2 Ball & B. 58.

1. Specific performance of an agreement for a lease, in consideration of the surrender of an old lease, refused, the tenant suppressing that the life on which the old lease depended was, when the agreement was signed, in extremis; and as the new lease would, under a power of leasing, at the highest rent, be void, the surrender of the whole lease forming part of the consideration. Ellard v. Llandaff (Lord), 1 Ball & B. 241.

Equity will not direct a lease, void under a power, to be executed, as it would not bind the inheritance, and might embarrass remainderman. Id. 251.

2. A solicitor to tenants for life, with power of leasing settled real estate, who had obtained from his clients a parol agreement for a lease, on faith of which he expended large sums:—Held, not entitled to a lease. Trotman v. Flesher, Flesher v. Trotman, 3 Giff. 1; 7 Jur., N. S., 386; 4 L. T., N. S., 108.

Specific performance of a parol agreement by a tenant for life, with a power of leasing, not decreed on the ground of possession and expenditure, if prejudicial to remaindermen. Ib.

A tenant for life, with a power of leasing, cannot by parol agreement for a lease bind the remaindermen. Ib.

3. Insolvency is a ground upon which the Court will refuse to order specific performance of an agreement to grant a lease, but there must be proof of a general insolvency, and a particular default in the payment of rent to the landlord of the premises last occupied by the person contracting for the lease, will not disentitle him to the performance of the contract, where there is the testimony of unexceptionable witnesses to his responsibility. A., having a life interest in premises vested in trustees, who had a power of leasing, agreed to grant a lease for twenty-one years to B. The trustees refused to grant a lease to B., on the ground that he was in insolvent circumstances, and that the grant of such lease would be a breach of trust against their cestuis que trustent. The Court, being of opinion that B. was entitled to specific performance, and that the trustees had given A. some authority to act, ordered the trustees to execute a lease to B., to the extent of A.'s interest. Neale v. Mackenzie, 1 Keen 474; 1 Jur. 149.

4. By a will devising real estate in strict settlement, powers of granting building leases were given to any tenant for life and to trustees during the minority of any tenant in tail. The tenant for life, in pursuance of his power, entered into a contract to grant a building lease, but died without having executed a lease, and was succeeded by an infant tenant in tail:—Held, that the trustees had power to effectuate the contract of the tenant for life by executing a lease. Davis v. Hereford, 22 L. R., Ch. D., 128; 52 L. J., Ch., 61; 47 L. T. 540; 31 W. R. 61.

2. Confirmation of Invalid Leases.

5. Devisees in trust having the legal estate, with a power of leasing, in possession, until the cestuis que trustent attained twenty-one, leases not conformable to the power held void in equity, and not confirmed by acceptance of rent. Bowes v. East London Waterworks Co., Jac. 324.

Trustees having committed breach of trust, by granting longer leases than they had power by deed to do, the fact of the cestuis que trustent receiving rent from the lessees in ignorance of the invalidity of their leases, did not operate as a new agreement; but the cestuis que trustent having neglected to look into their rights, no account directed beyond filing of bill, and no costs to plaintiffs. S. C. 3 Madd. 373.

6. Where a previous tenant for life of the estate, having granted a lease, which two of three tenants in common had confirmed, it was held that the third could not impeach the lease in a suit for partition in which he was a co-plaintiff with his co-tenants. Story v. Johnson, 2 Y. & Coll. 586; 5 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 9.

7. Where lease not warranted by power is granted by tenant for life, containing covenant for perpetual renewal, the reversioner, by accepting for many years after possession the rent reserved, does not confirm the lease, so far as relates to renewal. Higgins v. Rosse, 3 Bligh 113.

8. A testator devised real estate to trustees upon certain trusts: and he directed that the estate should and might be leased by the the trustees, and the survivor of them, and the executors or administrators of such survivor. One of the trustees died in the lifetime of the testator, and the other disclaimed: and the heir at law of the testator, who was tenant for life of a moiety of the estate, granted a lease, purporting to be in execution of the power:—Held (reversing 10 Jur., N. S., 1228; 12 W. R. 195), that the lease was not binding on the remainderman:—Held, also, that acceptance of rent by the remainderman was not a confirmation of the lease. The lease had been purchased under the usual condition, not to inquire into the lessor's title:— Held (affirming 10 Jur., N. S., 1228; 12 W. R. 195), that the purchaser could not maintain the defence of purchase for value without notice. Robson v. Flight, 5 N. R. 344; 3 De G. J. & S. 608; 34 L. J., Ch., 226; 11 L. T., N. S., 725.

9. In 1763 P. C. the elder demised certain lands to A. S. and his heirs, for three lives, the last of whom died in April 1825. In 1788 J. C., being seised in fee of the reversion expectant on the lease of 1763, settled it to the use of himself for life, with remainder (subject to a jointure and a term for raising portions) to the use of his first and other sons in tail male, with remainder to himself in fee, and reserved to himself a power to make leases at the best rent. In 1794 J. C. demised the same lands to T. S. (who was entitled to the interest in the lease of 1763) and his heirs, for the term of three lives, at a rent which was greatly below the best rent, and covenanted for the quiet enjoyment of the lessees and his heirs, against the acts of J. C., and all persons claiming under him. In 1815, upon the marriage of P. C. the younger, the eldest son of J. C., the lands were conveyed by J. C. and P. C. to trustees and their heirs, "subject to the several tenants' leases thereof now subsisting," to uses for the benefit of J. C., P. C.

II. EXECUTION OF.

1. By Agreement to Lease, 5872.
2. Confirmation of Invalid Leases, 5873.
3. Statutory Relief, 5874.

1. By Agreement to Lease.

10. Tenant for life, with power to lease by deed, does not execute power by a written agreement for lease. Symons v. Symons, 6 Madd. 207.

11. Tenant for life, with a leasing power, enters into an agreement by article, to make a lease pursuant to the power. This agreement shall bind the remainderman. Shannon v. Bradstreet, 1 Sch. & Lef. 52.

12. A., tenant for life, with a power to lease by deed, duly executed under her hand and seal, reserving the best yearly rent; plaintiff enters into possession, and expends money in building under an agreement for a lease evidenced only by the memorandum in writing, entered in the book of A.'s authorised agent, signed, not by the agent himself, but by his clerk, although in evidence to have been approved by him, and according to the usual course of business; A. died; and on a bill for specific performance against the remainderman:—Held, first no sufficient agreement in writing; also, the plaintiff not entitled to compensation from A.'s representatives for money laid out by him on the faith of the alleged agreement. Blore v. Sutton, 3 Meriv. 237.

13. An agreement by feme covert to execute a power of leasing over lands settled to her separate use:—Held, to be a valid execution of the power, without deciding whether the married woman was personally bound by the agreement. Dowell v. Dew, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 345; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 158; 7 Jur. 117.

14. Though a contract to lease by a tenant for life with a leasing power cannot be enforced as an execution of the power, it may be partially enforced by decreeing a lease for the life of the tenant for life, if the contract was bonâ fide, and more especially if there has been an outlay on the faith of it. Dyas v. Cruise, 8 Ir. Eq. R. 407; 2 J. & L. 460.

15. A bill for specific performance of an agreement for a lease signed by the grantor only, and contrary to his leasing power, of which the plaintiff had notice afterwards, amended, praying an execution of the agreement for the life of the grantor, without requiring compensation for the difference of interest, dismissed, the case proved for the plaintiff creating doubts and suspicions of the fairness of the transactions. O'Rourke v. Percival, 2 Ball & B. 58.

1. Specific performance of an agreement for a lease, in consideration of the surrender of an old lease, refused, the tenant suppressing that the life on which the old lease depended was, when the agreement was signed, in extremis; and as the new lease would, under a power of leasing, at the highest rent, be void, the surrender of the whole lease forming part of the consideration. Ellard v. Llandaff (Lord), 1 Ball & B. 241.

Equity will not direct a lease, void under a power, to be executed, as it would not bind the inheritance, and might embarrass remainderman. Id. 251.

2. A solicitor to tenants for life, with power of leasing settled real estate, who had obtained from his clients a parol agreement for a lease, on faith of which he expended large sums:—Held, not entitled to a lease. Trotman v. Flesher, Flesher v. Trotman, 3 Giff. 1; 7 Jur., N. S., 386; 4 L. T., N. S., 108.

Specific performance of a parol agreement by a tenant for life, with a power of leasing, not decreed on the ground of possession and expenditure, if prejudicial to remaindermen. Ib.

A tenant for life, with a power of leasing, cannot by parol agreement for a lease bind the remaindermen. Ib.

3. Insolvency is a ground upon which the Court will refuse to order specific performance of an agreement to grant a lease, but there must be proof of a general insolvency, and a particular default in the payment of rent to the landlord of the premises last occupied by the person contracting for the lease, will not disentitle him to the performance of the contract, where there is the testimony of unexceptionable witnesses to his responsibility. A., having a life interest in premises vested in trustees, who had a power of leasing, agreed to grant a lease for twenty-one years to B. The trustees refused to grant a lease to B., on the ground that he was in insolvent circumstances, and that the grant of such lease would be a breach of trust against their cestuis que trustent. The Court, being of opinion that B. was entitled to specific performance, and that the trustees had given A. some authority to act, ordered the trustees to execute a lease to B., to the extent of A.'s interest. Neale v. Mackenzie, 1 Keen 474; 1 Jur. 149.

4. By a will devising real estate in strict settlement, powers of granting building leases were given to any tenant for life and to trustees during the minority of any tenant in tail. The tenant for life, in pursuance of his power, entered into a contract to grant a building lease, but died without having executed a lease, and was succeeded by an infant tenant in tail:—Held, that the trustees had power to effectuate the contract of the tenant for life by executing a lease. Davis v. Hereford, 22 L. R., Ch. D., 128; 52 L. J., Ch., 61; 47 L. T. 540; 31 W. R. 61.

2. Confirmation of Invalid Leases.

5. Devisees in trust having the legal estate, with a power of leasing, in possession, until the cestuis que trustent attained twenty-one, leases not conformable to the power held void in equity, and not confirmed by acceptance of rent. Bowes v. East London Waterworks Co., Jac. 324.

Trustees having committed breach of trust, by granting longer leases than they had power by deed to do, the fact of the cestuis que trustent receiving rent from the lessees in ignorance of the invalidity of their leases, did not operate as a new agreement; but the cestuis que trustent having neglected to look into their rights, no account directed beyond filing of bill, and no costs to plaintiffs. S. C. 3 Madd. 373.

6. Where a previous tenant for life of the estate, having granted a lease, which two of three tenants in common had confirmed, it was held that the third could not impeach the lease in a suit for partition in which he was a co-plaintiff with his co-tenants. Story v. Johnson, 2 Y. & Coll. 586; 5 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 9.

7. Where lease not warranted by power is granted by tenant for life, containing covenant for perpetual renewal, the reversioner, by accepting for many years after possession the rent reserved, does not confirm the lease, so far as relates to renewal. Higgins v. Rosse, 3 Bligh 113.

8. A testator devised real estate to trustees upon certain trusts: and he directed that the estate should and might be leased by the the trustees, and the survivor of them, and the executors or administrators of such survivor. One of the trustees died in the lifetime of the testator, and the other disclaimed: and the heir at law of the testator, who was tenant for life of a moiety of the estate, granted a lease, purporting to be in execution of the power:—Held (reversing 10 Jur., N. S., 1228; 12 W. R. 195), that the lease was not binding on the remainderman:—Held, also, that acceptance of rent by the remainderman was not a confirmation of the lease. The lease had been purchased under the usual condition, not to inquire into the lessor's title:—Held (affirming 10 Jur., N. S., 1228; 12 W. R. 195), that the purchaser could not maintain the defence of purchase for value without notice. Robson v. Flight, 5 N. R. 344; 3 De G. J. & S. 608; 34 L. J., Ch., 226; 11 L. T., N. S., 725.

9. In 1763 P. C. the elder demised certain lands to A. S. and his heirs, for three lives, the last of whom died in April 1825. In 1788 J. C., being seised in fee of the reversion expectant on the lease of 1763, settled it to the use of himself for life, with remainder (subject to a jointure and a term for raising portions) to the use of his first and other sons in tail male, with remainder to himself in fee, and reserved to himself a power to make leases at the best rent. In 1794 J. C. demised the same lands to T. S. (who was entitled to the interest in the lease of 1763) and his heirs, for the term of three lives, at a rent which was greatly below the best rent, and covenanted for the quiet enjoyment of the lessees and his heirs, against the acts of J. C., and all persons claiming under him. In 1815, upon the marriage of P. C. the younger, the eldest son of J. C., the lands were conveyed by J. C. and P. C. to trustees and their heirs, "subject to the several tenants' leases thereof now subsisting," to uses for the benefit of J. C., P. C.

the younger, his intended wife, and the issue of the marriage; and divers provisions were thereby made for P. C. the younger, and his intended wife, which did or might take effect out of the life estate of J. C.; and J. C. and P. C. covenanted that the lands were free from incumbrances, "the several tenant's leases thereof" excepted. J. C. died in September 1836, and thereupon P. C. brought an ejectment to recover the possession of the lands demised by the lease of 1794, one of the cestuis que vies in it being still in esse, and obtained judgment therein; thereupon, the person interested in the lease of 1794 filed his bill for an injunction against the proceedings at law, and to compel P. C. the younger to execute a lease to him similar to that of 1794, charging, that by the settlement of 1815, P. C. the younger had agreed to confirm the leases on the estate, and that it was inequitable in him to refuse to do so, and to throw the plaintiff on the assets of J. C. for compensation, inasmuch as he, P. C., had derived great benefits from the life estates of J. C. P. C. denied that there was any intention on the part of the parties to the settlement of 1815, to confirm the leases of the lands; he denied notice of the lease of 1794, and said that the leases to which the settlement of 1815 was made subject, were the leases executed by J. C., pursuant to his power. The only evidence of notice was the possession of the tenant:—Held, first, that P. C. the younger was bound to confirm the lease of 1794; second, that the personal representative of J. C. was not a necessary party to the suit. Stoughton v. Crosbie, 5 Ir. Eq. R. 451.

1. Lord D., tenant for life, purporting to exercise a leasing power, made a lease in 1767, covenanting for quiet enjoyment against the acts of all claiming through him. In 1791 and 1792 Lord D. and his son, tenant in tail in remainder, joined in suffering recoveries, and resettled the estates, subject to the then existing leases, Lord D.'s son having secured to him an annuity of 2,000*l.*, and 30,000*l.* for his debts. Lord D. died in 1799, and the estates were subsequently again resettled by his son, and the then remainderman. In 1848 the lease was impeached as an excess of the power:—Held, that on the doctrine of Taylor v. Stibbert (2 Ves. J. 437) and Stoughton v. Crosbie (5 Ir. Eq. Rep. 451) the lease was then valid, whether originally void or not. Donegal (Marquis) v. Greg, 13 Ir. Eq. R. 12.

The doctrine of these cases does not clash with the principle of Garrard v. Lauderdale (Lord) and similar cases, preventing a stranger from taking advantage of a creditor's deed or the like, to which he is not a party. The two classes of authorities distinguished. Ib.

3. Statutory Relief.

2. The 12 & 13 Vict., c. 26, and 13 & 14 Vict., c. 17, for affording relief against defects in leases made under powers, do not apply to leases granted by a mere stranger to a leasing power. Exp. Cooper, Re North London Railway Co., 34 L. J., Ch., 373; 11 Jur., N. S., 103.

3. Under a will which empowered the trustees thereby appointed to grant building leases for ninety-nine years at increasing rentals, and ordinary leases for twenty-one years at the best rents which could be obtained, and provided that a lease granted under either power might contain an option of purchase by the lessee, the trustees demised to C. a piece of freehold and a piece of leasehold land for thirty-five years, at a nominal rent as to both for the first quarter, and afterwards, as to the freehold at an increasing rent, and as to the leasehold at a fixed rent. The lessee did not covenant to build, but only to repair all buildings erected or to be erected on the land, and to insure; and the lease gave him an option of purchase as to any part of the premises during the first twenty-one years. In exercise of this option, C. purchased the leasehold portion of the land, which was accordingly assigned to him. Doubts having afterwards arisen as to the validity of the lease, a notice was indorsed upon it, pursuant to 12 & 13 Vict., c. 26, and signed by C. and the trustees of the will, declaring that the lease should be considered in equity as a contract to grant a valid lease under the power to grant ordinary leases. Upon the sale by C. of the leasehold land purchased by him, objection was taken to the title on the ground that the lease, not being a building lease, and being granted for more than twenty-one years, was an invalid exercise of the power:—Held, that, inasmuch as the lease did not contain any covenant to build, it was invalid as a building lease; that the defect could not be remedied under 12 & 13 Vict., c. 26, by turning that which was a lease of one kind into a contract for a lease of another kind; and that, even if that could be done, the lease would still be invalid in consequence of the rent reserved in respect of the freehold portion being an increasing rent, which was not in accordance with the power to grant leases other than building leases. Hallett to Martin, 52 L. J., Ch., 804; 48 L. T. 894.

Held, also, that the lease being bad, the option of purchase was ineffectual and could not be exercised. Ib.

III. TO WHOM LEASES MAY BE GRANTED.

4. A mortgage containing a power enabling the mortgagor, until foreclosure, to grant leases, and the mortgagor, in exercise of the power, granted a lease to a trustee for himself:—Held, that the lease was a valid exercise of the power. Bevan v. Habgood, 7 Jur., N. S., 41; 30 L. J., Ch., 107.

5. Trustees of a will had power to grant leases to any "person or persons" they should think fit:—Held, that this authorised them to grant a lease to a limited company. Re Jeffcock's Trusts, 51 L. J., Ch., 507.

IV. FORM AND CONTENTS OF LEASE.

1. Clauses and Conditions. In General, 5874.
2. Length of Term, 5875.
3. Fines, 5876.
4. Rent Reserved, 5878.

1. Clauses and Conditions. In General.

6. A clause of surrender in a lease, under a power which does not expressly warrant such a clause, will vitiate the lease. Muskerry v. Chinnery, Ll. & G. temp. Plunk. 201. Reversing Ll. & G. temp. Sudg. 229.

Where the power is unlimited, a clause, permitting waste, does not invalidate the lease. S. C. Ll. & G. temp. Sugd. 238. See S. C. Ll. & G. temp. Plunk. 182, 568.

1. Power reserved upon marriage settlement to tenants for life to grant or renew leases for lives, provided that a right of re-entry is reserved upon such leases, for non-payment of rent, is well executed by lease for lives, providing a re-entry in case the rent remains in arrear fifteen days, and there is no sufficient distress on premises. Smith v. Jersey (Earl), 3 Bligh 290.

2. A court of equity will not, against the reversioner, reform a lease executed under a power, where it contains covenants not warranted. Medwin v. Sandham, 3 Swan. 685.

3. The last previous lease of premises included in a renewal is not the only evidence receivable of what are usual clauses within the meaning of a power requiring the usual clauses to be inserted in renewals; and the Court refused to set aside a renewal impeached for varying from the previous lease, in a case where the objection was not made by the bill so as to lead the defendant to explain it. Donegal (Marquis) v. Greg, 13 Ir. Eq. R. 12.

4. The lease of a tenant for life, with power of leasing under certain conditions, must be in strict conformity to these conditions; and if it varies from them in the interest demised or the rent reserved, before the above statutes, it could not be supported against the remainderman. Cavan (Countess) v. Pulteney, 6 Bro. P. C. 175; 5 T. R. 567.

5. Where leases of way-leaves (colliery) entered into a correspondence with the tenant for life with power of leasing for a new lease, proposed as a renewal of the former, which contained a usual clause giving the lessees an option of determining the lease on notice, but the correspondence was silent as to the insertion of such a clause:—Held, that the lessees might reasonably have understood (whether it were mutual or not) that the new lease was to contain such a clause, and that they ought not to be compelled to accept the lease without it:—Held, also, that the tenant for life not having under the will a power to grant such a lease, the reversioner, although able to do so, was not entitled to enforce a specific performance of it. Quære, in executory agreements, whether there is a presumption in favour of the insertion of such customary stipulation. Ricketts v. Bell, 1 De G. & Sm. 335; 11 Jur. 918.

6. A settlement of house property gave power to the trustees to demise or agree to demise all or any of the messuages "to any person or persons who shall improve or repair the same, or covenant or agree to improve or repair the same, or shall expend or agree to expend such sum or sums of money in improvements thereof respectively, as shall be thought adequate for the interest therein respectively." The trustees agreed to let a house on the terms of a letter by which the tenant undertook "to do necessary repairs:"—Held, by Chitty, J., that the agreement did not satisfy the terms of the power, and that specific performance of it could not be decreed at the suit of the trustees. But held, by the Court of Appeal, that the agreement imposed upon the tenant the burden of doing all repairs which were requisite during the term, and that it satisfied the requisitions of the power. Doe v. Withers (2 B. & Ad. 896) doubted. Truscott v. Diamond Rock Boring Co., 20 L. R., Ch. D., 251; 51 L. J., Ch., 259; 46 L. T. 7; 30 W. R. 277.

7. A testator devised real estates in strict settlement, and empowered tenants for life (who were unimpeachable for waste) to grant mining leases for such terms, and under and subject to such rents or reservations or agreements, as to them should "seem reasonable and proper." A tenant for life, in 1843, demised mines for a term of ninety-nine years at a peppercorn rent, by way of mortgage to secure 6,000*l.* and interest:—Held, that this was a valid lease under the power, and binding on the inheritance. Mostyn v. Lancaster, Taylor v. Mostyn, 51 L. J., Ch., 696; 46 L. T. 648; 31 W. R. 3. Affirmed 23 L. R., Ch. D., 583; 52 L. J., Ch., 848; 48 L. T. 715; 30 W. R. 686.

The said lease of 1843 referred to a prior lease of the same mines granted by the testator in 1829, and purported to grant such on the like liberties, powers, authorities, and privileges thereby granted, and all other liberties, etc., necessary for working the mines, except as in the said lease of 1829 was excepted. The lease of 1829 excepted certain minerals from the demise, and contained covenants by the lessees not to remove the pillars of the mines without the consent of the testator, his heirs or assigns:—Held, that the lease of 1843 incorporated the provisions in the lease of 1829 against the removal of the pillars. Ib.

2. Length of Term.

8. Where one has power to make leases for ten years, and he makes one for twenty, it is a good lease for ten years. Pawcy v. Bowen, 1 Ch. Ca. 23; 3 Ch. Rep. 11.

9. A tenant for life, with power to grant leases for twenty-one years, or three lives, agrees to grant a lease for thirty-one years:—Held, that he is only bound to grant such a lease as is warranted by the power. Byrne v. Acton, 1 Bro. P. C. 186.

10. J. S. by marriage articles covenants to settle his estate to certain uses, reserving to himself a power of making leases for thirty-one years or three lives. He grants a lease to A. for three lives or thirty-one years which shall last longest:—Held, a good execution of the power. Commons v. Marshall, 6 Bro. P. C. 168. And see Montgomery v. Charteris, 5 Dow 293.

11. A power of attorney given by the owner in fee, to make leases "for such terms of lives or years as should be agreed on":—Held, under the circumstances to warrant the making of a lease for lives renewable for ever. Boyland v. Warner, Hay. & J. 79.

12. Tenant for life of estate, on which were mines opened, with power to let leases in possession for twenty-one years, reserving best rent, leases the mines, opened and unopened, after her death to himself during his life, and after the death of the survivor for the benefit of their children. The settlement contained a power to S. during his life, and after his death to the wife during her life, and after the death of the survivor to the trustee, to renew leases for lives, and take fines on renewals, but so that the usual rents were still reserved. And it was declared that the trustee should hold all fines which he might take in trust for the child or children who should be then entitled to the inheritance of the premises. S. subsequently assigned his interest under the settlement to B. by way of mortgage. The trustee of the settlement disputed the right of S. to take the fines for his own benefit, claiming them on behalf of the wife. S. accordingly filed a bill against the trustee and B., praying that he might be declared entitled to take the fines on renewals of leases for his own benefit. S. afterwards became bankrupt, and his assignee obtained a supplemental order to carry on the suit:—Held, first, that S. was entitled to take the fines on renewals for his own benefit. Simpson v. Bathurst, Shepherd v. Bathurst, 5 L. R., Ch., 193; 18 W. R. 772; 22 L. T., N. S., 29.

Held, secondly, that inasmuch as the legal estate was outstanding and beyond S.'s control, and the trustee had interfered with his power of granting leases, he was entitled to bring a suit in equity for declaration of his rights. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that the power of granting renewed leases was not extinguished or suspended either by the assignment of S.'s interest by way of mortgage or by his bankruptcy, but that such power might be still exercised by him with the concurrence of the mortgagee and assignee. Ib.

4. Rent Reserved.

1. Where a power of leasing for years required the insertion in the leases of a clause of re-entry, if rent should be behind for twenty-one days; and leases were afterwards made with a power of re-entry, if the rent should be behind or unpaid for twenty-one days, and no sufficient distress could he had:—Held, that such leases were valid, and might be supported. Tankerville (Lord) v. Wingfield, 7 Price 343; 5 Moore 346. n.; 2 B. & B. 498. n.; 3 Eden 331. n.

2. A. by will empowered his devisee for life, of real estate, to demise and lease for twenty-one years, "so as upon each lease there were reserved and made payable, during the continuance thereof, the best imposed yearly rent that could reasonably be had for the same, without taking any sum or sums of money by way of fine or income for or in respect of such lease or leases, and that in every such lease there should be contained a clause of re-entry for non-payment." In exercise of this power, a lease was made for twenty-one years, to hold from the 11th October 1833, at the yearly rent of 903*l.*, payable by equal half-yearly payments, viz., on the 6th April and on the 11th October in every year except the last half year's rent, which was thereby reserved and agreed to be paid on the 1st August next before the determination of the term:—Held, that this lease was a valid execution of the power. Rutland v. Wythe, 355; 10 Cl. & F. 419.

3. A settlement authorised D., for the encouraging of building in B., to demise houses, lands, and tenements in B. upon building or repairing leases, either for one, two, or more lives, or to continue for and during ninety-nine years, to be computed from the day of the date of such lease, or for any term of years not exceeding ninety-nine years, to take effect either in possession or reversion, or to make fee farm grants, so as in such grants, demises, and leases there be reserved, to continue payable during the continuance of them, the best rent to be got without a fine, and so as in every such lease or grant there be a clause or condition of re-entry for non-payment of the rent reserved thereon; and it authorised leases, under other restrictions, of the other premises comprised in it, besides the houses and buildings at B. Lord D. made a lease in 1767 of certain land and quays in B., with liberty to receive quayage usually payable, and the free use of a certain canal, habendum for three lives and the life of the survivor, and after his death for ninety-nine years from the date of the lease, yielding 8*l.*, until 1791, when a subsisting lease of some of the quays would fall in, and 50*l.* for the residue of the term demised, with covenants for building and improving, and a clause of re-entry upon non-payment of the rent for three months or breach of the covenants. Semble, this was a good building and repairing lease, though including quayage and the use of the canal, which alone would not be subjects of such a lease. Donegal (Marquis) v. Greg, 13 Ir. Eq. R. 12.

Semble, also, that the term for lives and years concurrent was within the power; that the rent was well reserved, though the higher sum was not payable for the entire term; and that the clause of re-entry was sufficient, though neither immediate on non-payment nor in the usual form. Ib.

A lease made under a power requiring the rent to be reserved payable during the continuance of the lease, was dated in June 1827, and reserved the first half year's rent on the 1st May then next:—Held, that the lease was not thereby avoided, though no rent appeared payable from June to November 1827, especially as the objection was not mentioned in the bill, for, if mentioned, the defendant might have made a case to explain it, or be relieved against it. Ib.

A power required that, in leases of premises then in lease, the rent reserved should not be less than the rent then payable out of the same premises. A lease of 1767 had demised quays and other premises, with liberty to receive quayage not exceeding 2*d.* per ton. A lease of 1827, made under the power, demised the quays and premises described as in the leases of 1767 together with the wharfage and quayage of all ships and vessels resorting to the quays and docks (without any limitation of the rate per ton), at a rent of the same amount as was reserved in 1767, to which it was objected that the same rent was not reserved, as the renewal included additional premises:—Held, not a valid objection, as the rent was not reserved out of the quayage, and by the removal of the restriction the lessor passed nothing new. Ib.

By a subsequent lease of 1831, reciting that the unlimited quayage was included by mistake in that of 1827, the premises, as originally leased, were demised at the same rent and fine as in the lease of 1827, and the unlimited quayage at a small additional fine and rent:—Held, that the lessee could rely on the lease of 1831, which would have been valid if made in 1827, when the principal sum was paid, though, perhaps, impeachable if originating in 1831. Ib.

The nature of a right of quayage or wharfage considered. Ib.

1. Power reserved upon marriage settlement to tenants for life to grant or renew leases for lives, provided that a right of re-entry is reserved upon such leases for non-payment of rent, is well executed by lease for lives, provided a re-entry in case the rent remains in arrear fifteen days, and there is no sufficient distress on premises. Smith v. Jersey (Earl), 3 Bligh 290.

2. Toll reserved on a lease of a mine made by a tenant for life, and a power will go to the remainderman. Basset v. Basset, Amb. 843.

3. In a settlement, a power is reserved to tenant for life to make leases of all lands anciently demised, reserving the ancient rents, and of the other lands, reserving the best improved rents. Tenant for life being ill, and not having the counterparts of the old leases, makes a general lease to his sister of all the lands, paying for the lands that had been let the ancient and accustomed rents, and for the lands not usually let the full and improved rents and value thereof. Lease adjudged void by the Lord Keeper and Lord C. J. Trever; contrà the opinion of Lord C. J. Holt. Orby v. Mohun, 2 Vern. 531; Pre. Ch. 257; Gilb. Eq. Rep. 45. Affirmed 6 Bro. P. C. 145.

4. One having a power to lease at the most improved rent, agrees to grant a lease at a rent to be estimated at a fair valuation, without reference to improvements made by the lessee, but these improvements are deemed part of the consideration for the lease. Quære, whether such a lease is consistent with the terms of the power. Price v. Assheton, 1 Y. & Coll. 82; 4 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 4.

5. A lease, under an unrestricted leasing power, including lands not comprised in the settlement, and by which one entire rent is not invalid; for, if the lessee be evicted, there would be an apportionment of the rent at law in favour of the person entitled under the settlement. Muskerry v. Chinnery, Ll. & G. temp. Sugd. 230. But see S. C. Ll. & G. temp. Plunk. 182.

Under a power to lease at any rent, a nominal rent may be reserved. Id. 225.

6. Under a power to lease at the best rent, the very highest rent that can be obtained is not required; and the true criterion is, whether the rent has been fairly obtained without any private advantage to the donee of the power: and therefore an agreement which the Court treated as subject to the same rule was enforced, though the rent obtained was below the offers made by less solvent tenants, and below the average at which the lands were valued, where the agreement was fairly made and was a prudent one. The cases on this subject reviewed. Harnett v. Yielding (2 Sch. & Lef. 29) commented on. Dyas v. Cruise, 8 Ir. Eq. R. 407; 2 J. & L. 460.

7. By a settlement made on the marriage of S., real estate was conveyed by him to trustees to his use until marriage, and after marriage to the use of B. and Y., their executors, administrators, and assigns, for the term of 500 years, upon trusts, and after the expiration or sooner determination thereof, and in the meantime subject thereto, to the use of S., the settlor, for life, without impeachment of waste, with remainder to other uses. The settlement contained a proviso that it should be lawful for S. during his life, from time to time, by deed, either referring or not referring to the power, to demise and lease the real estate for any term not exceeding twenty-one years, so that there should be reserved the best or most improved yearly rent, to be incident to the immediate reversion of the hereditaments so demised, that could be obtained for the same, and so that the lessee was not by any clause or words therein to be contained made dispunishable for waste, or exempted from punishment for committing waste. After the marriage S., by deed, leased part of the premises to the defendant for twelve years. The lease did not refer to the power, and the rent was reserved to S., his heirs and assigns. The defendant thereby covenanted to repair a blacksmith's shop, and all glass and leadwork of the windows, and all doors, locks, keys, fences, bridges, and works in such situation, manner, and form as should be determined by the surveyor of S., and to yield up the premises in repair to S., his heirs or assigns, at the expiration of the lease. S. covenanted with the defendant to maintain the messuages, buildings, and a draining mill in good and tenantable repair, except in respect of such repairs covenanted to be done by the defendant. S. died before the expiration of the lease, and the term of 500 years being still subsisting, the surviving trustee, at the expiration of the lease, brought an action against the defendant for breaches of covenant to repair and cultivate:—Held, that such action was not maintainable, for the lease, although good by way of estoppel between the parties to it, was void as between the plaintiff and the defendant, not being in accordance with the power; first, by reason of the rent being reserved to S., his heirs and assigns, instead of being incident to the immediate reversion; and secondly, by reason of the covenant by S. to repair, rendering the defendant dispunishable for waste to that extent. Yellowly v. Gower, 24 L. J., Exch., 289.

8. An agreement by trustees of two properties held on different trusts for a mining lease of both at a rent of so much per acre worked:—Held, a breach of trust, and specific performance at the suit of the trustees refused. Tolson v. Sheard, 46 L. J., Ch., 815.

9. Tenant for life of estate, on which were mines opened, with power to let leases in possession for twenty-one years, reserving best rent, leases the mines, opened and unopened, for twenty-six years, without reference to the power, and before the expiration of a former lease, reserving ore as rent to him, his heirs

after her death to himself during his life, and after the death of the survivor for the benefit of their children. The settlement contained a power to S. during his life, and after his death to the wife during her life, and after the death of the survivor to the trustee, to renew leases for lives, and take fines on renewals, but so that the usual rents were still reserved. And it was declared that the trustee should hold all fines which he might take in trust for the child or children who should be then entitled to the inheritance of the premises. S. subsequently assigned his interest under the settlement to B. by way of mortgage. The trustee of the settlement disputed the right of S. to take the fines for his own benefit, claiming them on behalf of the wife. S. accordingly filed a bill against the trustee and B., praying that he might be declared entitled to take the fines on renewals of leases for his own benefit. S. afterwards became bankrupt, and his assignee obtained a supplemental order to carry on the suit:—Held, first, that S. was entitled to take the fines on renewals for his own benefit. Simpson v. Bathurst, Shepherd v. Bathurst, 5 L. R., Ch., 193; 18 W. R. 772; 22 L. T., N. S., 29.

Held, secondly, that inasmuch as the legal estate was outstanding and beyond S.'s control, and the trustee had interfered with his power of granting leases, he was entitled to bring a suit in equity for declaration of his rights. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that the power of granting renewed leases was not extinguished or suspended either by the assignment of S.'s interest by way of mortgage or by his bankruptcy, but that such power might be still exercised by him with the concurrence of the mortgagee and assignee. Ib.

4. Rent Reserved.

1. Where a power of leasing for years required the insertion in the leases of a clause of re-entry, if rent should be behind for twenty-one days; and leases were afterwards made with a power of re-entry, if the rent should be behind or unpaid for twenty-one days, and no sufficient distress could he had:—Held, that such leases were valid, and might be supported. Tankerville (Lord) v. Wingfield, 7 Price 343; 5 Moore 346. n.; 2 B. & B. 498. n.; 3 Eden 331. n.

2. A. by will empowered his devisee for life, of real estate, to demise and lease for twenty-one years, "so as upon each lease there were reserved and made payable, during the continuance thereof, the best imposed yearly rent that could reasonably be had for the same, without taking any sum or sums of money by way of fine or income for or in respect of such lease or leases, and that in every such lease there should be contained a clause of re-entry for non-payment." In exercise of this power, a lease was made for twenty-one years, to hold from the 11th October 1833, at the yearly rent of 903*l.*, payable by equal half-yearly payments, viz., on the 6th April and on the 11th October in every year except the last half year's rent, which was thereby reserved and agreed to be paid on the 1st August next before the determination of the term:—Held, that this lease was a valid execution of the power. Rutland v. Wythe, 355; 10 Cl. & F. 419.

3. A settlement authorised D., for the encouraging of building in B., to demise houses, lands, and tenements in B. upon building or repairing leases, either for one, two, or more lives, or to continue for and during ninety-nine years, to be computed from the day of the date of such lease, or for any term of years not exceeding ninety-nine years, to take effect either in possession or reversion, or to make fee farm grants, so as in such grants, demises, and leases there be reserved, to continue payable during the continuance of them, the best rent to be got without a fine, and so as in every such lease or grant there be a clause or condition of re-entry for non-payment of the rent reserved thereon; and it authorised leases, under other restrictions, of the other premises comprised in it, besides the houses and buildings at B. Lord D. made a lease in 1767 of certain land and quays in B., with liberty to receive quayage usually payable, and the free use of a certain canal, habendum for three lives and the life of the survivor, and after his death for ninety-nine years from the date of the lease, yielding 8*l.*, until 1791, when a subsisting lease of some of the quays would fall in, and 50*l.* for the residue of the term demised, with covenants for building and improving, and a clause of re-entry upon non-payment of the rent for three months or breach of the covenants. Semble, this was a good building and repairing lease, though including quayage and the use of the canal, which alone would not be subjects of such a lease. Donegal (Marquis) v. Greg, 13 Ir. Eq. R. 12.

Semble, also, that the term for lives and years concurrent was within the power; that the rent was well reserved, though the higher sum was not payable for the entire term; and that the clause of re-entry was sufficient, though neither immediate on non-payment nor in the usual form. Ib.

A lease made under a power requiring the rent to be reserved payable during the continuance of the lease, was dated in June 1827, and reserved the first half year's rent on the 1st May then next:—Held, that the lease was not thereby avoided, though no rent appeared payable from June to November 1827, especially as the objection was not mentioned in the bill, for, if mentioned, the defendant might have made a case to explain it, or be relieved against it. Ib.

A power required that, in leases of premises then in lease, the rent reserved should not be less than the rent then payable out of the same premises. A lease of 1767 had demised quays and other premises, with liberty to receive quayage not exceeding 2*d.* per ton. A lease of 1827, made under the power, demised the quays and premises described as in the leases of 1767 together with the wharfage and quayage of all ships and vessels resorting to the quays and docks (without any limitation of the rate per ton), at a rent of the same amount as was reserved in 1767, to which it was objected that the same rent was not reserved, as the renewal included additional premises:—Held, not a valid objection, as the rent was not reserved out of the quayage, and by the removal of the restriction the lessor passed nothing new. Ib.

By a subsequent lease of 1831, reciting that the unlimited quayage was included by mistake in that of 1827, the premises, as originally leased, were demised at the same rent and fine as in the lease of 1827, and the unlimited quayage at a small additional fine and rent:—Held, that the lessee could rely on the lease of 1831, which would have been valid if made in 1827, when the principal sum was paid, though, perhaps, impeachable if originating in 1831. Ib.

The nature of a right of quayage or wharfage considered. Ib.

1. Power reserved upon marriage settlement to tenants for life to grant or renew leases for lives, provided that a right of re-entry is reserved upon such leases for non-payment of rent, is well executed by lease for lives, provided a re-entry in case the rent remains in arrear fifteen days, and there is no sufficient distress on premises. Smith v. Jersey (Earl), 3 Bligh 290.

2. Toll reserved on a lease of a mine made by a tenant for life, and a power will go to the remainderman. Basset v. Basset, Amb. 843.

3. In a settlement, a power is reserved to tenant for life to make leases of all lands anciently demised, reserving the ancient rents, and of the other lands, reserving the best improved rents. Tenant for life being ill, and not having the counterparts of the old leases, makes a general lease to his sister of all the lands, paying for the lands that had been let the ancient and accustomed rents, and for the lands not usually let the full and improved rents and value thereof. Lease adjudged void by the Lord Keeper and Lord C. J. Trever; contrà the opinion of Lord C. J. Holt. Orby v. Mohun, 2 Vern. 531; Pre. Ch. 257; Gilb. Eq. Rep. 45. Affirmed 6 Bro. P. C. 145.

4. One having a power to lease at the most improved rent, agrees to grant a lease at a rent to be estimated at a fair valuation, without reference to improvements made by the lessee, but these improvements are deemed part of the consideration for the lease. Quære, whether such a lease is consistent with the terms of the power. Price v. Assheton, 1 Y. & Coll. 82; 4 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 4.

5. A lease, under an unrestricted leasing power, including lands not comprised in the settlement, and by which one entire rent is not invalid; for, if the lessee be evicted, there would be an apportionment of the rent at law in favour of the person entitled under the settlement. Muskerry v. Chinnery, Ll. & G. temp. Sugd. 230. But see S. C. Ll. & G. temp. Plunk. 182.

Under a power to lease at any rent, a nominal rent may be reserved. Id. 225.

6. Under a power to lease at the best rent, the very highest rent that can be obtained is not required; and the true criterion is, whether the rent has been fairly obtained without any private advantage to the donee of the power: and therefore an agreement which the Court treated as subject to the same rule was enforced, though the rent obtained was below the offers made by less solvent tenants, and below the average at which the lands were valued, where the agreement was fairly made and was a prudent one. The cases on this subject reviewed. Harnett v. Yielding (2 Sch. & Lef. 29) commented on. Dyas v. Cruise, 8 Ir. Eq. R. 407; 2 J. & L. 460.

7. By a settlement made on the marriage of S., real estate was conveyed by him to trustees to his use until marriage, and after marriage to the use of B. and Y., their executors, administrators, and assigns, for the term of 500 years, upon trusts, and after the expiration or sooner determination thereof, and in the meantime subject thereto, to the use of S., the settlor, for life, without impeachment of waste, with remainder to other uses. The settlement contained a proviso that it should be lawful for S. during his life, from time to time, by deed, either referring or not referring to the power, to demise and lease the real estate for any term not exceeding twenty-one years, so that there should be reserved the best or most improved yearly rent, to be incident to the immediate reversion of the hereditaments so demised, that could be obtained for the same, and so that the lessee was not by any clause or words therein to be contained made dispunishable for waste, or exempted from punishment for committing waste. After the marriage S., by deed, leased part of the premises to the defendant for twelve years. The lease did not refer to the power, and the rent was reserved to S., his heirs and assigns. The defendant thereby covenanted to repair a blacksmith's shop, and all glass and leadwork of the windows, and all doors, locks, keys, fences, bridges, and works in such situation, manner, and form as should be determined by the surveyor of S., and to yield up the premises in repair to S., his heirs or assigns, at the expiration of the lease. S. covenanted with the defendant to maintain the messuages, buildings, and a draining mill in good and tenantable repair, except in respect of such repairs covenanted to be done by the defendant. S. died before the expiration of the lease, and the term of 500 years being still subsisting, the surviving trustee, at the expiration of the lease, brought an action against the defendant for breaches of covenant to repair and cultivate:—Held, that such action was not maintainable, for the lease, although good by way of estoppel between the parties to it, was void as between the plaintiff and the defendant, not being in accordance with the power; first, by reason of the rent being reserved to S., his heirs and assigns, instead of being incident to the immediate reversion; and secondly, by reason of the covenant by S. to repair, rendering the defendant dispunishable for waste to that extent. Yellowly v. Gower, 24 L. J., Exch., 289.

8. An agreement by trustees of two properties held on different trusts for a mining lease of both at a rent of so much per acre worked:—Held, a breach of trust, and specific performance at the suit of the trustees refused. Tolson v. Sheard, 46 L. J., Ch., 815.

9. Tenant for life of estate, on which were mines opened, with power to let leases in possession for twenty-one years, reserving best rent, leases the mines, opened and unopened, for twenty-six years, without reference to the power, and before the expiration of a former lease, reserving ore as rent to him, his heirs and assigns:—Held, first, the former lease shall be presumed surrendered; secondly, the lease shall bind the remainderman for twenty-one years; thirdly, ore is quasi rent of mines; fourthly, evidence let in to prove the lease engrossed and executed after it bore date; fifthly, the rent reserved not being a gross sum for all the mines, but separate on each, the power is well executed as to the open mines, though not of mines unopened. Campbell v. Leach, Ambl. 740.

1. M. devised estates to trustees for his daughter, an infant, with power to trustees to demise and lease the same for any term not exceeding twenty-one years, "at the best yearly rent that could be gotten for the same, without taking any fine or premium, with power to appoint new trustees. In pursuance of this power the trustees, some time afterwards, appointed R. sole trustee, and conveyed to him the devised estate upon the trusts and subject to the powers expressed and declared by the will of M., and for "no other trust, intent, or purpose whatsoever." By an indenture of lease between R. and B. certain part of the premises, said to be described in and devised by the will of M., was demised by R. to B. for twenty-one years in consideration of the yearly rent of 1,100*l.*, the first five years of which rent was to be paid in advance, in a manner therein provided, and the remainder after the expiration of such five years, by equal quarterly payments:—Held, first, that enough appeared from the evidence to fix B., the lessee, with notice of the trustees' title. Booth v. A'Beckett, 1 Moo. P. C., N. S., 201; 9 L. T., N. S., 68.

Held, secondly, that as the granting of such a lease was a breach of the trusts of the will of M., the same ought to be declared void and set aside, and the premises assigned to the persons to be appointed trustees of the will of M. Ib.

2. A testator devised his real estates in strict settlement, making M. first tenant for life without impeachment of waste, and, after giving to male tenants for life powers to jointure their wives and provide portions for younger children, proceeded to authorise the tenants for life when in possession and the guardians of infant tenants for life in possession to demise any parts of the estates, except the mansion-house, for any term not exceeding twenty-one years at the best rent without fine or premium. He then empowered such tenants for life and guardians to grant any lease or leases of any mines or collieries, or of any parcels of land, for the purpose of digging for, winning, or gaining minerals or coal in any part of his estates "for such terms or number of years, and under and subject to such rents or reservations and agreements, as to such tenant for life or guardian or guardians shall seem reasonable and proper," and also to grant building or repairing leases for any term not exceeding ninety-nine years without any fine or premium. In 1843 M., the tenant for life, by a deed reciting the leasing power, in consideration of 6,000*l.* paid to him by C., demised the mines included in a mining lease made by the testator to E. in 1829, which would expire in 1848, to C. for ninety-nine years at a peppercorn rent, subject to redemption on payment of 6,000*l.* and interest. The deed contained an appointment of a receiver of the rents and royalties, payable by the present and future tenants, and did not oblige C. to work the mines; but the tenant for life covenanted to grant, or concur in granting, such further leases as C. should require:—Held, that this deed was a valid exercise of the power of leasing mines, and created a good legal mortgage for an absolute term of ninety-nine years. Taylor v. Mostyn, Mostyn v. Lancaster, 23 L. R., Ch. D., 583; 52 L. J., Ch., 848; 48 L. T. 715; 31 W. R. 686. Affirming 51 L. J., Ch., 696; 46 L. T. 648; 31 W. R. 3.

V. REVERSIONARY LEASES.

3. If power be reserved to make leases by covenant without transmutation of possession, Chancery will not help. Anon., Cary 29.

4. A. had a power to make leases for twenty-one years in possession; he made one to commence in futuro, in trust for payment of debts. This being for payment of debts, was supported in equity. Pollard v. Grenville, 1 Ch. Ca. 10; 1 Ch. Rep. 185.

5. Although a lessor has power to lease in possession only, and not in reversion, yet an agreement entered into between lessor and lessee a short period before the expiration of an existing lease, for a renewal of the lease upon the same terms as before, is reasonable, and may be enforced in equity as between the agreeing parties, provided the effect of the agreement is, that the rent and covenants in the renewed lease are conformable with the terms of the power. Dowell v. Dew, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 345; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 158; 7 Jur. 117.

6. A lessee taking a reversionary lease from an executor, with full notice, is bound to show that such lease was properly granted by the executor in the due administration of his office. Keating v. Keating, Ll. & G. temp. Sugd. 133.

7. Where reversioner upon an estate for life, made a settlement on herself for life with power for her, being sole, to make leases for three lives in possession: and she and her husband in the lifetime of the tenant for life, made a lease for twenty-one years, habend. from the date: it was held, not pursuant to her power; for by making the marriage she put herself under the control of her husband. Antrim (Marquis) v. Bucks (Duke), 1 Ch. Ca. 17; Salk. 276; 2 Freem. 168.

In this case Lord K. took a diversity between a naked power which flows from an interest. Ib.

8. One under a power to lease for twenty-one years in possession, but not in reversion, granted a lease to his only daughter for twenty-one years, to commence from the day of the date:—Held, to be a good lease. Pugh v. Leeds (Duke), Cowp. 714.

9. A tenant for life having power to grant leases in possession may bind himself by covenant to grant a lease in reversion expectant on the determination of a subsisting term; but a trustee having a similar power cannot, for he is bound to exercise the power for the benefit of the estate. Moore v. Clench, 45 L. J., Ch., 80; 1 L. R., Ch. D., 447; 24 W. R. 169; 34 L. T., N. S., 13.

VI. UNOPENED MINES.

1. Tenant for life of estate, on which were mines opened, with power to let leases in possession for twenty-one years, reserving best rent, leases the mines, opened and unopened, for twenty-six years, without reference to the power, and before the expiration of a former lease, reserving ore as rent to him, his heirs and assigns:—Held, first, the former lease shall be presumed surrendered; secondly, the lease shall bind the remainderman for twenty-one years; thirdly, ore is quasi rent of mines; fourthly, evidence let in to prove the lease engrossed and executed after it bore date; fifthly, the rent reserved not being a gross sum for all the mines, but separate on each, the power is well executed as to the open mines, though not of mines unopened. Campbell v. Leach, Ambl. 740.

2. A settlement contained a power for the trustees, with the consent of the tenant for life, to demise the whole or any part of the trust estates, and the coal, minerals, and stone within or under the same, whether together or separately, and also all or any of the hereditaments and premises to be taken in exchange under the power in the settlement contained, and the coal, minerals, and stone within and under the same, whether together or separately, "so as that the lessees should not by any clause in the lease be dispunishable by waste." At the date of the settlement there was an old mine on the estate, worked from a shaft in the adjoining land, but no other mine was opened:—Held, that a mining lease, with powers to open new mines, was a valid exercise of the power. Daly v. Bockett, 3 Jur., N. S., 754; 34 Beav. 114; 5 W. R. 514.

3. As a lease of land with the mines, where there are open mines, does not justify the lessee in working unopened mines, so a power to lease such land with the mines does not authorise a lease of unopened mines. Clegg v. Rowland, 2 L. R., Eq., 160; 35 L. J., Ch., 396; 14 W. R. 530; 14 L. T., N. S., 217.

Therefore, where land containing an open mine was settled, "with the mines and minerals thereunder," with a power to the trustees of the settlement to lease, at a rack-rent, the premises therein comprised (not mentioning the mines), subject to a proviso, that "no lessee should be made dispunishable of waste":—Held, that a lease of unopened mines was not authorised by the power. Ib.

Held, also, that a trustee appointed subsequently to the lease, and ignorant of its existence, was not liable for want of diligence in allowing the tenant for life to receive the rents. Ib.

4. Two contiguous estates were devised to trustees upon trust for distinct cestuis que trustent. By an order made under the Settled Estates Act, power was given to the trustees to grant mining leases in conformity with and subject to the provisions of the Settled Estates Act; such leases to be granted with the consent of the respective tenants for life if of age. The trustees and the two tenants for life entered into an agreement with the defendants to grant them a mining lease of the two estates for forty years (or fifty years if the Court should consent); both estates were intended to be comprised in the same lease, and the rents and royalties were to be reserved as if they were one estate, and there was to be one shaft for working the minerals under both estates; and it was also agreed that the lessors should be at liberty to apply to the Court under the Settled Estates Act for further powers of leasing:—Held, that the trustees had no power to grant such a lease of the two estates, and specific performance of the agreement was refused. Tolson v. Sheard, 5 L. R., Ch. D., 19; 25 W. R. 667; 46 L. J., Ch., 815; 36 L. T., N. S., 756.

VII. OTHER CASES.

5. Power to lease does not authorise a sale of leasehold. Gurney v. Gurney, 3 W. R. 353; 3 Drew. 208; 1 Jur., N. S., 208; 3 Eq. Rep. 569.

6. Testator devised an estate to several persons for their lives successively, with power to grant leases under certain restrictions. The first tenant for life grants a lease to a person who had no notice of the power, or that the lessor was tenant for life only. A subsequent tenant for life brings an ejectment against the lessee, on the ground that the lease was not made according to the power. The Court will not prevent the lessee from setting up an old outstanding term created by the testator. Goleborn v. Alcock, 2 Sim. 552.

7. A., seised of an undivided moiety of Whiteacre, conveys it on his marriage in 1775 to the use of his first and other sons, reserving to himself a power of leasing for three lives. A. having subsequently purchased the other undivided moiety of Whiteacre, in 1785 leased the entire of Whiteacre to B. for lives renewable for ever. In 1797, on the marriage of G., A.'s eldest son, Whiteacre was conveyed by A. to the use of A. for life, remainder to the use of G. for life, remainder to such of the sons of G. as G. should appoint to; and A., in his covenant against incumbrances, excepted leases bonâ fide made by him. G., having appointed Whiteacre to his son W., died in the lifetime of A., leaving W., his eldest son, him surviving. On the death of A., W. filed his bill to set aside the lease of the moiety of Whiteacre, comprised within the settlement of 1775, as contrary to A.'s leasing power:—Held, that W., as claiming under the settlement of 1797, was bound by the lease of 1785, and could not set it aside. Steele v. Mitchell, 2 Dr. & Wal. 568; 3 Ir. Eq. R. 1.

8. A. and B., under the power of leasing, demised part of the settled estates to S., the wife of B., by way of jointure:—Held, that S., in respect of her life interest, was not liable to contribute to the charges on the estates. Evans v. Evans, 22 L. J., Ch., 785.

9. After a bill of foreclosure filed by mortgagee, and a receiver appointed, tenant for life of the mortgaged premises, with leasing power, makes leases. A bill is filed by a judgment creditor, who moves to set the premises pending this clause. Ordered to set, without prejudice to any right the tenants may have against their lessor, and they, as tenants from year to year to the receiver, being entitled to notice to quit. Mansfield (Lord) v. Hamilton, 2 Sch. & Lef. 28.

10. A testator gave to his trustees a special power of leasing at their absolute discretion; which formed part of a special scheme of management of his mansion-house and estate for a limited period:—Held, in a suit for the execution of the trusts of the will, that the court would compel the trustees to exercise the power of leasing. Tempest v. Camoys (Lord) (No. 1), 21 L. R., Ch. D., 576. n.

1. A tenant for life had entered into a binding agreement for a building lease under a power, and the intending lessee had done everything requisite to entitle him to acquire the tenant for life to grant him a lease. The tenant for life died, leaving an infant tenant in tail, during whose minority the trustees had a power of leasing:—Held, that the trustees had power to grant a lease in accordance with the agreement. Davis v. Harford, 22 L. R., Ch. D., 128; 47 L. T. 540; 31 W. R. 61; 52 L. J., Ch., 61.

2. A testator devised real estate, the legal estate in which was outstanding in a mortgagee, to trustees, as to one moiety for A. for life, with remainder to his children, and as to the other moiety to B. for life, with remainder to her children, and directed that the trustees, or the survivor of them, or the executors or administrators of the survivor, "should and might" lease the property at rack-rent for any term not exceeding twenty-one years. The trustees disclaimed. A., who was the testator's heir at law, granted a rack-rent lease for twenty-one years:—Held, that the lease was void, as having been granted by a stranger to the power. Robson v. Flight, 34 L. J., Ch., 226; 11 L. T., N. S., 725; 5 N. R. 344; 3 De G. J. & S. 608. Reversing 10 Jur., N. S., 1228; 12 W. R. 195.

1. In General.

3. Testator devised his real estate to his wife "for her own sole and separate use, to dispose of as she should think proper," and "out of her real and personal estate to provide for his children in such manner as to her should seem meet":—Held, that the widow had power to sell the real estate. Pratt v. Church, 4 Beav. 177. n. S. P. Wood v. Richardson, id. 174; 5 Jur. 623.

4. Devise to testator's wife, she paying his debts and 15*l.* to A. B., if so much can be spared, and rest of estate to go to A. B., after her death, gives her the fee and power of sale. Dolton v. Heven, 6 Madd. 9.

5. A testator, by his will, after disposing of three one-fifths of his residuary real and personal estate, gave another one-fifth in trust for his son William and his children; and the remaining one-fifth in trust for his daughter till twenty-five or marriage, with a direction, that, if she married under that age, her fifth should be conveyed and settled upon the trusts therein mentioned; and he gave the trustees a general power of sale during the continuance of the trusts thereby reposed in them. William survived the testator, and died, leaving infant children: and, upon the daughter's marriage under twenty-five, a settlement was executed, which, reciting that no part of the real estate had been sold, although it was intended that the same should be sold under the power contained in the will, assigned to trustees, their executors, etc., all the daughter's share of the moneys to be produced by the sale of the real estate, upon certain trusts in favour of her intended husband, herself, and her issue:—Held, as to William's fifth, that the power of sale under the will continued after his death; and that, although, as to the daughter's fifth, the power had determined upon her marriage, yet the settlement created a new power of sale by implication. Wood v. White, 1 Myl. & C. 460; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 209; 3 Jur. 117; 2 Keen 664; 7 L. J., N. S., Ch., 203.

6. B., by the fourth clause of his will, says, "That my eldest son and his issue, etc., shall after my death have all my whole estate, real and personal, except what I have given to my wife, and shall still give by other dispositions to her," etc.:—Held, that the exception takes out of this residuary devise only the interest given to the wife, and not the things themselves. The directing the trustee to dispose of all his real and personal estate, does not import a power to sell, but to manage it to the best advantage for the family. Sheffield v. Orrery (Lord), 3 Atk. 287.

1. Purchaser not compelled to take a doubtful title, viz., by executing a power of sale, introduced under a direction by a decree, establishing a will, to the Master to approve a proper settlement: the will not authorising the insertion of such a power; nor could it be sustained under a power by a former settlement; which, if not extinct by the failure of the limitations, and the union of the estate for life with the reversion, could not be duly applied to purposes clearly foreign to its original object; and, though purchasers are not put to exercise a very nice and critical judgment with regard to the purposes for which powers are created, it could never be intended to refer to a perfectly new set of limitations, in a new settlement, at a long subsequent period, under a disposition by the will of the owner of the fee, to be exercised, not for any purpose in the least degree connected with the settlement, but avowedly as an expedient to supply the want of a valid power in that settlement, and enable those whom he had made only tenants for life to dispose of the estate. Wheate v. Hall, 17 Ves. 80.

2. A. being tenant in tail of an estate, in remainder expectant on the death of B., entered into articles on his marriage, by which, after reciting that it had been agreed that the estate should, subject to B.'s life interest therein, and to the raising, by mortgage or otherwise, of any sum or sums not exceeding 15,000*l*., for A.'s use, be settled to the uses thereinafter expressed, he covenanted that he would, subject to the raising, by any way or means, and at any time or times, he should think proper, of the sum or sums before mentioned, by mortgage, annuity, or otherwise for his own benefit, and to any deed or deeds he might make for securing the repayment thereof and interest to all necessary acts for settling the estate subject to B.'s life-interest in the manner agreed upon:—Held, that A. was authorised to raise the 15,000*l*. by sale, and that he was justified in selling his interest in remainder in the whole of the estate, as the 15,000*l*. was nearly the full value of such interest. Tasker v. Small, 6 Sim. 625; 5 L. J., N. S., Ch., 321.

3. C., a solicitor, and one of three executors and trustees for sale, acted professionally in the management of the personal estate, and, also, by the authority of his co-trustees, conducted an attempted sale by auction of the real estate. A., another of the trustees, hearing that his son was in treaty for the purchase of the estate, wrote to C. to say that he (A.) would not take any interest either directly or indirectly in the matter; C. then, with the concurrence of the co-trustee, contracted to sell the estate by private contract to another person. On a bill filed by the purchaser to compel performance of this contract:—Held, first, that C. had not derived any general authority to sell by private contract, by reason of his employment as solicitor to the trust estate, or as agent to sell by public auction; and, secondly, that he had derived no special authority from A.'s letter to sell to any one but to A.'s son. Bulteel v. Abinger (Lord), 6 Jur. 410.

Semble, under the circumstances, A. could not have delegated to his co-trustees an authority to sell to his son, without reserving to himself a veto upon the contract. Ib.

4. By an indenture of settlement, certain estates were settled upon A. B. for life, with remainder to his son for life, with remainders over. A power was also given to the trustees to sell the estate during the lives of A. B. and his son. By a subsequent deed, A. B. conveyed his life estate to his son, and after his death to remain and continue to the several uses and estates, and upon the powers, provisoes, declarations, and agreements, expressed and declared, of and concerning the said hereditaments, by the previous indenture, ulterior to the limitations therein for the respective lives of A. B. and his son:—Held, that it was not intended under this clause to limit a new life estate to the son, without the subsequent powers, during his life, but that the estate was still subject to those powers which, in the first deed, were to be found subsequent and in addition to the limitations to the son for life, and that the trustees consequently retained the immediate power of sale. Morgan v. Rutson, 16 Sim. 234; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 419; 12 Jur. 813.

5. Power given by will and codicil to sell to certain persons at a fixed price, revoked by a subsequent codicil devising the premises to trustees to be sold for the payment of debts, and subject thereto upon the limitations of the will. Bridges v. Rice, 1 Jac. & Walk. 74.

Whether power in a will to sell several estates to certain persons at a fixed price, is entirely revoked by a codicil devising one of the estates to different uses, quære. Ib.

6. A testator devised a farm to his two sons, with permission to dispose of it to certain persons, if they thought proper; but if it should not be sold, he bequeathed it, after the decease of either of his sons, to the survivor, and directed that, after the death of both, it should be sold, and the money divided equally between the children of his sons:—Held, that the sons were only joint-tenants for life, with a power of sale: that they could make a good title, and give discharges for the purchase money; that they were joint-tenants for life of the purchase money; and that, upon the death of the survivor, it would devolve to their children. Breedon v. Breedon, 1 Russ. & M. 413; 8 L. J., Ch., 104.

7. Devise in trust to sell, and a charge to pay debts, give equally a power of sale. Elliot v. Merriman, 2 Atk. 43; Barnard. 78.

8. Testator devises to A. and B. (whom he appoints his executors), upon trust, to sell for such purposes as he shall hereafter appoint, and then directs his debts to be paid by his executors. Under this devise A. and B. are authorised to sell for payment of debts. Barker v. Devonshire (Duke), 3 Meriv. 310.

9. When real and personal estate are blended in a devise, and under that devise it may be necessary to raise money out of the estate, there is no implied power to sell the real estate. Curling v. Austin, 2 Dr. & Sm. 129.

10. A declaration in a settlement, which contains a power to vary securities, that real estate, purchased with the trust funds, shall be considered personal estate for the purposes of the settlement, is sufficient to give the trustees a power of sale of such real estate. Tait v. Lathbury, 11 Jur., N. S., 991.

Where a settlement contained a power for the trustees to sell out the trust funds, and invest the produce in real estate, which was to be considered as personal estate, and go accordingly, and also contained a power for the trustees and their heirs, executors, or administrators, to sell any of the trust stocks, funds, and securities to be purchased under the trusts thereinbefore declared:—Held, that the trustees had a sufficient power of sale to enable them to sustain a suit for specific performance against a purchaser of real estate, which had been sold by them in exercise of the power. S. C. 1 L. R., Eq., 174; 14 W. R. 216.

1. A settlement of personal estate contained a power to alter and vary, and a covenant to settle future acquired real and personal estate on similar trusts:—Held, that a power of sale might be introduced into a settlement of subsequently acquired real estate. Elton v. Elton, 27 Beav. 634.

2. Power of sale in a settlement rectified, on proof that it was not conformable with the contract. As to the necessity of a reconveyance in cases of rectification of a settlement, and as to its retrospective operation. Form of decree in such a case. Malmesbury (Earl) v. Malmesbury (Countess); Phillipson v. Turner, 31 Beav. 407.

3. Testatrix, by her will, declared that every person thereby made tenant for life should have such and the like powers of leasing, selling, and exchanging any part of the devised estate as were by her father's will given to the tenants for life and in tail mentioned in his will, or to the trustees thereof. It appeared that the father's will did not give a tenant for life or in tail any power of the leasing, selling, or exchanging, but gave trustees full power to sell and exchange the hereditaments therein comprised, and to give receipts for the purchase money:—Held, that tenant for life in possession of the estate devised by the testatrix had the same powers of selling and exchanging that estate as were by the father's will given to the trustees; but that such powers did not extend to giving receipts; and, semble, that the difficulties which might be met with in exercising such power of sale, in the absence of a power to give receipts, might be removed by paying the money into court under the Trustee Relief Act, stat. 10 & 11 Vict., c. 96, and that upon such payment the purchaser might safely complete. Cox v. Cox, 1 Kay & J. 251.

4. Power to lease does not authorise a sale of leaseholds. Gurney v. Gurney, 3 W. R. 353; 3 Drew. 208; 1 Jur., N. S., 298; 3 Eq. Rep. 569.

2. Whether a Trust or a Power.

5. The proprietor of a newspaper by his will gave all his real and personal estate, including the proprietorship of the newspaper, to his eldest son and two others, as trustees upon trust to carry on the trade during the life of his wife, and for that purpose to set apart annually, as a reserve fund, one-fourth of the profits, and to divide the remainder in equal sixth parts between his wife and five children. He then proceeded as follows: "And in case any of my children shall survive my wife and die before he or she shall have received his or her share of the trust estate, and without leaving lawful issue, then I give such share equally between my surviving children, and the lawful issue of my deceased child, such issue taking their, his, or their parent's share only, equally amongst them if more than one. And from and after the decease of my wife (or during her life, if she and the majority of my children and my trustees shall think it proper and expedient so to do), at the sole discretion of my trustees to sell and absolutely dispose of all my real and personal estate, and my trade or profession, and the goodwill thereof, and to divide the proceeds among my wife and children, and their lawful issue, if the division be made in the lifetime of my wife, but if the division be made after her death, then amongst my children and their lawful issue only. I further declare my will to be that in case under the clause hereinbefore contained, it shall be agreed, or my trustees shall decide, to sell my stock in trade and proprietorship of the newspaper, and my sons, or any of them, shall by writing offer to purchase and carry on the same, the trustees or trustee of my will may, and they are hereby authorised and requested to, sell the same at 500*l.* less than the market price of such trade or profession":—Held, that these words created, not a mere power of sale, but an absolute trust for sale, subject to a discretion in the trustees as to the manner and time in which the sale should be carried out. Minors v. Battison, 46 L. J., Ch., 2; 1 L. R., App. Cas., 428; 25 W. R. 27; 35 L. T., N. S., 1.

6. A testator devised his real and personal estate to trustees upon trust, that a piece of land, part of his real estate, might be absolutely sold as soon as conveniently might be after his death, in such mode as his trustees should decide upon, but in case it should so happen that at that time the complying with his will in that particular would be a sacrifice of property, then it was his will that the piece of land should not be disposed of until such time as his trustees should judge most beneficial for his estate; and when all his children attained the age of twenty-one, then he devised his real and personal estate to his children equally as tenants in common. All the children attained the age of twenty-one. The trustees did not sell the piece of land:—Held, that the trustee had a discretionary power and not a trust for sale, and that there was no constructive conversion of the piece of land; and that consequently the heir-at-law and not the next of kin of a deceased child was entitled to the share of such child. Glover v. Heelis, 32 L. T., N. S., 534; 23 W. R. 677.

3. Insertion of in Mortgages under Powers.

7. An equitable mortgagee, having taken from the administratrix of the mortgagor a legal mortgage containing a power of sale, and having filed his bill to enforce specific performance of a contract for sale under the power, the Court declined to entertain the suit in the absence of the administratrix and the parties beneficially interested under the mortgagor. Sanders v. Richards, 2 Colly. 568.

1. Leave given to insert in a decree for raising payment of debts and costs by mortgage of an infant's real estate, a direction that the mortgage might contain a power of sale if the mortgagee required it. Selby v. Cooling, 23 Beav. 418.

2. A power was contained in a settlement for the trustees "by sale or mortgage, or by both or either or any of these ways and means," to raise certain moneys. This power was executed by a mortgage containing a power of sale:—Held, that this was a valid execution of the power. Bridges v. Longman, 24 Beav. 27.

3. An institution was incorporated by royal charter and deed of settlement, authorising the council or managing body to hold lands, tenements, or hereditaments, and to sell, grant, demise, exchange, and dispose of the same; but no sale, mortgage, incumbrance, or other disposition of any such lands, tenements, or hereditaments to be made except with the approbation and concurrence of a general meeting of the proprietors of the corporation. At a general meeting of the proprietors the council was authorised to mortgage the property of the corporation:—Held, that the council had no power to grant a mortgage with a power of sale. Clarke v. Royal Panopticon, 4 Drew 26; 3 Jur., N. S., 178; 27 L. J., Ch., 207; 5 W. R. 332.

4. A power of sale is incident to a mortgage; therefore, where trustees are directed to raise money by mortgage, they are justified in inserting a power of sale. The Court will, however, see that the exercise of it is properly guarded. Re Chawner, 38 L. J., Ch., 726; 8 L. R., Eq., 569; 22 L. T., N. S., 262.

5. An executor or administrator may not only pledge or mortgage the assets, but may also give to the mortgagee of leaseholds a power of sale, and give valid receipts for the purchase money. Russell v. Plaice, 18 Beav. 21; 18 Jur. 254; 23 L. J., Ch., 441; 2 Eq. R. 1149.

6. An executor may create a mortgage of his testator's property, with power of sale. Cruickshank v. Duffin, 18 L. R., Eq., 555; 41 L. J., Ch., 817; 26 L. T. 121; 20 W. R. 354.

II. DISCRETIONARY AND INTERFERENCE BY THE COURT.

7. Real estate being devised in trust to sell at such times or time after the testator's death as should seem most advisable, either together or in separate parcels, by auction or private contract, the trustees to stand possessed of the produce of such sale, and the rents and profits accruing in the meantime, upon the trusts of the devise:—Held, that trustees have not an unqualified discretion as to sale, or to entitle them to retain the accumulation of the mesne rents and profits to answer the exigencies of the will, but that cestuis que trustent were entitled to receive their respective proportions of the accruing rents, etc., from the end of the year after the death of testator. Noel v. Henley, 7 Price 242.

8. Testator after devising his real estates in strict settlement, subject to the payment of his debts and legacies, empowered his trustees, if they in their discretion should think fit, absolutely to sell his estate at C., and directed them to apply the proceeds on certain trusts therein before declared of his residuary personal estate. The sale of the estate was not required for payment of debts and legacies:—Held, that the power of sale vested in the trustees was discretionary, and that the residuary legatee of the personalty could not compel a sale. Shipperdson v. Tower, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 441; 6 Jur. 658.

9. Where trustees have a power of selling a real estate, or keeping it in land, at their option, it will be subject to the same trust as the personal estate is applied to, whether converted into money or not. Cook v. Duckenfield, 2 Atk. 563.

Whosoever takes under a power, takes from the grantor, and not from the power itself. Id. 565.

A man, by empowering other persons to dispose of his estate, disinherits his heir as much as by his own actual disposition. Id. 567.

Where testator says, "I will my heir shall sell the land," without mentioning for what purpose, he is not obliged to sell; but if he appoints his executor to sell, it is turned into personal assets, and leaves no resulting trust in the heir. Ib.

10. E. D. was beneficially entitled, under his marriage settlement, to an estate for his life, and to the ultimate reversion in fee in default of issue male; and the trustees of the settlement had a power to sell at the request and by the direction of the tenant for life. There was issue of the marriage. E. D., acting as absolute owner, entered into a contract by correspondence to sell the estate to T., and the trustees afterwards refused to concur in the sale:—Held, on a bill for specific performance, the vendor was bound to perform; that the vendor ought not to be decreed to request or direct the trustees to execute a conveyance, unless the trustees ought to comply with the request; and that the trustees had a discretion, under the power of sale, which the Court had no power or jurisdiction to control. Thomas v. Dering, 1 Keen 729; 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 267; 1 Jur. 211, 427.

11. M. devised all his real estate and hereditaments upon certain trusts, and desired that if his godson, C., should take orders, and be in the opinion of the trustees, or the major part of them, qualified to hold the rectory of Broome, they, or the persons for the time being entitled to present to that rectory, should present him thereto. By a codicil M., after reciting that he was owner of several other rectories, and that he had sold the next presentation to Broome, declared it to be his will that if, when C. was duly qualified to be presented, the trustees should be unable to present him to Broome, they should present him to the first of the other rectories which should fall vacant after his being qualified to hold the same:—Held, that the trustees had a discretionary power to sell the next presentation to any of the advowsons. Cust v. Middleton, 11 W. R. 456; 1 N. R. 508; 9 Jur., N. S., 709.

1. Where trustees, having a power of sale, disclaim, the Court can exercise the discretion of the trustees, and sell if necessary. Browne v. Paull, 16 Jur. 707.

2. If a trustee, having discretion to sell trust property, submit to a decree for sale, the Court is therefore bound to carry the sale into execution. Polley v. Seymour, 2 Y. & Coll. 708; 7 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 12; 1 Jur. 958.

3. A testator gave all his property to trustees upon trust, as to the real estate, to manage and receive the rents, with powor to grant leases, and with power also (if they should consider it advisable, but not otherwise) to sell in such manner, at such time, and for such price as they should think proper, and to invest the proceeds, together with his residuary personal estate, in the securities therein mentioned. The income of the realty, until sale, and of the produce, if and when sold, together with the income of the securities arising from his residuary personalty, were given to the testator's widow for life, and after her death, the trustees were directed to sell so much of the said securities as would pay certain legacies; and the income of the remainder of the said securities and of his real estate, if not then sold, and until sale, and of the produce thereof, if and when sold, were given to A. for life, with remainders over:—Held, that the power of sale, though in terms discretionary, was conferred upon the trustees for the purposes of the will, and that, inasmuch as the proceeds of sale were applicable to the payment of the legacies, it was the duty of the trustees to exercise the power for the purpose of raising the legacies, the personal estate having proved insufficient. Nickisson v. Cookill, 2 N. R. 557; 9 Jur., N. S., 975; 32 L. J., Ch., 753; 11 W. R. 1082; 8 L. T., N. S., 778.

4. A direction by a testator that his trustees shall stand seised and possessed of his real and personal estate, upon trust to raise and pay an annuity, and subject thereto to raise out of his real and personal estate a sufficient sum to make up, with what his daughter A. had received on her marriage, an amount equal to the property his other children would be entitled to under his will, and a devise of all his real estate and the residue of his personal estate to his six other children, as tenants in common, and until a sale of all his real and personal estate should be made; and in order that no such sale should be required, to ascertain the amount of the share of his daughter A., he authorised his trustees, if they should think fit, to cause a valuation to be made of his real and personal estate, and according to its amount, after deducting debts, etc., to fix the share of his daughter A., which should be accepted by her; with a further direction that she should not be entitled to any interest on her share, until each of his other children had received interest on a sum equal to the amount previously advanced to her; and that no valuation should be required to be made until each of the other children had received such equal sum; and a clause declaring that the receipts of the trustees shall be sufficient discharges for any money payable to them under his will, and that the person paying it shall not be liable to ascertain the necessity or regularity of any mortgage, sale, or disposition under the trusts or the will:—Held, that the trustees had a power of sale of the whole real estate of the testator, which it was at their discretion to exercise in case they did not think fit to proceed by way of valuation. Bird v. Fox, 11 Hare 40.

5. A discretionary power of sale held not to have been put an end to during the life of the tenant for life by the fact that all the reversioners had acquired vested interests in their shares. Biggs v. Peacock, 20 L. R., Ch. D., 200; 51 L. J., Ch., 555; 46 L. T. 582; 30 W. R. 605. Affirmed 52 L. J., Ch., 1; 47 L. T. 341; 31 W. R. 148; 52 L. J., Ch., 1.

6. Two trustees having power to sell the freehold property of an infant at the request of the guardians, and one trustee having declined upon such request to exercise the power of sale, the Court refused to control the discretion of the trustees by ordering them to sell the estate—there being no absolute necessity for raising money and the existing income being sufficient to keep down the charges upon the estate—notwithstanding that the effect of the sale would be to increase very considerably the income of the property. Camden (Marquis) v. Murray, 16 L. R., Ch. D., 161; 50 L. J., Ch., 282; 43 L. T. 661; 29 W. R. 190.

7. Independently of the cumulative powers of sale given to tenants for life by the Settled Land Act 1882, the tenant for life, and the trustees under a will which gives them power to sell the estate at the request and by the direction of the person or persons for the time being entitled to the actual freehold of the devised property, will not be restrained from selling the estate at the request and for the benefit of the tenant for life on merely speculative evidence, adduced by the remainderman objecting to an immediate sale, of an expected future increase in the value of the property from the development of coal mines, and the construction of a railway through the estate. Thomas v. Williams, 24 L. R., Ch. D., 558; 52 L. J., Ch., 603; 49 L. T. 111; 31 W. R. 943.

8. Where absolute discretion has been given to trustees as to the exercise of a power the Court will not compel them to exercise it, but if they propose to exercise it, the Court will see that they do not exercise it improperly or unreasonably. Where the power is coupled with a trust or duty the Court will enforce the proper and timely exercise of the power, but will not interfere with the discretion of the trustees as to the particular time or manner of their bonâ fide exercise of it. Tempest v. Camoys (Lord) (No. 2), 21 L. R., Ch. D., 571; 51 L. J., Ch., 785; 48 L. T. 13; 31 W. R. 326.

A testator gave his trustees a power to be exercised at their absolute discretion of selling real estates, with a declaration that the proceeds should be applied, at the like discretion, in the purchase of other real estates. He also gave them power at their absolute discretion to raise money by mortgage for the purchase of real estates. A suit having been instituted for the execution of the trusts of the will, and a sum of money, the proceeds of the sale of real estate, having been paid into court, one of the trustees proposed to purchase a large estate and to apply the fund in court in part payment of the purchase money, and to raise the remainder of the purchase money by mortgage of the purchased estate. The other trustee refused to concur in the purchase:—Held, that the Court could not control the dissentient trustee in the exercise of his discretion in refusing to make the purchase, or in refusing to exercise his power of raising money by mortgage for the proposed purpose. Ib.

1. The proprietor of a newspaper by his will gave all his real and personal estate, including the proprietorship of the newspaper, to his eldest son and two others, as trustees, upon trust to carry on the trade during the life of his wife, and for that purpose to set apart annually, as a reserve fund, one-fourth of the profits, and to divide the remainder in equal sixth parts between his wife and five children. He then proceeded as follows: "And in case any of my children shall survive my wife and die before he or she shall have received his or her share of the trust estate, and without leaving lawful issue, then I give such share equally between my surviving children, and the lawful issue of my deceased child, such issue taking their, his, or their parent's share only, equally amongst them if more than one. And from and after the decease of my wife (or during her life, if she and the majority of my children and my trustees shall think it proper and expedient so to do), at the sole discretion of my trustees, to sell and absolutely dispose of all my real and personal estate, and my trade or profession, and the goodwill thereof, and to divide the proceeds among my wife and children, and their lawful issue, if the division be made in the lifetime of my wife, but if the division be made after her death, then amongst my children and their lawful issue only. I further declare my will to be that in case under the clause hereinbefore contained, it shall be agreed, or my trustees shall decide, to sell my stock in trade and proprietorship of the newspaper, and my sons, or any of them, shall by writing offer to purchase and carry on the same, the trustees or trustee of my will may, and they are hereby authorised and requested, to sell the same to them at 500*l.* less than the market price of such trade or profession":—Held, that these words created not a mere power of sale, but an absolute trust for sale, subject to a discretion in the trustees as to the manner and time in which the sale should be carried out. Minors v. Battison, 46 L. J., Ch., 2; 1 L. R., App. Cas., 428; 25 W. R. 27; 35 L. T., N. S., 1.

Two of the trustees, during the life of the widow, filed a bill for administration of the estate, and for an inquiry whether it would be fit and proper, and for the benefit of all parties, that the business should be carried on:—Held, that by so doing they had surrendered to the Court their discretion to postpone the sale, if such discretion ever existed. Ib.

III. WHO MAY EXERCISE.

1. In General, 5887.
2. On Appointment of New Trustees, 5888.
3. Surviving Trustee, 5889.
4. Assignee or Devisee of Surviving Trustee, 5890.
5. On Disclaimer by Trustee, 5892.

1. In General.

2. Who is to execute power of sale of real estate, is implied to be in him through whose hands the fund is to pass. Bentham v. Wiltshire, 4 Madd. 44.

3. Lands are devised to A. and B., and to the heirs of the survivor, in trust to sell: though the inheritance be in abeyance, yet the trustees, by a fine, may make good title by estoppel. Vick v. Edwards, 3 P. W. 372.

4. Where one of two trustees is absent in America, the other is an "incapacitated" person under the London Bridge Acts, and consequently is invested with the power to sell, given to such persons by virtue of those Acts. Exp. Tatham, 3 Y. & Coll. 67; 7 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 64; 2 Jur. 440.

5. The trustees of a settlement had vested in them a power of leasing during the minority of the beneficial owners, a power of sale and exchange at the request of the tenant for life, and a power to cut timber, but they had no legal estate, except to preserve contingent remainders. The first tenant for life demised his own estates to the trustees in fee, to the same uses and subject to like powers as the settled estates stood limited:—Held, that the powers over the devised estates were exercisable by the trustees of the settlement, and not by the trustees of the will. Taylor v. Miles, 29 Beav. 411.

6. A discretionary trust for sale cannot (as may a power simply collateral) be exercised by an infant. R. devised real estate to trustees, one of whom was an infant, for sale as they should think expedient. The trustees sold to K., who, upon disputes arising, filed a bill for specific performance:—Held, that the contract could not be enforced. King v. Bellord, 1 Hem. & M. 343; 32 L. J., Ch., 646.

7. In 1835 B. and his wife, who had power to appoint hereditaments, and who "were desirous of exercising the power of appointment," appointed and conveyed the hereditaments to two trustees, their executors, administrators, and assigns, only, upon the trusts therein declared for sale, and after the payment of a mortgage debt and expenses, for distribution of the proceeds, in seven equal parts, for the benefit of the seven children of B. and his wife. On the sale of the hereditaments, after the death of B. and his wife, the purchaser objected to the title, the word "heirs" having been omitted from the deed:—Held, that the intention of B. and his wife was to vest the legal estate in the trustees; that the heir-at-law was a trustee; and that the legal estate must by an order be vested in trustees to be appointed by the Court. Dilrow v. Bone, 8 Jur., N. S., 276; 3 Giff. 538; 10 W. R. 437; 6 L. T., N. S., 71; 31 L. J., Ch., 417.

8. A testator devised and bequeathed his real and personal estate to trustees for sale and conversion, with ample powers as to the time, mode of sale, etc. By a codicil he revoked the devise to the trustees and appointed other trustees in their stead; amongst them a lady, then a spinster, who afterwards married, before the exercise of the power of sale. The trustees subsequently put up part of the real estate for sale by public auction, and it was purchased. The vendors' solicitors delivered the abstract of title; the purchaser was willing to accept it, and prepared the draft of the necessary conveyance. The vendors then objected that there was no contract, the husband of the married trustee not assenting thereto, and that the married trustee could not join in any conveyance:—Held, that it was not a binding contract on the husband and wife. Avery v. Griffin, 18 L. T., N. S., 849.

1. The concurrence of executors having under a will an implied power of sale for payment of debts is not necessary to a conveyance by a devisee in trust for sale under the same will. Hodkinson v. Quinn, 1 John. & H. 303; 7 Jur., N. S., 64; 30 L. J., Ch., 111; 9 W. R. 197; 3 L. T., N. S., 804.

2. A trustee, without the authority of his co-trustees, signed an agreement for the sale of trust property. In an action for specific performance, to which the co-trustees were not parties:—Held, that specific performance could not be ordered either as to the whole or as to the part in which the contracting trustee had a beneficial interest. Naylor v. Goodall, 47 L. J., Ch., 53; 37 L. T. 422; 26 W. R. 162.

3. A power of sale given by a testator to his executors or administrators may be exercised by an administrator durante minore ætate. Monsell v. Armstrong, 14 L. R., Eq., 423; 41 L. J., Ch., 715; 20 W. R. 921.

4. Where there is a general charge of debts, but no legal estate is given, the executors may have implied authority to convey the legal estate in order in raise the money to satisfy the charge; but where there is a devise of the legal estate to a particular person, and the estate is charged with payment of debts or legacies, the money must be raised through the instrumentality of the devisee, and he is the only person that can make a legal title. Colyer v. Finch, 5 H. L. Ca. 905; 3 Jur., N. S., 25; 25 L. J., Ch., 65.

5. Where a testator has charged his real estate with the payment of a sum of money, he is to be taken to have given an implied power of sale to some one. The donee of the power is to be ascertained from the whole of the will. Hidgforth v. Armstead, 2 Kay & J. 333; 25 L. J., Ch., 237; 4 W. R. 279.

A testator devised his real estate to the use of A. and B., during the life of C. (a married woman), upon trust for her, with remainder to the use of the right heirs of C., and charged such real estate with the payment of 700*l.* to D., on her attaining twenty-one:—Held, that A. and B. having occasion to sell the estate for the purpose of raising the amount, they had a power of sale during the life of C. Ib.

2. On Appointment of New Trustees.

6. Power of sale to be exercised with consent of three trustees, their heirs and assigns, and the trustees or the survivor, his executors, to give receipts. A new trustee is appointed in the place of one who retires; another trustee dies. Whether the power can be exercised with the consent of the continuing and the new trustee, quære. Hall v. Dewes, Jac. 189.

7. A power of sale in a settlement was given to A. and B., the trustees, to preserve contingent remainders, and the survivor of them, and the executors and administrators of the survivor:—Held, that trustees appointed by the Court in the place of A. and B. could not exercise the power. Newman v. Warner, 1 Sim., N. S., 457; 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 654.

8. By a settlement lands were assured to A. and B. upon certain trusts, with a power, in case they or either of them or any trustee or trustees to be appointed under the power should die, or become unwilling to act, for the settlor during his life, and after his decease for the acting trustees or trustee for the time being, or for the executors or administrators of any surviving trustee, to nominate any fit person or persons to supply the place of the trustees or trustee so dying or becoming unwilling to act. A. never executed the deed, nor acted. After A.'s death B., being desirous of retiring, nominated C. to be a new trustee, and conveyed to C. all the trust estate. After B.'s death, on account of doubts as to the validity of this appointment the executor of B. executed a deed appointing C. and D. to be trustees of the settlement in the place of the original trustees; and, by the same deed, C. conveyed the property to the use of himself and D. They then sold the trust estate under a power of sale in the settlement:—Held, that the two new trustees were well appointed, and had validly exercised the power of sale so as to exonerate the purchasers from responsibility. Miller v. Priddon, 1 De G. M. & G. 335; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 421. Affirming 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 226.

The bill contained an allegation that the new trustee firstly appointed was, when the sales were made, the sole trustee of the settlement. Semble, that this allegation would not have precluded the plaintiff from insisting upon the invalidity of the appointment of that trustee if the appointment had been invalid. Ib.

9. Testator devised his real estates to A., B., C., and D., and their heirs, on certain trusts, which required the legal estate to be vested in them, and gave a power of sale to them or the survivors or survivor of them, or the heirs, etc., and declared their receipts or receipt to be good discharges to a purchaser; but if any of them should die or decline to act, that it should be lawful, and he thereby willed and directed, that the survivors of them should immediately, or within two months afterwards, by any deed nominate some fit person to be a trustee in his place. D. died; and A. and B. by one deed, and C. by another (both of which were executed more than two lunar months, but not less than two calendar months, after D.'s death), nominated a new trustee, but did not convey the legal estate to him. A., B., C., and the new trustee agreed to sell the estates to M., who objected to complete his purchase: first, because the appointment of the new trustee had not been made within two lunar months; secondly, because it had not been made by one single deed; and, lastly, because the power of sale was suspended during the vacancy in the trust. The Court overruled the objections, but held, that the new trustee had not been duly appointed, because no conveyance had been executed to him; notwithstanding which, that A., B., and C. could make a good title, and give an effectual discharge for the purchase money. The Court held also that the new trustee, though not duly appointed, might join with A., B., and C. in a suit for a specific performance. Warburton v. Sandys, 14 Sim. 622; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 431; 9 Jur. 503.

1. Testator devised real estates to A., B., and C. in trust for sale, and directed that in case the trustees or any of them should die or be desirous of being discharged, or refuse or decline or become incapable to act, it should be lawful for the surviving or continuing trustees or trustee by deed, etc., to nominate, substitute, or appoint, any person or persons to be a new trustee or trustees, in the stead of the trustee or trustees so dying, etc. A. died in the testator's lifetime. After the testator's death, B. and C. declined to act in the trusts, and appointed D. and E. trustees in their place. Shortly after this appointment B. died, and D. had since died:—Held, that the appointment of D. and E. was invalid, and that a title could only be made to the property by C. appointing trustees in the room of A. and B., and that such new trustees and C., or such new trustees and a trustee to be appointed by them and C., in the room of C. retiring, could make a good title. Nicholson v. Wright, 5 W. R. 431; 26 L. J., Ch., 312; 3 Jur., N. S., 313.

2. Testator devised his real and personal estate to trustees, to be sold for the benefit of his children, and directed that their receipts should be sufficient discharges. The children filed a bill to have the will established and the trusts performed. At the hearing, the bill was dismissed against the heir, and the Court did not establish the will, but made a decree affecting the personal estate only. The suit afterwards became abated, and was not revived. On the death of the surviving trustee, another suit was instituted for the appointment of new trustees, which was done. The new trustees then sold part of the testator's real estates to the plaintiff, who filed a bill for a specific performance:—Held, that, the former suit having been dismissed as against the heir, without the will being established, no suit was pending for the administration of the testator's real estates, and that the new trustees had the same power of giving receipts as the original trustees had. Drayson v. Pocock, 4 Sim. 283.

3. Trustees had a power of sale over a real estate vested in them, and to give good discharges for the purchase money. The tenant for life had a power to appoint new trustees, and thereupon the trust estate was to be conveyed to the old and new trustees. In 1857 A. was appointed a new trustee, but before any conveyance had been made to him, the estate was sold, and conveyed to a purchaser, and the purchase money was paid to the old and new trustees:—Held, that the purchaser had obtained a good discharge for the purchase money. Welstead v. Colvill, 28 Beav. 537.

4. By marriage articles a power of disposition was given to the wife with the consent of the undersigned trustees:—Held, that new trustees appointed by the Court might give the required consent. Byam v. Byam, 3 W. R. 95; 19 Beav. 58; 24 L. J., Ch., 209; 1 Jur., N. S., 79.

5. A husband left real estate on trust for his wife for life, and, after her death, for his son for life, with further trusts, and made his wife and son executors, and appointed strangers trustees, giving the trustees a power of sale and power to appoint new trustees, the latter exercisable with the consent of the tenant for life for the time being. Shortly after his death the last remaining trustee appointed the wife and son to be trustees, and he and the wife died. The son then contracted to sell the estate under the power:—Held, that he could validly exercise the power of sale, for, though the Court will not appoint a tenant for life to be trustee, such an appointment out of court is valid; and there was nothing in the will specially disqualifying the son from becoming trustee. Forster v. Abraham, 43 L. J., Ch., 199; 17 L. R., Eq., 351; 22 W. R. 386.

6. Real estate was settled by will on D. for life, with remainders over, and the will appointed two trustees, and empowered them to sell at the request and by the direction of the person entitled to the actual freehold, with the usual provisions for reinvestment in land and interim investment in other securities. The will also gave a power to appoint new trustees vested in the same person. One of the trustees was dead, D., who was over eighty years of age, proposed to sell the estate. The remaindermen brought this action for the appointment of a new trustee, and to restrain the sale as improper, adducing evidence to show that the estate would sell to better advantage at a future date, owing to the existence of minerals at present unworked, and a projected railway which would pass through the estate. D. had no reinvestment in land in view, and proposed to invest in consols. After action brought, the Settled Land Act 1882 came into operation; and shortly before the action came on for trial D., under the power in the will, appointed a new trustee without referring the appointment to the Court. The trustees consented to the proposed sale:—Held, that D. was entitled to sell the estate as well under the power in the will as under the Settled Land Act. Thomas v. Williams, 24 L. R., Ch. D., 558; 52 L. J., Ch., 603; 49 L. T. 111; 31 W. R. 943.

Held, also, that the new trustee was properly appointed, notwithstanding the pending action. Ib.

3. Surviving Trustee.

7. Power of sale given to three trustees:—Held, not to be well executed by two surviving trustees. Townshend v. Wilson, 3 Madd. 261.

8. Testator appointed three persons and their respective heirs and assigns his executors, and gave to them and to their respective heirs and assigns all his real and personal estates, in trust for the purposes after set forth; and first, that they and their respective heirs and assigns should sell his real estates; and he empowered them and their respective heirs and assigns to convey the estates, and to give receipts for the consideration money. He then requested the executors of his will to sell his farming stock, furniture, etc., and out of the moneys so arising, and all other portions of his personal estate, he required them and their respective heirs and assigns to pay all his debts, etc.

One of the trustees and executors died. The two survivors agreed to sell the real estates. The Court, in a suit for a specific performance of the agreement, rejected the word "respective;" and held that the two surviving trustees and executors could sell and convey the estates to the purchaser; and that the debts were charged on the proceeds of the real estates, and, consequently, that the receipt clause was unnecessary. Jones v. Price, 11 Sim. 557; 10 L. J., N. S., Ch., 195; 5 Jur. 719.

1. A power of sale, and to give receipts in a mortgage given to the two mortgagees, their heirs and assigns, it being declared that the mortgage money was advanced by them out of moneys in their possession on a joint account:—Held, to be exercisable by the survivor. Hind v. Poole, 1 Kay & J. 383; 1 Jur., N. S., 371.

A fortiori where the proceeds of the sale were to be applied to reimburse "themselves and himself," all expenses which "he or they" should be put to in making the sale, etc., and then to reimburse "themselves and himself," the mortgage money and interest, and it was declared that the receipts of the "survivor" of them should be good discharges for the mortgage debt and interest. Ib.

2. A testator, in 1843, devised certain freehold estates, and all other his real and personal estate, to A. and B., their executors and administrators, upon trust to raise 2,000*l.*, and upon other trusts. A. survived B.:—Held, that A. could execute the power by selling part of the freehold estates. Lane v. Debenham, 1 W. R. 465.

Where there was a devise and a bequest of freehold and other property, and all other the testator's real and personal estate, to two persons, their executors and administrators, upon trust, by sale or otherwise, at their discretion, to raise and invest a certain sum of money, and apply the interest in the maintenance and education of the testator's daughter, until the age of twenty-one, and then pay the same to her for her separate use, one of the devisees in trust after the death of the other, but during the lifetime of the daughter, and while, therefore, it was necessary that the charge should be raised, proceeded to sell the estate:—Held, on the objection to the title, that the surviving devisee in trust might exercise the option of selling, and the power of sale; and that an application in such a case for the direction of a court of equity was unnecessary. S. C. 11 Hare 188; 17 Jur. 1005.

3. Testator, after directing all his just debts to be paid, gave his personal estate and a freehold house, of which he was seised in fee, to his wife for life, with liberty to sell it in case a good offer should be made, and to invest the proceeds in the funds for her benefit during her life; and he directed that, at his wife's death, the house, if not previously sold, should be sold (but without saying by whom), and that the proceeds, together with his personal estate, should be divided amongst the children of his brother and sister, and he appointed his wife his executrix, and requested J. H. F. and R. C. jointly with her to become the executors and trustees of the will. J. H. F. and the testator's widow proved the will; R. C. died in the lifetime of J. H. F. and the widow, without having proved it. The widow died twenty-five years after the testator:—Held, that J. H. F. had power to sell the house, and to give a receipt for the purchase money. Forbes v. Peacock, 11 Sim. 152; 9 L. J., Ch., 367; 6 Jur. 476.

4. Where a naked power is given to several, it cannot be exercised by the survivors; but if a power be annexed to an office, any person filling the office may execute it. Brassey v. Chalmers, 16 Beav. 231. S. C. on appeal, 4 De G. M. & G. 528.

Power "to my executors hereinafter mentioned, with the approbation of my trustees for the time being," to sell real estate:—Held, by the Master of the Rolls, upon the context, not to authorise a sale by the survivor of the executors; but the Lords Justices dissented from this decision. Ib.

5. The circumstance of the tenant for life of real estate being the sole surviving trustee in whom the power of sale is vested is no objection to a sale under the power. Forster v. Abraham, 22 W. R. 386; 43 L. J., Ch., 199; 17 L. R., Eq., 351.

6. A husband, after stating that he was desirous that a farm which he occupied should be carried on during the life of his wife for the maintenance, support, and benefit of herself and all his children, and that upon her death it be fairly and equally divided among "all" his children, and that the property which his three children by a former marriage had derived should be brought into hotchpot from the time of his death, so as to form one common fund, appointed his wife "and her two brothers, W. C. and R. C., trustees and executors" of that his will; and for the purpose of management authorised and empowered them to sell and convert into money all or any part of his real and personal estates, or to mortgage or let the same or any part, and invest the proceeds as therein mentioned. The testator directed and empowered his trustees and executors to carry on the farm by and out of his assets for the maintenance, support, and benefit of his wife and children; and subject thereto declared that his real and personal estate and the proceeds should be held in trust for all his aforesaid children in equal shares; the personal property to which the children by his first marriage had become entitled being brought into hotchpot, to be vested interests at twenty-one, or on death under that age leaving lawful issue:—Held, that upon the death of the widow the surviving trustees and executors had power to sell and convey the real estate without the concurrence of the children. Re Cooke, 4 L. R., Ch. D., 454.

4. Assignee or Devisee of Surviving Trustee.

7. A trust for sale vested in A. and his heirs cannot be executed by an assignee of A. Bradford v. Belfield, 2 Sim. 264.

8. Testator devised his real estates to A., B., and C., in trust that they, or the survivors or survivor of them, or the heirs of the survivor, should, as soon as conveniently might be after his decease, but at their discretion, sell the same; and he empowered them and their heirs to make contracts with and conveyances to the purchasers; and declared that the receipts of them, or the survivors or survivor of them, or the heirs, executors, or administrators of such survivor, should be good discharges to the purchasers; and he directed that they, their heirs, administrators, and assigns should hold the proceeds of the sale upon certain trusts. A. and B. disclaimed, and C. alone acted. He devised the estates to M. and N., upon the trusts affecting the same. After his death, M. and N. agreed to sell the estates to P.:—Held, that M. and N. were not entitled to execute the trust for sale, as they were the devisees and not the heirs of C. Cooke v. Crawford, 13 Sim. 91; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 406; 6 Jur. 723.

1. A testator gave a power of sale to two trustees and the survivor, "his executors and administrators":—Held, that a title dependent on a sale by the devisee in trust of the survivor was too doubtful to force on a purchaser; and held, secondly, that the defect was cured, by the release of all the cestuis que trustent to the representatives of the surviving trustee. Macdonald v. Walker, 14 Beav. 556.

Consideration of the cases of Cooke v. Crawford (13 Sim. 91) and Titley v. Wolstenholme (7 Beav. 425). Ib.

2. Copyhold hereditaments were devised to three trustees and their "heirs, executors, and administrators," in trust for two tenants for life successively, with a power to the trustees and the survivors and survivor of them, his heirs, executors, or administrators, to sell the same. The survivor of the three trustees devised all estates vested in him as trustee to two trustees, whom he also appointed his executors, of whom one was his customary heir; the two contracted to sell, and the purchaser declined to complete. On a special case, stated for the opinion of the Court:—Held, that the title was too doubtful for the Court to compel the purchaser to take it. Wilson v. Bennett, 5 De G. & Sm. 475; 16 Jur. 966; 21 L. J., Ch., 741.

3. Devise to four trustees and the survivors and survivor of them, and the heirs and assigns of such survivor for ever, in trust, that they, the survivors and survivor of them, and the heirs and assigns of such survivor, should sell the devised estates. The devisees of the surviving trustee under A.'s will put up the property for sale. Semble, that they could make a good title under the trust to sell. Cooke v. Crawford (13 Sim. 91) observed upon. The plaintiff in a suit for specific performance averred that everything in respect of title that he was bound to show had been shown, at the time when notice to vacate the contract was given by the defendant, and having failed to substantiate this averment, the question of compensation which has not been raised by the bill cannot be entertained. Ashton v. Wood, 3 Jur., N. S., 1164; 3 Sm. & G. 436.

4. The administrator of an assign of a mortgagee who has obtained a conveyance from the heir of such assign to a trustee for himself, can exercise a power of sale given by the mortgage deed to the original mortgagee, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, with a direction that the receipts of the same persons should be good discharges, for the legal representatives of an "assign" must be considered to be assigns within the meaning of such a power. Cooke v. Crawford (13 Sim. 91) distinguished. Saloway v. Strawbridge, 1 Kay & J. 371; 24 L. J., Ch., 393. Affirmed 1 Jur., N. S., 1194; 25 L. J., Ch., 121; 7 De G. M. & G. 594.

5. A power of sale given to trustees and the survivors of them, his heirs and assigns, may be exercised by the devisees of the surviving trustee. Hall v. May, 3 Kay & J. 585; 3 Jur., N. S., 907; 26 L. J., Ch., 791; 5 W. R. 869.

6. A., by his will, devised real estate to three trustees in fee, in trust that they, and the survivors and survivor of them, his heirs and assigns, should, at such time or times as they or he should think fit, sell and absolutely dispose of the same, and hold the sale moneys upon certain trusts. There was a power, in case of the death of any of the trustees thereby nominated, or any future trustees, for the surviving or continuing trustee to appoint by deed in the usual way. The surviving trustee devised all his trust estates to two persons upon the trusts upon which the same were respectively holden:—Held, that the devisees in trust could make a good title to the premises to a purchaser objecting; and the purchaser was made to pay the costs caused by his objection. Titley v. Wolstenholme (7 Beav. 425) followed.

Semble, the word "assigns" would have been sufficient for this purpose without the power to appoint new trustees. Ib.

7. Where real estate is devised to trustees and "their heirs" (omitting "assigns") in trust for sale, the trust must be considered as annexed, not to the person, but to the fee simple estate taken by the trustees, so that the trust can be executed by the devisees of trust estates of the surviving trustee. Osborne to Rowlett, 13 L. R., Ch. D., 774; 49 L. J., Ch., 310; 42 L. T. 650; 28 W. R. 365.

A testator, by his will, dated in 1845, devised and bequeathed his real and personal estate to his wife for life, subject to the payment of his debts, and from and after her decease to A. and B., "their heirs, executors, and administrators, upon trust to sell and dispose thereof at such times and in such manner as they my said trustees shall deem expedient." A. and B. both predeceased their tenant for life, B., the surviving trustee, having devised his trust estates. Upon the death of the tenant for life, B.'s devisees contracted to sell part of the real estate of the original testator:—Held, upon a summons under the Vendor and Purchaser Act 1874, that B.'s devisees could make a good title, and one which the Court would force upon a purchaser. Ib.

Cooke v. Crawford (13 Sim. 91) held to be overruled. Ib.

Observations on the duty of the Court to decide doubtful questions of title as between vendor and purchaser. Ib.

The question of costs as between vendor and purchaser where the title is disputed considered. Ib.

8. A testator devised his freehold and copyhold estates to trustees and their heirs, "upon trust that they his said trustees or the trustees or trustee for the time being of that his will," should sell the estates. He empowered "his trustees, or the trustees or trustee for the time being of that his will," to give receipts, and declared that if the trustees thereby appointed, or either of them, or any trustee or trustees to be appointed as thereinafter provided should die, or desire to be discharged, then and so often the said trustees or trustee might appoint a new trustee or new trustees. The trustees having died, the customary heir of the survivor contracted to sell part of the copyholds:—Held, that the customary heir was competent to execute the trust for sale. Re Morton and Hallett, 15 L. R., Ch. D., 143; 49 L. J., Ch., 559; 42 L. T. 602; 28 W. R. 895.

Whether Cooke v. Crawford (13 Sim. 91) is to be treated as overruled, quære. Ib.

5. On Disclaimer by Trustee.

1. One trustee for the sale of an estate, having released and conveyed it to his co-trustee, refused to join in the receipt of the purchase money; upon the special expression of the deed, the purchaser was not held to the agreement with the remaining trustee; it would have been otherwise if one had merely renounced. Crewe v. Dicken, 4 Ves. 97.

2. Trustee for sale, having renounced, is not necessary as party for conveyance, or in receipt for purchase money. Adams v. Taunton, 5 Madd. 435.

3. A testatrix devised and bequeathed her residuary real and personal estate, after payment of debts and legacies, to two trustees, and the survivor of them, and the heirs, executors, and administrators and assigns of such survivor, on trust to invest the same in the public stocks, government funds, or upon real security, or at their discretion to keep the same in their then present state of investment. The will then declared beneficial interests in the residue; one of the trustees disclaimed:—Held, that the other trustee had a discretionary power of sale over copyholds of the testatrix included in the residuary devise. Affleck v. James, 17 Sim. 121; 13 Jur. 759.

4. When lands are devised to trustees in fee upon trusts or with powers which require the exercise of judgment and discretion, and the trustees disclaim the devise, so that the legal estate in fee descends to the heir-at-law, such powers or trusts cannot be exercised or carried into execution by the heir, although he holds the estate subject to the trusts of the will. Robson v. Flight, 4 De G. J. & S. 608; 34 L. J., Ch., 226; 11 L. T., N. S., 725; 5 N. R. 344. Reversing 10 Jur., N. S., 1228; 12 W. R. 195.

A trust which gives the trustee no other duty to discharge than simply to clothe the equitable ownership with the legal estate may be performed by the heir. But whether a trust may be performed or a trust power exercised by the heir-at-law, which is obligatory on the trustees of the will, depends on the question whether in the exercise anything has to be supplied by the judgment, knowledge, and discretion of the person acting in the exercise of such trust or power. Ib.

A power to lease may be a trust power in the sense of its being the duty of the trustee to avail himself of it under proper circumstances, but it is to be exercised by a person selected for the purpose, and not by the individual on whom by reason of intestacy the law casts the estate. Ib.

5. Where trustees, having a power of sale, disclaim the Court can exercise the discretion of the trustees and sell if necessary. Browne v. Paull, 16 Jur. 707.

6. A., who was entitled to freehold property, subject to a mortgage in fee, by will devised his real estate to a trustee to sell, and hold the proceeds upon trust, and appointed the devisee in trust executor of his will. The devisee in trust disclaimed the trust, and also the executorship. The heir-at-law of the testator, who also took out letters of administration to the estate, with the concurrence of the mortgagee, and in exercise of the trust for sale contained in the will, and by virtue of every other power therein, and as heir-at-law, joined with the mortgagee in conveying the estate to the purchaser free from the mortgage:—Held, that the legal and beneficial interest in the property passed by the conveyance, and the purchaser, on reselling the property, could show a good title. Austen v. Martin, 7 Jur., N. S., 871; 9 W. R. 674; 4 L. T., N. S., 817. S. C. nom. Austin v. Marten, 25 Beav. 523.

7. A testator gave his real and personal estate to A. and B., whom he appointed his executors, as to the real estate in trust for sale, the proceeds to be considered as part of his personal estate; and gave his personal estate after the death of his wife (who died in his lifetime) to his son absolutely. A. died in the testator's lifetime. B. renounced probate in the common form, and survived the testator for three years and then died, without having acted as trustee:—Held, under the circumstances, that the renunciation of the probate operated as a disclaimer of the trusts of the will, so that the legal estate in land of which the testator died seised vested in his son as his heir-at-law. Re Gordon, Roberts v. Gordon, 46 L. J., Ch. D., 794; 6 L. R., Ch. D., 531.

1. Parties to Consent or Concur in the Sale. In General.

8. Trustees whose consent was required to the exercise of a power of sale by tenants for life, submitting to act under the direction of the Court; on a bill for specific performance of a contract to sell, an inquiry into the propriety of the contract was ordered. Doran v. Wiltshire, 3 Swan. 699.

9. A power of sale and exchange was given to trustees, with the consent of tenant for life, against whom judgments were entered up. Quære, whether the trustees could sell without the concurrence of the judgment creditors. Leigh (Lord) v. Ashburton (Lord), 11 Beav. 470.

10. Where a testator devised his realty, after his just debts, funeral and testamentary expenses should be paid thereout, to trustees upon trusts for certain persons, and after the death of the survivor of those persons upon trust to sell, with power to give receipts:—Held, that the trustees, notwithstanding the preceding implied power in the executors, could make a good title without the executor's concurrence. Hodkinson v. Quin, 1 John. & H. 303; 7 Jur., N. S., 65; 30 L. J., Ch., 118; 3 L. T., N. S., 804.

1. A., as to the residue of his real estate, devised part to trustees at their entire discretion, either to sell and dispose of the real estate or any part, at any time or times previously to his youngest surviving child or grandchild attaining twenty-one, "but no sale to take place during the life of my wife without her privity and consent;" and after her death, "on the arrival at the age of twenty-one of my youngest surviving child or grandchild, I give and devise the whole or such part of my residuary real estate then undisposed of, unto and equally between all my children then living," and the lawful issue of any deceased child, as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants. There were three daughters living, all of whom had attained twenty-one, and six children of one of them, all infants:—Held, that the power of sale was exercisable with the consent of the widow. Chapman v. Harris, 8 L. T., N. S., 306.

2. The cestuis que use, under a settlement of real estate, are not the parties against whom a trust or power given to trustees to sell the estate for the discharge of incumbrances will be enforced. Rooke v. Kensington (Lord), 25 L. J., Ch., 366.

3. Powers of sale and exchange in settlements are only given to trustees for the benefit, and to be exercised with the consent, of the persons entitled to the estate under and by virtue of the settlement containing the power; and the devisees of the ultimate remainder in fee of the settlor, which was his own reversion, cannot be said to claim under the settlement. Wolley v. Jenkins, 3 Jur., N. S., 321.

Where a sale is to be made with the consent of the persons for the time being entitled to the receipt of the rents and profits, this means the persons beneficially entitled, and excludes mere trustees, semble. Ib.

Upon the marriage of A. and B., A.'s estate was settled upon him for life; remainder to the use, that if B. should survive, she should have a jointure of 600*l.* per annum; remainder to trustees for 500 years, to secure the arrears of jointure; remainder to trustees for 2,000 years, to raise portions for younger children; and subject thereto, the estate was limited to the issue of the marriage, with an ultimate remainder to A. in fee. The settlement contained a power to B., at any time after the marriage, to charge 2,000*l.* on the property, to be raised after her death, and for the benefit of her personal estate and for raising that sum she had power to create a term. There was in the settlement a power of sale and exchange given to trustees, to be exercised with the consent of A., and after his death, within twenty-one years thence, with the consent of the persons for the time being entitled to the rents and profits. There was no issue of the marriage, and A. died, living B., having devised the estate to trustees, upon trust to sell, and apply the proceeds as therein directed. It being desirable to sell a portion of the estate comprised in the settlement, free from the jointure and the power of B. to charge with 2,000*l.*, the trustees of the settlement entered into a contract to sell:—Held (affirming 23 Beav. 53; 26 L. J., Ch., 379), that, under the circumstances the power of sale in the settlement could not be exercised. Ib. But see Vine v. Raleigh, 24 L. R., Ch. D., 238; 49 L. T. 440; 31 W. R. 855.

4. Where an estate in remainder is vested in trustees with powers of sale, the cestuis que trustent are entitled to have the trustees cognisant of the sale and consulted with reference thereto; but if they subsequently adopt the sale, and it is acted upon, and the money received under it, the Court will confirm it. Blackwood v. Borrowes, 2 Con. & L. 459; 4 Dr. & War. 441.

5. A testator devised the lands to be purchased with the proceeds of certain estates sold in his lifetime, to the use of trustees and their heirs, upon trust, to pay the rents and profits to his daughter, whether married or unmarried, for her seperate use, and not subject to any debts or control of any husband; and after her decease, upon further trust, to convey the lands to such persons, etc., as his daughter should by will, attested by three credible witnesses, and whether married or single, appoint; and for want of such appointment, upon trust, to convey the freehold and inheritance of the lands to the right heirs of his daughter: and the testator further directed, that as to so much of such proceeds as should not have been laid out in lands, the trustees should invest the same in the public funds, and pay the dividends into the proper hands of his daughter, during her life, for her sole use and benefit, whether married or unmarried, and not subject to the debts or control of any husband; and after her decease, upon further trust, to pay and transfer the same to such persons, etc., as she should, by her last will and testament, and whether sole or covert, appoint: and in default thereof, in trust, to pay, transfer, and assign the same to the executors, etc., of his daughter. After the testator's death lands were purchased, and were conveyed to the trustees of his will, upon the trusts thereof. A contract having been subsequently entered into by the trustees for the sale of those lands, it was held, that the trustees, with the concurrence of the testator's daughter, could make a good title to the purchaser. Webb v. Shaftesbury (Lord), 3 Myl. & K. 599.

6. A testator devised lands—subject to a charge of 3,000*l.* for his wife, and a charge of debts, if his personal estate should be deficient—upon trust to pay rents and profits to his wife for life, and afterwards for the children of his brother, as the executor and trustee of the will should appoint, upon the youngest attaining twenty-one. The will also gave the trustee a power of sale. All the existing children having attained twenty-one (the widow and the brother still living), the trustee appointed in their favour. Thirteen years after testator's death he sold the premises by auction. The purchaser required the concurrence of the appointees, as beneficiary and necessary parties to the sale:—Held, on a suit for specific performance, that their concurrence was not necessary, and the Court enforced the contract. Greetham v. Colton, 6 N. R. 311; 34 Beav. 615.

1. A trustee having a discretionary trust for sale of real estate under a will at such price as he should think reasonable, with power to postpone the sale, leased the property for thirty years with the concurrence of the beneficiaries. Before the lease expired the property was put up for sale by the lessee and the trustee conjointly, the facts being disclosed by the particulars of sale, and a sale having been effected, the purchase money was apportioned between the two interests according to the valuation of a skilled valuer:—Held, that the purchaser was not entitled to insist on the concurrence of the beneficiaries on account of the valuation not having been made before the sale, and that the title would be forced upon him. Morris v. Debenham, 2 L. R., Ch. D., 540; 34 L. T., N. S., 205; 24 W. R. 636.

2. On the sale by the Court of real estate vested in trustees having a power of sale, and being themselves beneficiaries:—Held, that a good title could not be made by the exercise of the power of sale without the concurrence of the assignee in insolvency of one of the trustees. Young v. Tregear, 21 W. R. 215.

3. A mortgagor and a mortgagee with a power of sale joined in demising the mortgaged hereditaments upon trust at the request of the mortgagee during the continuance of the security, and at the request of the mortgagor, after the satisfaction of the mortgage, to grant leases of the premises in such manner as the person making such request should appoint, and to permit the mortgagor to receive the rents until default was made in payment of the mortgage money or interest, and upon trust after default to receive the rents and apply the same in keeping down the interest upon the mortgage. These trusts were not declared to be subject to the power of sale in the mortgage:—Held, that they were so in effect, and that the trustee was bound without the concurrence of the mortgagor to join in conveying the hereditaments to a purchaser from the mortgagee under the power of sale. King v. Heenan, 3 De G. M. & G. 890.

4. A testator by his will devised his real estates to trustees for 1,000 years, and subject thereto in strict settlement. The trusts of the term were to pay the testator's wife a life annuity of 200*l.*, and subject thereto, for the persons entitled under the prior limitations. He also gave the trustees a power to sell the property, the power to be exercised during the life of any tenant for life, who should be for the time being entitled to the possession or to the receipt of the rents of the estates, with his consent. The sale moneys were to be reinvested in land. By a codicil he directed his trustees to stand possessed of the term, and of the like term to arise in the real estates which might be purchased under the trusts of the will, on trust to pay the surplus of the rents of all the estates (after paying the interest on his mortgage and other debts) to his wife, during her widowhood, in lieu of the annuity. In case she should marry again, the trust for payment of the annuity was to take the place of the trust for payment of the surplus rents. The debts having been all paid:—Held, that the trustees could exercise the power of sale with the consent of the tenant for life, the widow also consenting. Robertson v. Walker, 44 L. J., Ch., 220; 23 W. R. 224; 31 L. T., N. S., 817.

5. Sir T. N. devised his estates to trustees, in trust for A. for life, then for B. for life, and then for C. in tail, with a power of sale and enfranchisement with the consent of the person for the time being entitled as beneficial tenant for life; and directed that no repurchase or reinvestment should be made while there should be any person entitled as beneficial tenant for life or tenant in tail in possession, and of the age of twenty-one years, without the previous consent of such person. A. and B. were both dead, and C. was an infant:—Held, that the trustees could during the minority of C. exercise the power of sale and enfranchisement without consent, and make a good title. Re Neave and Chapman, Re Neave's Trusts, 49 L. J., Ch., 642; 43 L. T. 152; 28 W. R. 976.

6. One of three trustees, acting as if absolute owner, entered into a contract to sell the entirety of a freehold property (in one-fifth part of which he had a beneficial interest), describing the property as "The Jolly Sailor, offices, etc." The other trustees, afterwards, refused to concur in the sale. The vendee having brought an action for specific performance of the contract:—Held, that the contract for the sale of the entirety could not be enforced, and the property being trust property, it could not be enforced against the defendant as to his one-fifth share only. Naylor v. Goodall, 47 L. J., Ch., 53; 26 W. R. 162; 37 L. T., N. S., 422.

2. By Infant.

7. An infant can exercise a power, even though it be coupled with an interest, where an intention appears that it should be exercisable during minority. Re Cardross, 7 L. R., Ch. D., 728; 38 L. T., N. S., 778; 26 W. R. 389; 47 L. J., Ch., 327.

By a settlement made with the sanction of the Court, upon the marriage of a lady then, and therein described as, "an infant of seventeen years," funds belonging to her were vested in trustees upon trust to retain existing investments or reinvest with the consent of the lady and her husband during their joint lives; the lady taking the first life interest under the settlement:—Held, that the lady had a power to consent to a proposed reinvestment notwithstanding her minority. Ib.

3. By Survivors of a Class.

8. Power of sale under will to trustees, with consent of such of the beneficiaries as should be free from disability other than coverture; and if there were none, then at the discretion of the trustees. None of the persons who took under the will were under such disability, but one had died and devised his share to infants:—Held, that the trustees might exercise the power. Arkell v. Henley, 3 W. R. 259.

9. A. devised real estate to trustees, for sale, and he declared that no sale should take place without the consent of his sons and daughters. By a subsequent clause in his will, he directed the shares of the children to be held in trust for them and their respective issue. One of the children died without having consented to a sale. The other children had issue, who were infants:—Held, that the power of sale could not be exercised by the trustees with the consent of the surviving children and the persons absolutely entitled to the share of the deceased child. Sykes v. Sheard, 9 Jur., N. S., 886; 11 W. R. 1014; 8 L. T., N. S., 820; 2 N. R. 540; 33 Beav. 114. See S. C. on appeal, 9 Jur., N. S., 1262; 12 W. R. 117; 33 L. J., Ch., 181; 9 L. T., N. S., 430; 2 De G. J. & S. 6; 3 N. R. 144.

4. Extinguishment of Power to Consent of Tenant for Life.

By Alienation.] 1. The trustees of a marriage settlement were empowered to invest the trust funds in land, and afterwards to resell the lands with the consent of the tenant for life. After the trustee had invested part of the funds in land, the tenant for life conveyed his interest under the settlement to a purchaser, by the description of all his life and other estate and interest in all the moneys, stocks, funds, and securities, and messuages, lands, tenements, and hereditaments into which the moneys, stock, funds, and securities were, or at any time thereafter might be, converted and changed:—Held, that the tenant for life's power to consent to a resale of the lands, was not destroyed by the alienation of his interest under the settlement. Warburton v. Farn, 16 Sim. 625; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 312; 13 Jur. 528.

2. The trustees of settled estates had a power of sale, to be exercised at the request and direction of the tenant for life, who was also entitled to the ultimate reversion in fee. The tenant for life made an absolute conveyance of all his interest to A. for value. Subsequently the trustees, by the direction of the tenant for life, purported to exercise the power of sale by conveying the estates to A.:—Held, that his power to consent was not extinguished by the absolute alienation of his life estate, and could still be exercised with the concurrence of the alienee. Alexander v. Mills, 6 L. R., Ch., 124; 40 L. J., Ch., 73; 24 L. T., N. S., 206; 19 W. R. 310. Reversing 39 L. J., Ch., 407; 18 W. R. 635; 22 L. T., N. S., 396.

Held, also, that there was nothing in the sale of the interest of the tenant for life, and the subsequent exercise of the power for sale to the assignee of the life interest, to raise suspicion of mala fides, or to put a purchaser on inquiry. Ib.

3. A settlement, by which real estates were limited to the use of A. for life, with remainder to her son in tail, contained a power of sale and exchange to be exercised during the life of the tenant for life, with her consent signified by writing under her hand and seal. By a disentailing deed, to which the tenant for life was a party, the tenant in tail, with the consent of his mother, the tenant for life, testified by her executing that deed, conveyed the settled estates, subject to her life estate therein, and also other hereditaments, of which he was tenant in tail in possession, to uses to bar dower in his own favour. This deed contained no recital of any contract, but in the operative part its object was stated to be, in order to defeat the estate or estates tail of the tenant in tail in the hereditaments therein comprised, and all other estates, powers, rights, and interests limited to take effect after the determination or in defeasance of such estate or estates tail, and to limit the fee simple in such hereditaments, as to such parts thereof as were vested in the tenant for life, subject to her life estate therein, to the uses thereinafter expressed:—Held, that the concurrence of the tenant for life in the disentailing deed did not bar her power of assenting to a subsequent exercise of the power of sale and exchange, because this was a power to raise a use paramount to the estate tail, and there was nothing in the frame of the deed from which a contract could be implied, that the tenant for life would not consent afterwards to the exercise of the power of sale and exchange. Hill v. Pritchard, 1 Kay 394; 2 Eq. Rep. 374; 2 W. R. 297.

By Bankruptcy.] 4. By a marriage settlement real estate was conveyed to trustees upon trust to pay the rents and profits to the husband for life; and after the death of the husband, or in case he should assign, charge, incumber, or otherwise anticipate the income, then, in either of those events, to pay the income to the wife for life, for her separate use; and after her decease, to the children of the marriage. Powers of sale were given to the trustees at the joint request and by the joint direction of the husband and wife during their joint lives:—Held, that the power of consenting to the sale by the trustees was not extinguished by the bankruptcy of the husband, but that, with the assent of the tenant for life and his assignees, a perfect title could be made under the power. Holdsworth v. Goose, 29 Beav. 111; 7 Jur., N. S., 301; 30 L. J., Ch., 188; 9 W. R. 443; 4 L. T., N. S., 196.

5. Power of sale of realty given to trustees with the consent of the tenant for life:—Held, exercisable after his bankruptcy, with the consent of the tenant for life and of all persons who had become interested in his estate. Eisdell v. Hammersley, 21 Beav. 255.

F., devised real estate to his widow E. for life, with remainder to R. in fee. R. married in 1838, and by a settlement the real estate was (subject to the estate for life of E.) settled upon R. for life, with remainder to trustees to preserve contingent remainders, with remainder to E. (the wife of R.) for life, with remainder to trustees to preserve contingent remainders, with remainder to the children of the marriage as the parents or the survivor of them should appoint, and, in default, to the children equally, as tenants in common in tail, with benefit of survivorship among them, and with an ultimate remainder, in default of issue of the marriage to R. in fee. The settlement contained a power for the two trustees of it, or the survivors or survivor of them, or the executors or administrators of such survivor, at the request or with the consent in writing of R. and E. during their joint lives, and of the survivor of them, to sell the real estate, and to give receipts for the purchase money. In 1849 R. became a bankrupt; in 1850 the widow of the testator purchased from the assignees the interest of R. in the real estate under his marriage settlement. In 1855 the widow died, having by a codicil devised the life interest of R. so purchased by her to trustees for his benefit for his life, or until he should become bankrupt or alien the estate, but having made no devise of the ultimate fee in the real estate, and leaving C. her heir-at-law. In 1862 R. and his wife requested the surviving trustee of their marriage settlement to sell the real estate under the power of sale therein contained. Upon the question whether the power of sale in the settlement could be exercised:—Held, that the surviving trustee of the settlement, with the concurrence of R. and his wife, and that of the trustees of the will and the heir-at-law of the widow, could exercise the power. S. C. 6 L. T., N. S., 706.

5. Sufficiency of Consent.

1. K. had a power, with consent of trustees, to substitute other estates for the existing trust estates. The consent of the trustees was required to be signified by deed. They had seen a draft deed of substitution, had signified their assent thereto, but had executed it some time after the execution of it by K.:—Held, that there was a sufficient consent by the trustees. Offen v. Harman, 6 Jur., N. S., 487; 29 L. J., Ch., 307.

The evidence as to the consent of the trustees was adduced by way of an affidavit filed after the opening of the case before the Court of Appeal. The Court, therefore, gave no costs on either side. Ib.

2. Under a power of sale, with a consent of parties, testified by any writing, etc., under their and his hands, etc., attested by two or more witnesses; the attestation going only to sealing and delivery:—Held, not sufficient, nor a subsequent attestation that they also signed, but a case was directed. Wright v. Wakeford, 17 Ves. 454.

6. Requests.

3. By a marriage settlement, freehold estate and some personal estate were conveyed and assigned to trustees upon trust, on the request of the husband and wife, during their joint lives, and, after the death of either, upon the request of the survivor, to sell the estate, and to stand seised and possessed of the estate until sold, and of the purchase money, in case the same should be sold, upon trust for the husband for his life; and, after his decease, upon trust for the wife for her life; and after the death of the survivor of them to convey the estate, unless sold, and assign the personal estate unto the children and grandchildren of the marriage, born in the lifetime of the husband and wife, as they or the survivor should appoint; and, in default of appointment, unto and amongst the children of the marriage equally. The estate was taken by the corporation of London, under the London Bridge Act (4 Geo. 4, c. 50), and the price having been fixed by a jury, the purchase money was paid into court under the Act, the trustees of the settlement not making out a satisfactory title:—Held, that, in the absence of any conveyance by the trustees, the sale must be deemed to have been effected under the Act of Parliament only; and, therefore, that the purchase money was impressed with the character of real estate, under the 35th section of the London Bridge Act. Re Taylor's Settlement, 9 Hare 596.

That if there had been any conversion, it must have been by the conjoint operation of the articles and settlement and of the Act of Parliament, but that the settlement and Act of Parliament could not, in this case, have any conjoint operation. Ib.

That the estate, having been real when settled, it was not meant by the settlement that it should become personal, unless the husband and wife, or the survivor, requested it to be sold. Ib.

That the words of request should not be construed as merely intended to enforce on the trustees the obligation of sale, but as inserted for the purpose either of enforcing obligation or giving discretion, as the context of the instrument might require. Ib.

That the payment of money into court, owing to an objection to the title, and the application of the trustees and tenants for life for the dividends, did not tend to connect the sale with the trust, but led to a contrary conclusion, inasmuch as the city of London, having the power to require a perfect title under their act, would not be likely to prefer an imperfect one under the trust. Ib.

That there could be no sale pursuant to the trust without a conveyance of the estate by the trustees, and the payment of of the purchase money to them; and if, after fixing of the price by a jury, there had been a conveyance by the trustees, at the request of the tenant for life, the Court would have held the sale to have been under the trust, semble. Ib.

4. A power of sale and of exchange was given to trustees of a settlement, at the request of the person for the time being "seised of the freehold and inheritance of the manors":—Held, that reading the word "and" conjunctively, the power could not be exercised at the request of a tenant for life who (subject to intervening limitations) had the ultimate remainder in fee. Malmesbury (Earl) v. Malmesbury (Countess), Phillipson v. Turner, 31 Beav. 407.

Held, also, that the word "and" could not be read disjunctively as "or." Ib.

5. A settlement contained the usual covenant by the husband and wife to assign after acquired property of the wife to trustees, with a proviso that it should be lawful for the trustees, at the request of the husband and wife, during their joint lives, and of the survivor during his or her life, and afterwards at the discretion of the trustees, to sell and dispose of such property, and invest the proceeds upon the trusts of the settlement. The wife afterwards became entitled to leaseholds and specific personal chattels:—Held, that the trustees were not for the present to convert these things without the request in writing of the husband and wife. Hope v. Hope, 1 Jur., N. S., 770.

1. Lord S., being tenant for life under a settlement which contained a power to trustees to sell at his request, entered into a contract for the sale of part of the settled property; but this contract was not communicated to the trustees during his lifetime. Lord S. was also entitled to the reversion in fee, subject to a charge of 15,000*l.*, and to contingent remainders to his sons, which failed upon his death unmarried:—Held, that the purchaser was entitled to specific performance, if he was willing to treat the contract as one for a sale only of Lord S.'s interest in the property, but not otherwise, and that he was not entitled to any compensation or indemnity in respect of the charge of 15,000*l.* Bainbridge v. Kinnaird, 2 N. R. 5; 9 Jur., N. S., 862; 11 W. R. 608; 8 L. T., N. S., 447.

2. Trustees of a marriage settlement were empowered, upon the request of the tenant for life, to raise such sum of money as might be necessary to purchase a mansion-house, with a demesne attached, as a residence for the tenant for life; and it was declared that the mansion-house or lands, when so purchased, should be conveyed to the trustees, upon and for the same trusts, intents, and purposes, and with, under, and subject to the same powers, provisions, declarations, and agreements, as were in and by "these presents declared and contained, of and concerning the hereditaments and premises hereinbefore granted." The settlement contained a power to the trustees, with the consent of the tenant for life, to sell, by public auction or private contract, or to exchange the settled lands for such price in money, or equivalent in other lands, as to them should seem reasonable; or to resell the lands which might be so purchased, and to give discharges for the purchase money; and in order to effectuate such sales, to revoke the uses and trusts of the settlement, and to appoint any uses and trusts which should be thought necessary or expedient for effectuating such sale or exchange; and the trustees were authorised to invest the purchase money in lands, which were to be settled to the same uses and upon the same trusts, and subject to such and the same powers, as were declared as to the settled lands. In 1857 the trustees, with the consent of the tenant for life, purchased for 1,200*l.* a mansion-house, which was conveyed to them subject to such and the same trusts and powers as in the recited indenture limited of and concerning the lands therein mentioned. In 1858 the trustees, at the request of the tenant for life, sold the mansion by auction to B.:—Held, in a suit for specific performance of the contract for sale, that the trustees could make a good title to the mansion-house, and the purchaser was bound to accept it. Clements v. Henry, 10 Ir. Ch. R. 79.

V. WHO MAY PURCHASE.

3. A power of sale given without restriction to a party having a limited interest only, may well be held to import a negative upon the power by the same party to buy, for the power to sell is in the nature of a trust; but as the rule does not extend to prevent in all cases a party having a power to sell from becoming the purchaser, so neither where there is a restriction upon the power of sale, is the party having the power to sell in all cases at liberty to become the purchaser. It must in each case depend upon the circumstances under which, and the purposes for which, the power was given, and upon the nature and extent of the restrictions which are put upon the exercise of the power. Beaden v. King, 9 Hare 519; 22 L. J., N. S., Ch., 111.

In the proportion in which the power is restricted, the danger incident to allowing the donee to purchase is diminished. Ib.

4. If a trustee has a power or a trust to sell property, he must bonâ fide have some one to deal with in the sale of it. Lewis v. Hillman, 3 H. L. Ca. 607.

5. The doctrine that a tenant for life with a power to sell or lease, may sell or lease to a trustee for himself, is an established exception to the rule as to dealings by persons filling fiduciary positions. Bevan v. Habgood, 1 John. & H. 222. S. C. nom. Beavan v. Habgood, 8 W. R. 703.

Under a mortgage, power was reserved to the mortgagor until entry by the mortgagee to grant building leases:—Held, that the case fell within the principle of the above exception, and that a lease to a trustee for the mortgagor was good. Ib.

6. It is a well-settled rule that where trustees of a settlement have a power of sale and exchange over the settled estates, to be exercised at the request, or with the consent, of the tenant for life, they may sell to the tenant for life just as they may to any other person. Dicconson v. Talbot, 19 W. R. 138; 6 L. R., Ch., 32; 24 L. T. 49.

The reason for that rule is that the consent of the tenant for life to the exercise of the power is required for his own benefit, and does not place him in any fiduciary relation to the persons entitled in remainder. Ib.

Provided a sale by trustees to a tenant for life is bonâ fide and at a fair price, it is immaterial what was the object for which he made the purchase. Ib.

7. A power of sale and exchange vested in the trustees of a settlement, may be exercised by the trustees upon a sale to, or an exchange with, the tenant for life of the settled estates. Where, upon the exercise of such a power, it is declared, that the estate shall be vested in the purchaser, the purchase being made in the name of a trustee, an appointment to the trustee, in trust for the purchaser, is a valid execution of the power. Howard v. Ducane, T. & R. 81; 1 L. J., Ch., 85.

Purchase of Trust Property by Trustees.] See FRAUD, II. 11.

VI. PROPERTY SUBJECT TO.

1. In General, 5898.
2. Copyholds, 5898.
3. Land Purchased in Breach of Trust, 5899.
4. Reversions, 5899.

1. In General.

1. Testator gave his leasehold estates, and all other his estate and effects, to trustees, on certain trusts, for the benefit of his wife and daughters, and the children of the latter; and, in declaring the trusts, he used the term "rents," as well as dividends and annual proceeds; and he empowered the trustees of his will for the time being to sell his leasehold estates, and to invest the proceeds on mortgage of freehold or other leasehold estates, and to lease any part or parts of his said estates:—Held, in a suit to carry the trusts of the will into execution, that the leaseholds were not to be sold. Bowden v. Bowden, 17 Sim. 65.

2. Trustees were empowered by Act of Parliament to sell and exchange all or any of the hereditaments mentioned in the schedule to the Act, amongst which was a farm, called the Mountain Farm, parcel of the manor of W. In the body of the Act there was a proviso that the manor of W. should not be sold, the trustees having contracted to sell the Mountain Farm:—Held, that the purchaser was not bound to accept the title. Lincoln (Earl) v. Arcedeckne, 1 Colly. 98.

3. P. G., being entitled to two distinct interests in land called K., in the county of C., one a freehold interest derived under H. L., the other a chattel interest derived under B. B., which was not to commence until the determination of the freehold, made his will, and thereby desired that all his freehold interests in the counties of C. and W. (except his interest in K., which he held under B. B.) should be sold, and the proceeds of the sale be divided between his children. And in a subsequent part of the will he desired his chattel interest in the said lands of K. to be sold immediately upon the determination of the freehold interest therein, and the proceeds thereof to be divided in a certain manner:—Held, that the exception referred to the chattel interest in K. only, and that the freehold interest therein was to be sold immediately, against the claim of the heir-at-law of T. G. Gurly v. Gurly, 8 Cl. & F. 743. Affirming 2 Dr. & Wal. 463.

4. A private Act vesting lands in trustees on trust to sell, proceeding on the supposition that the lands are comprised in a settlement, does not bring the lands within that settlement if they were not in it previously. Howard v. Shrewsbury (Earl), 43 L. J., Ch., 495; 22 W. R. 290; 29 L. T., N. S., 862; 17 L. R., Eq., 387.

5. A marriage settlement of personalty empowered the trustees to sell it, and invest the produce in real estate. The estate was to be held on corresponding trusts and to be considered personal estate. There was an express power to sell the securities to be purchased, and to reinvest the produce, from time to time, but no express power to sell the purchased estate. The trustees invested the fund in a real estate:—Held, that they had a power of sale over it, and could give good receipts for the purchase money. Tait v. Lathbury, 35 Beav. 112; 1 L. R., Eq., 174; 14 W. R. 216; 11 Jur., N. S., 991.

6. Trustees of a marriage settlement were empowered, upon the request of the tenant for life, to raise such sum of money as might be necessary to purchase a mansion-house, with a demesne attached, as a residence for the tenant for life; and it was declared that the mansion-house or lands, when so purchased, should be conveyed to the trustees, upon and for the same trusts, intents, and purposes, and with, under, and subject to the same powers, provisions, declarations, and agreements, as were in and by "these presents declared and contained, of and concerning the hereditaments and premises hereinbefore granted." The settlement contained a power to the trustees, with the consent of the tenant for life, to sell, by public auction or private contract, or to exchange the settled lands for such price in money, or equivalent in other lands, as to them should seem reasonable; or to resell the lands which might be so purchased, and to give discharges for the purchase money; and in order to effectuate such sales, to revoke the uses and trusts of the settlement, and to appoint any uses and trusts which should be thought necessary or expedient for effectuating such sale or exchange; and the trustees were authorised to invest the purchase money in lands, which were to be settled to the same uses and upon the same trusts, and subject to such and the same powers, as were declared as to the settled lands. In 1857 the trustees, with the consent of the tenant for life, purchased for 1,200*l.* a mansion-house, which was conveyed to them subject to such and the same trusts and powers as in the recited indenture limited of and concerning the lands therein mentioned. In 1858 the trustees, at the request of the tenant for life, sold the mansion by auction to B.:—Held, in a suit for specific performance of the contract for sale, that the trustees could make a good title to the mansion-house, and the purchaser was bound to accept it. Clements v. Henry, 10 Ir. Ch. R. 79.

2. Copyholds.

7. A power in a will in the following form, viz., "I direct that the said A. B., and C., the executors of this my will, or the survivors or survivor of them, or the executors or administrators of such survivor, shall sell my copyhold messuages":—Held, within the 21 Hen. 8, c. 4, to authorise a sale by A. and B. on C. refusing to act, that Act extending to copyholds. Peppercorn v. Wayman, 5 De G. & Sm. 230; 16 Jur. 794; 21 L. J., Ch., 827.

8. A testator devised copyholds to such uses as A. and B., or the survivor of them, his executors or administrators should appoint, and subject thereto to the use of A. and B., their heirs and assigns for ever, upon certain trusts; and he directed his said trustees to sell the copyholds as soon as conveniently might be:—Held, that the trustees could make a good title to a purchaser without being admitted. Glass v. Richardson, 2 De G. M. & G. 658; 17 Jur. 926; 22 L. J., Ch., 105.

9. Power to a tenant for life, lord of a manor, to enfranchise, and for that purpose to convey the freehold to the customary or copyhold tenants, authorises a conveyance of the freehold to one who is equitably entitled, and has been erroneously admitted, without a previous surrender by his trustees. Wilson v. Allen, 1 Jac. & Walk. 611.

3. Land Purchased in Breach of Trust.

1. Trustees under a will which contained a power to sell real estate, but no power of investing the trust funds in real estate, bought real estate, and had it conveyed to the trusts of the will:—Held, that they could sell and make a good title to the real estate wrongfully purchased with the trust funds on obtaining the concurrence in the sale of one of the persons beneficially interested in the trust funds. Re Patton and Edmonton Union, 52 L. J., Ch., 787; 48 L. T. 870; 31 W. R. 783.

4. Reversions.

2. Where a moiety of a reversion was settled, with power for the trustees to sell when in possession, and a covenant by the husband and wife, in the event of her acquiring any further interest in the estate, that it should be vested upon the same trusts, and with like powers, etc., as the moiety settled. The other moiety afterwards devolved to the wife, subject to a life interest:—Held, that it was equally saleable under the power. Giles v. Homes, 15 Sim. 359.

3. A. being tenant for life of certain lands, remainder to B., his daughter, in fee, articles were entered into on the marriage of B., when a minor, with C., an adult, for a settlement of her reversion, and it was provided that the trustees should have a power, with the consent of B. and C., to sell "the said lands of the said B.," the produce to be laid out in lands to be settled to the uses thereupon declared. In the settlement carrying those articles into execution, A., the tenant for life, joined, and the lands were limited to A. for life, remainder to the uses declared by the articles; and a power was given to the trustees to sell, with the consent of B. and C., the "said B.'s estate and interest in the said lands":—Held, that this power authorised a sale of the reversion in A.'s lifetime. Blackwood v. Burrowes, 2 Con. & L. 459; 4 Dr. & War. 441.

4. A reversion in fee expectant on the life estate was settled in strict settlement, and the trustees were empowered at any time thereafter, with the consent of the tenant for life under the settlement, to sell or exchange the lands for other lands in fee, in possession. The tenant for life in possession, together with the tenant for life under the settlement, and the trustees, by their agent, sold the estate for one entire sum. The purchaser objected that the power of sale could not be exercised until the reversion came into possession, but waived all other objections:—Held, that the power was well exercised, and that the purchaser, having waived all other objections, must agree with the vendors as to the appointment of the purchase money between the life estate in possession and the reversion, or that the appointment must be made by the Master. Clark v. Seymour, 7 Sim. 67.

5. A testator was entitled to an estate in fee in remainder after the life estate of A. By his will he devised the estate to trustees, in trust for B. for life, with remainders over; and he empowered his trustees, with the consent of the tenant for life or tenant in tail entitled in possession for the time being under the limitations contained in his will, to sell the estate and invest the proceeds. A. survived the testator, and surrendered her life estate to B. to enable the trustees to sell:—Held, that the power to sell was accelerated, and that the trustees, with A.'s consent, could sell the estate, and make a good title to the purchaser. Truell v. Tysson or Tyssen, 21 Beav. 437; 2 Jur., N. S., 630; 25 L. J., Ch., 801.

Distinction between accelerating powers to charge and powers of sale. Ib.

VII. DURATION AND TIME FOR EXERCISE.

1. Duration and Determination of the Power, 5899.
2. Time for Exercise, 5901.

1. Duration and Determination of the Power.

6. Where estate is devised in trust for two daughters for life, with remainder in each moiety for their children at twenty-one, and a power of sale is given to trustees, the power of sale subsists, though one daughter is dead, and her children have attained twenty-one. Trower v. Knightley, 6 Madd. 135.

7. A testator devised his real estate to trustees in fee, on trust to pay the income to his son W. for life, and after his death to convey it to W.'s children; and as to another fifth, to apply the income towards the maintenance of the testator's daughter until twenty-one or marriage; and on her attaining twenty-five, if unmarried, to convey the same to her, but if she should marry before that age, then to settle it in a particular way. The testator then gave his trustees a power of selling the property "during the lifetime or widowhood of his wife, or at any time afterwards, during the continuance of the trusts by his will reposed." The widow and W. died, and the daughter attained twenty-one and married, but no conveyance had been made by the trustees:—Held, that the power of sale could not then be exercised by the trustees, for though the trusts still "continued," yet they continued through the neglect of the trustees to convey, and not in the way contemplated by the testator. Wood v. White, 2 Keen 664; 7 L. J., N. S., Ch., 203; 4 Myl. & C. 460; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 209; 3 Jur. 117.

8. Real estate was given by will to trustees upon trust to sell at their discretion at any time before the youngest or youngest surviving child or grandchild of the testator should attain twenty-one; and such parts as should not be sold were given to the testator's wife for life, and after her death, on the arrival of the youngest or youngest surviving child or grandchild at the age of twenty-one, to such of his children as should be then living and the issue of such of them as should be dead, as tenants in common:—Held, that though all the persons presumptively entitled had attained twenty-one, the power of sale was exercisable. Chapman v. Harris, 2 N. R. 56; 8 L. T., N. S., 306.

1. A power given by will to sell estates, which are the subject of a settlement which also contains a power of sale, is in abeyance so long as the limitations and trusts of that settlement remain unperformed. Wolley v. Jenkins, 5 W. R. 281; 3 Jur., N. S., 321; 23 Beav. 53; 26 L. J., Ch., 879.

2. By an indenture of March 1862 lands were conveyed by two tenants in common, L. and S., to a trustee to sell and to hold the proceeds for L. and S. in equal shares, and as to the share of S. for her separate use. The indenture contained powers of exchange and partition; and it was declared that until the sale the trustees should hold the lands as to one moiety for L. and as to the other moiety for S. for her separate use. By articles of agreement made in the following month, it was agreed that the trustee should allot the lands described in the first schedule to L., and those described in the second schedule to S., and should stand possessed of the allotments upon the same trusts as were by the deed of March 1862 declared of the respective moieties, but without prejudice to the powers vested in the trustee by that indenture. S. was a married woman, and her husband was an alien. By her will, made in August 1862, she gave all her landed property situated at E., being her allotment under the articles of agreement, which still remained unsold, to her husband for life, with remainder over:—Held, that the trust for sale had been put an end to by the agreement of April 1862; and that the property passed as real estate under the will of S. Sharp v. St. Saveur, 7 L. R., Ch., 343; 41 L. J., Ch., 576; 20 W. R. 269; 26 L. T., N. S., 142.

Held, also, that if the trust for sale had been still subsisting, S. had elected to take the property as real estate. Ib.

The Court of Chancery will enforce in favour of the Crown a trust of land for an alien created prior to the Naturalisation Act 1870. Ib.

3. A father, on the marriage of his daughter in 1806, settled real estate upon trusts for her separate use for life, with remainder, in case she survived her husband (which event happened), to her children, as tenants in common in tail, and limited the reversion to himself in fee. The settlement contained a collateral power of sale, not in terms restricted as to time. In 1850, the daughter's issue being spent, and she being a widow, and more than seventy, the trustees executed a deed purporting to be made in exercise of the power, and to be a conveyance of the fee simple:—Held, first, that the power was valid, and subsisting at the date of the deed of 1850. Lantsbery v. Collier, 2 Kay & J 709; 25 L. J., Ch., 672; 4 W. R. 826.

Held, secondly, that it was well exercised by that deed, although, under the trusts of the settlement, the effect of its exercise was to change the devolution of the property, passing it, in the events which had happened, to the daughter absolutely. Ib.

Observations on Ware v. Polhill (11 Ves. 257), and review of the authorities respecting collateral powers of sale, not in terms restricted as to time. The Court looks to the whole intent and purpose of the settlement, and, whether the reversion or remainder in fee-simple be limited after estates tail or after estates for life, will hold the power to be valid and subsisting until the estates tail (if any) are barred, or the fee simple vested in possession; in either of which events the purpose of the settlement is spent, and the power ceases. Ib.

4. A power given to the trustees of a settlement or will to sell land comprised in it can be exercised by them after the property has, under the trusts, become absolutely vested in persons who are sui juris, if on the construction of the instrument it appears to be the intention of the settlor or testator that it should be then exercised, provided that the power in its creation was not obnoxious to the rule against perpetuities, and that the cestuis que trustent have not put an end to the trusts by electing to take the property as it stands. Re Cotton's Trustees and the School Board for London, 19 L. R., Ch. D., 624; 51 L. J., Ch., 514; 46 L. T. 813; 30 W. R. 610.

5. A discretionary power of sale held not to have been put an end to during the life of the tenant for life by the fact that all the reversioners had acquired vested interest in their shares. Biggs v. Peacock, 20 L. R., Ch. D., 200; 51 L. J., Ch., 555; 46 L. T. 582; 30 W. R. 605. Affirmed 22 L. R., Ch. D., 284; 52 L. J., Ch., 1; 47 L. T. 341; 31 W. R. 148.

6. Under a settlement, dated in May 1860, the trustees were directed, "by sale of a competent part" of stock, "forthwith to raise a sum not exceeding 2,000*l.*, and pay the same to H. or his assigns," and also other sums as should be required for certain purposes. In July 1860 H. requested the trustees to raise for his benefit 1,391*l.* 17*s.* 7*d.*, and he subsequently applied to them to raise 608*l.* 2*s.* 5*d.*:—Held, that the request to the trustees to raise 1,391*l.* 17*s.* 7*d.* only did not limit their power, or diminish the amount of the fund impressed with a trust for H.'s benefit, and the Court declared that the trustees were at liberty to raise the residue. Harrold v. Harrold, 7 Jur., N. S., 1274; 4 L. T., N. S., 699; 3 Giff. 192.

7. A devise of real estate to the use of trustees and their heirs, upon trust, as to two undivided fifths, for two persons in fee, and as to the other three-fifths, upon trust for certain persons for life, with remainder to their children in fee. A power of sale was given to the trustees. The testator died in 1830. All the trusts were exhausted except those of one share. It was the intention of the testator to be gathered from the whole will, that the power of sale should extend to all the shares:—Held, that a good title could be made to the whole property under the power. Taite v. Swinstead, 5 Jur., N. S., 1019; 7 W. R. 373; 33 L. T. 312; 26 Beav. 525.

8. In pursuance of a power contained in a marriage settlement, lands were appointed, subject to life estates, among the five children of A., one-fifth to each of four as tenants in common, and the remaining fifth to E., the other child, for life, with remainder to the first four. E. was of unsound mind, not so found by inquisition:—Held, that a power of sale contained in the settlement was not destroyed by the appointment. Re Brown, 39 L. J., Ch., 845; 10 L. R., Eq., 349; 18 W. R. 945.

1. A testator devised and bequeathed his residuary estate (which comprised freehold lands, in respect of which a notice to treat was given by a railway company before the death of the testator) to the use of trustees and their heirs in trust for his wife for life, and after her death to pay and assure the same unto his two married daughters, in equal shares, for their separate use as tenants in common, with a gift over in favour of their respective issue in events which did not happen; "and for the purpose of division" he empowered his trustees to sell his residuary estate; and he declared that his trustees should be entitled to be paid for all business done by them in relation to his estate. The testator's wife, his two daughters and their husbands, all survived him; and after the death of the widow the trustees sold and conveyed the lands to a railway company for a price which had been determined by the valuation of two surveyors, as provided by the 9th section of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act 1845, the trustees having first, for the purpose of making such valuation, appointed one of themselves as the surveyor on their behalf. One of the testator's daughters disputed the validity of the sale, and brought an action to restrain the company from taking or using the lands:—Held, the power of sale given to the trustees by the will did not determine on the death of the tenant for life, but might have been exercised within a reasonable time afterwards for the purpose of dividing the property. Per Jessel, M.R. But held by Hall, V.-Ch.:—That the power of sale given to the trustees by the will determined upon the death of the testator's widow, because the femes covertes then became absolutely entitled for their separate use, and the property was "at home."—Peters v. Lewes and East Grinstead Railway Co., 18 L. R., Ch. D., 429; 50 L. J., Ch., 839; 45 L. T. 234; 29 W. R. 875. And see S. C. 16 L. R., Ch. D., 703; 50 L. J., Ch., 172; 44 L. T. 372; 29 W. R. 422.

(a) In General and Postponement of Sale by Trustees.

2. Where the testator directs a sale with all convenient speed after his death, and directs the produce to be invested, and the dividends to be paid to one for life, and the land remains unsold, the Court considers twelve months as a reasonable time within which the estates ought to have been sold and the produce invested, and will give to the tenant for life the rents of the unsold estate from that time. Vickers v. Scott, 3 Myl. & K. 500; 3 L. J., N. S., Ch., 223.

3. Trustees in exercise of a discretion are justified in not selling a reversionary interest in stock, at the end of one year, after the death of a testator. Wilkinson v. Duncan, 2 Jur., N. S., 530; 26 L. J., Ch., 495.

A tenant for life of funds to arise from the realisation of a reversionary interest, is entitled to an equivalent for the dividends which would have been received if the reversion had been realised, and the money invested in the funds. Ib.

4. A devise of real and personal estate to trustees, with a direction for sale with all convenient speed and within five years, and to apply the proceeds in payment of debts and legacies, and invest the residue upon trusts for the widow and children of the testator:—Held, to empower the trustees to sell after the five years had elapsed. Pearce v. Gardner, 10 Hare 287; 1 W. R. 98.

5. Devise in trust to sell in such manner, and at such times, as the trustees shall think proper. The period of conversion as between those entitled for life and in remainder, depends not upon an authority, discretion, nor even a sound discretion in each case, but upon some fixed rule ascertaining a given period, as upon a trust to sell with all convenient speed; controlled in this instance by consent. Walker v. Shore, 19 Ves. 387.

6. Trustees postponing or accelerating the sale of estates devised to them, will make no alteration in favour of the heir to the prejudice of the cestui que trust. Hawkins v. Chappel, 1 Atk. 623.

7. E. N. bequeaths leaseholds to trustees for sale, to pay the proceeds to his widow for life, and after in trust for the children; one executor proves; and his co-executor, the solicitor of the testator, finding himself involved in intricate transactions in respect of the leaseholds, proves also, and institutes a suit, and claims indemnity against liabilities in respect of the trust:—Held, that under the circumstances he was justified in filing the bill, and was entitled to indemnity and costs of the suit. Semble, the assent of one executor to specific bequests does not take away the right of the other to indemnity. Turner v. Nicholls, 1 W. R. 157.

Parties being sui juris, property devised for sale may remain unsold if it does not injuriously affect third persons. Ib.

8. A testator, entitled to realty and personalty, including a leasehold colliery, gave his general residuary estate to trustees, in trust to sell at a convenient time, with the approbation of his son, and out of the income to pay the testator's daughter for her life such an annuity as should be 200*l.* a year, over half the income of the residuary estate, but not to exceed 600*l.* a year; and so that any annual overplus, after paying 600*l.* a year to the daughter, and 400*l.* a year to the son, should go to the son, whom the testator constituted his residuary legatee, and appointed co-executor with the trustees. The trustees disclaimed. The son acted in the trusts, and did not sell the colliery, but carried it on till the mines were exhausted, paying out of his own moneys so much of the testator's debts, as the testator's personal property, other than the colliery, was insufficient to satisfy, and paying the daughter 600*l.* per annum, out of the profits of the colliery, so long as they lasted:—Held, first, that although the sale of the property was to take place with the son's approbation, he was not, after assuming to act as sole trustee, entitled to postpone the sale to his sister's prejudice. Secondly, that the son was chargeable with the value of the colliery at the end of a year from the testator's death, and with interest at 4*l.* per cent., and that the value ought, under the circumstances, to be calculated at the aggregate amount of the actual annual profits treated as deferred payments. Lord v. Wightwick, 4 De G. M. & G. 803; 23 L. J., Ch., 235.

1. A public-house was devised to two trustees, upon trust, as soon as convenient after the death of the testator, to sell the same, invest the proceeds, and pay the income to C. for life, and after the death of C., to divide the capital among the children of the testator. The testator died in 1834. In 1836 an offer of 900*l.* was made for the public-house, but the trustees, having been so advised, did not accept this offer. Shortly afterwards the property became depreciated in value in consequence of a scheme to form a railway. One of the trustees died in 1842. The tenant for life died in the same year. The surviving trustee died in 1856. The property remained unsold. In 1856 a suit was instituted for the administration of the testator's estate, and the estates of the trustee were held liable for the difference between the present value of the property and the rents which had been received since the death of the tenant for life, and 900*l.* and interest at 4*l.* per cent. from the same date. Fry v. Fry, 5 Jur., N. S., 1047; 28 L. J., Ch., 591; 27 Beav. 144.

2. If trustees postpone a sale of land which is unproductive, with a view to obtain an increased price, it will not entitle a tenant for life to receive interest upon the purchase money from the death of the testator. Yates v. Yates, 6 Jur., N. S., 1023; 29 L. J., Ch., 872.

3. Trustees for sale under a will were authorised by the Court to postpone sales beyond the time expressly limited in the will, that course being shown to be beneficial to the cestuis que trustent. Cuff v. Hall, 1 Jur., N. S., 972.

4. An infant cestui que trust aged ten years, who was entitled upon marrying or attaining twenty-one to the proceeds of certain real estate which was directed to be sold so soon as conveniently might be after the death of a tenant for life, filed her bill, upon the death of such tenant for life, praying that the trustees might be at liberty to postpone the sale, upon the ground that the property was likely to increase materially in value. Ordered, that the sale should be postponed until the further order of the Court. Morris v. Morris, 6 W. R. 493.

(c) In Relation to Other Estates or Interests.

5. Power of sale, in the event of two of testator's children disapproving of the manner of managing his lands and houses, does not arise upon their notifying their opinion that the executors are inadequate to the management, semble. Patton v. Randall, 1 Jac. & Walk. 189.

6. Where, in a suit to carry into effect the trusts of a will, one of which was for sale of an estate at the death of a particular person, a decree was made for sale during the life of such person, no special ground for such anticipated sale being shown, and some of the parties interested in the proceeds were infants: —Held, that a good title could not be made under the decree. Blacklow v. Laws, 2 Hare 40.

7. On devise of an advowson to trustees to be sold on the death of the incumbent:—Held, that although no sale after his death could be made until the benefice was filled, and a sale in his lifetime would be beneficial to the parties, the Court had no jurisdiction to authorise it. Johnstone v. Baber, 8 Beav. 233.

8. A. being tenant for life of certain lands, remainder to B., his daughter, in fee, articles were entered into on the marriage of B., when a minor, with C., an adult, for a settlement of her reversion, and it was provided, that the trustees should have a power, with the consent of B. and C., to sell "the said lands of the said B.," the produce to be laid out in lands to be settled to the uses thereupon declared. In the settlement carrying those articles into execution, A., the tenant for life, joined, and the lands were limited to A. for life, remainder to the uses declared by the articles; and a power was given to the trustees to sell, with the consent of B. and C., the "said B.'s estate and interest in the said lands": —Held, that this power authorised a sale of the reversion in A.'s lifetime. Blackwood v. Burrowes, 2 Con. & L. 459; 4 Dr. & War. 441.

9. A. devised freeholds and copyholds to his wife for life, with remainder to trustees in fee, to sell the freeholds "as soon as conveniently might be," and the copyholds "as soon as conveniently might be after his decease":— Held, that the absolute interest in the estate might be sold by the trustees in the life of the widow, with her consent. Mills v. Dugmore, 30 Beav. 104.

10. Testator after charging his real estate with payment of debts devised it to trustees upon trust for B. for life, and after her death to the use of her appointees by will, and in default of appointment to the use of her right heirs. The real estate was further charged with 700*l.* for C.:—Held, that the trustees had power to sell the estate in the lifetime of B. before her appointees could be ascertained, for the purpose of raising the charge. Elitesford v. Armstead, 4 W. R. 279; 2 Kay & J. 333; 25 L. J., Ch., 237.

11. A testator possessed of divers securities of foreign states, gave all his real and personal estate to trustees for his wife for life, and after her decease, for his sons and their children. He gave his trustees a discretion to postpone the conversion of his residuary estate, which he had directed to be sold, and he directed that his stocks in the foreign funds should not be sold out during the widowhood of his wife without her consent, his object being, that she might enjoy the income derivable from such foreign funds:—Held, that all the foreign investments should be retained. Ellis v. Eden, 3 Jur., N. S., 950; 26 L. J., Ch., 533.

Held, also, that the certificates for Boston Water scrip and bonds of the Pennsylvanian Railroad Company were not within the meaning of the will, and that they must be sold. Ib.

1. Testator by his will gave all his property to his wife durante viduitate, with a direction in the following words:—"but further should T. R. B. survive my wife B. B., then after her and my decease" he directed the property to be sold, and gave the proceeds to his sisters. By a codicil to his will the testator revoked the gift for life to his wife, and gave her an annuity of 60*l.* per annum instead, and gave the overplus of the rents or profits of his estate to his sisters. The testator died in the lifetime of his wife:—Held, nevertheless, that upon the death of the wife the power of sale and the gift of the proceeds of the sale to his sisters took effect. Tuer v. Turner, 18 Beav. 185.

2. A., by will, gave to trustees all his real and personal estate upon trust for the maintenance of his wife and family during her widowhood; and if she should marry again, to pay her such proportion of the income as should be equal to a child's share; and subject to the wife's interest, upon trust for his children in equal shares when and as they should attain twenty-one; and he empowered the trustees at any time after his decease, as they in their discretion should think proper, to sell the real estate, the money to arise therefrom to be considered as personalty. The widow survived, and did not marry again; all the children attained twenty-one, except B., who died an infant:—Held, that B. took a vested interest in both the real and personal estate, that his share in the proceeds of real estate which had been sold formed part of his personal estate, and that the power was a valid power capable of being exercised during the lifetime of the widow or after her death. Cowley v. Smith, 2 W. R. 327.

3. A testator was entitled to an estate in fee in remainder after the life estate of A. By his will he devised the estate to trustees, in trust for B. for life, with remainders over; and he empowered his trustees, with the consent of the tenant for life or tenant in tail entitled in possession for the time being under the limitations contained in his will, to sell the estate and invest the proceeds. A. survived the testator, and surrendered her life estate to B. to enable the trustees to sell:—Held, that the power to sell was accelerated, and that the trustees, with A.'s consent, could sell the estate, and make a good title to the purchaser. Truell v. Tysson, or Tyssen, 21 Beav. 437; 2 Jur., N. S., 630; 25 L. J., Ch., 801.

4. A testator by his will, dated in 1858, gave all his real and personal estate to trustees upon trust, out of the proceeds of his personal estate, or if and so far as the same should be insufficient then out of the proceeds of his real estate, to pay his debts; and as to a certain house belonging to him, to permit his widow to occupy it during widowhood, and on her second marriage or death to sell the same. The usual decree for administration was made by the Court, and the chief clerk found that all the debts had been paid out of the personal estate. By an order subsequently made, on further consideration of the cause, it was ordered (with the consent of the widow, who was still living), that the said house should be sold; and a contract for sale was entered into. The purchaser having objected that a good title could not be made:—Held, that the trustees had no power of sale, and that the objection was valid. Carlyon v. Truscott, 20 L. R., Eq., 348; 44 L. J., Ch., 186; 32 L. T., N. S., 50.

5. A testator gave to his wife the personal use of a leasehold messuage for her life, she discharging the ground rent, and paying a yearly rent of 50*l.* to his trustees; and he declared that if she should not think fit to reside therein, then the premises should form part of his residuary estate. He then directed the conconversion of his real and the residue of his personal estate, and gave a power to postpone such conversion, directing the rents and profits in the meantime to be deemed annual income. Under the trusts of the residue the widow took one-fourth of the income. A railway company, having taken the premises under its compulsory powers while the widow was in occupation, made an agreement with her as to her interest, and a separate agreement with the trustees. The latter declined to assign on the ground that the trust for sale had not arisen, and required the consideration money to be paid into Court:—Held, that their contention was right, for though the house, subject to the interest of the widow, was part of the residuary estate, it would not be a proper exercise of the trust to sell during the continuance of the occupation of the widow. Smith v. Great Northern Railway Co., 23 W. R. 126.

6. On the marriage of a female infant who was a ward of Court, and entitled to a leasehold estate to her separate use, a settlement was made under the order of the Court, giving to the trustees a power of sale over the leasehold estate. A sale made by the trustees under the power, during the minority of the female infant, is not valid. Simson v. Jones, 2 Russ. & M. 365.

7. Upon a devise in trust for sale after the death of a party entitled to the rents and profits for life, and a sale under a decree during the life, some of the parties interested being infants, or not sui juris, the Court refused to compel the purchaser to accept the title; and held, that the condition of sale providing that the objections to title were to be taken within a stated time from the delivery of the abstract, was to be construed as from the delivery of a perfect one, and that an objection might be taken arising out of evidence called for before the expiration of the time limited; and that a statement that the cestui que vie proved the will, without stating the pleadings in the cause, or whether such tenant for life was living or dead, was not a sufficient intimation to the purchaser that the time of sale had been anticipated. Blacklow v. Laws, 2 Hare 40.

1. A. devised an estate to three trustees for sale, giving a discretion as to the time at which the sale was to be effected, and as to the mode of sale. Upon a bill by a purchaser of part of the estate to enforce specific performance of the contract for sale:—Held, that in consequence of the minority of one of the vendors, no valid contract for the sale existed. King v. Bellord, 11 W. R. 900; 8 L. T., N. S., 633; 1 Hem. & M. 343; 2 N. R. 442; 32 L. J., Ch., 646.

1. Conditions.

2. On a sale by a trustee, he stipulated that his receipt should be deemed an effectual and conclusive discharge, and that the purchaser should not require the concurrence of the heir or cestuis que trustent. A decree was made for specific performance and reference as to title. The Master found in favour of the trustee; and upon exceptions, the purchaser contended that the rule as to the concurrence of the cestuis que trustent being one for their protection, it was a breach of trust to stipulate that they should not concur; but the Court held the point concluded by the decree. Wilkinson v. Hartley, 15 Beav. 183.

3. A. and B., trustees of a stock fund in trust for A. for life, with remainder over to unascertained persons, sold out part of the stock and lent it to B., who misapplied it. B. gave to A., by way of security and indemnifying her, an equitable mortgage by deposit. B. then became bankrupt, and A. and B.'s assignees applied to and obtained from the Court of Bankruptcy, on a statement of these facts, but without making the cestuis que trustent of the fund parties, an order for sale. They sold, with a special condition referring to the petition and order in bankruptcy, that the purchaser should only have the receipt and conveyance of A. and the assignees:—Held, that A. and the assignees could make a good title without the concurrence of the cestuis que trustent in the receipt or conveyance. Groom v. Booth, 1 Drew. 548; 17 Jur. 927; 22 L. J., Ch., 961.

4. Trustees for the sale of lands joined with the trustees for the sale of other lands, and with the absolute owner of other lands, in selling all the lands together. After entering into a contract for sale, they agreed as to the proportions in which they were to be entitled to the purchase money. The conditions for sale stated, that as to a part of the lands, the title was to commence in 1845 only. On investigation, this only related to a very small part:—Held, that so joining in the sale, and so apportioning the purchase money, was a breach of trust, and that the condition was depreciatory; and specific performance at the suit of the vendors refused. Rede v. Oakes, 10 Jur., N. S., 1246; 34 L. J., Ch., 145; 13 W. R. 303; 11 L. T., N. S., 549; 4 De G. J. & S. 505; 5 N. R. 209. Reversing 32 Beav. 555; 9 Jur., N. S., 765; 11 W. R. 795; 8 L. T., N. S., 784.

5. When a purchaser at an auction of trust property knows that he is buying from fiduciary vendors, if the conditions are depreciatory and unnecessary, the sale will be restrained, although the trustees had a special power to sell under such conditions as they thought fit. Dance v. Goldingham, 21 W. R. 761; 42 L. J., Ch., 777; 8 L. R., Ch., 902; 29 L. T., N. S., 166.

Trustees having power to sell under such special or other conditions or stipulations as they should think fit, sold by auction with a condition limiting the title to commence in 1858 (fourteen years previously). The next convenient root of title was a deed of 1819, from which a good title could be deduced, but the trustees could not find this deed, and had only recitals of its contents. There was also a condition that all recitals and statements in the deeds and particulars should be accepted as conclusive evidence:—Held, that the sale under such conditions was a breach of trust, and an injunction was granted at the suit of a cestui que trust to restrain completion. Ib.

Held, also, that such an injunction would be granted against an innocent purchaser. Ib.

The bill was filed in the name of an infant having a very small interest:—Held, that the Court could not look into the motives of the next friend. Ib.

Such a suit can be maintained by one cestui que trust without making the other parties. Ib.

6. Where trustees sell property with depreciatory conditions which render the sale liable to be impeached by the cestuis que trustent, the trustees cannot maintain an action for specific performance against the purchasers. Dunn v. Flood, 25 L. R., Ch. D., 629; 53 L. J., Ch., 537; 49 L. T. 670; 32 W. R. 197.

A testator devised real estate to trustees upon trust at their discretion, to sell the same and invest and deal with the proceeds in manner mentioned in his will. The real estate was put up for sale in lots by public auction in November 1882, and F. was the highest bidder and declared to be the purchaser of part. The sale was made subject to certain conditions of sale and "general conditions." The conditions of sale provided that the abstract of title to the property purchased by F. should commence with the conveyance to the testator, dated the 2nd October, 1872, and that every recital or statement in any abstracted document should be deemed conclusive evidence of the fact or matter recited or stated therein, or to be assumed or implied therefrom. F. refused to complete his purchase, and the trustees commenced an action for specific performance:—Held, that the conditions of sale were depreciatory, and rendered the sale liable to be impeached by the cestuis que trustent, and that the plaintiffs were, therefore, not entitled to a decree for specific performance. Dance v. Goldingham (8 L. R., Ch., 902) followed. Ib.

1. Sale by administratrix of the intestate's property, to her own son under an open contract and for undervalue, set aside. The mere fact of this agreement being made with the son of the administratrix would have been sufficient to vitiate the sale, irrespective of the improvidence of the contract, which imposed no conditions on the intending purchaser, and of the undervalue. John v. Jones, 34 L. T., N.S., 570.

2. Trustees, as vendors, are not bound to state whether there exist any debts which make a sale necessary. Flux v. Best, 31 L. T. 645; 23 W. R. 228.

2. Price. In General.

3. Trustees, who were directed to sell an estate as soon as conveniently might be after their testator's death, refused, by the desire of one of the parties interested, an offer of 6,600*l.* for the estate; but they afterwards sold it for 3,600*l.* The Court charged them with the loss, but gave them their costs, as their conduct had not been wilful or perverse. Taylor v. Tabrum, 6 Sim. 281.

4. Trustees not to be compelled to perform an agreement entered into under mistake, to sell for an inadequate consideration. Bridge v. Rice, 1 Jac. & Walk. 74.

5. The duties of trustees selling under a trust or power to sell are not properly discharged by selling to the family solicitor without proper caution and previous inquiry as to the value, the sale being a contrivance to raise money to lend to one of the cestuis que trustent, to whom the trustees had power to lend it. Robinson v. Briggs, 1 Sm. & G. 188.

6. A testator gave to his son the option of purchasing an estate, at what to his trustees "should seem a fair and reasonable value." The trustees had a valuation made, which amounted to 1,500*l.*; the valuation made at the instance of the parties interested in the produce exceeded that by one-third:—Held, that the trustees having fixed what they considered "a fair and reasonable value," having authority to do so, it was incumbent on the plaintiff to show that it was fraudulent, in order to prevent the son's purchasing at 1,500*l.* Edmonds v. Millett, 20 Beav. 54.

7. A trustee for sale is bound to obtain the best price for the property. Harper v. Hayes, 2 Giff. 210; 6 Jur., N. S., 643; 8 W. R. 600.

Therefore where the trustee contracted to sell an estate, though with the consent of all the cestuis que trustent, except the assignee of one share, for less than was offered by such assignee, the Court annulled the contract, and deprived the trustee of the costs of the suit. Ib.

Real estate was conveyed to H. upon trust, and he was directed, immediately or as soon as conveniently might be after a certain event, to sell the same "for the most money and best price that could be gotten, either by public auction or by private contract." Soon after the occurrence of the event, there being a difficulty as to the title, H., with the concurrence of the cestuis que trustent, offered the estate to P. by private contract for 6,000*l.*; and he subsequently entered into a contract for pure chase, but, before the offer was accepted, the plaintiffs became the purchasers of the share of one of the cestuis que trustent. The offer made to P. was immediately countermanded, and notice given to him of the want of concurrence on the part of such cestui que trust; but P. on the following day accepted the offer. H. did not put the property up by public competition, or make further inquiry for a purchaser, but entered into an agreement with P. to sell the property to him for 6,000*l.* The plaintiffs thereupon filed a bill for the purpose of having the agreement set aside, and they stated their willingness to give more than 6,000*l.* for the property, and subsequently stated that they would have given 7,000*l.* H. supported the sale to P., alleging that the sale to the plaintiffs by one of the cestuis que trustent was of doubtful validity, and that all the other cestuis que trustent were desirous of completing the contract with P.:—Held, that the agreement for sale by H. was not binding. S. C. 7 Jur., N. S., 245; 9 W. R. 504; 3 L. T., N. S., 530.

The question whether P. was entitled to damages for the breach of the agreement, was not for an equity judge, but for a jury, under the direction of a common-law judge. Ib.

8. Executors and trustees, with power of sale, of a will, under which the plaintiff was sole cestui que trust, entertained the proposal of A. and B. for the purchase of the property, on the ground that they were connected and acquainted with the business of which it consisted. The plaintiff was in favour of another purchaser, C., who offered nearly equal terms. Ultimately the offer of A. and B. was accepted. The plaintiff filed a bill, alleging that C. would have made a higher offer if the negotiations had been continued, and praying that the trustees might be made liable for the loss:—Held, that the trustees could not be made liable; and that they ought to be allowed their costs of the suit. Selby v. Bowie, 11 W. R. 559; 8 L. T., N. S., 18; 9 Jur., N. S., 432; 2 N. R. 2; 1 N. R. 420.

9. Upon a bill filed against trustees, charging breaches of trust in selling at an undervalue, and upon the question whether a married woman, having separate estate for life, without power of anticipation, can be bound by a compromise to which she is a party relating to the corpus of the property:—Held, that the marketable value, and not a valuation, is the test of adequate price; and that a married woman, with separate property for life without power of anticipation, can bind the corpus of the property. Wilton v. Hill, 4 W. R. 66; 25 L. J., Ch., 156.

3. Sale of Several Properties at an Entire Price.

10. A contract made, by trustees for sale, for the sale of the trust property, conjointly with property not subject to the same trusts, will not be decreed to be specifically performed unless it appears to the Court, both that due precautions have been taken for preventing injury to the trust premises by the conjunction, and also that the terms of the contract furnish means of ascertaining clearly the proportion of the proceeds of the sale to be attributed to the trust premises. Rede v. Oakes, 34 L. J., Ch., 145; 13 W. R. 303; 11 L. T., N. S., 549; 4 De G. J. & S. 505; 10 Jur., N. S., 1246; 5 N. R. 209. Reversing 32 Beav. 555; 9 Jur., N. S., 765; 11 W. R. 795; 8 L. T., N. S., 784.

But there is no general rule positively forbidding trustees to sell trust property conjointly with other property not subject to the trust, where the conjunction is beneficial and the proportion of the purchase money attributable to the trust property admits of satisfactory ascertainment, semble. Ib.

Property comprising three separate parcels held under different titles, and the bulk of which was vested in several sets of trustees, was agreed to be sold with the concurrence of all whose consent to a sale was necessary, at one gross sum, with stipulations, for commencement of titles at various periods, not distinguishing the several portions of the property to which the different roots of title applied, and the date of commencement of title being in one case as recent as 1845. Subsequently an agreement was made between the vendors for the apportionment of the purchase money. The purchaser afterwards refused to complete his purchase. A bill, against the purchaser, for specific performance of the agreement, was dismissed. Ib.

1. A reversion in fee expectant on the life estate was settled in strict settlement, and the trustees were empowered at any time thereafter, with the consent of the tenant for life under the settlement, to sell or exchange the lands for other lands in fee, in possession. The tenant for life in possession, together with the tenant for life under the settlement, and the trustees, by their agent, sold the estate for one entire sum. The purchaser objected that the power of sale could not be exercised until the reversion came into possession, but waived all other objections:—Held, that the power was well exercised, and that the purchaser, having waived all other objections, must agree with the vendors as to the apportionment of the purchase money between the life estate in possession and the reversion, or that the apportionment must be made by the Master. Clark v. Seymour, 7 Sim. 67.

2. It is the duty of trustees who, having a trust or power to sell the trust property, join with the owner of another property in selling both properties together, first, to see that such a mode of sale is beneficial to their cestuis que trustent; secondly, to see that their share of the purchase money is apportioned before the completion of the purchase, and to obtain payment of such apportioned share; and thirdly, to apportion the share themselves, taking care to act under proper advice. Re Cooper, 4 L. R., Ch. D., 802; 46 L. J., Ch., 133; 35 L. T., N. S., 890; 25 W. R. 301.

The proper mode of apportioning the prices of a life estate and reversion when sold together for a lump sum, is to value both interests separately, and not to put a value on one and deduct that from the total price. Ib.

A purchaser under such circumstances ought to see that the purchase money is properly apportioned before completion. Ib.

3. A messuage belonged to one who devised his real estate in trust for sale. An adjoining messuage was vested in the trustees of his settlement upon trust for sale, and the purchase money, subject to the payment of definite sums, belonged to the testator's estate. Under a decree for administering the estate the two messuages were put up for sale together in one lot, and it was provided that the purchase money should be paid into court to the credit of the cause, "the proceeds of the sale of the testator's real estate." The trustees of the settlement had obtained liberty to attend the proceedings as to the sale. The purchaser objected to the title on the ground that the two properties were sold together for one lump sum, without any provision for apportioning it, and that it was to be paid into court in a suit unconnected with the settlement:—Held, that this objection was not sustainable, for that the Court, having the money in its custody, would see it properly applied. The Court, however, for the satisfaction of the purchaser, ordered that the purchase money should be apportioned, and the part apportioned to the settled messuage paid into court to a separate account. Cavendish v. Cavendish, 10 L. R., Ch., 319; 33 L. T., N. S., 219; 23 W. R. 313.

4. A trustee having a discretionary trust for sale of real estate under a will at such price as he should think reasonable, with power to postpone the sale, leased the property for thirty years with the concurrence of the beneficiaries. Before the lease expired the property was put up for sale by the lessee and the trustee conjointly, the facts being disclosed by the particulars of sale, and a sale having been effected, the purchase money was apportioned between the two interests according to the valuation of a skilled valuer:—Held, that the purchaser was not entitled to insist on the concurrence of the beneficiaries on account of the valuation not having been made before the sale, and that the title would be forced upon him. Morris v. Debenham, 2 L. R., Ch. D., 540; 34 L. T., N. S., 205; 24 W. R. 636

5. H. was surviving executor and trustee for sale of freeholds, part of the proceeds of which were to be held on the trusts of his marriage settlement, his wife being the testator's daughter. The settlement contained a power to invest in land. H. put up the property for sale, and instructed his trustees to purchase five of the lots, and he instructed the auctioneer to put reserved prices on the lots. The lots were fairly valued, one of the lots (lot 3) being valued at 6,000*l.* H., acting as solicitor for the purchasers, instructed an agent to bid as far as 8,000*l.* for lot 3, and to buy the other lots for whatever price they would fetch. The agent bought lot 3 at 7,230*l.*, and the four other lots above the reserved prices, and H. then conveyed them to the trustees of his settlement:—Held, that the sale was unimpeachable. Hickley v. Hickley, 34 L. T., N. S., 441; 24 W. R. 604; 45 L. J., Ch., 401; 2 L. R., Ch. D., 190.

4. Biddings and Reserve.

6. An absolute power of sale given to trustees authorises them on a sale to fix a reserved bidding. Re Peyton, 8 Jur., N. S., 453; 31 L. J., Ch., 440; 10 W. R. 515; 6 L. T., N. S., 883; 30 Beav. 252.

1. The fact that a trustee for sale by public auction, or private contract, has not promoted competition by asking one of two persons proposing to purchase by private contract to bid higher before closing with the rival bidder:—Held, not to be a ground for setting aside or cancelling the contract. Harper v. Hayes, 2 De G. F. & J. 542.

The practice adopted at sales by auction under the decree of the Court, of opening the biddings, after a sale, is not to be extended to sales by trustees under a power of sale conferred upon them. Ib.

2. A term of 200 years, of which only nine months remained unexpired, was vested in trustees, upon trust to sell. It was not known who was entitled to the reversion expectant on the determination of the term. Upon a bill by one of the cestuis que trustent the Court decreed a sale, giving all the cestuis que trustent liberty to bid, and directing advertisements to be issued for the representatives of the original lessor, who were to be at liberty to come in under the suit. Edmunds v. Foley (Lord), 7 Jur., N. S., 1268; 30 L. J., Ch., 887; 9 W. R. 859.

5. Authorised Payments in carrying out the Sale.

3. Real estates were conveyed to trustees, upon trust to sell in the usual form, and with power to enter into such arrangements with respect to any such sale as they might think fit, and to apply the proceeds of the sale upon certain trusts. The trustees sold part of the estates; and in order to satisfy the requisitions of the purchaser, paid off a legacy given by a former owner of the estates. Objection was made to the trustees being allowed this payment, on the ground that the legacy was not charged on the land:—Held, that even though the legacy were not charged on the land (which was doubtful) the trustees must be allowed the payment, as they had acted bonâ fide for the benefit of the estate. Trustees having a power to sell, have a reasonable discretion to make payments for the purpose of carrying out the sale. Forshaw v. Higginson, 5 W. R. 424; 26 L. J., Ch., 342; 3 Jur., N. S., 476.

4. The donees of a power of sale and exchange may pay money for owelty of exchange, although they are not expressly authorised so to do. Bartram v. Whichcote, 6 Sim. 86.

6. Sale by Trustees to pay Debts.

5. Testator devised his real estate to trustees in trust, during the first fifteen years after his death, to apply the rents in discharge of the charges and incumbrances on his estate, and also of the debts which he should owe at his decease; and if by any reason whatever, in the opinion of his trustees, a sale should become necessary of any of the estates for the purpose of raising any sums of money charged on his estates before the expiration of the fifteen years, then he authorised the trustees to make such sale, and to apply the produce in discharge of such incumbrances; and he declared that their receipt for any money payable to them under his will should discharge the persons paying the same from being answerable for the application thereof, or from being bound to inquire as to the necessity or expediency of any sale which might be made by the trustees. The testator's personal estate being insufficient to pay his debts, and the rents of his real estates being insufficient to pay the interest of the incumbrances thereon, the trustees sold the whole of the estate, and thereby raised considerably more than the amount of the incumbrances. The Court, in a suit for specific performance:—Held, that the power of sale depended on the opinion of the trustees that a sale was necessary, and decreed the purchaser to complete his purchase. Rendlesham (Lord) v. Meux, 14 Sim. 249.

6. Distinction between a devise of estates to trustees upon trusts for certain persons, subject to debts, etc., and a devise to trustees charged with debts, etc., with a direction for, or trusts which require, an out-and-out conversion; in the former case a mortgage may be a proper mode of raising the particular charge, in the latter a sale only is authorised. Stroughill v. Anstey, 1 De G. M. & G. 635; 22 L. J., N. S., Ch., 130; 16 Jur. 671

7. It is no objection, on the part of a purchaser of land sold by a Master, that more land is sold than is necessary for the purpose of testator's will. Lutwych v. Winford, 2 Bro. C. C. 248.

8. A. conveys lands to trustees, on trust to sell, if the unsatisfied debts of a partnership in which he had been concerned should at a given time exceed 40,000*l.*; the trustees sell and convey to the purchaser by a deed, which recites that the debts of the partnership exceeded the specified amount, and that A. had died intestate as to his real estates, and the heir-at-law of A. joins in that deed and enters into a covenant for the title of the trustees, a covenant against all acts done by heir or his father, and a covenant for further assurance; it afterwards appears to be uncertain whether A. had not devised his real estate, and the purchaser files a bill to have protection against, or remedy of, the alleged defect in his title, which this discovery created:—Held, that the purchaser is not entitled to have an account taken of the debts of the partnership, in order to establish the fact of their having, at the specified time, exceeded the specified amount; that he is not entitled to have the books and documents connected with the accounts of the partnership delivered to him or deposited for safe custody; and that he is not entitled to a covenant either from the heir or from any other person for the production of those books and papers. Hallett v. Middleton, 1 Russ. 243.

9. Where lands are devised in trust for the payment of the testator's debts generally, with a direction that his estate at A. shall first be sold for that purpose, and, if that be not sufficient, then his estate at B.: a good title cannot be made to the estate at B., unless the vendor shows clearly that the trust remains unsatisfied, and that the produce arising from the sale of the A. property would, beyond all doubt, be insufficient for the purpose of the trust. Pierce v. Scott, 1 Y. & Coll. 257; 4 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 36.

1. Testatrix gave, devised, and bequeathed all the rest, residue, and remainder of her estate, real and personal, not specifically disposed of by her will, after payment of her debts, etc., to trustees, upon trust to invest the same in the funds or on real security, or, at their discretion, to keep the same in their then state of investment; and, in a subsequent part of her will, she declared that the receipts of the trustees for the purchase money of any trust property sold by them under her will, should be good discharges to the purchasers of such property:—Held, that the trustees were authorised to sell a real estate comprised in the residuary devise, although all the testatrix's debts, etc., had been paid. Affleck v. James, 17 Sim. 121; 13 Jur. 759.

2. A., having a power to appoint realty among children, devised and bequeathed "all my real and personal estate whatsoever whereof I have power to dispose," upon trust to sell the realty and give valid discharges to purchasers, and to apply the proceeds of the realty and the personalty in payment of his debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, and then among his children in certain shares. It did not appear whether the personal estate was sufficient for the debts, and funeral and testamentary expenses; but he had no real estate of his own, except a contingent reversion in the subject of the power:—Held, that the trustees could not make a good title and give effectual receipts. Cowx v. Foster, 1 John & H. 30; 6 Jur., N. S., 1051; 29 L. J., Ch., 886.

3. Trustees, as vendors, are not bound to state whether there exist any debts which make a sale necessary. Flux v. Blest, 31 L. T., N. S., 645; 23 W. R. 228.

4. A husband devised his real estate to trustees upon trust to pay thereout his debts and legacies if his personal estate should prove insufficient, and directed that, if not previously sold, his widow should have the enjoyment of his freehold house called Essex Lodge during her life or widowhood, and that after her death or second marriage it should be sold, and the produce divided among his children. A suit was instituted for the administration of his estate, in the course of which the chief clerk certified that the testator's debts and legacies had been paid out of his personal estate, and an order was afterwards made, with the consent of the widow who was living and unmarried, for the sale of Essex Lodge:—Held, that an objection by the purchaser, that the Court had no jurisdiction to make the order directing the sale, was valid. Carlyon v. Truscott, 23 W. R. 302; 44 L. J., Ch., 186; 32 L. T. 50; 23 W. R. 302.

7. Mortgage under.

5. Power to sell implies power to mortgage. Dict. per Ld. Macclesfield in Mills v. Banks, 3 P. W. 9.

6. Power to sell authorises a mortgage. Shaw v. Borrer (1 Keen 557) approved of. Ball v. Harris, 3 Jur. 140.

7. Where there was a devise upon various trusts, but subject to a charge for payment of debts, with a power to sell, and to buy other lands to be held upon the trusts of the will, and the trustee sold part of the devised lands, and bought others:—Held, that the purchased lands were subject to the charge of debts, and might be mortgaged by the trustee. Shaw v. Borrer (1 Keen 557) approved of. Ball v. Harris, 8 Sim. 485; 4 Myl. & C. 264; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 114; 1 Jur. 706.

8. A trust "to make sale and dispose of" the testator's real estate, does not authorise a mortgage where an intention appears that the whole real estate should be converted, as in the case of a trust to apply the moneys arising from such sale in payment of debts, and then upon further trusts for the benefit of wife and children. Haldenby v. Spofforth, 1 Beav. 390; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 238; 3 Jur. 241.

9. A testator, by his will, after appointing three persons his executors, gave to them the residue of his personal estate, and directed them or other the trustees to be appointed under the provisions contained in his will to stand possessed of his residuary personal estate, upon trust at such time or times as to them should seem meet to sell and convert into money all such part thereof as should not consist of money, and invest the produce in securities, and to stand possessed of the same upon trust thereout to pay his funeral expenses and debts and certain large legacies which he specified, and to stand possessed of the residue for his two sons equally; and the will contained a clause which, according to the construction put on it by the Court, empowered the trustees to give receipts. Sixteen years after the death of the testator, the then acting trustees of the will, who were not the executors, raised money upon a deposit of the title deeds of two leasehold houses, part of the testator's residuary estate:—Held, dismissing a claim filed by the mortgagees to enforce their securities, that, inasmuch as the trusts of the will showed a conversion out and out of the testator's property to be absolutely necessary, the trustees were not authorised in raising money by mortgage. Stroughill v. Anstey, 1 De G. M. & G. 635; 16 Jur. 671; 22 L. J., N. S., Ch., 130.

A power of sale out and out, and having an object beyond the raising of a particular charge, does not authorise a mortgage; but where the power is for raising a particular charge, and the estate is settled or devised subject to that charge, it may be proper to raise the money by mortgage, and such a mortgage will be supported as a conditional sale. Ib.

Where a trust is created by will for the payment of debts and legacies, a purchaser or mortgagee is not bound to see to the application of the money raised, the principle referable to such a case being, that the testator has shown his intention to be to entrust the trustees with the power of receiving and applying the money. Ib.

Persons, however, who deal with trustees raising money at a considerable distance of time and without apparent reason for so doing, are under an obligation to inquire, and see that no breach of trust is being committed. Ib.

Distinction in reference to the raising of money not apparently for the payment of a charge, between the case of a man who is owner as well as trustee, and that of a man who holds the property merely as a trustee subject to a charge. Ib.

1. Trustees who are directed to sell an estate are not justified in raising money by mortgage, notwithstanding a discretion is given to them to postpone the sale. Devaynes v. Robinson, 24 Beav. 86; 3 Jur., N. S., 707; 27 L. J., Ch., 157; 5 W. R. 509.

2. A testator devised real estate to trustees, upon trust out of the rents and profits to pay annuities; and by the same ways and means, or by such other ways and means (except a sale or sales) as they might think proper, to raise such sum and sums as should be sufficient to discharge the several incumbrances thereon, and subject thereto, upon trust for the testator's grandsons successively in tail male. The will contained a power for the trustees to grant leases at a rack-rent, and without fine: —Held, that the trustees were precluded from raising the money by mortgage, the word sale virtually including mortgage. Benett v. Wyndham, 3 Jur., N. S., 1143; 5 W. R. 410.

Held, also, that the trustees had a discretion as well to the time as to the means of paying off the charges; and the testator showing an intention to benefit all the objects of his bounty equally, the Court referred it to itself in chambers to determine what proportion of the annual income ought to be applied in paying off the incumbrances. Ib.

3. Whether a sum directed to be raised out of the rents and profits of a real estate is to be raised by annual rents and profits, or by sale or mortgage, is a question of intention to be collected from the context of the will, and from the purposes to which the money is to be applied. Wilson v. Halliley, 1 Russ. & M. 590; 8 L. J., Ch., 121.

4. Reciprocal duties of trustees and cestuis que trustent, where it becomes necessary to raise money to discharge incumbrances on or otherwise deal with the trust property. Marshall v. Sladden, 7 Hare. 428; 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 57; 14 Jur. 106.

5. Estates in D. were conveyed to trustees upon trust that they, or the survivor of them, or the heirs of the survivor, should, at the request of A. and B., or the survivor of them, or, if both should be dead, at the discretion of the trustees or trustee for the time being, "sell and dispose of all and singular the same hereditaments and premises, either together or in parcels, and either by public auction or by private contract." The trustees were directed to stand possessed of the proceeds upon the trusts, and for the intents and purposes, etc., declared by a deed of even date. The deed of even date was a settlement of certain estates in N. in strict settlement upon A. and B., and the son of B., in tail male. And the trusts, thereby declared, of the proceeds of the sale of the D. estates were for payment of certain sums of money, some of which were charged upon the N. estates. "And as to the residue (if any) of the money which should arise by such sale, remaining unapplied for the purposes aforesaid," to be applied in the purchase of lands to be settled to the same uses as the N. estates. And it was declared that the rents, issues, and profits of the D. estates, until the same should be sold, or so much thereof as should be remaining unsold, should be paid and applied to the same person, and for the same purposes, as the rents of the lands to be purchased with the residue of such trust money should be payable or applicable to, if such purchase were actually made:—Held, that this trust for sale authorised a mortgage of the D. estates for a sum sufficient to pay off all the charges thrown upon those estates. Orford (Earl) v. Albemarle (Earl), 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 396; 12 Jur. 811.

6. A trust for sale of real estate held not to authorise a mortgage. Page v. Cooper, 16 Beav. 396; 1 W. R. 136.

Real estate was conveyed to trustees upon trust to "sell and dispose" thereof, and, out of the money to arise, "levy, raise, and pay, two sums of 150*l.* and 1,000*l.*, and invest the residue of the moneys to arise, for the husband and wife for their lives, and afterwards for their children, and, in default, as the wife should appoint by will:—Held, that the trustees were not justified in raising these two sums by mortgage, inasmuch as a conversion of the estate into money, out and out, was intended. Ib.

7. When a small estate was settled in strict settlement, and the settlement contained power for the trustees during minorities to repair and rebuild, and to pay the expenses out of the rents and profits, but no power to borrow on mortgage, the Court, on being satisfied that it was for the benefit of all parties, and notwithstanding that some interested were infants, gave the trustees leave to borrow money on mortgage, not exceeding a sum fixed by the Court, to rebuild the house, as no repairs would render it habitable. Frith v. Cameron, 19 W. R. 886.

By Executors.] See EXECUTOR AND ADMINISTRATOR, XXII.

8. Severance of Minerals.

8. A power to sell or convey in exchange all or any part of the manors, lands, tenements, hereditaments, and premises, and the inheritance thereof, will not enable trustees to sell the lands, with an exception or reservation of the mines and minerals under the same. Buckley v. Howell, 7 Jur., N. S., 536; 30 L. J., Ch., 524; 4 L. T., N. S., 172; 29 Beav. 546; 9 W. R. 544.

Order for. Under 25 & 26 Vict., c. 108.] 9. Under 25 & 26 Vict., c. 108, s. 2 the Court will make an order, on petition authorising the sale of land with a reservation of the minerals, or of the minerals apart from the land, in general terms without reference to any particular sale. Re Willway, 32 L. J., Ch., 226; 1 N. R. 469.

Upon any application to the Court by trustees or other persons under the above section, the consent of the parties beneficially interested is necessary. S. C. 1 N. R. 469.

10. The Court has power under the Confirmation of Sales Act, 25 & 26 Vict., c. 108, to give a general direction that persons having powers of sale and exchange in a settlement or will which do not expressly authorise the reservation of mines and minerals on a sale of the settled property, or the sale of minerals apart from the land, may exercise the powers as if they did authorise such reservation or separation. Re Wynn, 16 L. R., Eq., 237; 21 W. R. 695; 43 L. J., Ch., 95.

1. Where a petition is presented by trustees under 25 & 26 Vict., c. 108, it is necessary that the beneficiaries should be served with and appear on the petition. Re Brown, 9 Jur., N. S., 349; 32 L. J., Ch., 275; 7 L. T., N. S., 346; 1 N. R. 13; 11 W. R. 19.

2. The cestuis que trustent ought to be made parties to an application under 25 & 26 Vict., c. 108, s. 2, for sale of the surface apart from the minerals. Re Palmer, 13 L. R., Eq., 408; 41 L. J., Ch., 511.

3. A petition under 25 & 26 Vict., c. 108, s. 2, by trustees of settled land with power of sale, exercisable with the consent of the tenant for life, for leave to sell the land and minerals separately, need not be served on the beneficiaries entitled in remainder. Re Pryse, 10 L. R., Eq., 531; 39 L. J., Ch., 760; 18 W. R. 1064.

4. A petition was presented, under the Confirmation of Sales Act, 25 & 26 Vict., c. 108, by trustees with a power of sale, and the first tenant for life, and the tenant for life in remainder, for leave to sell the land and minerals separately:—Held, that the next remainderman need not be served with the petition. Re Powell, 23 W. R. 151.

5. A petition under 25 & 26 Vict., c. 108, s. 2, by trustees having power to sell settled lands with the consent of the tenant for life, for leave to sell the land and minerals separately, need not be served on the remaindermen. Re Nagle, 6 L. R., Ch. D., 104.

6. The Court allowed a schedule of considerable length to be appended to an order made for a sale of minerals under the Act 25 & 26 Vict., c. 108. Re Roper's Estate, 2 N. R. 442.

By Mortgagees.] 7. Mortgagees are within the Confirmation of Sales Act, 25 & 26 Vict., c. 108, and may have liberty to sell under their power of sale, with a reservation of the mines and minerals in the land sold, and incidental powers of working them. Re Beaumont, 12 L. R., Eq., 86; 40 L. J., Ch., 400; 19 W. R. 767.

It is not necessary for mortgagees, in order to exercise the power of selling with such a reservation, to serve the petition or any subsequent incumbrances. Ib.

8. Mortgagees in possession, with a power of sale, after filing a bill for foreclosure, and setting down the cause for hearing on motion for a decree, presented a petition, not entitled in the cause, but in the matter of the 25 & 26 Vict., c. 108, for liberty to sell the surface, excepting the mines and minerals, of the hereditaments comprised in the mortgage deed:—Held, that they were entitled to the order asked. Re Wilkinson, 13 L. R., Eq., 634; 41 L. J., Ch., 392.

9. Pending Suit.

9. Where sale before Master is directed by decree, a contract by trustee for private sale would not be enforced. Raymond v. Webb, Lofft. 66.

10. Pending a suit, and although no decree has been made, it is proper that trustees should obtain the sanction of the Court to their exercise of powers of sale and leasing. Turner v. Turner, 30 Beav. 414.

10. Other Cases.

11. Where the plaintiffs were devisees of a leasehold, in trust to sell, and also executors, and, being unable to sell, had agreed to underlet the premises to the defendant:—Held, that being primâ facie inconsistent with the trust for sale, the Court could not compel performance of the agreement in a suit to which the cestuis que trustent were not parties. Evans v. Jackson, 8 Sim. 217; 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 8.

12. Under a devise of manors, lands, etc., to A., his executors, etc., for a term of eleven years, in trust to receive the rents, issues, and profits of the premises that should from time to time accrue and become due, and dispose of the same for the benefit of a cestui que trust, A. may, by the direction of the cestui que trust, and for his benefit, assign the advowson of a rectory appendant to a manor to a purchaser, for the said term of eleven years, to intent that purchaser may present for the next turn, in case of an avoidance before the expiration of term; and in case of such avoidance, the purchaser may present accordingly. Albemarle (Earl) v. Rogers, 7 Bro. P. C. 522.

13. Contract by trustees under power of sale, though by subsequent events it cannot be executed by the power, shall be made good in equity by the effect of the interest acquired in the estate, bound by the contract. Mortlock v. Buller, 10 Ves. 315. Affirmed 2 Dow 518.

14. An absolute alienation by trustees of a charity, may be valid, if beneficial to the charity. Att.-Gen. v. Warren, 2 Swan. 302; 1 Wils. 387.

15. A tenant for life of leasehold lands, with remainder to himself in fee, subject to a term for raising a jointure and portions, exchanged in fee for other lands with B., whose heir afterwards agreed for the sale of them. The purchaser having objected that A. had no power to exchange in fee, B.'s heir procured the execution of new deeds, with the view of bringing the exchange within the terms of a power of sale and exchange given to the trustees by the settlement:—Held, that such transaction not being a direct sale or exchange under the settlement, but done to satisfy what had been imperfectly done before, it was very doubtful whether it was a proper exercise of the power, though the surviving trustee was a party. Cowgill v. Oxmantown (Lord), 3 Y. & Coll. 369; 3 Jur. 313.

16. A rent charge, till a debt paid, granted by a tenant for life having a power to raise, by sale or mortgage, a certain sum for payment of his debts, a good execution of the power, though referable to his interest as well as to his power. Parol evidence to show that the deed was not intended to be in execution of the power, inadmissible as going to contradict it. Blake v. Marnell, 2 Ball & B. 35. Affirmed 4 Dow P. C. 248.

The recital of a power not necessary to the due execution of it. Id. 44.

1. By settlement on marriage it was provided, that the plaintiff, tenant for life, should have power to contract for the sale of and to convey any part of the lands in settlement, in case the same should, by virtue of any powers to be contained in any Act of Parliament, be required for the purposes of any railroad, canal, or other undertaking, etc. By an Act of Parliament, passed on the 15th July, 1837, and subsequently to the date of the settlement, certain persons, as an incorporated body, had power and authority given them to treat and contract for, and purchase and hold, lands for the purpose of making a cemetery:—Held, that the making of a cemetery was an undertaking authorised by Act of Parliament, under the words of the settlement; and that the plaintiff was entitled to a specific performance of a contract for sale by him to the company of part of the lands in settlement. Kensington v. West London Cemetery Co., 7 L. J., N. S., Ch., 251; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 81; 2 Jur. 959.

2. A trustee of a sum of money charged on real estate, who is also owner of the estate subject to the charge, is entitled to sell any portion of the estate discharged from the trust, provided he reserves a portion sufficient to answer the charge; and the estate so sold cannot be followed into the hands of a purchaser with notice of the trust. Grundy v. Heathcote, 1 Hem. & M. 172.

3. Under a trust to sell property which was subject to a mortgage, and out of the proceeds to pay off the mortgage, and pay the surplus to the mortgagor:—Held, that a sale subject to the mortgage was valid. Manser v. Dix, 8 De G. M. & G. 703; 3 Jur., N. S., 252.

4. A trustee having power to sell land in order to raise 600*l.*, and the expenses, put it up to sale in two lots, and sold the first for 600*l.*, and the second for 510*l.* The second lot consisted of more than three acres of land, and was described in the particulars of sale as readily convertible into building ground:—Held, that the sale of the second lot was not improper, and that the purchasers must pay the costs of a suit for specific performance brought against them by the trusteee. Thomas v. Townsend, 16 Jur. 736.

5. Lands were devised to a trustee and his heirs to the use of A. for life, without impeachment of waste, with divers remainders over; and a power was given to the trustee, with the consent of the tenant for life in possession, to sell the property or any part of it, and to lay out the money in the purchase of other lands, to be settled to the same uses, and in the meantime to invest it in the public funds, and for the purposes of such sale to revoke the original uses, and appoint new uses. A contract was entered into for the sale of the estate for 13,400*l.*, exclusive of the timber, which was to be taken at a valuation; and it being conceived that the tenant for life, without impeachment of waste, was entitled to receive for his own benefit the amount of the valuation of the timber, a deed was executed by which he, in consideration of 2,448*l.* conveyed the timber to the purchaser; and the trustee, in consideration of 13,400*l.*, conveyed the land, exclusive of the timber. Many years afterwards, the tenant for life, being advised that he was not entitled to the amount of the valuation of the timber, transferred to the trustee as much 3 per cent. stock as 2,448*l.* would have produced at the time of the sale. After the death of A., the next remainderman, though he had concurred in proceedings in which the fund produced by the sale was treated as applicable to the purposes of the testator's will, brought a writ of formedon, and obtained judgment on the ground that the power of sale was not well executed:—Held, that a court of equity ought not to interfere by injunction to deprive him of the benefit of that judgment Cockerell v. Cholmeley, 3 Russ. 565; Taml. 435. Affirmed 1 Cl. & F. 60; 6 Bli. N. S. 120.

6. A sale made of settled estates under a power by a party having no authority to sell was, under the circumstances, refused to be set aside by the Court, the sale having been made bonâ fide, and the money being obtainable from the parties who received it, or their estates. Hope v. Liddell, Liddell v. Norton, 2 Jur., N. S., 105; 25 L. J., Ch., 90.

A sale made by a tenant for life, and adopted by a trustee acting under a power to sell, will be supported in equity against tenants in tail in remainder, although the contract was made in consideration of payments to be made to the tenant for life at long and indefinite periods, but for which the trustee gave a receipt at the time, though the money was not then paid. Ib.

What acts will amount to acquiescence so as to bind tenants in tail, and deprive them of settled estates and compel them to follow the money for which they were sold. Ib.

With what previous notice of title a purchaser will be allowed to retain an estate purchased from persons having no right or power to sell. Ib.

IX. INVESTMENT OF PROCEEDS.

7. Purchases held not a substitution for estates sold, under a power in a settlement, to sell and invest the money in estates to be settled to the same uses, there being no original trust, subsequent agreement, nor representation relied on. Denton v. Davies, 18 Ves. 499.

8. A settled estate is sold, but no part of the money is laid out in other lands; yet this Court will, under certain circumstances, presume an agreement between the parties interested, that it would be so laid out, and upon such presumption will decree the money to that person who would have been entitled to the land if any purchase had been made. Newton v. Newton, 6 Bro. P. C. 408.

9. Trustees, with the consent of A. B., the tenant for life, had a power to sell the trust estate and invest the produce in other real estate. In 1810 A. B., with the concurrence of the trustees, sold the estate for 8,440*l.*, and received the purchase money about the same time, but whether with the concurrence of the trustees was not proved. A. B. purchased an estate for 17,400*l.* Of the 8,440*l.*, 8,124*l.* was paid by A. B. in part payment for the second estate; the remainder was paid partly out of A. B.'s moneys, and partly by moneys raised by a mortgage of the estate. The estate was conveyed to A. B. in fee. No acknowledgment or declaration of trust was ever made by A. B., and he retained possession of the estate till thirty years after, when he became bankrupt. The Court, against A. B.'s assignees, presumed, under these circumstances, that the purchase had been made under the power, for the benefit of the trust, and held that there had been no such adverse possession, and no such aquiescence on the part of the trustees, so as to preclude the Court making a declaration that they had a lien on the estate to the extent of the trust moneys invested in its purchase. Price v. Blakemore, 6 Beav. 507.

1. An inclosure under the provisions of the General Inclosure Act 1845 (8 & 9 Vict., c. 118), is not a purchase of other hereditaments within the meaning of the usual power of sale and exchange. Vernon v. Manvers (Earl), 1 N. R. 117.

2. An Act of Parliament, after reciting that certain lands in the neighbourhood of Leeds were in strict settlement, and that the ultimate remainderman was an infant, and that many persons were desirous of erecting buildings on the said lands, and that it would be advantageous to the parties interested in the lands if the same could be sold and the proceeds be invested in other real estate, to be settled to the like uses, vested the lands in certain trustees on trust to sell the same, either together or in parcels, the purchase moneys to be paid into the Bank of England. The Act contained no express power to expend any portion of the purchase moneys in setting out the lands or in making roads:—Held, that having regard to the objects of the Act, namely, the sale of the property as building land, such power ought to be implied, and that the trustees and their agents ought to be allowed all sums properly expended by them in making roads to the several allotments, and in bringing the land into a fit state for the market. Cookson v. Lee, 23 L. J., Ch., 473.

3. The S. estates were by Act of Parliament vested in trustees upon trust to sell, with the consent of the earl, the tenant for life in possession, and to invest the sales moneys in the purchase of other lands convenient to be held with the bulk of the property. Under these trusts certain outlying portions of the estates were, by a contract between the trustees, the earl, and P., contracted to be sold to P. for 29,000*l.*, and 5,000*l.* was paid by P. to the earl as deposit, to be paid by him to the trustees when a proper purchase should be fixed upon in which to reinvest the sales moneys according to the trust. The purchase was never completed, and the 5,000*l.* thus left in the Earl's hands was forfeited, and the same lands were, some years afterwards, sold for 22,000*l.*:—Held, that the 5,000*l.* belonged to the settled estates, and not to the earl absolutely. Shrewsbury (Earl) v. Shrewsbury (Countess), 18 Jur. 397.

4. A reversion in fee expectant on the life estate was settled in strict settlement, and the trustees were empowered at any time thereafter, with the consent of the tenant for life under the settlement, to sell or exchange the lands for other lands in fee in possession. The tenant for life in possession, together with the tenant for life under the settlement, and the trustees by their agent, sold the estate for one entire sum. The purchaser objected that the power of sale could not be exercised until the reversion came into possession, but waived all other objections:—Held, that the power was well exercised, and that the purchaser having waived all other objections, must agree with the vendors as to the apportionment of the purchase money between the life estate in possession, and the reversion, or that the apportionment must be made by the Master. Clark v. Seymour, 7 Sim. 67.

5. Under a settlement, real estate was limited to such uses as A. and B. should by deed jointly appoint, and subject thereto, to the use of A. for life, with remainder to the use of B. for life, with remainder to the first and other sons of B. in tail, with divers remainders over; and there was a power of sale vested in four trustees, and exercisable at the request of A. and B., and the survivor of them. By a deed (which contained a recital that A. and B. were desirous of selling part of the settled property, and with a view to facilitate the sale and conveyance thereof to the respective purchasers had agreed to execute the deed), A. and B., in exercise of the joint power of appointment, appointed part of the settled property to trustees upon trust for sale; and it was declared that the trustees should stand possessed of the proceeds upon the trusts intended to be declared by a deed of even date. No deed declaring the trusts was ever executed, and there was evidence to show that the deed of appointment was executed with the view of avoiding the trouble and expense of an application to the trustees to exercise the power of sale:—Held, that the disposition of the proceeds of sale was a question of intention; and that both on the terms of the deed of appointment (independently of the evidence) and also having regard to the evidence, the proceeds of sale remained subject to the trusts of the settlement. Biddulph v. Williams, 1 L. R., Ch. D., 203.

6. A power to sell in a deed with a direction to reinvest in lands does not make it compulsory upon the trustees to reinvest, and if they retain the fund as personalty it is to be so regarded. Atwell v. Atwell, 20 W. R. 108; 25 L. T., N. S., 526; 41 L. J., Ch., 23; 13 L. R., Eq., 23.

7. Trustees under a will which contained a power to sell real estate, but no power of investing the trust funds in real estate, bought real estate, and had it conveyed to the trusts of the will:—Held, that they could sell and make a good title to the real estate wrongfully purchased with the trust funds on obtaining the concurrence in the sale of one of the persons beneficially interested in the trust funds. Re Patten and Edmonton Union, 52 L. J., Ch., 787; 48 L. T. 870; 31 W. R. 785.

X. BREACH OF TRUST.

8. Construction of a power of sale and exchange, and circumstances in which the exercise of a power of sale, although not inconsistent with the terms of the power, would, nevertheless, be a breach of trust. Marshall v. Sladden, 7 Hare 428; 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 57; 14 Jur. 106.

On a mortgagee of settled estates requiring to be paid off, or to have the interest increased, the tenant for life proposed a new mortgagee at the same rate. The trustees insisted on being the proper persons to carry the transaction into effect, and procured another mortgagee, but at a higher rate; and in order to raise the expenses thereby incurred, they proceeded to sell the estate under the ordinary powers of sale and exchange in the settlement, whereupon the tenant for life filed a bill to restrain the sale:—Held, that the conduct of the trustees was unjustifiable, and that they ought to pay all the costs of the suit. S.C. 4 De G. & Sm. 468.

1. Where sale by trustee to purchaser with notice of trust, is set aside, neither purchaser nor trustee pays interest on rents. Macartney v. Blackwood, 1 Ridgw. L. & S. 602.

2. The Court will not enforce a contract involving a breach of trust. Wood v. Richardson, 4 Beav. 174; 5 Jur. 623.

3. The Court will not decree a specific performance which involves a breach of trust. Maw v. Topham, 19 Beav. 576.

4. Where act of sale by trustees takes place, under circumstances of breach of trust, Court will not decree specific performance in favour of bonâ fide or innocent purchaser. Ord v. Noel, 5 Madd. 438.

5. Course adopted where a literal compliance with the terms of the power would be mischievous to the estate, so as to save the trustees from responsibility. Cuff v. Hall, 1 Jur., N. S., 972.

6. A testator, who died in 1841, directed his trustees to sell his real estate, and gave them some discretion therein. Instead of selling, they mortgaged and retained the estate:—Held, that they had committed a breach of trust, and the estate having become depreciated, that they were liable for the loss. Devaynes v. Robinson, 24 Beav. 86; 3 Jur., N. S., 707; 27 L. J., Ch., 157; 5 W. R. 509.

Held, also, that the mortgage was void as against the mortgagee with notice, but that he was entitled to stand as a creditor on the produce of the estate, to the extent to which the mortgage money had been properly applied. Ib.

Where a loss, occasioned by a breach of trust, does not happen until after the death of the trustee, his assets are equally liable. Ib.

7. W. H. by will, after giving several legacies, left the remainder of his property to his wife for life to be invested in the public funds, and at her demise to be equally divided between his children and the heirs of their bodies. The estates were retained unsold, and a bill filed raising the questions, whether there was a direction to convert, whether a surviving trustee was liable for non-sale, or what was meant by "heirs of the bodies":—Held, that there was a direction to convert, but inasmuch as loss was not caused by non-sale, the trustee was not liable, but the estate of the widow; and that the words "heirs of their bodies" meant "children," and were substitutionary, and the children of a deceased child were equally entitled. Pattenden v. Hobson, 1 W. R. 282; 17 Jur. 406.

8. A testator devised certain estates by name, together with his farming stock and furniture, to his beloved wife, to sell, to discharge all his creditors, and he constituted his wife and T. W. his executors, whom he appointed to sell and dispose of all his estates and chattels, in such manner as they should jointly agree upon, or not to sell if it seemed most advisable to keep them, or in any way they should think proper, so that every creditor had his money, and, if sold, all overplus to his wife, towards her support and her family:—Held, upon demurrer, that the testator's children had such an interest in the devised estates, as enabled them to sustain a bill against the widow and he co-executor, impeaching a sale on the ground of fraud, and praying an account of the rents and profits. Woods v. Woods, 1 Myl. & C. 401.

Payment of Purchase Money to Solicitor.] See VENDOR AND PURCHASER.

XI. INJUNCTION AGAINST SALE.

9. On a trust to sell, a suggestion in the bill of improper conduct of the trustees, in not giving sufficient notice of the sale, is not a ground for an injunction to stop the intended sale. Peshel v. Fowler, 2 Anstr. 549.

10. To a bill, by one of the successive tenants for life under the limitations, against the trustees of the term and the tenant for life in possession, to restrain the trustees from raising the 30,000*l.* by sale or mortgage of the estate, until the timber of full growth (of which it was alleged that a large quantity was standing on the estate) had been cut and applied towards that purpose, demurrers were allowed. Marker v. Kekewich, 8 Hare 291; 14 Jur. 544.

11. Some of the clauses which are frequently introduced into the deeds of trust for sale are of such a kind, that a court of equity will not act upon them, where the trustee for sale is also the creditor for whose benefit the trust is created. The Court will not restrain trustees for sale from completing a sale on the ground that they cannot show a good title. Roberts v. Bozen, 3 L. J., Ch., 113.

12. A prayer for an injunction to restrain a trustee from selling, involves relief, although nothing substantial is asked against him. March v. Keith, 30 L. J., Ch., 127.

13. Trustees under a marriage settlement, having no power to invest in land, purchased copyholds with the trust money, the husband and wife agreeing that the trustees should have power to sell, and indemnify themselves. The trustees were also charged with other breaches of trusts. The surviving trustee proceeded to sell the copyholds, which were worth much more than the original purchase money, and claimed to indemnify himself out of the surplus. He was restrained from selling until it was ascertained when it would be for the benefit of the persons interested not sui juris that the sale should take place. Wiles v. Gresham, 17 Jur. 779.

Quære, whether he would be allowed so to indemnify himself. Ib.

See also II. supra.

XII. DISCHARGE OF LAND FROM TRUSTS.

1. Where lands are devised to trustees to raise money for several purposes, and they raise the money out of the profits, the land is thereby discharged, and the persons concerned must resort to the trustees. Juxon v. Brain, Pre. Ch. 143.

2. Trustees appointed for raising and paying a portion of 500*l.* to A. Trustee enters and gives judgment to A. for paying the 500*l.* to A. when raised; the trustee raises the 500*l.* and more, and becomes insolvent; whether the land is discharged. Harrison v. Cage, 2 Vern. 85.

3. Land settled in trust to pay debts is discharged as soon as the money is raised, though misapplied by the trustees. Anon., 1 Salk. 153.

4. An estate having once borne a charge in favour of legatees or creditors is discharged, though the fund has been misapplied by the trustees. Omerod v. Hardman, 5 Ves. 736.

5. The appointment of a trustee by creditors to receive rents for the payment of debts, discharges the estate from any loss arising from the failure of the trustee. Hutchinson v. Masareene, 2 Ball & B. 49.

6. If lands are appointed to pay debts, the heir is entitled to them when the debts are paid; and if to be sold, he is entitled to the surplus; but if there be any abuse, his remedy is against the trustee, and not against the purchaser. Culpepper v. Aston, 2 Ch. Ca. 115. Sed quære, if a purchaser with notice might not be affected.

XIII. COVENANTS FOR TITLE.

7. Estates were devised to A. for life, remainder to his sons successively in tail male. A. and B., during the infancy of B.'s eldest son, obtained an Act of Parliament, vesting the estates in trustees in trust to sell:—Held, that A. and B. must covenant with the purchaser for the title. If settled estates are sold under a power to sell them, with the consent of the tenant for life, he must covenant for the title. Re London Bridge Acts, 13 Sim. 176.

8. An estate was being sold, with the approbation of the Court, by trustees of a settlement under a power of sale and exchange contained in the settlement, to raise a sum to which, in the events which had happened, the tenant for life was entitled:—Held, that the tenant for life must enter into covenants for title. Poulett v. Hood, 37 L. J., Ch., 224; 5 L. R., Eq., 115; 16 W. R. 323; 17 L. T., N. S., 486.

XXII. Power to give Receipts.

II. Who may Exercise, 5915.
III. Discharge of Purchaser, 5916.
IV. In Case of Executors. See EXECUTOR AND ADMINISTRATOR, XXII. IV.

I. WHEN IMPLIED.

9. Power given to trustees to sell lands and divide the profits amongst the cestuis que trustent, some infants, enables trustees alone to give effectual receipts to purchasers. Sowarsby v. Lacy, 4 Madd. 142.

10. Where trustees for sale are to apply produce for infant, power of giving receipts to purchasers is necessarily incident. Lavender v. Stanton, 6 Madd. 46.

11. Power to trustees to lay out money on securities, includes power to give discharges to borrowers. Wood v. Harman, 5 Madd. 368.

12. Objection to title by purchaser, under a trust to sell, as bound to see to the application of the money in satisfaction of scheduled creditors and others, coming in within a limited time after the date of the deed or disabilities removed; overruled upon the tenor of the deed implying that the receipt of the trustees should be a discharge. Balfour v. Welland, 16 Ves. 151.

13. A clause in a will enabling trustees to give receipts in a particular case specified, construed in favour of the intention of the testator to confer a power to give receipts generally. Stroughill v. Anstey, 1 De G. M. & G. 635; 16 Jur. 671.

14. Estates were limited to the use of R. K. C. for life, with remainders to the use of his daughters A. M. C. and M. A. C., their heirs and assigns, as tenants in common. A. M. C. devised her undivided moiety of the estates to her sister M. A. C. for life, with divers remainders over, and declared that every person thereby made tenant for life should have such and the like powers of leasing, selling, and exchanging any part of the devised estate as were by the will of R. K. C. given to the tenants for life and in tail in his will mentioned, or to the trustees thereof. The will of R. K. C. did not contain any power authorising a tenant for life or in tail to ease, sell, or exchange the property thereby devised; but full powers to lease, sell, and exchange, and to give receipts for purchase money, were by such will given to the trustees thereof. R. S. C. was tenant for life of the estates devised by R. K. C., and was also entitled in remainder expectant on the decease of M. A. C. to the moiety of the estates devised by A. M. C. On bill filed by R. S. C. seeking for a declaration that a power of sale and exchange was, under the will of A. M. C., vested in M. A. C. as to the moiety devised by A. M. C., and that such power of sale and exchange so conferred by the will of A. M. C. was co-extensive with the power of sale and exchange created by the will of R. K. C.:—Held, that M. A. C. had the same powers of sale and exchange over the moiety of the estate devised by A. M. C. as were by the will of R. K. C. given to the trustees of his will, but that M. A. C. had no power to give receipts to purchasers. And semble that any purchaser from M. A. C. might remove all difficulty by paying his purchase money into court under the Trustee Relief Act, 10 & 11 Vict., c. 96. Cox v. Cox, 1 Kay & J. 251.

15. A testator devised certain freehold estates to trustees, for 500 years, upon trust that they should by sale, demise, or mortgage of all or any part of the estates, for all or any part of the term, or by other lawful means, levy and raise 2,400*l.*, and when so raised, upon trust that they should put and place out the same at interest, upon Government or real security, and call in and replace the same from time to time as they should think proper, and upon trust to pay the proceeds to the testator's daughter for her life; and should after her decease call in the 2,400*l.*, and pay the same to the daughter's appointees; and, in default of appointment, among her children. The trustees borrowed the 2,400*l.*, and executed a mortgage for the same, on which they indorsed a receipt for the amount. The tenant for life died; the mortgagee transferred the mortgage to the plaintiff. On a bill to foreclose the mortgage, one of the defendants entitled to the 2,400*l.* under the trusts of the will, suggested that the trustees never received the mortgage money, and that the mortgagee was, under the trusts of the will, liable for its misapplication; but held, that the trust implied an authority to receive the 2,400*l.*, and that the trustees having given a receipt, it was not necessary for the mortgagee to show that the money reached the hands of the trustees. And further, the plaintiff being a transferee for value, having the legal estate, he was not bound to inquire; and the Court made a decree for a foreclosure. Locke v. Lomas, 5 De G. & Sm. 326; 16 Jur. 813; 21 L. J., Ch., 503.

1. The question whether an executor or trustee who sells an estate, can give a good receipt for the purchase money, is not a question of conveyance, but of title. Forbes v. Peacock, 12 Sim. 528; 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 46; 7 Jur. 688. And see S. C. 6 Jur. 476. And on appeal 1 Ph. 717; 15 L. J., N. S., Ch., 31.

2. The doctrine of Forbes v. Peacock (12 Sim. 528; 13 L. J., Ch., 46; 15 L. J., Ch., 371) amounts only to this, that where prior to 22 & 23 Vict., c. 35, and 23 & 24 Vict., c. 145, there is a trust to sell real estate, and pay debts and legacies out of the proceeds, there is also an implied power in the trustees to give receipts for the purchase money. There is nothing in that case authorising trustees, by reason merely of such a charge, to sell a settled estate. Carlyon v. Trustcott, 20 L. R., Eq., 348; 44 L. J., Ch., 186; 32 L. T., N. S., 50.

3. A testator, "in case his personal estate should be insufficient for the payment of his debts," charged them upon his real estate:—Held, that the executor had an implied power to sell and give valid receipts for the purchase money without showing the insufficiency of the personal estate. Greetham v. Colton, 34 Beav. 615; 11 Jur., N. S., 848; 13 W. R. 1009; 13 L. T., N. S., 34.

Held, also, that the lapse of thirteen years between the death and the sale did not affect the executor's power. Ib.

4. Where there is a power of sale for the purpose of making certain payments, a power to give receipts and discharges may be inferred. Greville v. Browne, 5 Jur., N. S., 849; 7 W. R. 673.

II. WHO MAY EXERCISE.

5. Trustee for sale renouncing, is not necessary party in conveyance, or in receipt for purchase money. Adams v Taunton, 5 Madd. 435.

6. One trustee for the sale of an estate having released and conveyed to his co-trustee, refused to join in the receipt of the purchase money. Upon the special expression of the deed, the purchaser was not held to the agreement with the remaining trustee; it would have been otherwise if one had merely renounced. Crewe v. Dicker, 4 Ves. 97.

7. A joint and several receipt for purchase money given by three persons, only one of whom has power to give a receipt, is a valid receipt by such one who has power. Miller v. Priddon, 1 De G. M. & G. 713; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 421.

8. Testator devised his real and personal estate to trustees, to be sold for the benefit of his children, and directed that their receipts should be sufficient discharges. The children filed a bill to have the will established and the trusts performed. At the hearing the bill was dismissed against the heir, and the Court did not establish the will, but made a decree affecting the personal estate only. The suit afterwards became abated, and was not revived. On the death of the surviving trustee, another suit was instituted for the appointment of new trustees, which was done. The new trustees then sold part of the testator's real estates to the plaintiff, who filed a bill for a specific performance:—Held, that the former suit having been dismissed as against the heir, without the will being established, no suit was pending for the administration of the testator's real estates, and that the new trustees had the same power of giving receipts as the original trustees had. Drayson v. Poocock, 4 Sim. 283.

9. Testator devised his estates to trustees in trust to sell, and declared their receipts to be sufficient discharges, and he directed his trustees to complete any contracts for the sale of his estates, entered into during his lifetime, and remaining incomplete at his death:—Held, that his executor was the proper party to give receipts for the purchase moneys of the estates contracted to be sold by the testator. Eaton v. Sanater, 6 Sim. 517; 3 L. J., N. S., Ch., 197.

10. A testator ordered his debts to be paid by his executors, and after giving legacies he gave the residue of his real and personal estate, subject as aforesaid, to A., and he appointed A. and B. executors:—Held, that if the legacies were charged on the real estate, the debts must also be charged thereon, and that therefore A. was able to give valid receipts for the purchase money of the real estate, which relieved a purchaser from the necessity of seeing to its application. Dowling v. Hudson, 17 Beav. 248.

11. Where estates are devised in trust for sale, and payment of produce (subject to certain charges) to several persons named, and it is declared that trustee's receipts shall be sufficient discharge, etc.; it is not necessary that persons entitled to purchase money should be parties to conveyance, nor need they enter into covenants as to title. Rutland (Duke) v. Wakeman, 8 Bro. P. C. 145.

Exception that the persons entitled to the purchase money, subject to the charges, not parties to the conveyance, overruled. S. C. 3 Ves. 504.

Bill by devisees, in trust to sell, for specific performance of an agreement to purchase, exception to the report in favour of the title, that the persons entitled to the purchase money, subject to debts, legacies, and other charges, were not parties to the suit; the Lord Chancellor was of opinion they ought not to be parties to the conveyance, and if they were, their covenant ought to extend only to their own acts, and those of the devisor, not to a general warranty, without a special contract for it, but as the point must come properly upon objections to the conveyance, the exception was overruled upon the form. Id. 233.

III. DISCHARGE OF PURCHASER.

1. The rule which relieves a purchaser from seeing to the application of the purchase money when the estate is subject to a primary general charge of debts, has reference to the time of the testator's death, and does not cease to be applicable though the debts be subsequently paid; and, therefore, where an estate so charged was sold by the trustee, it was held that the cestuis que trustent were not necessary parties to the conveyance, though the sale did not take place till twenty-five years after the testator's death, and the vendor, on being asked by the purchaser whether all the debts were not paid, had refused to answer the question. Forbes v. Peacock, 1 Ph. 717; 15 L. J., N. S., Ch., 371. Reversing 12 Sim. 528; 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 46; 7 Jur. 688. And see S. C. 6 Jur. 476.

2. Where land is directed by will to be sold generally, and the money to form part of the personal estate, the purchaser is not bound to see to the application of the money. Smith v. Guyon, 1 Bro. C. C. 186.

3. Where the purchase money is to be laid out again by the trustees generally, the purchaser need not look to the application. Doran v. Wiltshire, 3 Swan. 699.

4. Where there is a trust for sale of realty, with power to give receipts and divide the proceeds amongst certain persons, whereof the trustee is one, and the trustee has judgments registered against him, the existence of such judgments cannot prejudice the other cestuis que trustent. Drummond v. Tracy, Johns. 608; 6 Jur., N. S., 369; 29 L. J., Ch., 304; 8 W. R. 207.

A testator devised and bequeathed his real and personal estate to his daughter, upon trust to sell the realty, with power to give receipts, and declared she should stand possessed of the personalty and proceeds of realty upon trust for herself and her two sisters. The daughter contracted to sell the estate, and, pending the carrying out of the sale, judgments were registered against her husband:—Held, that the daughter's receipts were sufficient discharges to a purchaser. Ib.

5. Trustees with a power to sell and to invest the proceeds in Government or real securities, sold the estate and received only part of the purchase money, but executed a conveyance to the purchaser, on the back of which was indorsed a receipt for the whole sum, which was signed by them all. This deed, and the other deeds, they retained as a security for the unpaid purchase money with interest, and they entered into a written agreement with the purchaser that the deeds should remain with them as such security, and that he should, if required, execute a proper mortgage; this agreement was signed by the purchaser, and by the trustee in whose custody the deeds were placed. Eight years afterwards the purchaser paid the principal and interest of his debt to this trustee and received from him the deeds, including the conveyance, with the receipt indorsed:—Held, that by such payment the purchaser did not discharge himself of his liability incurred by participation in the breach of trust, and the trustee who received the money having misapplied it and absconded, the purchaser was made to pay it over again. Webb v. Ledsam, 1 Kay & J. 385; 1 Jur., N. S., 775.

6. S. devised all his real and personal estate to G., his heirs, etc., charged with his debts; plaintiffs were bond creditors, and received their interest of G., as executor, regularly for sixteen years, but never asked for the principal, and G. during this interval made several sales of the testator's estate:—Held, that the purchaser shall not be disturbed after a quiet possession of so many years. Elliott v. Merriman, 2 Atk. 41; Barnard. 78.

7. Devise of real estate to trustees, to sell and pay debts and legacies generally; trustees sell and embezzle part of the money; the purchasers not liable to the debts. An estate charged with debts not liable in hands of purchaser, unless debts specified no more than estate devised to be sold. Rogers v. Skillicorne, Ambl. 188.

8. When a trustee has a power of sale over real estate, with power to give receipts, and it is declared that the purchaser shall not be liable for the misapplication of the purchase money, the payment to the authorised agent of the trustee, even though he is tenant for life, is not a breach of trust or invalid. Hope v. Liddell, 21 Beav. 183; 2 Jur., N. S., 105; 25 L. J., Ch., 90.

In 1799 a testator devised an estate in trust for his daughter and her husband successively for life, with remainder to their children, and he gave to the trustee a power of sale. The trustee died in 1806, and the trust descended on his heir A. Immediately afterwards B., acting without authority as trustee, sold the estate to a purchaser with notice, and allowed the purchase money to be received by the daughter's husband. The husband died in 1837, and in a suit instituted by one of the children, his estate was declared liable for the purchase money in his hands. The daughter died in 1845, and in a suit by her representatives, the estate of B. was held liable for the trust money to the extent of the daughter's interest only, and relief was refused to the children, who were the defendants. Between 1826 and 1830 the children had executed deeds reciting the sale, etc. In 1851 some of them instituted a suit to recover the estate itself from the purchaser:—Held, that they were entitled to no relief; and in a cross-suit by the purchaser, the children were decreed to make good his title. Ib.

Where A. (a stranger to the trust), assuming to exercise a trust for sale, conveys the estate to a purchaser, if the Court afterwards compels the purchaser to restore the land to the cestui que trust, the purchaser will be entitled to all the assistance which the Court or the cestui que trust could give him, to recover from the self-constituted trustee the purchase money still in his hands, or for which he might remain liable. Ib.

The case of Hicks v. Sallitt (3 De G. M. & G. 782) distinguished. Ib.

Perpetual injunction granted, under the circumstances, to restrain the remaindermen from proceeding at law to recover the estate. Ib.

1. On a sale by a trustee, he stipulated that his receipt should be deemed an effectual and conclusive discharge, and that the purchaser should not require the concurrence of the heir or cestui que trust. A decree was made for specific performance and reference as to title. The Master found in favour of the trustee; and upon exceptions, the purchaser contended that the rule as to the concurrence of the cestui que trust being one for their protection, it was a breach of trust to stipulate that they should not concur; but the Court held the point concluded by the decree. Wilkinson v. Hartley, 15 Beav. 183.

2. Trustees had a power of sale over a real estate vested in them, and to give good discharges for the purchase money. The tenant for life had a power to appoint new trustees, and thereupon the trust estate was to be conveyed to the old and new trustees. In 1857 A. was appointed a new trustee, but before any conveyance had been made to him, the estate was sold, and conveyed to a purchaser, and the purchase money was paid to the old and new trustees:—Held, that the purchaser had obtained a good discharge for the purchase money. Welstead v. Colvill, 28 Beav. 537.

I. VALIDITY AND EXECUTION.

3. A power of attorney from a creditor resident abroad to sign the bankrupt's certificate, is sufficiently authenticated by the attestation of a notary public, without any affidavit to verify the signature. Exp. Myers, 2 Dea. & Ch. 406.

4. A power of attorney to sign a bankrupt's certificate, executed by a creditor resident abroad, is sufficiently authenticated if attested by the British consul. Exp. Wilkinson, 2 Dea. & Ch. 585; Mont. & Bli. 257.

5. Power of attorney to sue in plaintiff's name need not be stated in bill, but if stated, proof will be directed of it before Master in taking the accounts. Edney v. Jewell, 6 Madd. 165.

6. Where a power of attorney has been executed before a notary public in a British colony, an affidavit verifying the notarial signature is not necessary under 15 & 16 Vict., c. 86, s. 22. Re Goff or Goss, Liddal v. Nicholson, 12 Jur., N. S., 595; 14 L. T., N. S., 727.

7. It is not necessary that the notarial seal or signature mentioned in 15 & 16 Vict., c. 86, s. 22, should be verified, and the section applies to the notarial attestation of a power of attorney to be used in the Court of Chancery. Haywood or Hayward v. Stephens, 36 L. J., Ch., 135; 15 L. T., N. S., 173.

8. In an action brought to recover a piece of land in Lower Canada, the pleadings challenged a strict proof of the title. The land had been devised to Mary, the wife of "James" L. The plaintiff claimed the land under a power of attorney executed by "Alexander" L. and Mary his wife; and on the face of the power of attorney it was stated that this Alexander L. was the same person who in the will was called James, but no other evidence of their identity was produced. To the power of attorney there were two attesting witnesses, one of whom was a notary public of Upper Canada. Neither of these witnesses was produced, but a certificate that the notary public had been duly appointed was put in:—Held, that the plaintiff had failed to make out his title, because the notarial certificate was not sufficient proof of the execution of the power of attorney. Nye v. Macdonald, 3 L. II. GENERAL OPERATION.

2. A legacy of 100*l.* was ordered to be paid to a person having a general power of attorney from the legatee, without any power authorising him to receive this legacy specifically. Carr v. Eastabrook, 2 Cox 390.

3. Where a creditor gave a power of attorney in general terms, but without any express power to consent to a supersedeas, and the signature of the creditor himself to such consent was easily attainable:—Held, that his own signature ought to be procured. Re Sampson, 3 Dea. & Ch. 198.

4. A person acting under a letter of attorney from administrators, may be sued by them in their own right as their bailiff or receiver, and they need not name themselves as administrators. Hudson v. Hudson, 1 Atk. 462.

5. Power of attorney to a creditor to receive a debt not accompanying any assignment of it, nor making part of any security given, but with declarations, that it was to enable the creditor to apply the money to his debt, not an appropriation; and therefore failed by the death of the debtor. Lepard v. Vernon, 2 Ves. & B. 51.

6. A power of attorney to receive rents, accompanied by an agreement that it should be irrevocable until the principal and interest of a loan, and the premiums on a policy of assurance effected to secure it, should be paid off by instalments, as specified in the agreement, is irrevocable, and amounts to an equitable mortgage, and the mortgagee is entitled to priority over a subsequent creditor by judgment, affecting the legal estate in possession by a receiver. Whitworth v. Gaugain (3 Hare 421) approved of. Abbott v. Stratten, 9 Ir. Eq. R. 233; 3 J. & L. 603.

7. Transactions with a foreign prince and his government do not concern the trade of merchandise. Sturt v. Mellish, 2 Atk. 612.

A letter of attorney from one merchant to another to get in the debts will not make the person so deputed a merchant within the exception of 21 Jac. 1, c. 16, s. 3. Ib.

8. A. having joined as a surety for B. in a bond to C. for securing the payment of the interest of a principal sum secured by a mortgage from B. to C., and having also executed a warrant of attorney as a collateral security with the bond, afterwards executed to C. a letter of attorney authorising C. to take possession of a rectory and glebe lands, of which A. was the incumbent, and of certain freehold lands and hereditaments of which he was seised in fee simple, and to hold such possession, and receive and take the tithes, fees, perquisites, emoluments, rents, and profits thereof, until thereby and therewith, or otherwise, he should be paid the interest secured by the bond and warrant of attorney: Held, that the letter of attorney operated not merely as a letter of attorney, but also a charge on the freehold estates, and that C. was entitled to retain possession of the freehold estates until, by means of the rents and profits, all arrears of the interest should be satisfied, notwithstanding the death of A., and the revocation by that event of the power of attorney. Spooner v. Sandilands, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 390.

9. P. being seised under a lease of lives renewable for ever of premises in Dublin, and being indebted to F. in 448*l.*, in order to secure the repayment executed a power of attorney, whereby he authorised F. to mortgage the premises, and which power of attorney he declared to be irrevocable until F. should have received the whole of his account against P., or payment of any bill, promissory notes, or bills of exchange for which P. is or shall become liable to or on behalf of F.:—Held, that the power of attorney constituted an equitable mortgage of the premises. Re Parkinson, 13 L. T., N. S., 26.

10. Where there is a power of attorney to do a particular act, followed by general words, the general words are not to be extended beyond what is necessary for doing the particular act. Perry v. Holl, 6 Jur., N. S., 661; 29 L. J., Ch., 677; 8 W. R. 570; 2 De G. F. & J. 38.

III. EXTENT OF AUTHORITY.

11. Semble, that a power of attorney to transact any business in the courts of law authorises the attorney to apply for a supersedeas. Exp. Crowther, 4 Dea. & Ch. 31.

12. Where all creditors consent to supersedeas except A., who is abroad, and B. holds power of attorney from A., authorising him to consent:—Held, B. was entitled to consent, and an attested copy of power ordered to be filed with the proceedings. Exp. Hamilton, 2 Dea. & Ch. 139.

13. Where the plaintiff, resident abroad, and appointed special administrator in a foreign court of the goods of a deceased native subject, appointed the defendant in this country his attorney, to receive moneys due here to the deceased, and he obtained administration in the Prerogative Court limited to receive the fund, and "until the plaintiff should obtain administration to the deceased":—Held, that he might pay over the money received to the plaintiff, although he had not obtained such administration. De la Viesca v. Lubbock, 10 Sim. 629.

14. Under a general power to sell, assign, and transfer, an agent cannot pledge for his own debt. De Bouchout v. Goldsmid, 5 Ves. 211.

15. An agreement for a lease made with an agent who acts under a power of attorney, and a lease executed by such agent in pursuance of the agreement, shall effectually bind the principal. Hamilton v. Clanricarde (Earl), 1 Bro. P. C. 341.

1. A partnership, consisting of A. and B., was in insolvent circumstances, the separate estates of the partners being also insolvent. On the 14th September B. executed a power of attorney to C., authorising him in general terms to deal with his property. The power contained no reference to the partnership. It contained express powers as to a ship which was in reality partnership property; though the fact did not appear in the power. On the same day B. left England, under circumstances which constituted his departure an act of bankruptcy. In November A. and C. (as B.'s attorney) executed a mortgage of all the partnership property to S., a creditor of the partnership, and also a separate creditor of both parties, to secure all the past debts and such future advances as might be made. At the same time a bill of sale of the ship was executed by A. and C. (as attorney), in consideration of a sum of money paid by S. on account of the partnership. In April A. and B. were both adjudicated bankrupts. S., at the date of the deeds, knew the circumstances under which B. had left England, but he declared in his evidence that he did not infer that B. had any intent to delay or defeat his creditors, and therefore did not know that he had committed an act of bankruptcy:—Held, that the execution of the mortgage by C. as B.'s attorney, was void, as not being within the scope of the power of attorney. Exp. Snowball, Re Douglas, 41 L. J., Bky., 49; 7 L. R., Ch., 534; 26 L. T., N. S., 894; 20 W. R. 786.

2. Where a person on leaving this country has authorised another, either in writing or verbally, to act for him generally in his absence, the latter has authority to instruct a solicitor to appear on behalf of the former to show cause against an adjudication of bankruptcy against him. Exp. & Re Frampton, 1 De G. F. & G. 263.

3. The plaintiff executed a general power of attorney, authorising P. to act in and manage his affairs during his absence from England, to receive his rents and official salary, to repair his property, and to sell or exchange his real estates, and, for all or any of the purposes aforesaid, to do all acts as amply and effectually as the plaintiff himself could have done, the plaintiff thereby ratifying and confirming, and promising at all times to ratify and confirm, all and whatsoever P. should lawfully do or cause to be done. P. had in his possession a policy of insurance belonging to the plaintiff, and assigned it by way of mortgage to H., the greater portion of the consideration being moneys belonging to H., which had come to the possession of P. in his professional capacity. P. became insolvent. The subsequent correspondence between the plaintiff and P., in which he requested the latter to raise a sum of money upon the policy, showed that he always believed that he had authorised the raising of money upon the policy. In one of the letters he refers to the power in these terms—"When you get the money, which I trust you will be able to do on the power of attorney you have of mine." On a bill filed by the plaintiff claiming to have the mortgage set aside:—Held (affirming 6 Jur., N. S., 491; 29 L. J., Ch., 677; 8 W. R. 291; 2 Giff. 138), upon the correspondence, in connection with the power of attorney, that the plaintiff was precluded from saying that what had been done was without his authority. Perry v. Holl, 6 Jur., N. S., 661; 29 L. J., Ch., 677; 8 W. R. 578; 2 De G. F. & J. 38.

The transactions between P. and H. amounted to a bonâ fide payment of the consideration for the mortgage. Ib.

The doctrine approved, that where there is a power of attorney to do a particular act, followed by general words, those general words are not to be extended beyond what is necessary for doing the particular act. Ib.

Actual payment of money to an attorney under a power is not requisite to enable him to give a discharge. Ib.

4. A. gave a power of attorney to P., authorising him to manage his affairs whilst he was residing abroad. P. kept an account at a bank in A.'s name, and, being agent for the estate of M., obtained 1,500*l.* from it, and paid it into A.'s account at the bank. A., whilst abroad, was induced by P. to execute an assignment to him of a policy of insurance as a security for an alleged debt of 1,500*l.* due from A. to P., but this allegation was subsequently by A. discovered to be untrue. M. appointed P. and B. his executors, and P., having become insolvent, deposited the policy of insurance and the assignment with B. to secure 1,500*l.*, and B. claimed to hold the documents against A. as a security for that sum:—Held, that they must stand as a security in B.'s hands for only what, if anything, might be found due from A. to P., there being nothing to show that any payment had been made to A., he being ignorant of the circumstances, and P. having had full control over the banking account in A.'s name. Perry v. Parkinson, 6 Jur., N. S., 493.

5. A joint power of attorney from husband and wife, to receive and to sue for moneys belonging to them or either of them, is not sufficient authority to justify the attorney in maintaining an administration suit in respect of a legacy given to the wife for her separate use. Kenrick v. Wood, 39 L. J., Ch., 92; 9 L. R., Eq., 383; 19 W. R. 57.

6. A. executed a voluntary settlement in favour of his wife and children, with a power of sale; and afterwards executed a power of attorney authorising B. to sell any of his lands, and then went abroad. B., as A.'s attorney, agreed to sell part of the settled property to C., who next day contracted to sell it to D. D. objected to the title on the ground that the sale was unauthorised by the power of attorney, and sued C. for the deposit and for damages, C. making a counter-claim for specific performance. In another action to administer the trusts of the settlement, an order was made confirming the sale to C., and for a conveyance by another person for A.:—Held, that the power of attorney did not authorise the sale of any of the settled land; that the 27 Eliz., c. 4, did not apply; and that D. was not affected by the order in the other action, but could recover the deposit, with damages limited to the conveyancing cost. General Meat Supply Association v. Bouffler, 40 L. T. 126. Affirmed 41 L. T., N. S., 719.

7. A power of attorney giving the agent full powers as to the management of certain specified real property, with general words extending those powers to all the property of the principal of every description, and, in conclusion, authorising the agent to do all lawful acts concerning all the principal's business and affairs of what nature or kind soever, does not authorise the agent to indorse bills of exchange in the name of his principal. Esdaile v. La Nauze, 1 Y. & Coll. 394. S. C. nom. Esdaile v. Lanoge, 4 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 46.

1. The payee of promissory notes of the East India Company, by a power of attorney authorised his agents at Calcutta to "sell, endorse, and assign" the notes. These notes were transferable by endorsement, payable to bearer. The agents, in their character of private bankers, borrowed money of the Bank of Bengal, offering as security these promissory notes. The bank made the advance, and the agents endorsed the notes, such endorsement purporting to be as attorney for their principal, and deposited them with the bank, by way of a collateral security for their personal liability, at the same time authorising the bank, in default of payment, to sell the notes in reimbursement of the advances. The agents afterwards became insolvent, and default having been made in payment, the bank sold the notes, and realised the amount of their loan:—Held, that the endorsement of the notes by the agents of the payee to the bank was within the scope of the authority given to them by the power of attorney, and that the payee could not recover in detinue against the bank. Bengal (Bank) v. Macleod, 7 Moo. P. C. 35; 13 Jur. 945.

2. An authority to borrow money on mortgage, though deficient in the formalities necessary for creating a valid mortgage on land, may be effectual to bind the giver of the authority as to the money advanced. Denyssen v. Botha, 8 W. R. 710.

3. The chairman of a company borrowed of the company a sum of money in January 1872. Soon afterwards he gave the secretary of the company a general power of attorney to execute for him all deeds that might be necessary, and in August left the country and never returned. On the 1st November 1872 the secretary, purporting to act under the power, executed a mortgage to the company to secure the sum borrowed by the chairman. In the following month the chairman was adjudicated a bankrupt:—Held, that the mortgage was invalid, as not being authorised by the power of attorney, and that it was not necessary to decide whether it was void as a fraudulent preference. Re Bowles, 31 L. T., N. S., 365. Affirming on different grounds 22 W. R. 817.

4. A., B., and C., as the only next of kin with D., the administrator of their intestate father, signed a memorandum in 1872, authorising D. to borrow, upon mortgage or otherwise, as he might deem best, upon the security of certain house property, held by the intestate under an agreement for a lease to be granted on completion of repairs, such money as D. required for carrying out these matters, and to charge their respective shares with the interest. A lease of the houses was soon afterwards granted to D. as the sole legal personal representative of the intestate, which, with the memorandum, was shortly afterwards deposited by D. as a security for his own debt with E. In 1875 the administration accounts, showing a balance due to D., were settled between A., B., C., and D., and D. then told A., B., and C. that he had not borrowed any money upon the security of their shares under the memorandum of 1872. In 1877, D., who had previously mortgaged his share of the house property to E., executed a further mortgage to him of the entirety, reciting the authority of 1872. No notice was given by E. to A., B., and C., that he held any charge upon their shares under the memorandum:—Held, that in the absence of any notice by E. to A., B., and C. of a charge to him of their shares by D. under the authority of 1872, the mortgage of 1877, after that authority had been withdrawn by the settlement of accounts, did not affect their shares, and that they were entitled to an assignment from E. of their shares of the property comprised in the lease, which had been mortgaged by D. Jones v. Stöhwasser, 16 L. R., Ch. D., 577; 50 L. J., Ch., 625; 44 L. T. 333; 29 W. R. 497.

5. A power of attorney authorised the holder "from time to time to negotiate, make sale, dispose of, assign, and transfer" a promissory note:—Held, that the holder had no authority to pledge the note. Jonmenjoy Coondoo v. Watson, 9 L. R., App. Cas., 561; 53 L. J., P. C., 80; 50 L. T. 411.

IV. REVOCATION.

6. A power of attorney is revocable. Bromley v. Holland, 7 Ves. 28.

7. A power of attorney to a creditor to receive a debt, not accompanying any assignment of it, nor making part of any security given, but with declarations that it was to enable the creditor to apply the money to his debt, is not an appropriation, and therefore fails by the death of the debtor. Lepard v. Vernon, 2 Ves. & B. 51.

8. A., having an interest in a fund, executes to the trustee of the fund a power of attorney to sue in respect of it, and afterwards takes the benefit of the Insolvent Act; his interest in the fund is thereby devested out of him, and the power of attorney is recalled. Dawson v. Sexton, 1 L. J., Ch., 185.

9. The bill of sale passes the absolute property in a ship at sea, subject only to be devested in case of the endorsement on the certificate of registry not being made within ten days after the return of the ship to port. Power of attorney to sign an endorsement on the certificate, not revoked by bankruptcy of the vendor subsequent to the execution of the power, but previous to the endorsement, being a power only to do a mere formal act, which the bankrupt himself might have been compelled to execute, notwithstanding his bankruptcy, and for a valuable consideration. Therefore, in this case, the endorsement on the certificate being made within the ten days, under a power of attorney, the grantor of which had since become bankrupt:—Held, a sufficient compliance with the terms of the Registry Act. Dixon v. Ewart, 3 Meriv. 322; Buck 94.

10. A creditor, at the solicitation of a certificated bankrupt, executes a power of attorney to A. B. to receive the dividends on his debt for the bankrupt's use, the bankrupt undertaking to pay the debt in full, and for that purpose giving the creditor a bill of exchange, which is, however, never paid. A second commission issues against the bankrupt, under which the assignees claim to be entitled to the dividends under the first commission, by virtue of the power of attorney:—Held, that the power of attorney was revocable by the creditor, the consideration failing for which it was given; and the creditor, and not the assignees under the second commission, was entitled to the dividends. Exp. Smithers, 1 Dea. 413.

1. Where A., acting under a power of attorney of creditor, assented to an arrangement by which the joint liability of two debtors of his principal was transferred to one, who afterwards became bankrupt, and the principal was afterwards found, under a commission, to have been a lunatic previous to the date of his power, and A. was appointed his committee, and proved as such under the above arrangement against the separate estate, the Court upheld the proof against the petition of other creditors, lunacy not being per se a revocation of a power. Exp. Bradbury, Re Walden, Mont. & Ch. 625; 4 Dea. 202; 9 L. J., N. S., Bky., 7; 3 Jur. 1108.

2. As to the necessity of showing that a party who has given a power of attorney is alive at the time it is acted on. Bailey v. Collet, 18 Beav. 179; 23 L. J., Ch., 230.

3. An Indian power of attorney to receive funds in a suit, is valid, if the party executing it be proved to be living at the date of the decree. Goodson v. Alexander, 1 Jur. 39.

4. A power of attorney to receive rents, accompanied by an agreement that it should be irrevocable until the principal and interest of a loan, and the premiums on a policy of assurance effected to secure it, should be paid off by instalments, as specified in the agreement, is irrevocable, and amounts to an equitable mortgage, and the mortgagee is entitled to priority over a subsequent creditor by judgment, affecting the legal estate in possession by a receiver. Whitworth v. Gaugain (3 Hare 421) approved of. Abbott v. Stratten, 9 Ir. Eq. R. 233; 3 J. & L. 603.

5. A demurrer will not lie to a bill for specific performance of an agreement to buy land on the ground that the present mental incapacity of a necessary party to the conveyance, to join therein or to concur in a parol variation of the original written contract, appears on the face of the bill. Whether an attorney can act under a power of attorney during the mental incapacity of the principal —quære. Beaufort (Duke) v. Glynn, 3 W. R. 463; 1 Jur., N. S., 888. S. C. on appeal 3 W. R. 502.

6. A., being entitled to a life estate in lands, with remainder to his wife B. for life, and C. being entitled to an annuity, and D. having a judgment against A. and a policy of assurance, A., B., C., and D., in consideration of 350*l.* advanced to A., conveyed to E. the lands, annuity, and policy of assurance, subject to redemption; and it was provided, that A. should become tenant to E. of these lands, at a yearly rent, in case of nonpayment of the interest and premiums on the policy; and A., B., and C. appointed F. irrevocably their attorney, to receive the rents of the mortgaged premises and the annuity, for the purpose of paying (after receiver's fees and outgoings) the interest and premiums of the policy; and for the purpose, out of the annuity, of investing a sum to form a fund for payment of the principal, and of paying the balance of the annuity to C., and of the rents to A.; and the sums secured by the judgment and policy of assurance, when they should be paid, after deducting the 350*l.* and interest, were to be applied by E. to pay D. any demand due to her by A., and the balance to A.; and it was provided, that F. should not act as receiver until the interest or premium on the policy should be in arrear. F. entered into receipt of the rents (as he alleged, under a subsequent power of attorney from A.) and of the annuity, no portion of which he invested to form the fund for payment of the annuity, and applied the rents for the purposes of A., and in payment of the interest of a mortgage due to himself, F., by the directions of A.; and the annuity in payment of the interest on the 350*l.*, with the consent of C., who had, before such consent, taken the benefit of the Insolvent Act:—Held, that A. could not revoke the power of attorney in the mortgage deed. M'Dowell v. Reede, 14 Ir. Ch. R. 190.

7. As a general rule, a power of attorney must be treated as revoked by an act of bankruptcy committed by the giver of it as against the trustee under his subsequent bankruptcy. Exp. Snowball, Re Douglas, 20 W. R. 786; 26 L. T., N. S., 894; 7 L. R., Ch., 534; 41 L. J., Bky., 749.

But if, after the act of bankruptcy, but before an adjudication, property of the bankrupt is conveyed under the power to a bonâ fide purchaser without notice of the act of bankruptcy, he may hold the property as against the trustee. Ib.

full powers as to the management of certain specified real property, with general words extending those powers to all the property of the principal of every description, and, in conclusion, authorising the agent to do all lawful acts concerning all the principal's business and affairs of what nature or kind soever, does not authorise the agent to indorse bills of exchange in the name of his principal. Esdaile v. La Nauze, 1 Y. & Coll. 394. S. C. nom. Esdaile v. Lanoge, 4 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 46.

1. The payee of promissory notes of the East India Company, by a power of attorney authorised his agents at Calcutta to "sell, endorse, and assign" the notes. These notes were transferable by endorsement, payable to bearer. The agents, in their character of private bankers, borrowed money of the Bank of Bengal, offering as security these promissory notes. The bank made the advance, and the agents endorsed the notes, such endorsement purporting to be as attorney for their principal, and deposited them with the bank, by way of a collateral security for their personal liability, at the same time authorising the bank, in default of payment, to sell the notes in reimbursement of the advances. The agents afterwards became insolvent, and default having been made in payment, the bank sold the notes, and realised the amount of their loan:—Held, that the endorsement of the notes by the agents of the payee to the bank was within the scope of the authority given to them by the power of attorney, and that the payee could not recover in detinue against the bank. Bengal (Bank) v. Macleod, 7 Moo. P. C. 35; 13 Jur. 945.

2. An authority to borrow money on mortgage, though deficient in the formalities necessary for creating a valid mortgage on land, may be effectual to bind the giver of the authority as to the money advanced. Denyssen v. Botha, 8 W. R. 710.

3. The chairman of a company borrowed of the company a sum of money in January 1872. Soon afterwards he gave the secretary of the company a general power of attorney to execute for him all deeds that might be necessary, and in August left the country and never returned. On the 1st November 1872 the secretary, purporting to act under the power, executed a mortgage to the company to secure the sum borrowed by the chairman. In the following month the chairman was adjudicated a bankrupt:—Held, that the mortgage was invalid, as not being authorised by the power of attorney, and that it was not necessary to decide whether it was void as a fraudulent preference. Re Bowles, 31 L. T., N. S., 365. Affirming on different grounds 22 W. R. 817.

4. A., B., and C., as the only next of kin with D., the administrator of their intestate father, signed a memorandum in 1872, authorising D. to borrow, upon mortgage or otherwise, as he might deem best, upon the security of certain house property, held by the intestate under an agreement for a lease to be granted on completion of repairs, such money as D. required for carrying out these matters, and to charge their respective shares with the interest. A lease of the houses was soon afterwards granted to D. as the sole legal personal representative of the intestate, which, with the memorandum, was shortly afterwards deposited by D. as a security for his own debt with E. In 1875 the administration accounts, showing a balance due to D., were settled between A., B., C., and D., and D. then told A., B., and C. that he had not borrowed any money upon the security of their shares under the memorandum of 1872. In 1877, D., who had previously mortgaged his share of the house property to E., executed a further mortgage to him of the entirety, reciting the authority of 1872. No notice was given by E. to A., B., and C., that he held any charge upon their shares under the memorandum:—Held, that in the absence of any notice by E. to A., B., and C. of a charge to him of their shares by D. under the authority of 1872, the mortgage of 1877, after that authority had been withdrawn by the settlement of accounts, did not affect their shares, and that they were entitled to an assignment from E. of their shares of the property comprised in the lease, which had been mortgaged by D. Jones v. Stöhwasser, 16 L. R., Ch. D., 577; 50 L. J., Ch., 625; 44 L. T. 333; 29 W. R. 497.

5. A power of attorney authorised the holder "from time to time to negotiate, make sale, dispose of, assign, and transfer" a promissory note:—Held, that the holder had no authority to pledge the note. Jonmenjoy Coondoo v. Watson, 9 L. R., App. Cas., 561; 53 L. J., P. C., 80; 50 L. T. 411.

IV. REVOCATION.

6. A power of attorney is revocable. Bromley v. Holland, 7 Ves. 28.

7. A power of attorney to a creditor to receive a debt, not accompanying any assignment of it, nor making part of any security given, but with declarations that it was to enable the creditor to apply the money to his debt, is not an appropriation, and therefore fails by the death of the debtor. Lepard v. Vernon, 2 Ves. & B. 51.

8. A., having an interest in a fund, executes to the trustee of the fund a power of attorney to sue in respect of it, and afterwards takes the benefit of the Insolvent Act; his interest in the fund is thereby devested out of him, and the power of attorney is recalled. Dawson v. Sexton, 1 L. J., Ch., 185.

9. The bill of sale passes the absolute property in a ship at sea, subject only to be devested in case of the endorsement on the certificate of registry not being made within ten days after the return of the ship to port. Power of attorney to sign an endorsement on the certificate, not revoked by bankruptcy of the vendor subsequent to the execution of the power, but previous to the endorsement, being a power only to do a mere formal act, which the bankrupt himself might have been compelled to execute, notwithstanding his bankruptcy, and for a valuable consideration. Therefore, in this case, the endorsement on the certificate being made within the ten days, under a power of attorney, the grantor of which had since become bankrupt:—Held, a sufficient compliance with the terms of the Registry Act. Dixon v. Ewart, 3 Meriv. 322; Buck 94.

10. A creditor, at the solicitation of a

certificated bankrupt, executes a power of attorney to A. B. to receive the dividends on his debt for the bankrupt's use, the bankrupt undertaking to pay the debt in full, and for that purpose giving the creditor a bill of exchange, which is, however, never paid. A second commission issues against the bankrupt, under which the assignees claim to be entitled to the dividends under the first commission, by virtue of the power of attorney:—Held, that the power of attorney was revocable by the creditor, the consideration failing for which it was given; and the creditor, and not the assignees under the second commission, was entitled to the dividends. Exp. Smithers, 1 Dea. 413.

1. Where A., acting under a power of attorney of creditor, assented to an arrangement by which the joint liability of two debtors of his principal was transferred to one, who afterwards became bankrupt, and the principal was afterwards found, under a commission, to have been a lunatic previous to the date of his power, and A. was appointed his committee, and proved as such under the above arrangement against the separate estate, the Court upheld the proof against the petition of other creditors, lunacy not being per se a revocation of a power. Exp. Bradbury, Re Walden, Mont. & Ch. 625; 4 Dea. 202; 9 L. J., N. S., Bky., 7; 3 Jur. 1108.

2. As to the necessity of showing that a party who has given a power of attorney is alive at the time it is acted on. Bailey v. Collet, 18 Beav. 179; 23 L. J., Ch., 230.

3. An Indian power of attorney to receive funds in a suit, is valid, if the party executing it be proved to be living at the date of the decree. Goodson v. Alexander, 1 Jur. 39.

4. A power of attorney to receive rents, accompanied by an agreement that it should be irrevocable until the principal and interest of a loan, and the premiums on a policy of assurance effected to secure it, should be paid off by instalments, as specified in the agreement, is irrevocable, and amounts to an equitable mortgage, and the mortgagee is entitled to priority over a subsequent creditor by judgment, affecting the legal estate in possession by a receiver. Whitworth v. Gaugain (3 Hare 421) approved of. Abbott v. Stratten, 9 Ir. Eq. R. 233; 3 J. & L. 603.

5. A demurrer will not lie to a bill for specific performance of an agreement to buy land on the ground that the present mental incapacity of a necessary party to the conveyance, to join therein or to concur in a parol variation of the original written contract, appears on the face of the bill. Whether an attorney can act under a power of attorney during the mental incapacity of the principal —quære. Beaufort (Duke) v. Glynn, 3 W. R. 463; 1 Jur., N. S., 888. S. C. on appeal 3 W. R. 502.

6. A., being entitled to a life estate in lands, with remainder to his wife B. for life, and C. being entitled to an annuity, and D. having a judgment against A. and a policy of assurance, A., B., C., and D., in consideration of 350*l.* advanced to A., conveyed to E. the lands, annuity, and policy of assurance, subject to redemption; and it was provided, that A. should become tenant to E. of these lands, at a yearly rent, in case of nonpayment of the interest and premiums on the policy; and A., B., and C. appointed F. irrevocably their attorney, to receive the rents of the mortgaged premises and the annuity, for the purpose of paying (after receiver's fees and outgoings) the interest and premiums of the policy; and for the purpose, out of the annuity, of investing a sum to form a fund for payment of the principal, and of paying the balance of the annuity to C., and of the rents to A.; and the sums secured by the judgment and policy of assurance, when they should be paid, after deducting the 350*l.* and interest, were to be applied by E. to pay D. any demand due to her by A., and the balance to A.; and it was provided, that F. should not act as receiver until the interest or premium on the policy should be in arrear. F. entered into receipt of the rents (as he alleged, under a subsequent power of attorney from A.) and of the annuity, no portion of which he invested to form the fund for payment of the annuity, and applied the rents for the purposes of A., and in payment of the interest of a mortgage due to himself, F., by the directions of A.; and the annuity in payment of the interest on the 350*l.*, with the consent of C., who had, before such consent, taken the benefit of the Insolvent Act:—Held, that A. could not revoke the power of attorney in the mortgage deed. M'Dowell v. Reede, 14 Ir. Ch. R. 190.

7. As a general rule, a power of attorney must be treated as revoked by an act of bankruptcy committed by the giver of it as against the trustee under his subsequent bankruptcy. Exp. Snowball, Re Douglas, 20 W. R. 786; 26 L. T., N. S., 894; 7 L. R., Ch., 534; 41 L. J., Bky., 749.

But if, after the act of bankruptcy, but before an adjudication, property of the bankrupt is conveyed under the power to a bonâ fide purchaser without notice of the act of bankruptcy, he may hold the property as against the trustee. Ib.

I. GENERAL PRINCIPLES.

1. Amongst the most important duties of an agent are those which require him to give to his principal the free and unbiassed use of his own discretion and judgment, to keep and render just and true accounts, and to keep the property of his principal unmixed with his own or the property of others. Clarke v. Tipping, 9 Beav. 284.

2. The Court deals severely with any irregularities on the part of an agent, and requires him to act strictly in all matters relating to such agency, for the benefit of his principal. Gray v. Haig, Haig v. Gray, 20 Beav. 219.

It is imperative upon an agent to preserve correct accounts of all his dealings and transactions; and the loss, and, still more, the destruction of such evidence by the agent, falls most heavily upon himself. Ib.

If an agent, by his own conduct, makes it impossible to ascertain the amount of profit realised, he will be disallowed the commission, which, otherwise and according to the contract, he would be entitled to claim. Ib.

3. An agent is bound to act in the best manner he can for his principal, and in matters which are left to an agent's discretion he can only act for the benefit of his principal. Pariente v. Lubbock, 20 Beav. 588; 8 De G. M. & G. 5.

A foreign merchant directed his correspondent in England to treat any consignment as his son's (who was in England and superintended the sales and purchases), and to acknowledge him owner of the money, so that he might dispose thereof as if it was his own money. By the direction of the son, moneys in the hands of the correspondent, belonging to the father, were applied by him in paying a private debt of the son to the correspondent:—Held, that the transaction was valid. Ib.

4. Where a contract has been entered into by one man as agent for another, the person on whose behalf it has been made cannot take the benefit of it without bearing its burthens. Bristowe v. Whitmore, 4 L. T., N. S., 622.

5. The possession of an agent is the possession of the principal; and the principal may acquire a possessory title to real estate by receiving the rents for twenty years through an agent, although that agent is the person really entitled to the estate. Williams v. Pott, 12 L. R., Eq., 149; 40 L. J., Ch., 775.

A person claiming, without any real title, to be entitled to land is a person wrongfully claiming within the meaning of 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 9; and that section applies, although the claim may be put forward under a mistake, and without any improper intention to deprive others of their property. Ib.

6. The powers of an agent are limited by the limitation of the powers of the principal. Montreal Assurance Co. v. M'Gillivray, 8 W. R. 165; 13 Moo. P. C. 87.

Contracts which would not be binding on a principal, as ultra vires, do not become binding by means of their having been entered into through the medium of an agent. Ib.

7. An insurance company entered into an agreement with a party that he should act as their agent for five years at a salary of 500*l.* a year, and also a commission of 10 per cent. per annum on the net profits of each year to be made from the business. Less than two years after the agreement was entered into the company resolved to wind up voluntarily:—Held, that he was not entitled to any damages by reason of the company having put it out of their power to make any profits. Re English and Scottish Marine Assurance Co., Maclure's claim, 18 W. R. 1122; 39 L. J., Ch., 685.

II. AGENCY—HOW CONSTITUTED.

8. A mortgagor, tenant for life, and a mortgagee having a charge on his interest, and also on the reversion, join in the appointment of receiver, who was to apply the rents partly in payment of other charges as well as those of the mortgagee, but chiefly in payment of the interest on his incumbrance; mortgagee dies, and then mortgagor:—Held, that receipt by executrix of the mortgagee of some payments from the receiver, after the death of the mortgagor, did not of itself constitute the receiver her agent, so as to make her responsible for his defaults, but that it was ground for inquiry, whether she had in fact adopted him as her agent. Jones v. Smith, 1 Hare 43; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 83; 6 Jur. 8. Affirmed 1 Ph. 245; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 381; 7 Jur. 431.

1. A person appointed agent to pay the head-rent on the part of lessee for lives, with covenant for perpetual renewal, is the agent of the lessee, so that a demand and notice upon him will be binding upon the lessee, although he reside abroad, and be admittedly ignorant of the facts. Butler v. Portarlington (Earl), 1 Dr. & War. 20; 1 Con. & L. 1; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 1.

The presumption is, that the tenant is acquainted with the title under which he claims, and the circumstances connected with it; and this holds until the contrary is proved. Ib.

2. Payment by an under-tenant C. to A. the head landlord, with the assent of B. the intermediate landlord, of the head-rent reserved by the lease from A. to B., does not of itself make C. such an agent to B. as to induce the Court to decree a reversionary lease of the premises obtained by C. from A. a trust for B. Maunsell v. O'Brien, 1 Jones 176.

3. Held, that, in a sale under a decree, the solicitor of the plaintiffs, having the management of the sale, is to be considered, as between the vendors and the purchaser, to be the agent of all the parties to the suit. Dalby v. Pullen, 1 Russ. & M. 296; 8 L. J., Ch., 74.

4. Authority of agent may be by parol, though the agreement must be by writing. Mortlock v. Buller, 10 Ves. 311. And see Coles v. Trecothick, 9 Ves. 234; 1 Smith 233.

5. A purchaser alleged, by his answer to a suit for specific performance, that he acted as a puffer in bidding for one lot, and also as a puffer in bidding for another lot, which was knocked down to him, and that he therefore purchased the lot, and signed the agreement for the purchase, as the agent of the vendor; but the statement in his depositions of the circumstances attending the signature was somewhat different from that in his answer, and he had signed an order on his attorney for payment of the deposit money:—Held, that there was not sufficient evidence of agency, and the defendant was held to have purchased on his own account. The Court cannot speculate on the damages which a jury might have given for the breach of an agreement, nor on the damage caused to property by failure of a sale: therefore the specific performance of an agreement for the sale of hereditaments, where the consideration money is 50*l.*, is not too small a matter for the jurisdiction of the Court. The exercise of the jurisdiction is discretionary in the Court; but the discretion is not arbitrary, but must be exercised according to the circumstances of the case. Bennett v. Smith, 16 Jur. 421.

6. Where the mortgagor is himself a solicitor and prepares the mortgage-deed, the mortgagee employing no other solicitor, the mortgagor must be considered to be the agent or solicitor of the mortgagee in the transaction, although the mortgagor acting as such solicitor is not paid by the mortgagee, for the nature of the transaction is, that all expenses are borne by the mortgagor. Hewitt v. Loosemore, 9 Hare 449; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 69; 15 Jur. 1097.

It does not necessarily follow in such a case, because the mortgagor is the solicitor of the mortgagee, that therefore the mortgagee has constructive notice of facts connected with the title which are known to the mortgagor. Ib.

7. No one can become the agent of another except by the will of the principal, manifested in writing, or orally, or by his being placed in a situation in which, according to the ordinary usages of mankind, he would be understood to represent and act for the principal. Pole v. Leask, 9 Jur., N. S., 829; 8 L. T., N. S., 645; 33 L. J., Ch., 155.

Where one has so acted as from his conduct to lead another to believe that he has appointed some one to act as his agent, and knows that that other person is about to act on that behalf, then, unless he interposes, he would, in general, be estopped from disputing the agency, though, in fact, no agency existed. Ib.

The burthen of proof is on the person dealing with any one as an agent, through whom he seeks to charge another as principal. He must show that the agency did exist, and that the agent had the authority he assumed to exercise, or otherwise that the principal is estopped from disputing it. Ib.

If a merchant constitutes any one his general agent for buying and selling in the market, either through a particular broker or otherwise, then, until revoked, the agency will continue, and the principal will be bound by his acts; and the fact that such general agency once existed would be admissible as primâ facie evidence of its continuance, and the burthen would be thrown on the principal to show that it had been determined; but unless the agency was a general continuing agency to endure until revoked, the fact that there had been separate agency in any number of previous cases would afford no evidence of agency in any subsequent transaction, however closely it may resemble all which may have gone before. Ib.

8. R., after some negotiations, contracted with the assignees of Messrs. E. for the purchase of certain claims of the bankrupts against the estate of G. F. B. He represented that he acted on behalf of himself and M., who was clearly cognizant of the negotiations and contract. Several documents passed between the parties, and finally a draft of a deed was prepared, which recited that the contract was a joint purchase by R. and M. This was submitted to M., who approved of it; and at that time he was willing to adopt the contract, but subsequently, upon an alteration of circumstances, M. objected to the contract, and refused to join in the purchase:—Held, that there was no evidence that M. had entered into any agreement, or that R. acted as his agent; and that the recital of an agreement in a document intended to be executed, would not bind a party who had done nothing to recognise it, though at one time it was apparent that he was willing to execute it, and the bill was dismissed against M. with costs; but as R. admitted the plaintiff's case, a decree was made against him, without costs. Foligno v. Martin, 22 L. J., Ch., 502.

1. Answer of defendant read against co-defendant, whose agent he was, to prove the execution of an agreement by the agent, but not to prove his authority. Fagan v. Howard, Wall. Lyn. 33.

2. When a person has goods consigned to him to sell, and he is bound, if he sells, to pay a fixed price to his employer at a fixed time after sale, he may sell to his customers at any price and upon any credit he pleases; though he may be called an agent, yet the legal relation of principal and agent does not exist between him and his employer; on the contrary, the relation between him and his employer is that of purchaser and vendor, and a separate relation of vendor and purchaser exists between him and the persons to whom he sells, and the moneys which come to his hands by means of the sales which he effects are his own moneys, and are not impressed with any trust for his employer. Exp. White, Re Nevill, 19 W. R. 488.; 40 L. J., Bky., 73; 24 L. T., N. S., 45; 6 L. R., Ch., 397.

3. The relation of principal and agent requires the consensus of both parties. There must be an express or implied assent to, or a subsequent ratification of, that relation. Markwick v. Hardingham, 15 L. R., Ch. D., 349; 43 L. T. 647; 29 W. R. 361.

III. AUTHORITY OF AGENT.

1. Scope of, 5925.
2. Delegation, 5929.
3. Ratification, 5930.
4. Personal Liability of Agent, 5930.
5. Wrong Doers, 5931.
6. Disputing Title of Principal, 5931.
7. Revocation, 5932.

1. Scope of.

4. Agents permitted under circumstances to sign petition, principals being in the country. Re Boldero, 1 Rose 231.

5. The agent employed by a miner in the management of his mines, and in his communications with the commissioners for setting out the metes and bounds, and fixing the rents and duties in respect thereof, is not therefore the agent of the miner for the purpose of making a contract with the commissioners not within the powers which had been conferred upon them in that character. Att.-Gen. v. Jackson, 5 Hare 365.

6. Where a party, dealing with others through an agent, intrusts the agent with a written consent on his part to do a particular act, and privately instructs him not to give the consent except upon certain conditions not specified in it, and the agent gives the consent unconditionally, the principal cannot, subsequently, undo the effect of the consent so given on the ground that the agent exceeded his authority; and it is the same if the principal signed the consent at the suggestion of his agent, without examining its contents, and supposing that the conditions were virtually, if not actually, comprehended within it. Neeld v. Beaufort (Duke), 5 Jur. 1123. Affirmed sub nom. Beaufort (Duke) v. Neeld, 12 Cl. & F. 248; 9 Jur. 813.

7. Where the Irish agent of an English banking house received payments in Irish currency, and upon the footing of Irish interest, on account of a debt which, upon the construction of the contract, was decided to be payable in English currency:—Held, that the right of the banking house to receive payment in such currency was not prejudiced by the conduct of their agents. Noel v. Rochfort, 10 Bli. N. S. 483; 4 Cl. & F. 158.

8. Where a creditor addresses a written request to assignees, in general terms, to pay the dividends made on the bankrupt's estate to A. B., the assignees are justified in paying subsequent dividends to A. B. until they have notice from the creditor that he has revoked A. B.'s authority. Exp. Bright, 2 Dea. & Ch. 8.

9. An objection to title on purchase having been waived, an offer of compensation made by a clerk of the vendor's solicitor, without express authority, is of no effect. Burnell v. Brown, 1 Jac. & Walk. 168.

10. The question as to the authority of an agent to sign, denied by the answer and by his deposition, stating his declaration to the contrary at the time of execution, is to be determined by an issue; the evidence of a witness, impeaching the instrument he has attested, as a witness to a will denying the sanity of the devisor, etc., being admissible, but to be received with the most anxious jealousy. Howard v. Braithwaite, 1 Ves. & B. 202.

Specific performance of a contract concerning land not decreed on the signature of an agent without authority. Ib.

Distinction between a general and special agent as to their powers to bind the principal. Id. 209.

11. Agent, authorised to make agreements for leases for lives or years, makes an agreement in which the term of the proposed lease is not mentioned. This is an agreement not pursuant to his authority, and not binding on his principal. Clinan v. Cooke, 1 Sch. & Lef. 32.

12. Purchaser under particulars giving a false description, not bound at law or in equity, or by any act of his agent, without a fresh authority. Deverell v. Bolton (Lord), 18 Ves. 509.

Parol authority sufficient for a written agreement by an agent. Ib.

13. Though an agent may, within the scope of his authority, bind his principal by his agreement, and in many cases by his acts, evidence of his declarations is confined to what is either by the statement itself, or as tending to determine the quality of cotemporary acts, the foundation of, or inducement to, the agreement. Fairlie v. Hastings, 10 Ves. 123.

Letter by an agent is not evidence against the principal of a pre-existing agreement, though it may be of an agreement contained in that letter. Id. 128.

14. A principal is answerable for the act of his agent in concealing or suppressing deeds, though not done with the knowledge of the principal. Bowles v. Stewart, 1 Sch. & Lef. 209.

1. Baron and feme, having joint power to sell an estate of the wife's, give authority to an agent to sell by auction. He sells by private contract for more than the price they required. The buyer shall not compel specific performance. Husband delivering his wife's compliments in a letter to the agent is no proof of her joining in giving authority to agent. Daniel v. Adams, Ambl. 495.

2. A., on behalf of himself and certain other persons resident in Scotland, his constituents, by deed engaged B. and C. to act as agents and managers in New South Wales, empowering them to purchase sheep, cattle, and land on behalf of A. and his constituents, for which purpose certain sums were remitted to the colony to be invested for them and placed to their individual interest, and the proceeds of the stock, etc., were to be remitted to their respective credits. B. and C. were to receive for their trouble and expense one-third of the proceeds of the stock. With the money remitted, B. and C. bought stock and lands, and conducted the establishment in the colony in their own names. B. and C. afterwards became embarrassed, and contracted liabilities in the management of the property, and drew bills on A. on account of the establishment, which bills were endorsed by D. and other parties in the colony; these bills being dishonoured, and B. and C. being pressed by the indorsees, they executed a deed of assignment, and conveyed the whole of the trust property, and some property of their own, to D., for himself and other indorsees. D. had notice of the deed appointing B. and C. agents and managers, and that there was no authority on the part of B. and C. to draw bills on behalf of their constituents which could personally bind them. Upon a bill filed by A. and his constituents against B., C., and D., to set aside the deed of assignment as fraudulent and void, and for an account, the Supreme Court at Sydney held that the plaintiffs were not entitled in equity to relief, and that their remedy was to sue D. at law :—Held, by the Judicial Committee of Privy Council, reversing such decree, first, that the decree was erroneous in declaring that the relief sought by the bill was not of a proper equitable character; and secondly, that, under the circumstances, B. and C. had, as such agents and managers, authority to dispose of the property entrusted to them, in discharge of the debts incurred by them on behalf of A. and his constituents, in the management of such property; and that the deed of assignment was valid as against A. and his constituents to the extent of subjecting such joint property to the payment of the debts and liabilities contracted, but null and void as to the residue; and an account directed to be taken in the court below of such debts and liabilities. Bute (Marchioness) v. Mason, Exp. Heard, 7 Moo. P. C. 1.

3. See the case of the liability of the great Duke of Marlborough to the contract for building Blenheim House, from the circumstance of a person giving directions to workmen as his agent. Marlborough (Duke) v. Strong, 1 Bro. P. C. 175.

4. A steward has a general authority to contract with tenants, etc. This will not bind the lord without his consent, nor unless part of the bargain is executed. Anon., 5 Vin. Abr. 522, pl. 35.

5. Defendant had stock in the East India funds, in trust for plaintiff, and a bond in his own name from the company, but in trust for plaintiff. Paintiff being abroad drew a bill on defendant, and promised to send him effects to pay it; defendant accepted the bill; but before it was due, plaintiff failed. Defendant thereupon sold the stock and bond to pay the bill, at a great discount, though at the current price. Two years afterwards the stock and bond having risen in value, plaintiff went to defendant, and desired him to sell and reimburse himself. On a bill by plaintiff for an account :—Held, that the want of effects was sufficient to justify defendant in the sale without orders, for as much as would pay the bill; but it appearing that the produce of the stock alone was sufficient to answer the bill, defendant was decreed to account for the bond according to the value at the time plaintiff gave directions for the sale. Henriques v. Franchise, Pre. Ch. 205.

6. Under a general power to sell, assign, and transfer, an agent cannot pledge for his own debt. De Bouchout v. Goldsmid, 5 Ves. 211.

7. A person allowing a voluntary bond to remain in the hands of his agent, for the purpose of raising money on it, is bound by his agent's acts, though he never receives any of the money raised; but the assignee of it can only hold it as security for the amount actually advanced on it to the agent. Tottenham v. Green, 1 N. R. 466.

8. A purchaser of land from a railway company under a condition prohibiting building thereon without the certificate in writing of the company's principal engineer, proceeded to build upon the unwritten licence of one of the company's resident engineers :—Held, that the company were not bound, and the building was restrained. Upon a prayer to restrain the erection of "new" buildings, the completion of half-built houses was restrained. Att.-Gen. v. Briggs, 1 Jur., N. S., 1084.

9. A general demurrer for want of equity allowed to a bill, alleging, that the defendant, who was the agent of A., and had in his hands moneys and effects of A., had written a letter to a creditor of A., in which he promised to honour, on presentation, certain bills of exchange, drawn by that creditor, at A.'s request, upon the defendant, and praying that the defendant might be decreed to pay the bills of exchange out of the moneys and effects of A. in his hands, or otherwise, out of his own moneys. Baillet v. Mitchell, 1 L. J., Ch., 197.

10. A commission to sell and transfer stock "when the funds should be at 85 per cent. or above that price," is a particular commission under which an agent is bound to sell when the funds reach 85; and has not a general authority to act for his employer, so that he may defer selling till the funds should reach a higher price than 85. A mercantile house that had accepted such a commission, and had not sold when the funds reached 85 :—Held, therefore, in equity, to have made the stock their own from that time, and ordered to account to their employer for the price of it, with interest; he in return accounting to them for the dividends he had subsequently received in ignorance of the fact of the funds having reached that price. Bertram v. Godfray, 1 Knapp 381.

1. A life policy was subject to a condition making it void if the assured went beyond the limits of Europe without licence. An assignee of the policy, on paying the premium to a local agent of the assurance society, at the place where the policy had been effected, informed him that the assured was resident in Canada. The agent stated that this would not avoid the policy, and received the premiums until the assured died:—Held, that the society was precluded from insisting on the forfeiture. Wing v. Harvey, 5 De G. M. & G. 265; 18 Jur. 394; 23 L. J., Ch., 511; 2 W. R. 370; 2 Eq. Rep. 553.

2. What are circumstances sufficient to establish an agent's authority, and a contract made in the exercise of it. Ridgway v. Wharton, 6 H. L. Ca. 238; 27 L. J., Ch., 46.

Specific performance of an agreement to lease refused, when the alleged contract was founded upon expressions in a letter written by the defendant's agent to the intended lessee, to the effect that instructions had been given for the preparation of the lease in conformity with terms arranged; no agreement having been actually signed. S. C. 3 De G. M. & G. 677.

The owner of an estate, in answer to an enquiry from an intending lessee, said, "A. B. manages all my affairs, and you are to treat with him." This does not imply that A. B. had authority to enter into a binding agreement. Semble. Ib.

3. A power to a land agent to "manage and superintend estates," authorises him, on behalf of his principal, to enter into an agreement for the usual and customary leases, according to the nature and locality of the property. Peers v. Sneyd, 17 Beav. 151.

4. Where a general authority is given to an agent this implies a right to do all subordinate acts incident to, and necessary for, the execution of that authority, and if notice is not given that the authority is specially limited, the principal is bound. Collen v. Gardner, 21 Beav. 540.

A steward has no general authority to enter into contracts for granting leases of farms for a term of years. Ib.

Where therefore a steward and land agent, whose powers were specially limited, had in the absence of the owner entered into a written agreement with a farmer to grant him a lease for twelve years, but without communicating to him the fact that his power was specially limited:—Held, that the agreement did not bind the owner. Ib.

5. An agent of an insurance company is not necessarily authorised to contract for the grant of policies. Linford v. Provincial Horse and Cattle Insurance Co., 5 N. R. 29; 34 Beav. 291; 10 Jur., N. S., 1066; 11 L. T., N. S., 330.

6. The powers of an agent are limited by the limitation of the powers of the principal. Montreal Assurance Co. v. M'Gillivray, 8 W. R. 165; 13 Moo. P. C. 87.

Contracts which would not be binding on a principal, as ultra vires, do not become binding by means of their having been entered into through the medium of an agent. Ib.

An assurance company was incorporated by a colonial ordinance and statute, by which it was provided that all policies of insurance should be subscribed by three directors, countersigned by the secretary and manager, and the seal of the corporation. By a by-law of the company made in pursuance of the powers conferred by the colonial ordinance and statute, a resolution to the same effect was passed. H. mortgaged a house in the colony to R.; some time afterwards his representative, being dissatisfied with the security, applied for repayment of the mortgage money, when H. agreed to insure the premises for the benefit of the mortgagee's representative. In pursuance of this arrangement, H. applied to the company through M., their manager and agent, to insure the premises against fire. H. was unable to pay the premium, and proposed to M. that the company should take his promissory note payable in twelve days. This was agreed to by M., and a note given M. at the same time, promising to send the policy. The particulars of the policy were entered in the books of the company, but the note being dishonoured when due the entry was erased. The policy was never issued; shortly afterwards the premises were burnt down:—Held, first, that the powers of M. as manager, being public, must be taken to have been known to H. the insurer, and that the acts of M. in the transaction were ultra vires and void, not being within the scope of his general authority as manager, and therefore not binding upon the company. Ib.

7. The ordinary import of language of a letter giving full authority to deal with the property of another, ought not to be cut down or restricted by merely ambiguous or uncertain expressions in other parts of the document. Pariente v. Lubbock, 8 De G. M. & G. 5; 20 Beav. 588.

Where, therefore, a foreign merchant wrote to his English correspondent, directing the latter to consider any consignment from him as the property of his son, who was residing in England, so that the son might place and dispose of the father's money as if it was the son's own property, and stating that, as the son informed the father of everything, the consignor would not continue writing, but that whatever the son said for him was to be the same as if he said it himself, and must guide the consignee:—Held, first, that the son was thus constituted, not merely an agent with full powers to act for his father, but that the consignee was justified in setting off, with the son's concurrence, a debt due to the father against one due to the son. Ib.

Held, secondly, that, although on one or two occasions the consignee had required a written authority from the son before so acting, neither this circumstance nor the terms of the letters rendered any writing necessary, but that a verbal direction or subsequent adoption by the son was sufficient. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that, the circumstance of the consignee's firm having been changed by the death of a member of it, subsequently to the date of the letters, made no difference in these respects, the letters having imposed a duty on the consignee's house, which continued as long as the relation between the plaintiff and it, however it might be composed. Ib.

8. The plaintiff claimed 37*l.* from the defendant for the use and occupation of a house, and authorized him to pay the amount to a person whom he named. She called on the defendant, and he then expressed his readiness to pay the amount, but she (having also an interest in the property) refused to receive it. No actual tender was made. The plaintiff sued the defendant for the use and occupation, claiming 238*l.* The defendant paid 37*l.* into court:—Held, that as soon as the defendant expressed to the agent his readiness to pay the 37*l.* there was a concluded agreement between him and the plaintiff for that amount, and that the plaintiff could not recover more. Gretton v. Mees, 7 L. R., Ch. D., 839; 26 W. R. 607; 38 L. T., N. S., 506.

Held, also, that the defendant was entitled to the costs of the action from the time of the payment into court. Ib.

1. Where an agent is clothed with ostensible authority, no private instructions prevent his acts within the scope of that authority from binding his principal. Where his authority depends, and is known to those who deal with the agent to depend, on a written mandate, it may be necessary to produce or account for the non-production of that writing in order to prove what was the scope of the agent's authority. Semble, National Bolivian Navigation Co. v. Wilson, 5 App. Cas. 209; 43 L. T. 70.

2. If a principal gives an order to an agent in such uncertain terms as to be susceptible of two different meanings, and the agent bonâ fide adopts one of them and acts upon it, it is not competent to the principal to repudiate the act as unauthorized, because he meant the order to be read in another sense of which it is equally capable. Ireland v. Livingstone, 5 L. R., H. L., 395; 41 L. J., Q. B., 201; 27 L. T. 79. Reversing 5 L. R., Q. B., 516; 39 L. J., Q. B., 282.

L. sent an order by letter to T. & Co., commission agents at the Mauritius, to ship him 500 tons of sugar at a certain price,—"fifty tons more or less of no moment, if it enables you to get a suitable vessel." T. & Co. purchased and shipped about 400 tons, construing the letter as an order to purchase up to 500 tons, and assuming that the words "fifty tons more or less" had reference only to the capacity of the ship. L. refused to take the sugar, on the ground that his letter was an order for a shipment by one vessel of at least 450 tons and not more than 550 tons:—Held, that as the letter was capable of the construction T. & Co. had put upon it, L. was bound to accept the sugar. Ib.

3. In an action for a malicious prosecution against an incorporated banking company the jury found that the same had been authorized on behalf of the bank by W., the acting manager, and were directed by the judge that it was to be inferred from W.'s position as manager that he had sufficient power under the circumstances for directing a prosecution. A rule nisi to enter a nonsuit or for new trial was discharged:—Held, on appeal, that assuming the prosecution to have been authorized by W., the direction to the jury to the effect that it was to be inferred from W.'s position that he had authority to direct the prosecution was on the evidence incorrect. New South Wales (Bank) v. Owston, 4 L. R., App. Cas., 270; 48 L. J., P. C., 25; 40 L. T. 500.

The arrest, and still less the prosecution of offenders, is not within the ordinary routine of banking business, and therefore not within the ordinary scope of a bank manager's authority. Evidence accordingly is required to show that such arrest or prosecution is within the scope of the duties and class of acts such manager is authorized to perform. That authority may be general, or it may be special and derived from the exigency of the particular occasion on which it is exercised. In the former case it is enough to show commonly that the agent was acting in what he did on behalf of the principal: but in the latter case evidence must be given of a state of facts which shows that such exigency is present, or from which it might reasonably be supposed to be present. Rule made absolute for a new trial. Ib.

4. The extent and nature of the authority of an agent may be defined by writing, by oral instruction, or by the course of dealings between the parties. Pole v. Leask, and Leask v. Pole, 28 Beav. 562; 6 Jur., N. S., 1104; 29 L. J., Ch., 888.

When the authority to an agent is general, it will be construed liberally, but according to the usual course of business in such matters. Ib.

When the authority is given by parol and is ambiguous, it is to be construed according to the course of trade in such matters, and where it is unexpressed, it is to be ascertained by investigating the course of dealing pursued between the several parties to the transactions. Ib.

Where an express authority is given, an authority is implied combined with it, to do all acts which may be necessary for the purpose of effecting the object for which the express authority is given. Ib.

A general parol authority may be enlarged by parol, or even an additional authority superadded to it, by the employment of the parties known to and acquiesced by them. For instance, a merchant may authorize a clerk to accept or indorse bills of exchange for him; but this will not, of itself, authorize his paying or receiving money due on such bills. But if, in the course of his employment, the clerk has, with the knowledge of the merchant, been allowed to do so, this will constitute a sufficient authority for that purpose, and will discharge the holders of the bills. Ib.

An agent employed to negotiate and conclude contracts, is not thereby authorized to pay or receive money which becomes due under such contracts, but the course of employment may justify the agent in so paying or receiving the money, if known to the principal, and not objected to by him. Ib.

P. authorized L., a fruit and colonial broker, to purchase and sell goods for him upon instructions to be given by A., their agent. P. insisted that the authority to A. was limited to one article, namely, currants; but L. insisted that the authority was general. The authority being by parol only, and there being a conflict of evidence, the Court, from the practice and conduct of the parties, came to the conclusion, that the authority of A. was general, that it extended to all such articles as the broker was in the habit of dealing in, and that it authorized A. to settle accounts with the broker, and receive the balance due in respect of the transactions. Ib.

5. The appointment of a general agent for the sale of goods implies an authority to sell according to the ordinary course of trade. Where, therefore, an agent sold timber of his principal at one of a number of sales, held at the same place and by the same person, on behalf of himself and other vendors, at which it was alleged to be the custom that the purchasers should be liable for the purchase money to the holder of the sale only, and not to the real vendor; and it was proved that the agent had himself sold goods on his own account in conformity with this alleged usage:—Held, that the principal vendor was entitled to look for his purchase money beyond the holder of the sales, to the real seller of the timber. Exp. Howell, Re Williams, 12 L. T., N. S., 875.

1. An association was not registered under the Companies Acts. Persons became members by effecting mutual policies; members were empowered also to effect "special rate policies." The applicants, De W. & Co., were not members, but had taken out a "special rate policy," signed per procuration by J. & S., the managers, who gave and accepted on their personal liability a bill of exchange for the amount assured. In a similar case, the amount assured had been disallowed by the Appeal Court as a claim made on the association. J. & S. became insolvent, and their acceptance was dishonoured. De W. & Co. claimed that the amount of the premiums should be repaid them by the members of the association:—Held, that they were not entitled to have the premiums repaid, because, first, as they well knew, J. & S. had no power, as agents, to grant such a policy to non-members; and, secondly, there was no failure of consideration, as J. & S. had made themselves personally liable. Re Arthur Average Association, De Winton & Co.'s case, 34 L. T. 942.

2. Although a person who as principal employs a broker to transact business for him in a particular market is bound by the usage of that market, though unknown to him, provided the usage is one that merely regulates the mode of performing the contract, and does not change the intrinsic character of the contract, yet where the usage is one which gives the broker an interest at variance with his duty, as by converting him into a principal instead of a mere agent to establish privity of contract between two principals, such a usage is not binding on a principal who, being ignorant of the usage, employs a broker to whom the usage is known to perform the ordinary and accustomed duties belonging to the office or employment of a broker. The principal is not bound to inquire what the usage may be, or whether there is any particular usage affecting the market in which he proposes to deal. Robinson v. Mollett, 7 L. R., H. L., 802; 44 L. J., C. P., 362.

A Liverpool merchant employed brokers of London to buy tallow for him in the London tallow market. They having other orders, bought in their own name a quantity sufficient to cover all their orders, and by letter they informed the merchant that they had bought on his account so many tons; but they did not mention the name of the seller. A few days after they sent him notice that they were ready to deliver to him so many casks of tallow in fulfilment or part fulfilment of his order, but they did not allude to any third party as the seller. He acknowledged the receipt of these notices without observation. There is a custom on the London tallow market for brokers when they receive orders to contract in their own names, and if their principals refuse to accept or deliver, to buy or sell against them, and charge them with the loss. The merchant was ignorant of this custom. On becoming aware of it, and of the mode in which his orders had been executed, tallow having in the meantime fallen, he refused to take the tallow:—Held, that as the brokers were employed to act as brokers only, the custom which converted them into principals was inconsistent with the employment, and as the merchant was ignorant of it when he gave his orders, he was not bound by the custom. Ib.

Held, also, as the first notice sent by the brokers was that they had bought on his account, he was not thereby put on inquiry as to the custom or as to the name of the seller, and he was not bound to accept when it turned out that his own brokers might in fact be the vendors, or to pay them the difference between the price at which they bought and that at which they sold in consequence of his having refused the contract. Ib.

3. The Queensland Constitution Act 1867, by s. 6, enacts that any person who shall, directly or indirectly, hold or enjoy any contract for or on account of the public service, shall be incapable of sitting or voting as a member of the legislative assembly; and s. 7 imposes a penalty on any person so disqualified so sitting or voting. The respondent, being part-owner of a ship which had been chartered by the Government, sat and voted as a member of the legislative assembly. The respondent had instructed his agents, who were also part-owners, not to charter the ship to the Government, and that if they did, the contract should be made with such part-owners only who should be held to have chartered the respondent's share at a rate fixed independently of such contract. The Government had no knowledge that the respondent was a part-owner:—Held, that under these circumstances the respondent was not liable to the penalties imposed by the Act. Freeman v. Cooke (2 Exch. 654) approved. Miles v. Mollwraith, 8 L. R., App. Cas., 120; 52 L. J., P. C., 17; 48 L. T. 689; 31 W. R. 591.

4. K. entered by letter into a contract with the plaintiff for the sale of 300 tons of muriate of potash. At the commencement of the letter, K. said that he bought as agent for the defendant. Delivery at the rate of 50 tons per month. Cash payment to be made by K. fourteen days from receipt of bills of lading. A commission of 1 per cent. to be paid to K. The letter was not signed by him as agent:—Held, that on the true construction of the contract, whatever K.'s position might be, the defendant was the buyer, and therefore liable to the plaintiff. Concordia Chemische Fabrik auf Actien v. Squire, 34 L. T. 824.

2. Delegation.

5. An authority given to A. to draw bill in the name of B. may be exercised by the clerk of A. Exp. Sutton, 2 Cox 84.

6. Vendor is bound by signature of agent's clerk thus: "Witness, E. P., for Mr. S., agent for the seller," upon evidence of assent; but clerks in general have no authority to bind the principal. Coles v. Trecothick, 9 Ves. 234; 1 Smith 233.

1. A., tenant for life, with a power to lease by deed, duly executed under her hand and seal, reserving the best yearly rent. Plaintiff enters into possession, and expends money in building, under an agreement for a lease evidenced only by the memorandum in writing entered in the book of A.'s authorised agent, signed not by the agent himself, but by his clerk, although in evidence to have been approved by him, and according to the usual course of business. A. dies, and on a bill for specific performance against the remainderman:—Held, first, no sufficient agreement in writing; second, the plaintiff not entitled to compensation from A.'s representatives for money laid out by him on the faith of the alleged agreement. Blore v. Sutton, 3 Meriv. 237.

2. Though an agent cannot delegate his authority, yet there are many acts which he must necessarily do through the agency of other persons, and which are valid when so done. Rossiter v. Trafalgar Life Assurance Association, 27 Beav. 377.

3. Ratification.

3. An act done by an agent of the Government, though in excess of his authority, being ratified and adopted by the Government:—Held, to be equivalent to a previous authority. Secretary of State for India v. Kamachee Boye Sahaba, 7 Moo. Ind. App. 476; 13 Moo. P. C. 22.

4. By agreement made between J. S. and T. J. S. of the one part, and the plaintiff of the other part, J. S. and T. J. S. (father and son), as mortgagees with power of sale, agreed to sell to the plaintiff all their estate and interest in a piece of land adjoining other land of the plaintiff. This agreement was signed by the plaintiff, and by T. J. S. for himself and his father. The father and son, subsequently to the date of this agreement, sold the property to B., with notice of the agreement. Upon a bill filed by the plaintiff for specific performance:—Held (affirming 3 Sm. & G. 592; 4 Jur., N. S., 108, 6 W. R. 173), that, although the evidence was insufficient to show any antecedent authority in the son to bind the father, yet the latter had, by his subsequent conduct, ratified the contract. Bigg v. Strong, 4 Jur., N. S., 983; 6 W. R. 536.

5. The relation of principal and agent requires the consensus of both parties. There must be an express or implied assent to, or a subsequent ratification of, that relation. Markwick v. Hardingham, 15 L. R., Ch. D., 349.

4. Personal Liability of Agent.

6. Agent not responsible if he names his principal as the person to be responsible. Exp. Hartop, 12 Ves. 352.

7. A. articles on behalf of B. to purchase some houses, and covenants to pay 800*l.* for the same, and the houses are afterwards destroyed by an earthquake. Though A. had no effects of B.'s in his hands, yet the Court decreed him to pay the 800*l.* Cass v. Rudele, 2 Vern. 280.

8. An attorney on behalf of his client, the defendant, promises to pay 500*l.* to plaintiff; this being done by the authority of the client, attorney not liable, but only client; otherwise, if the attorney had no authority from client to make the engagement. Johnson v. Ogilby, 3 P. W. 277.

9. Attorney as agent, on sale of an estate, not disclosing to the buyer an incumbrance, and leading him to suppose the title would be a good one, held liable to make satisfaction in default of the vendor. Arnot v. Biscoe, 1 Ves. 95.

10. A solicitor who attends a sale, and bids for his client, is responsible for the payment of the deposit, and will be attached if it is not paid. Hobhouse v. Hamilton, 1 Hog. 401.

11. Where agent was obliged as such to indorse bill, and fact was known to indorsees; injunction was granted to restrain proceedings thereon against him. Kidson v. Dilworth, 5 Price 564.

12. B. became the purchaser of premises at an auction, declaring himself the agent of C. in C.'s presence, but the vendor's solicitor required B. to sign the agreement, and declined to substitute the name of C. Communications afterwards took place between the vendor's solicitor and C. with reference to the title. The vendors afterwards brought their bill against B. and C. for specific performance of the contract:—Held, that supposing B. to be the agent of C., yet the signature of B. to the contract made him personally liable to perform it; that the communication between the vendor's solicitor and the solicitor of C. with reference to the title, was not an adoption of C. as the purchaser in the place of B., but should be assumed to be made in furtherance of the original contract, in which, according to B.'s representation, he was (as between himself and C.) only a formal party; that the acceptance of the title by C. in such communications would not be binding upon B., for such acceptance would be regarded as having been made in C.'s own right as claiming through B., and not as agent for B. Chadwick v. Maden, 9 Hare 188.

13. Upon allegations, that, under the decrees of the Cortes and orders of the Spanish government, the plaintiff had a lien for the payment of a debt due to him on a certain portion of stock, which, along with other stock, had been, by the commissioners of the Spanish government, placed at the disposal of, and sold by, certain agents here, a bill is filed praying an account (amongst others) against the agents:—Held, that a good and complete defence may be made to such a bill by a plea, stating matter from which it appears that the stock placed at the disposal of these agents was intended for special purposes, unconnected with the satisfaction of the plaintiff's demand, and did not include the stock specifically appropriated to meet his demand; and that it is no objection to the plea, that after the special purposes are answered, there may be in the hands of the agents a surplus in which the plaintiff may have an interest. Jabatt v. Campbell, 3 L. J., Ch., 8.

A creditor cannot file a bill for an account against the agent of the principal, against whom his claim is, unless he makes out a case of collusion between the principal and agent. Ib.

1. The creditors of A. having issued a fiat in bankruptcy against him, and having at the close of the proceedings under the fiat, received notice, by means of the examination of the bankrupt and others, that A. was only the agent of B. & Co., proceeded nevertheless to sign A.'s certificate :—Held, that this was not an election by the creditors to treat A. as their sole debtor. Taylor v. Sheppard, 1 Y. & Coll. 271.

5. Wrong Doers.

2. The widow of the testator employed A. to collect some of the debts due to the testator's estate, which A. accordingly collected and paid over to the widow, believing that she was the administratrix. The widow subsequently died without having obtained letters of administration :—Held, that A. was liable for the money, and that the liability was not avoided by the suggestion that A. acted as the agent of the widow, inasmuch as the acts of the widow and A. in reference to the testator's estate were the acts of wrong doers, and the law does not recognise the relation of principal and agent as existing among wrong doers. Sharland v. Mildon, 5 Hare 469 ; 15 L. J., N. S., Ch., 434 ; 10 Jur. 771.

3. All persons directly concerned in the commission of a fraud are principals. A contract of agency cannot impose an obligation on the agent to commit a fraud. Cullen v. Thompson, 4 Macq. H. L. Ca. 441 ; 9 Jur., N. S., 85.

4. There is no agency as between wrong doers ; each of them is personally liable. Hough v. Abergavenny (Earl), 23 W. R. 40.

Therefore, where there was a dispute between the plaintiff and one of the defendants about a weir situate on the plaintiff's land, and the other defendant was charged with intending to enter forcibly on the land and destroy the weir :—Held, that the last-mentioned defendant could not sustain a demurrer to a bill for injunction on the ground that he had no interest in the subject-matter of the dispute, and was a mere agent acting on the orders of the principal defendant. Ib.

6. Disputing Title of Principal.

5. In a case where A. had agreed to remit certain consignments to B., and B. had agreed to account with A. for the proceeds of such consignments :—Held, that it was not competent at any time afterwards for B. to assert a paramount title to the proceeds of such consignments. Zulueta v. Vinent, 1 De G. M. & G. 315.

A mining company in Cuba had for some time been accustomed to consign its ore to Z., in London, who furnished the money for the necessary supplies. A considerable debt having thus become due from the company to Z., the ore was suddenly consigned to Z. in the name of V., who brought an action against Z. for the proceeds. Z. thereupon filed his bill against the company and V., alleging that the last consignments were the property of the company, and though made in the name of V., were made by the company, and on their account, and for their benefit, and placed to their account ; and seeking to restrain the action and have the account taken :—The Court held, that the bill stated a sufficient equity, and overruled a demurrer of V. to the bill. S. C. 13 Beav. 215.

6. An agent in this country for a foreign principal having in his possession goods which by the act of the principal have been so appropriated as to be in equity the property of a third person in this country, and having notice of the rights of the third person, cannot resist the demand of that third person for the goods, on the ground that they are held by the agent in his capacity of agent, or impose on the third person, the rightful owner, unreasonable conditions as the price of their delivery to him, because the foreign principal has directed him so to do. Application of this principle in the case of disputed rights as to cargoes of timber and the bills of lading representing them. Dresser v. Hoare, 26 L. J., Ch., 51 ; 2 Jur., N. S., 1151.

7. An agent cannot get an adverse title, unless he can distinctly show that the acts on which he relies are in respect of title, and not in respect of agency. Att.-Gen. v. London (Corporation), 2 Macn. & G. 247 ; 2 H. & Tw. 1 ; 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 314 ; 14 Jur. 205.

8. Where a consignor had purchased goods on account of and at the risk of his correspondent, and delivered them to the carrier :—Held, that he could not afterwards, on any disagreement, depart from his duty, and deliver them to another person ; and the latter taking the goods with knowledge of the circumstances would do so subject to the rights of the correspondent. Green v. Maitland, 4 Beav. 524.

9. A wharfinger received notice that goods deposited at his wharf were marked with a fraudulent imitation of a trade-mark, and that the owner of the trade-mark was about to apply to the Court of Chancery for an injunction to prevent the sale of the goods ; after the injunction had been granted, but before the wharfinger had notice that it had been granted, he refused to deliver the goods to the owner :—Held, that he was justified in equity in such refusal, and that the owner of the goods would be restrained from suing him at law for a wrongful conversion of the goods. Hunt v. Maniere, 33 Beav. 157 ; 11 Jur., N. S., 28, 73 ; 34 L. J., Ch., 142 ; 13 W. R. 363 ; 11 L. T., N. S., 723 ; 5 N. R. 181.

10. A contract, establishing between the contracting parties the relation of principal and agent, is made absolute in law by the latter acting under it ; and an insurance broker cannot, as an agent, dispute the claim of his only known principal on the ground that other persons were interested in the subject-matter of the insurance ; their claims would be a question between the assured and the persons so claiming to be interested. Roberts v. Ogilby, 9 Price 269.

11. Although in certain cases a bailee may set up the jus tertii, yet if he accepts the bailment with full knowledge of an adverse claim, he cannot afterwards set up the existence of such claim as against his bailor. Exp. Davis

Re Sadler, 19 L. R., Ch. D., 86; 45 L. T. 632; 30 W. R. 237.

1. After the filing of a liquidation petition the holder of a registered bill of sale executed by the debtor instructed an auctioneer to take possession of the chattels comprised in it. The auctioneer took possession, and advertised the goods for sale on behalf of the bill of sale holder. The sale was stopped by injunction, and the auctioneer remained in possession of the goods on behalf of the receiver under the petition. On the appointment of a trustee the auctioneer held possession for him, and ultimately by his directions advertised the goods for sale, the advertisements and the catalogues of the goods being headed "In liquidation. By order of the trustee." The goods were sold, and the proceeds of sale were received by the auctioneer. The bill of sale holder gave him notice not to pay them to the trustee, and he declined to pay them over. The trustee applied to the Court of Bankruptcy for an order for payment to him, serving notice of his motion on the auctioneer only. On the hearing of this motion an order was made by consent that the money should be paid into court, and the hearing adjourned, notice being meanwhile given to the bill of sale holder. Notice was served on him, but not a four-days' notice as required by rule 50 of the Bankruptcy Rules 1870, and he did not appear on the adjourned hearing. He had meanwhile commenced an action against the auctioneer for the proceeds of sale:—Held, that the Court of Bankruptcy ought to exercise its jurisdiction under s. 72 of the Bankruptcy Act 1869, and that the money must be paid out to the trustee, on the ground that the auctioneer had, with full knowledge of the adverse claim, deliberately elected to sell the goods for the trustee, and was, therefore, estopped from denying his title. Ib.

7. Revocation.

In General.] 2. An agent imposed by will upon the devisee of an estate may be removed by this Court if he conduct himself improperly. Lawless v. Shaw, Ll. & G. temp. Sugd. 172.

3. A grant was made by Dr. Y., bishop of Ely, in 1801, to P. for his life of the ancient office of receiver of the rents of the lands belonging to the see of Ely. For a long series of years the receiver for the time being had not only received the rents, but had prepared leases, surrenders, and counterparts of leases, had registered leases and assignments of leases in a register kept by the bishop, and had made searches in the muniment room in the residence of the bishop whenever requested by persons requiring information contained in the register and records belonging to the bishop, for all which duties he received fees. In 1836 Dr. A., immediately after his appointment as bishop, sent a notice to P. not to prepare any more leases, surrenders, or counterparts of leases, and not to receive any more rents. P. filed a bill against Dr. A., praying that it might be declared that P. was entitled to exercise all the duties and receive the perquisites hitherto exercised and received by the receiver, and that the bishop might be restrained from interfering with such exercise and enjoyment:—Held, that whatever might be the legal right of P. to the office, and to its alleged appurtenances, no relief could be given to him in equity, on the grounds of the hardship of forcing the services of a stranger in an office of trust upon the bishop and the want of mutuality; the nature of the duties and services asserted by the plaintiff being such as to preclude the possibility of a decree in this court against him compelling their specific performance. Pickering v. Ely (Bishop), 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 249; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 271; 7 Jur. 479.

4. The duties of an agent of a limited company being in the nature of personal services, and as such incapable of being enforced in equity, the Court refused to restrain the directors from acting upon or enforcing the resignation of A., whose management and agency were made a prominent condition in the prospectus on the formation of the company, and expressly provided for by the articles of association. Mair v. Himalaya Tea Co., 1 L. R., Eq., 411; 11 Jur., N. S., 1013; 14 W. R. 165.

In refusing to grant the injunction, the Court put the directors upon an undertaking not to take advantage, in proceedings at law to recover the amount due on A.'s shares, of his resignation, which was alleged by him to have been wholly conditional on his being relieved from all liability in respect of shares. Ib.

5. Auctioneers advanced a sum of money to S., who agreed to put a miscellaneous collection of property in their hands for sale, from the proceeds of which they were to retain the money advanced. A part only of the property was delivered and sold, but it realized less than the sum advanced; S. refused to part with the remainder of his collection:—Held, that the Court would not compel the performance of the contract for an agency; that S., if he satisfied the claims of his agents, was at liberty to countermand the sale of his property, that the advance of the money to S. was not made on the security of the property mentioned in the contract, and that the claims of the agents must be determined in a court of law. Chinnock v. Sainsbury, 30 L. J., Ch., 409; 6 Jur., N. S., 1318; 9 W. R. 7; 3 L. T., N. S., 258.

6. In a suit by a plaintiff, alleging that the defendant had been employed by him as his agent for the sale of horses, and that, being unable to obtain from the defendant the particulars of the transactions as to the sales and purchases, he (the plaintiff) had served the defendant with notice to determine the agency, and had subsequently removed several horses from his premises, upon which the defendant had commenced an action of trover. Injunction to restrain the action, on the ground that the Court of Chancery ought to ascertain the questions of fact or direct an issue, refused, with costs. Curlewis v. Carter, 9 L. T., N. S., 407.

7. M., the manager of E.'s business, was allowed by him to send out bills to the customers in his (M.'s) own name alone. M. afterwards locked E. out of the business premises, and E. several times had to break the lock to get in. M. made an assignment of the premises and stock in trade to P., and P. advertised them for sale. E. filed a bill against M. and P. to restrain the exclusion and the sale. The defendants demurred for want of equity, and the demurrer was overruled with costs. Eachus v. Moss, 14 W. R. 327.

1. An agent who has the business taken out of his hands before completion is by the custom of merchants entitled to half the commission which he would have earned by completing it. Spain (Queen) v. Parr, 39 L. J., Ch., 73.

On Bankruptcy.] 2. A London house guaranteed certain payments to be made by a Paris house. The solvency of the Paris house becoming doubtful, the London house duly authorised the creditor to act according to the best of his discretion in the settlement of the affairs. The creditor accordingly went to Paris and entered into a composition for the debt with the Paris house. After the departure of the creditor from England, and previous to the composition, a commission of bankruptcy issued against the London house, of which fact the parties of the composition were ignorant:—Held, that the bankruptcy did not determine the authority. Exp. & Re M'Donnell, Buck 399.

3. The bankruptcy of an agent is not per se a defence to an action for wrongful dismissal, even though the agent is to receive moneys on account of his principal. The fitness of the agent to perform his duties is a question for a jury. M'Call v. Australian Meat Co., 19 W. R. 188.

4. Where authority had been given previous to an act of bankruptcy by the bankrupts to the defendant in the course of mutual dealings to receive the purchase money of their estate, and to place it to their account, and such authority had been acted upon before notice of an act of bankruptcy:—Held, that such authority was not revoked by the act of bankruptcy; that the payment thereof to the defendant was a rightful payment; that being so received it became a debt and an item in the account between him and the bankrupts before notice of any act of bankruptcy, and that the defendant was entitled to set off against it, in an action brought by the trustee in bankruptcy, the debt due from the bankrupts to him. Elliott v. Turquand, 7 L. R., App. Cas., 79; 51 L. J., P. C., 1; 45 L. T. 771; 30 W. R. 477.

On Determination of Principal's Business.] 5. When two parties mutually agree, for a fixed period, the one to employ the other as his sole agent in a certain business at a certain place, the other that he will act in that business for no other principal at that place, there is no implied condition that the business itself shall continue to be carried on during the period named. Rhodes v. Forwood, 1 L. R., App. Cas., 256; 47 L. J., Exch., 396; 24 W. R. 1078; 34 L. T., N. S., 890. Reversing 33 L. T., N. S., 314.

A. and B. agreed, "in consideration of the services and payments to be mutually rendered," that for seven years, or as long as A. should continue to carry on business at the town of Liverpool, A. should be the sole agent there for the sale of B.'s coals, and that B. would not employ any other agent there for that purpose. There were stipulations in the agreement that B. should have the entire control over the prices for which, and the credits at which, the coals were to be sold: and that if A. could not sell a certain amount per year, or B. could not supply a certain amount per year, either party might, on notice, put an end to the agreement. At the end of four years, B. sold the colliery itself. In an action by A. for damages for breach of the agreement thereby occasioned:—Held, that the action was not maintainable; for that the agreement did not bind the colliery owner to keep his colliery, or to do more than employ the agent in the sale of such coals as he sent to Liverpool. Ib.

6. An insurance company entered into an agreement with a party that he should act as their agent for five years at a salary of 500*l.* a year, and also a commission of 10 per cent. per annum on the net profits of each year to be made from the business. Less than two years after the agreement was entered into the company resolved to wind up voluntarily:—Held, that he was not entitled to any damages by reason of the company having put it out of their power to make any profits. Re English and Scottish Marine Assurance Co. v. Maclure's claim, 5 L. R., Ch., 737; 39 L. J., Ch., 685; 23 L. T. 685; 18 W. R. 1122.

IV. LIEN OF AGENT.

7. A business, the property of A., was carried on with his capital and for his profit by B., his agent, in the name of the latter, at a fixed salary. A. having become bankrupt, B. filed his bill, stating, that by reason of the use of his name he had become liable to a heavy amount for the concern, which was insolvent, notwithstanding the bankruptcy of A., and praying for an injunction to restrain the assignees from in any way intermeddling with the concern:—Held, that B. had a lien on the business, to the extent of his liabilities, and an injunction was granted. Foxcroft v. Wood, 4 Russ. 487.

8. An action at law being brought to recover the produce of some foreign specie remitted by a merchant abroad to an agent in London, the agent filed his bill, alleging generally that there were mutual dealings and transactions between the parties, and praying that an account might be taken of them, and for an injunction; a demurrer was allowed. Frietas v. Dos Santos, 1 Y. & J. 574.

9. Where agents abroad are in disburse for their principal, and, upon being doubtful of his circumstances, make bills of lading to their own order indorsed in blank; notwithstanding these bills of lading come to the principal's hands; yet, if the agents' partner in London writes them word that their principal is become bankrupt and desires them to send the bills of lading, and an order to the captain to deliver the goods to him, he may retain them for himself and company against the assignees under the commission till paid and reimbursed so much as the partnership is in advance. Snee v. Prescot, 1 Atk. 245.

10. The indemnity of the trustees under a deed of trust does not give the persons employed by them a right as creditors against the trust fund. Worrall v. Harford, 8 Ves. 4.

11. The assignee of an agent cannot retain bills sent to the agent, with a direction to hand them over to a third party, to whom notice is also given of the appropriation. In this case the parcel containing the bills and letters, though sent before the bankruptcy of the agent, was not received till afterwards. Exp. Cot- terill, Re Douglas, 3 Mont. & A. 376; 3 Dea. 12; 7 L. J., N. S., Bky., 2; 1 Jur. 825.

1. M. & Co. abroad, through the agency of A. & Co., procure B. to consign goods to them. M. & Co. remit to A. & Co. bills, specifically appropriating them to pay B., and also write to B. to say they have done so. Before payment A. & Co. became bankrupt:—Held, that as the original transaction was through the agency of A. & Co. they must be considered as agents throughout the transaction, and that there was sufficient privity to entitle B. to recover the bills from them, although M. & Co. were indebted to A. & Co. at the time. Exp. Thompson, Re Douglas, 2 Jur. 734.

2. Bill sent by a correspondent to a merchant to be applied to a particular use; if merchant becomes bankrupt before the money is received, the correspondent has a special lien and shall be preferred to the general creditors; aliter where bills are sent on a general account. Exp. Ourcell, Ambl. 297.

3. A custom of exchanging acceptances existed between the bankrupt and the other houses through the agency of B.; notes were sent by the petitioner to B., but never exchanged, as bankruptcy intervened, and they were stolen from B., and never formed any item in any settlement of accounts between B. and the assignees:—Held, the petitioner could not recover the value of the notes from the assignees. Exp. Watson, Re Maberly, 1 Mont. & A. 685.

4. A firm of merchants at Hamburgh, in June 1857 directed their correspondents, a firm of merchants in London, to purchase Mexican bonds, which passed by delivery, upon certain terms, the bonds when purchased to be held at the disposal of the Hamburgh firm. On the 2nd of July the London firm wrote to announce that the bonds had been purchased, and enclosing the account of the transaction, the amount of which they would reimburse themselves on the following day, and on the 3rd of July they wrote to apprise the Hamburgh firm of bills drawn upon them for the amount by which they "balanced the transaction." On the 4th of July the Hamburgh firm wrote to state, that they would honour the drafts, advice of which they expected, and requested the London firm in the meanwhile to keep the bonds in safe custody, and to give them the numbers of the same. On the 6th of July the London firm wrote to state, that until further order they would retain for safe custody the bonds, and giving the numbers of the bonds. The bills were accepted by the Hamburgh firm, and at maturity were paid. On the 19th of November the Hamburgh firm wrote to request that the bonds might be sent to them by post; but on the same day the London firm wrote to announce that they had stopped payment, but that the Mexican bonds lying with them were unjeopardized. The Hamburgh firm afterwards stopped payment, and in a suit by the representatives of the Hamburgh firm for the delivery of the bonds:—Held, that the bonds were not subject to a lien for the general balance of account between the two firms. Bock v. Gorrissen, 30 L. J., Ch., 39; 3 L. T., N. S., 424; 7 Jur., N. S., 81; 9 W. R. 209; 2 De G. F. & J. 434.

A general lien cannot be obtained according to the law of principal and agent. Ib.

The law does not favour general liens, and a general lien can only be claimed as arising from dealings in a particular trade or line of business, such as wharfingers, factors, and bankers, in which the existence of a general lien has been judicially acknowledged, or in other trades where there is express evidence of custom. Ib.

5. A mercantile house at Newry directs a house at Quebec to contract for the building of a ship, for which they (the Newry house), would send out the rigging. The Quebec house enters into a contract with some ship builders accordingly. The Newry house then direct their correspondent at Liverpool to send out the rigging; he does so; and it having been actually delivered to the Quebec house:—Held, that the property in it was vested in the Newry house, and that the Quebec house had a right to retain it against the Liverpool correspondent, on account of their lien on it for advances made to the builders, and payment of custom-house expenses, although previously to the delivery they had obtained an assignment of the ship to themselves from the builders, and had registered it in the name of one of the partners in their house. Rogerson v. Reid, 1 Knapp 362.

6. W. was appointed agent of a company for the sale of goods manufactured by it. Part of the arrangement was that the company should draw on W. against the goods assigned to him as agent. W. accepted a bill for 200*l.* at four months' date; before the bill arrived at maturity the company was ordered to be wound up, and the goods then in possession of W. were taken by the liquidators and sold by them. W. honoured the bill when it arrived at naturity:—Held, that W. had a lien on the goods to the extent of the payment by him in respect of the bill, and that he was entitled to be repaid the amount paid by him out of the proceeds of the sale of the goods. Re Pavy's Patent Felted Fabric Co., 45 L. J., Ch., 318; 1 L. R., Ch., 631; 24 W. R. 507.

7. S., who had for many years traded as a timber merchant in his own name, entered into an agreement with F. & Co., who were also timber merchants, to carry on his business thenceforth as their agent at a remuneration by way of a share of profits. The business was thenceforth carried on under this agreement, but in the name of S. as before. S. dealt with the timber in his possession as if he were the absolute owner of it (except as between himself and F. & Co.), and there was nothing done to inform the outside world of the change which had taken place. In the course of the business F. & Co. drew bills on S., which he accepted in his own name to be protected by F. & Co. Both F. & Co., and afterwards S., filed liquidation petitions. Before S.'s liquidation F. & Co.'s trustee demanded the timber in his hands, which was refused:—Held, that to the extent of the current bills S.'s estate had a lien on the timber. Exp. Buck, Re Fawcus, 3 L. R., Ch. D., 795; 34 L. T. 807.

V. INDEMNITY TO AGENT.

8. A merchant in London sold on commission for a merchant in Sweden three cargoes of timber not arrived in England, and the Swedish merchant drew on the London merchant a bill of exchange for part of the produce. The Swedish merchant then consigned two of the cargoes to H. & Co., of London, directing them to deliver to the London merchant the bills of lading, on the latter making acknowledgments (which the Swedish merchant was not entitled to require), and on accepting a bill of exchange for the remaining produce of the three cargoes, according to an account made out by himself (the Swedish merchant). The London merchant gave a notice to H. & Co. that he claimed the bills of lading without performing any part of the conditions, and on a subsequent occasion obtained possession of the bills of lading on the understanding that he would perform the conditions, and although he did not give the required acknowledgment, he accepted the bill, which H. & Co. negotiated, and paid over the proceeds to the order of the Swedish merchant:—Held, in a suit instituted by the London merchant against H. & Co. and the Swedish merchant, that H. & Co. were bound by notice of the London merchant's rights, who was entitled to be reimbursed by H. & Co. to the extent of the money received on the bill, the moneys paid by him for or in respect of the three cargoes, so far as these sums were not covered by the proceeds of the two cargoes received. Dresser v. Hoare, 2 Jur., N. S., 1151; 26 L. J., Ch., 51.

1. A principal is liable to reimburse his agent for the amount of damages incurred by him in defending an action on behalf of his principal, if the agent can show that the loss arose from the fact of his agency, that he was acting within the scope of his authority, that if he exceeded his instructions in the contract he entered into, such excess has been waived and the contract ratified by the principal, and that the loss was not attributable to any fault or laches on his own part. Frixione v. Tagliaferro, 4 W. R. 373.

2. In equity the liability of a principal to indemnify his agent is not confined to actual losses, but extends to all the liabilities of the agent incurred on behalf of the principal. Lacey v. Hill, Crowley's claim, 43 L. J., Ch., 551; 22 W. R. 586; 18 L. R., Eq., 182; 30 L. T. 484.

C., broker for H., entered into contracts for purchase of stock for the next settling day, 15th July 1870. The contracts were in the usual form, subject to the rules and usages of the Stock Exchange, and the broker's notes from time to time sent to H. also had these words. When that day arrived C., by request of H., and relying on a promise of H. to settle on that day the amount then due to C. for brokerage and losses, continued the contracts till next settling day. H. did not settle his account on the 15th. On the 16th the Norwich Bank, in which he was partner, stopped payment, and H. became in fact insolvent. C. was thereupon declared defaulter on the Exchange. According to the rules, all his transactions were immediately closed. No loss accrued to the principal by the closing of the transactions before the next settling day. Subsequently C. was readmitted to the Stock Exchange, on payment of a composition, but not the full amount of his debts. After such re-admission, members of the Stock Exchange were in effect forbidden by the rules of the Exchange to sue him for the balance of previous losses without the leave of the committee, which was rarely, if ever, granted, but no legal release was given to him. In a creditors' suit instituted for administering the estate of H., C. claimed for the whole amount shown to be due to him for brokerage and losses, by an account made up on the footing of all transactions being closed on the day of the insolvency of H., the amount of claim being calculated on the full amount of the liabilities of C. in respect of the contracts for stocks, and not the amount that he had actually paid on those contracts:—Held, first, that on the insolvency of H., the transactions might be closed according to the rules of the Stock Exchange, without affecting the right of C. to an indemnity from H. Ib.

Held, secondly, that C. not having had a legal release from claims under the contracts, but being still liable in law for the full amount, was entitled to claim against the estate of H. for the full amount of losses on the contract, including not only what he had actually paid, but also the amount for which he was legally liable. Ib.

3. Quære, whether a commission agent is entitled to be indemnified out of the proceeds of his principal's goods sold by him against all liabilities incurred by him on account of his principal, including the amount of an accommodation bill drawn by the principal and accepted by such agent. Hood v. Stallybrass, 3 L. R., App. Cas., 880; 38 L. T., N. S., 826; 27 W. R. 1.

VI. COMMISSION.

4. A confidential agent is in that character bound to keep regular accounts; having neglected to do so, and to preserve vouchers against himself, though he had preserved those in his own favour, on the ground of gross neglect of duty, was not allowed a charge in respect of bills of costs for business done as a solicitor. White v. Lincoln (Lady), 8 Ves. 363.

5. Reasonable commission, 2*s.* 6*d.* per cent., allowed to a country agent on discounts, though for a person resident in London, and paid through a banker there, if not colourable. Exp. Jones, 17 Ves. 332; 1 Rose 29.

6. A reasonable commission beyond legal interest, for extra incidental charges, as upon agency in the remittance of bills, not usurious. Baynes v. Fry, 15 Ves. 120.

7. Claim by the agent for expenses on account of the principal, which from the conduct of the agent undertaking the business without authority or agreement, could not be ascertained, disallowed. Beaumont v. Boultbee, 11 Ves. 358.

8. An executor in India is entitled to a commission of 5*l.* per cent. on all assets of a testator collected by him there, including the assets which he retains in respect of a legacy to himself, not given to him in the character of executor, and including moneys belonging to the testator, which were in the hands of a commercial house in which the executor was, and the testator had been, a partner. Cookerell v. Barber, 2 Russ. 585; 1 Sim. 23; 1 L. J., Ch., 77.

9. In taking the accounts between three partnerships, the first of A. & B., the second of A. B. & C., the third of B. & C., the partnership of B. & C. cannot charge commission for collecting the debts of the other two partnerships. Whittle v. M'Farlane, 1 Knapp 311.

1. An agent named executor is not entitled to charge commission on business done subsequently to the testator's death. Sheriff v. Axe, 4 Russ. 33.

2. Agents, being also appointed executors of the principal, are not entitled to commission upon remittances from India by the testator, not received till after his death. Hovey v. Blakeman, 4 Ves. 596.

3. In a suit by a principal against his steward and agent, the decree, in conformity to the prayer of the bill, directed an account to be taken of rents, profits, and timber money received by the defendant on the plaintiff's account; and also directed the Master, in taking the accounts, to make the parties all just allowances. The defendant was a solicitor, and had acted as such for the plaintiff, during his stewardship, and bills of course were due to him from plaintiff. The Master, at the plaintiff's request, taxed the bills, and in taking the accounts under the decree, included the reduced amounts of them amongst the just allowances to which defendant was entitled. The plaintiff excepted to the report on that account, and the Court allowed the exceptions. Jolliffe v. Hector, 12 Sim. 398.

4. The charge of 10*s.* per cent. for commission, besides the legal interest, on a loan of money, is not usurious, if it is referable to trouble and expense bonâ fide incurred by the lender; although he may not be a banker, or a person engaged in trade, or although the money lent is his own, and not that of other person. Exp. Gwyn, 2 Dea. & Ch. 12; 1 L. J., N. S., Bky., 73.

5. Property was assigned to the plaintiff (who was known to the assignor to be an auctioneer, though not described in the deed as such), upon trust to sell by public auction or private contract, and out of the sale moneys to pay the costs, charges, and expenses of preparing for, making, and completing such sales, "including the usual auctioneer's commission":—Held, that the plaintiff, if he acted as auctioneer at the sale, could retain his own commission. Douglas v. Archbutt, 2 De G. & J. 148; 27 L. J., Ch., 271.

6. Real estates, subject to encumbrances, the interest of which more than exhausted the rents, were conveyed by the mortgagor to trustees, upon trust for his creditors. After the execution of this creditor's deed, one of the trustees thereof was employed by the mortgagees as their agent to collect the rent:—Held, that he could not be allowed any commission out of the rents. Nicholson v. Tutin, 3 Kay & J. 159; 3 Jur., N. S., 235.

7. The plaintiffs appointed the defendant their agent for the sale of spirits at a commission. The defendant had made profits by the sale of the plaintiffs' goods, for which he had not given credit; he had also made profits by selling his own spirits mixed with those of his principals, and he had destroyed books of account pending the litigation. A court of equity disallowed him, in taking the accounts, the amount of commission, which, by the contract, he would have been entitled to if his conduct had been proper. Gray v. Haig, 20 Beav. 219.

A charge, made by an agent for the sale of goods against his principal, for an allowance in respect of warehousemen's salaries, disallowed, no such claim having been made in the accounts for fourteen years. Ib.

8. A land agent misconducting himself in the management of property, although receiving and accounting for the rents, may be disallowed his fees on the sum received by him. Palmer v. Goodwin, 13 Ir. Ch. R. 171.

9. The ordinary commission receivable by an agent on goods sold by him was 2½ per cent. Before actual sale by the agent, the goods were removed out of his hands by order of the principal:—Held, that the agent was entitled to one-half of the ordinary commission, being 1¼ per cent. Spain (Queen) v. Parr, 21 L. T., N. S., 555; 18 W. R. 110; 39 L. J., Ch., 73.

Merchants at Manilla received instructions from the government there to undertake the transport and shipment of a quantity of tobacco to merchants in London, to effect the insurance, and to pay all the necessary charges and expenses in relation thereto. The merchants at Manilla were to be entitled to charge 2½ per cent. on the amount, valued at about 47,000*l.* The supreme government of Spain, considering the officer at Manilla had acted incautiously in this respect, refused to allow the amount of the ordinary commission in the account, having directed the tobacco to be sold by their own agents here:—Held, that the consignees were entitled to a moiety of the amount of the ordinary commission, being 1¼ per cent. instead of 2½ per cent. Ib.

10. B. was an auctioneer. C. put a ship into his hands for sale, and it was agreed that if it was not sold by auction, but if a subsequent sale were effected to any person, led to make an offer "in consequence of B.'s mention or publication for auction purposes," he was to be entitled to a commission. The ship was not sold by auction, but afterwards P., having been present at a conversation which led him to believe that S. would purchase the ship, wrote to B., "noting that he had the ship in his hands," to inquire the price, etc. P. then communicated with S., who ultimately became the purchaser, but not through the agency of P.:—Held, that there was evidence to go to the jury that the sale was effected in consequence of B.'s mention or publication, within the meaning of the agreement, and that B. was entitled to his commission. Bailey v. Chadwick, 39 L. T. 429. Reversing 37 L. T. 593; and affirming 36 L. T. 740.

11. A company engaged a person to act as their agent for five years at a fixed salary, and also for a commission of 10 per cent. on the net profits in each year. The company was wound up before the termination of the five years:—Held, that he was not entitled to any compensation by way of damages for loss of commission during the unexpired part of the five years. Re English and Scottish Marine Insurance Co., Maclure's claim, 5 L. R., Ch., 737; 39 L. J., Ch., 685; 23 L. T. 685; 18 W. R. 1122.

12. An agent who has the business taken out of his hands before completion is by the custom of merchants entitled to half the commission which he would have earned by completing it. Burdick v. Garrick, 30 L. J., Ch., 369; 5 L. R., Ch., 233.

1. How taken.

1. An account decreed against a land agent for twenty-seven years previously to the filing of the bill under circumstances, but refused, as to certain gratuities received from tenants by the agent with the knowledge of the principal, which were charged to be extortionate, but by the exorbitance of which the principal was not proved to have been a loser, except so far as they were taken as fines. Palmer v. Browne, Beat. 540.

2. Account between principal and agent settled from loose papers, the agent having kept no regular books; after his death, liberty was given to surcharge and falsify upon allegation of errors since discovered. Hardwicke (Lord) v. Vernon, 4 Ves. 411.

3. Agent or bailiff, confounding his principal's property with his own, charged with the whole, except what he can prove to be his own; and in this instance, the case of a breach of the terms upon which the Court dissolved an injunction, the inquiry was directed with costs. The Court refused in such a case a prospective direction to admit books, not legal evidence, though usual in a fair case, as where from want of notice of an adverse claim a strict account cannot be given; merely giving liberty to apply upon any question of evidence. Lupton v. White, 15 Ves. 432.

4. Agent acting gratuitously charged with loss arising from failure of his bankers, having paid in the moneys to his own account. Agent depositing money with a banker to his own account cannot relieve himself from liability, by informing his principal of the payment, without a correct specification of the particulars. Massey v. Banner, 1 Jac. & Walk. 241. Affirming 4 Madd. 413.

5. Upon a bill filed against the executors of a land steward and paid agent, it was held, that his estate was liable to make good such sums as, but for his wilful neglect and default, he might have received. Salisbury v. Morrice, 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 114.

6. The plaintiff was the commercial agent of the East India Company at Amboyna. It was his duty to send his account to Jones, the company's agent at Banda, to examine and transmit to the governor of Madras. On the plaintiff's accounts there appeared a balance of 1,325 dollars against him; but on reference to the accounts kept by Jones of the same transactions, instead of a deficiency, 4,771 dollars appeared due to the plaintiff. The company then allowed the 1,325 only:—Held, that this was not a sufficient admission and recognition of the correctness of Jones's accounts as to entitle the plaintiff, without further evidence, to the 4,771 dollars. Farquhar v. East India Co., 8 Beav. 260.

7. M. employed R. & Co., bankers in Edinburgh, to obtain for him payment of a bill drawn on a person resident at Calcutta. R. & Co. accepted the employment, and wrote promising to credit him with the money when received. R. & Co. transmitted the bill in the usual course of business to C. & Co., of London, and by them it was forwarded to India, where it was duly paid. R. & Co. wrote to M. announcing the fact of its payment, but never actually credited him in their books with the amount. The house in India failed:—Held, that R. & Co. were the agents of M. to obtain payment of the bill; that payment having been actually made, they became ipso facto liable to him for the amount received; and that he could not be called on to suffer any loss occasioned by the conduct of their sub-agents, as between whom and himself no privity existed. Mackersy v. Ramsays, 9 Cl. & F. 818.

8. In a suit for an account against an agent, an admission by him in his answer that he had sold property of the principal on credit, which he insisted was according to the usual way of business, and the principal making out no case to the contrary, was held no sufficient ground for an inquiry as to wilful default. Pelham v. Hilder, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 3.

9. A commission to sell and transfer stock "when the funds shall be at 85 per cent. or above that price," is a particular commission under which an agent is bound to sell when the funds reach 85; and has not a general authority to act for his employer, so that he may defer selling till the funds should reach a higher price than 85. A mercantile house that had accepted such a commission, and had not sold when the funds reached 85, held therefore, in equity, to have made the stock their own from that time, and ordered to account to their employer for the price of it, with interest, he, in return, accounting to them for the dividends he had subsequently received in ignorance of the fact of the funds having reached that price. Bertram v. Godfrey, 1 Knapp 381.

10. The defendant, in a suit instituted against him as agent for an account, moved that certain accounts alleged in the bill to contain false entries might be produced, on an affidavit that the vouchers were lost, and that he could not otherwise put in a sufficient answer:—The motion was refused with costs. Turner v. Burkinshaw, 4 Giff. 399.

11. If a decree in any original suit merely directs a common account against an agent, a decree charging him with what he might without wilful default have received cannot be made in a supplemental suit. Connor v. Reeves, 16 Ir. Ch. R. 398.

12. An agent employed by a testator to collect rents, and continued in that employment by his trustees after his death, furnished accounts showing only the sums received and the names of the tenants who paid them:—Held, that the trustees were entitled to require such an account as would identify the particular properties from which the rents arose. Finch v. Burden, 12 L. T., N. S., 302.

2. Right to Discounts.

13. The 10 per cent. discount usually allowed by insurance companies on punctual payment of the premiums belongs, in the absence of agreement to the contrary, not to the insurance agent but to his principal. Spain (Queen) v. Parr, 39 L. J., Ch., 73.

1. The defendant, being an accoutrement maker, East India and general agent, was instructed to provide a cavalry outfit for the plantiff's son. The defendant obtained very large discounts from the tradesmen supplying the goods, but charged in his accounts with the plaintiff the full prices as if actually paid by him:—Held, that, although the defendant did not charge any general commission as agent, the amount of the trade discounts must be disallowed. Turnbull v. Garden, 20 L. T., N. S., 218.

3. Secret Profits.

2. Injunction until answer, restraining a transfer of stock standing in the name of a steward, on strong evidence, by affidavit, that it was the produce of his master's property, viz., rents, etc., received for many years without account; refused, as to money at his banker's in his name. Chedworth (Lord) v. Edwards, 8 Ves. 46.

3. If an agent employed to purchase an estate becomes the purchaser for himself, he is to be considered as a trustee for his principal. Lees v. Nuttall, 2 Myl. & K. 819. Affirming 1 Russ. & M. 53; Taml. 282.

4. An agent who was to have an emolument beyond his salary, decreed to account for profit made by a clandestine sale to his principal, on his own account, of timber purchased for a colliery: before it was applied to the use of the colliery, some of the owners retired, and it was paid for by those only who remained; the former owners are not necessary parties to a suit by those who remained, against the vendor on account of that sale. Massey v. Davies, 2 Ves. J. 317.

5. A covenanted servant of the East India Company, being a senior merchant, and acting as agent of the company (as resident or chief at one of their factories), is incapable of forming any contract whatsoever, in which the company is interested; so as to derive profit to himself, or any otherwise however than for the profit and advantage of the company. And if any such contract be actually made between him as a merchant dealing for himself, and the company board of trade in India, in which contract undue advantage is taken by him, by means of his knowledge and influence as resident at the factory, he cannot demur generally on ground of want of equity, to bill for discovery and relief by company. Henchman v. East India Co., 8 Bro. P. C. 85; 1 Ves. J. 289.

6. A person employed, on behalf of himself and co-partners, in negotiating the term of a lease, is not entitled to stipulate clandestinely with the lessors for any private advantage to himself. Where, therefore, a sum of 12,000*l.* was paid in pursuance of such a stipulation, the party receiving it was declared to hold it in trust for the partnership. Before the transaction was discovered, one of the partners withdrew; and subsequently, another partner assigned a share in the stock, and in his proportion of the claim, to persons then admitted into the concern:—Held, that the retired, the continuing, and the new partners were properly joined as co-plaintiffs in a suit to have the trust declared. Fawcett v. Whitehouse, 1 Russ. & M. 132; 4 L. J., Ch., 64; 8 L. J., Ch., 50.

7. An agent employed to purchase cannot buy his own goods for his principal, neither can an agent, employed to sell, purchase for himself his principal's goods. Principals may either repudiate such transactions altogether, or adopt and take the benefit of them. Bentley v. Craven, 18 Beav. 75.

8. C. was appointed manager of a bank in London, with permission to carry on his separate trade as a merchant. In that character he dealt with the bank of which he was manager on the terms usual between banker and customer. Upon one transaction in his separate trading, being possessed of certain bills for his own benefit, drawn and accepted by two firms reputed to be in good credit, he deposited them with the bank (not indorsing them), and obtained an advance upon them. The transaction was therefore not a discount but a loan. The drawers and acceptors of the bills subsequently became bankrupt:—Held, that C. was liable to make good the loss. Gwatkin v. Campbell, 1 Jur., N. S., 131.

A manager of a bank is not entitled to grant himself the same accommodation in respect of his separate trade which he might obtain from an independent banker; and it would be necessary for him, in order to sustain any such transaction, to show that he had brought the whole circumstances most fully and fairly before the directors. It is not enough to show merely that he had not concealed anything. If he could show that he had so brought the circumstances to their knowledge, or that the directors had sanctioned the proceeding subsequently, such a proceeding might, however, be permitted to stand. Ib.

9. A director of a railway company, who was also a member of a mercantile firm, entered into a contract qua director with such firm for the supply of certain iron chairs at a fixed price:—Held, that such a contract, although it might be enforced at law, was illegal in equity, upon general equitable principles, and would be set aside; and that no question could be raised as to the fairness or unfairness of a contract so entered into. Aberdeen Railway Co. v. Blaikie, 2 Eq. Rep. 1281.

In such a case the law of Scotland differs in no respect from the law of England. Ib.

10. The European Society, through their paid and confidential agent C., negotiated with the Etna Company, through their paid and confidential agent O., a transfer by the latter of a branch of their business to the former for 15,000*l.*; C. claimed from the Etna company, as a commission or a bonus for his services in the transaction, 2,000*l.*, which the latter having refused, he contrived that the purchase-money to be paid by his employers should be increased to 17,000*l.*, out of which the Etna Company secretly agreed to pay him the 2,000*l.* On the winding-up of the affairs of the Etna Company, O., alleging that there was an agreement between C. and him that he should get half the commission or bonus, made a claim of 1,000*l.* against the latter company:—Held, that such a claim could not be allowed. Re Owens, 7 Ir. R., Eq., 235. Affirmed 7 Ir., Eq., 424.

11. An agent for sale who takes an interest in a purchase negotiated by himself is bound to disclose to his principal the exact nature of his interest; and it is not enough merely to disclose that he has an interest, or to make statements such as would put the principal on inquiry. Dunne v. English, 18 L. R., Eq., 524; 31 L. T., N. S., 75.

In such a case the burden of proving that a full disclosure was made lies on the agent, and is not discharged merely by the agent swearing that he did so, if his evidence is contradicted by the principal, and not corroborated. Ib.

1. Although a confidential relation subsists between the beneficial owner and an agent employed by the trustee for the management of the trust property, yet there is no actual incapacity in the agent to purchase from the beneficial owner, even though the latter has not had the advantage of independent professional advice; in such a case, however, it is not sufficient for the agent to show that he gave the full value, he must go further, and show that he dealt with the beneficial owner at arm's length, and after a full disclosure of all that he knew with respect to the property. King v. Anderson, 8 Ir. R., Eq., 147.

2. Commission received by an agent or a trustee of a purchaser from a vendor without the knowledge of his principal is a bribe; it is a profit which the principal has a right to extract from the agent whenever it comes to his knowledge. Phosphate Sewage Co. v. Hartmont, 5 L. R., Ch. D., 394, 457.

3. The plaintiff, in 1868, consigned a ship to G. & Co., in China, for sale, fixing a minimum price of $90,000, and requiring cash payment. G. & Co. employed the defendant in Japan to sell the ship, with the same instructions. This was done with the knowledge and consent of the plaintiff. The defendant, having vainly attempted to sell the ship on the terms mentioned, took her himself for $90,000, and about the same time resold her to a Japanese prince for $160,000, payable as to $75,000 in cash, and the rest on credit. The plaintiff was not informed that the defendant had purchased the vessel himself, or that he had resold it, till June 1869, after the transaction was completed. The defendant paid $90,000 to G. & Co., who remitted it to the plaintiff, and eventually obtained the whole amount of $160,000 from the Japanese prince. In 1873 the plaintiff filed a bill in chancery to compel the defendant to account for the profit made by him in the resale of ship:—Held, first, that the relation of agent and principal was established between the defendant and the plaintiff, and existed at the time of the purchase and resale of the ship by the defendant, and that he was therefore liable to account to the plaintiff for the profit made by him in the transaction. De Bussche v. Alt, 8 L. R., Ch. D., 286; 47 L. J., Ch., 381; 38 L. T., N. S., 370.

Held, secondly, that there had been no such acquiescence or laches on the part of the plaintiff as to disentitle him to relief. Ib.

4. An agent cannot turn himself into a principal and deal with his real employers or principals on that footing without full and fair disclosure. Williamson v. Barbour, 9 L. R., Ch. D., 529; 50 L. J., Ch., 147; 37 L. T. 698.

A firm of merchants, formerly carrying on business at Calcutta, sued a firm at Manchester, who had acted as their agents on commission for the purchase and shipping to India of Manchester goods, to have the settled accounts between the parties, extending back for a period of nearly twenty years, opened; and to obtain repayment of certain alleged overcharges made by the defendants in their accounts with the plaintiffs. The defendants were charged with having bought goods at one price and invoiced them to the plaintiffs at an increased price; that having been instructed to buy white goods, they purchased grey goods and got them bleached, charging the plaintiffs more than the price of the grey goods plus the cost of bleaching; that they had not credited the plaintiffs with the discounts allowed to themselves; that they had charged for insurances that they had never effected; that they had sold their own goods to the plaintiffs at a profit; and that they had overcharged the plaintiffs in other ways. The main defences raised were, that the plaintiffs knew of the charges, and that they were in accordance with the custom of the Manchester trade, and that as regarded the insurances which had been charged for but not effected, the defendants had themselves insured:—Held, that the plaintiffs did not know of the overcharges, and that there was no custom of the Manchester trade to make such overcharges. Ib.

Held, also, that in a case between principals and agents, one case of proved fraudulent overcharge is sufficient to open the accounts between the parties, and that in the present case far more than enough had been proved to induce the Court to open the accounts, and that the usual decree for that purpose must be made. Ib.

5. The plaintiff, a merchant at Manchester, from time to time consigned, for shipment and sale abroad, goods to the defendants, a firm of traders at Manchester, who, with another person, were merchants in India. The defendants shipped their own and the plaintiff's goods to India, where they were sold by the member of the firm there, who purchased with the proceeds of sale other goods, which he remitted to the defendants at Manchester. He also sent to the defendants at Manchester an account, in which the plaintiff's goods sold in India were placed to his credit, and certain bills of exchange for the amount of proceeds of sale, less commission, were debited. These bills, in fact, never existed, but the defendants, in their statements of account with the plaintiff, placed the amount of the imaginary bills to his credit, debiting him with the cash advances made to him on the goods, and paying him the balance:—Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to an account of the profits on the goods purchased in India with the proceeds of the plaintiff's goods, the defendants being commission agents only. Kirkham v. Peel, 44 L. T. 195. Affirming 43 L. T. 171; 28 W. R. 941.

6. It is no answer to the rule, that persons standing in the situation of trustees or agents must account to their cestuis que trust or principals, or for all benefit which they themselves obtain by virtue of that character, that in the course of acquiring the benefit which has been derived by the trustee or agent, he incurred a possibility of loss; it is sufficient, if the transaction has resulted in gain obtained by virtue of the trusteeship or agency, to give the benefit to the cestui que trust. Williams v. Stevens, 1 L. R., P. C., 352; 15 W. R. 409; 36 L. J., P. C., 21; 4 Moo., P. C., N. S., 235.

1. The rule that an agent must account to his principal for any secret profit made in the course of his agency does not apply where the principal is aware that the agent is remunerated by some allowance from the other parties, but is under a misapprehension (but not misinformed) as to its actual extent. Great Western Insurance Company of New York v. Cunliffe, 43 L. J., Ch., 741; 9 L. R., Ch., 525; 31 L. T., N. S., 661.

A marine insurance company in New York employed merchants in this country as their agents to settle claims and grant insurances, and also to effect re-insurances. A percentage was paid by the company on the first two classes of business, but the agents were remunerated as to the re-insurances by the brokerage allowed to them by the underwriters. They charged the company the full amount of the premiums, but were allowed by the underwriters, first, 5 per cent. on the premiums; and, secondly, 12 per cent. on the balance (if any) payable by them to the underwriters on the account for the year, crediting the underwriters with the premiums (less the 5 per cent.), and debiting losses. This was according to the usual custom on the credit system as between brokers and underwriters, but the 12 per cent. allowance was for some time unknown to the company:—Held, that the agents were entitled to both the percentages. Ib.

A claim against an agent in the nature of damages for neglect of duty cannot be passed as an item in taking an account between principal and agent, but must be enforced in an action at law. Ib.

2. It is an inflexible rule of a court of equity that no agent can be allowed, in the matter of his agency, to make any profit for himself without the knowledge and consent of his principal, and the fact that the principal did not suffer any injury by reason of the dealing of the agent, cannot be taken into consideration in the application of the rule. Parker v. McKenna, 44 L. J., Ch., 425; 10 L. R., Ch., 96; 31 L. T., N. S., 739.

3. B. having bought shares in a company at 2*l.* per share, and knowing that K. was desirous to buy such shares, represented that he knew of some shares which were to be had for 3*l.* or less, and requested K. to give him authority to buy at that price. K. gave him authority, but told B. to do his best for him, and to get them for less if possible. B. transferred his shares to K. at 3*l.* per share, pretending that another person was the vendor:—Held, that B. must account to K. for the difference between the price at which he bought and the price at which he sold the shares to K. Kimber v. Barber, 8 L. R., Ch., 56; 27 L. T. 526; 21 W. R. 65.

4. When an agent for the sale of an estate colludes with a purchaser, and in consideration of a bribe or honorarium allows the purchaser to obtain the estate at less than its value, with a view to a sale at a higher price to a sub-purchaser, and the transaction is concealed from the vendor, both agent and purchaser will be held jointly and severally liable to pay to the vendor the increased amount obtained by the sub-sale. Morgan v. Elford, 4 L. R., Ch. D., 352.

On appeal, the Court, being of opinion on the evidence and correspondence that the bargain between the agent and the owner was that the agent should have whatever the estate fetched above a certain price, dismissed the bill without giving any opinion on the above points. Ib.

4. Interest.

Right of Agent against Principal.] 5. The defendant wrote to his receiver and professional agent as follows:—"If you will remit the 400*l.*, I can give you a note for it when you come to London." The money was advanced, but no note signed:—Held, that a special contract must be inferred, and that interest was payable by the defendant. Rhoades v. Selsey (Lord), 2 Beav. 359.

6. An agent, who managed the money matters and investments of his principal, rendered accounts charging interest on the mortgages as received, and representing that there were no arrears. He also paid over the balances appearing due on such accounts:—Held, that the agent could not, on the death of the principal, charge his estate with the interest, on the plea that it had not been actually received from the mortgagors, but had been advanced by the agent to the principal for his accommodation. He was, however, allowed to use the name of the representatives of the principal to recover what might be due from the mortgagors on giving an indemnity. Owens v. Kirby, 30 Beav. 31.

Right of Principal against Agent.] 7. Public accountants must account for interest made by them on any considerable balances in their hands of money, being the proceeds of public property sold by them pursuant to appointment, although they have necessary payments to make in course of their duty, if their instructions direct payment of proceeds into bank, and point out course of supplying themselves for such necessary payments. Crawfurd v. Att.-Gen., 7 Price 2.

8. Interest and costs decreed against a steward upon fraud, wilful concealment, etc., and in such cases, generally, there is no limitation of time. Hardwicke (Earl) v. Vernon, 14 Ves. 504.

9. Agent by the desire of his principal keeping large sums in his hands, for which he was to be responsible from time to time, and duly accounting, not liable to interest even supposing he employed it. Chedworth (Lord) v. Edwards, 8 Ves. 48.

10. Agent of an administrator keeping money of the intestate's in his hands, which he had proposed to his principal to lay out in the funds, ordered to pay interest with annual rests. Brown v. Southhouse, 3 Bro. C. C. 107.

11. Scrivener, etc., receiving money, and giving a note to place it out at interest, is bound to do so, and is not discharged from paying interest for it, unless his employer accepts the security and interest; balance of an account stated by such scrivener, etc., will carry interest. Barwell v. Parker, 2 Ves. 364.

12. The captain of a ship dies leaving money on board, the mate becomes captain, and improves the money, he shall, on allowance made him for his care in the management of the money, account for the profits and not the interest only. Brown v. Litton, 1 P. W. 140.

13. An agent had for several years stated accounts with his principals, in which he was not charged with interest on the balances in his hands, but in the last account, settled previous to his discharge, was debited with interest on several half-yearly balances; on his discharge he furnished an account not charging himself with interest; but on a bill filed to enforce payment of the balance then due, interest was given on it. Batemans v. M'Elligott, 7 Ir. Eq. R. 471.

1. A firm in India collected the estate of a deceased person in that country under power of attorney from the administratrix in England, and remitted the amount to their agents, a firm in London, with an order to pay it to the administratrix upon receiving a proper discharge. The London firm declined to pay over the fund to the administratrix, on the ground that the letters of administration which she had obtained did not bear a sufficient stamp. A suit was soon afterwards instituted by other persons, claiming to be next of kin of the intestate, for the administration of the estate and to restrain the payment to the intestate. The London firm were defendants to the suit. No application was made to pay the money into court for upwards of ten years, and during the whole of this period it remained in the hands of the London firm, mixed with their own moneys:—Held, that the London firm was not liable to pay interest on such moneys. Wolfe v. Findlay, 6 Hare 66; 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 241; 11 Jur. 82.

2. An agent had the entire management of the affairs of his principal for several years, during which he was never called upon to account; errors were then discovered in some accounts furnished by him, and he paid a small sum admitted to be due, alleging that this was a final settlement, and that only a small sum, if anything more, was due. On a bill being filed, and the accounts being taken, a large sum was found due from him:—Held, that, under the circumstances, fraud not being proved, he was not chargeable with interest on the balances in his hands until the date of the certificate. Turner v. Burkinshaw, 2 L. R., Ch., 488; 15 W. R. 753.

3. To a bill against an agent for an account and payment of balance due, the defendant answered, that he had paid over more than he had received, and he claimed a balance due to him. It being proved that the balance was against him:—Held, that he must pay, in addition to the balance due from him, the costs of suit. Fry v. Fry, 10 Jur., N. S., 983.

The bill did not pray interest, but held, that the defendant was chargeable with interest at 5*l.* per cent. from the filing of the bill. Ib.

4. An agent, who was a solicitor in London, held a power of attorney from his principal in America to sell his property and invest the proceeds in his name. The agent received certain moneys under the power and paid them into his own banker's to the general account of his firm. The principal died in 1859 intestate. In 1867 his widow took out administration to his estate, and in 1868 she filed a bill against the agent for an account. There being no proof that the agent had made any interest or profit by the money in his hands, he was charged with simple interest at 5*l.* per cent. Burdick v. Garrick, 5 L. R., Ch., 233; 39 L. J., Ch., 369.

5. Suits for, by Agent against Principal.

5. It does not follow that, because a principal is entitled to have an account taken in equity as against his agent, the agent has a similar right against his principal, for the right of the principal rests on the trust and confidence reposed in the agent, but the agent reposes no such trust or confidence in the principal. Padwick v. Stanley, 9 Hare 627; 16 Jur. 586.

Plaintiff had advanced to the defendant various sums of money, and procured other sums to be advanced to him on bills and notes on which the plaintiff was liable. These transactions extended over a long time, and the defendant had the documents necessary to take the accounts satisfactorily. The bill thereupon prayed an account and discovery, and to have the bills, etc., paid off, and the plaintiff discharged from his liability:—Held, on demurrer, that these were not such accounts as entitled the plaintiff to relief, whatever might have been the event had discovery alone been prayed. Ib.

Complication of accounts, where the receipts have been all on one side, if it ever alone constitutes sufficient ground for the intervention of a court of equity, must show a very strong case of entanglement. Ib.

6. Where a salary is payable to a servant in proportion to the profits of his employers, the question whether the servant has a right to come into equity for an account and payment, in lieu of suing at law, depends upon whether the accounts are of a too complicated nature to be gone into by a jury. Harrington v. Churchward, 6 Jur., N. S., 576; 29 L. J., Ch., 521; 8 W. R. 302.

7. An agent entitled to receive a commission on business done for his principal cannot, on those grounds alone, maintain a bill for an account against the principal. Smith v. Leveaux, 1 Hem. & M. 123; 9 Jur., N. S., 1140; 12 W. R. 31; 33 L. J., Ch., 167; 9 L. T., N. S., 313; 3 N. R. 18. Reversing 2 N. R. 267.

A trading firm agreed to give to an agent a commission on orders obtained by himself, and a commission at a different rate on orders not obtained by him, but given by persons first introduced by him:—Held, that the fact that the agent must in general be ignorant of the latter class of orders did not entitle him to file a bill against his principals for an account of what was due to him for commission, but that his remedy was at law. S. C. 2 De G. J. & S. 1.

8. An action at law being brought to recover the produce of some foreign specie remitted by a merchant abroad to an agent in London, the agent filed his bill, alleging generally that there were mutual dealings and transactions between the parties, and praying that an account might be taken of them, and for an injunction:—A demurrer was allowed. Fristas v. Dos Santos, 1 Y. & J. 574. See also 2 Y. & J. 33.

9. If A. is employed by B. as his agent at a fixed salary, A. may nevertheless enter into a contract, apart from his ordinary duties, to perform works for B., and may come to the court for an account of moneys received by B., to which he considers himself entitled under the contracts. Waters v. Shaftesbury (Earl), 12 Jur., N. S., 311; 14 W. R. 572; 14 L. T., N. S., 184.

Two deeds were executed between a company, a landowner, and the agent or steward of the latter, the effect of which would have been to constitute the agent contractor for the execution of improvements upon the land, which were about to be effected, for a certain sum of money, to be advanced by the company to the landowner for the purpose. The works having been completed under the agent's superintendence for a less sum, the agent filed a bill against the landowner, claiming as contractor's profit the difference between the actual cost and the sum actually advanced to the landowner by the company:—Held, on appeal, that it was competent to the defendant to show that the intention of the parties, when the deeds were executed, was that the plaintiff should be only nominally the contractor, and the evidence establishing this, that he was not entitled to the profit he claimed. S. C. 15 W. R. 289; 15 L. T., N. S., 489.

1. A party filed a bill against persons who claimed various interests in a fund then in his hands, praying for an account, and that the rights of such persons might be ascertained; and for an injunction to restrain an action which had been brought against him by one of such persons for the recovery of the fund, to which action the plaintiff had pleaded equitable pleas. The plaintiff admitted by his bill that he held the fund as agent or trustee, and himself claimed an interest:—Held, that he was entitled to maintain his bill, being in the nature of a bill of interpleader, to ascertain his rights as well as those of third parties. Blyth v. Whiffin, 27 L. T. 330.

An agent cannot file a bill against a principal, or a principal against an agent, for an account, except in the case of complicated accounts, where there is an insufficient remedy at law. Ib.

2. The fact of a person receiving money from his principal and paying money for him or to him, and lending him money, where the account consists simply in receipts and payments by the agent to or on behalf of the principal, does not constitute a case of mutual accounts, so as to justify the agent in filing a bill against his principal for an account. Padwick v. Hurst, 18 Beav. 575; 18 Jur. 763; 23 L. J., Ch., 657.

3. A., by his bill, alleged that he was employed by the defendants to obtain orders for goods on commission; that orders had been given to the defendants in consequence of his introduction, the commission on which they refused to pay; and he prayed for discovery and an account:—A demurrer, on the ground that an account might be taken at law, and that the Court had no jurisdiction, was overruled, with costs. Shepard v. Brown, 9 Jur., N. S., 195; 11 W. R. 162; 7 L. T., N. S., 499.

6. Suits for, by Principal against Agent.

4. Bill for account will lie by principal against agent. Mackenzie v. Johnston, 4 Madd. 373. See S. P. id. 417.

5. A man swears he received money as a menial servant, and paid it over to his master. He shall not account for it again. Anon., 1 Vern. 136. S. P. Potts v. Potts, id. 207. But see id. 95.

6. To sustain bill for account there must be mutual demands. The case of dower stands on its own specialities; so the case of a steward, etc. Dinwiddie v. Bailey, 6 Ves. 141.

7. Bill for an account by a principal against his agent and a person employed by the latter as his sub-agent dismissed as against both, notwithstanding the sub-agent had had the entire management of the principal's affairs, and had communicated with him directly on the subject of them. Lockwood v. Abdy, 14 Sim. 437; 9 Jur. 267.

8. The bare relation of principal and agent is not sufficient to entitle the former to relief in equity if the account can be fairly tried at law. King v. Rossett, 2 Y. & J. 33. And see 1 G. & J. 574.

9. A. had long employed B. as his steward, professional adviser, and general confidential agent; disputes having arisen between them, an agreement was entered into between B., and a clergyman acting on behalf of A., by which a gross sum was to be paid to B., in lieu of all his claims; but no accounts or vouchers were rendered or produced by A., nor any bill of costs delivered: that agreement will not protect B. from rendering an account to his principal. Jenkins v. Gould, 3 Russ. 385.

Disputes existing between A. and his solicitor, receiver, and confidential agent, B., which involved long and intricate matters of account, an authority was given by A. to a third person, to settle any account in which he, A., had an interest, and to compromise any claims which he might have; such an authority will not empower that third person to make an agreement, without the production or examination of any account, that a gross sum should be paid to B. in lieu of all his demands on A. Ib.

10. Where notice is given by a party to his agent in a particular adventure, that another person is jointly interested with him in the adventure, this primâ facie imposes upon the agent the necessity of accounting with such other person for his share of the adventure; but this obligation ceases to exist if the transaction shows that it was the intention of such other person, and of the party originally interested in the adventure, that the agents should account solely with the latter. Killock v. Greg, 4 Russ. 285.

11. On suspicious circumstances in the answer, a general account was decreed against a steward, notwithstanding a receipt in full, which was allowed only as proof of the particular payment, not of a general release or discharge upon an account stated; though under circumstances it might have that effect, as upon proof that the principal never would give any vouchers, and an account kept by the steward. Middleditch v. Sharland, 5 Ves. 87.

12. Servant taking by collusion more than belongs to his office must account; so must a stranger upon a bargain with a servant, which is a fraud on the master. East India Co. v. Henchman, 1 Ves. J. 289.

13. Account opened, and general account decreed against an agent who was also tenant to his principal, in respect of fraud; and laches in landlord under the circumstances, not an objection. Beaumont v. Boultbee, 7 Ves. 599; 5 Ves. 485.

14. A receiver to the guardian of an infant, who has his account allowed him by the guardian, shall not be obliged to account over again to the infant when he comes of age. Clavering's case, Pre. Ch. 535.

15. A trustee empowered S. to manage a trust estate. S. accounted to him. The trustee died, yet S. was decreed to account again to cestui que trust. Pollard v. Downes, 2 Ch. Ca. 121.

1. Account against a confidential agent in possession of estates since 1780, without giving any account to his principal, residing in Ireland, and an inquiry into the circumstances of a lease granted under his direction, and in which he took an interest. Ormond (Lady) v. Hutchinson, 13 Ves. 47. Affirmed 16 Ves. 94.

2. If an agent does not render his accounts within a reasonable time, he must bear the costs of a suit instituted to have the accounts taken, and it will not be any excuse for him that he offered to pay on account a gross sum, which it turns out would have covered all that was due from him. Collyer v. Dudley, T. & R. 421.

3. A broker or agent being employed by a customer to sell foreign stock, on a day specified by him in a letter of instructions, purchased the stock in the name of his partners, a firm in Paris, at the market price of the day. Being also employed to purchase foreign stock and bonds for his customer, according to his, the agent's, recommendation, he transmitted accounts of the transactions to his employer, with broker's notes, etc., as if he had purchased the stock of third persons. In fact, no stock or bonds were purchased; no transfers were made; no broker's notes passed; but the sales were nominal of stock and bonds remaining in the hands of the agent and his partners, and not set apart to nor appropriated to the customer. In order to effect these purchases, loans of money were made by the agent to the customer, upon agreement that the stock and bonds should remain as a deposit in the hands of the agent, to secure the repayment of money advanced. The stock and bonds were afterwards sold at a loss under the advice of the agent. In 1819 an account of these transactions was rendered, and settled between the customer and the agent; and great loss having been incurred upon the transactions, a large balance was paid by the customer to the agent. Upon bill filed in 1824 all the transactions were set aside, and an account decreed against the agent. Rothschild v. Brookman, 5 Bli. N. S. 165; 2 Dow & Cl. 188. Affirming 3 Sim. 153; 7 L. J., Ch., 163.

4. A bill for account will lie against a banker by his customers. A mere general charge that accounts are intricate, and cannot be taken without the assistance of a court of equity, is not sufficient to sustain a bill for an account, unless the bill states circumstances from which it may fairly be presumed that the charge is true. Bowles v. Orr, 1 Y. & Coll. 464.

5. An account between a banker and his customer consisting of three items only, and interest:—Held, not to be a proper subject for a bill in equity. Foley v. Hill, 1 Ph. 399; 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 182; 8 Jur. 347.

6. M., owner of a ship, lets it to the commissioners of the navy, and appoints T. his factor and attorney, with power to receive the freight and profits, and to compare and transact with the commissioners. T. settled the account, and took a navy bill for the money to M.; he then sells it, and indorses it as attorney for M. Quære, whether M. bound. Ekins v. Macklish, Ambl. 184.

7. Infant cannot be made to account as factor. Smally v. Smally, 1 Eq. Ab. 6.

8. Receiver of a public trust, having a salary, making interest of balances in his hands, is accountable to the trustees for interest made ultra, notwithstanding prior accounts settled without demanding it. Lonsdale (Earl) v. Church, 3 Bro. C. C. 4. See 7 Price 45.

9. A. appoints B. his deputy in the execution of an office, and by articles it is agreed, that B. shall account with A. for all fees, etc., according to the table of fees belonging to the office, and pay him three-fourth parts thereof and retain the other fourth part for his trouble. Certain fees are received by B., which he insists upon being solely entitled to, because not contained in the table:—Held, that B. should account with A. for all fees ascertained by the table, according to the table, and for all fees not mentioned therein according to his receipts, and pay over three-fourths of the whole to A. Machen v. Stanyon, 1 Bro. P. C. 133.

10. A servant and agent had been in the habit of rendering accounts from time to time of his receipts and expenses, which were duly entered in the books of his principals. Having left their service, he brought an action against them for salary. They thereupon filed a bill for an account, claiming also damages, and denying that the salary was due:—Held, that the accounts could not be opened, that the question of damages and salary was a legal question, and that the bill could not be maintained. Hunter v. Belcher, 10 Jur., N. S., 663; 12 W. R. 782; 2 De G. J. & S. 194.

11. The plaintiff, a merchant in India, consigned goods to A., of Liverpool, to sell on his account, and drew bills against the goods, which A. accepted. A. then placed the goods in the hands of B., his correspondent in London, with instructions to sell them or cause them to be sold, and drew a bill upon B. for 1,680*l.*, which B. accepted on the security of the goods, but with notice that the plaintiff had consigned the goods to A. for sale on his account. A. became insolvent, leaving the bills drawn by the plaintiff unpaid. B. paid the bill for 1,680*l.*, and then sold the goods for 1,300*l.* A bill filed by the plaintiff against A. and B. for an account and payment, by B., of the proceeds of the goods, was dismissed with costs. Navulshaw v. Brownrigg, 1 Sim. N. S. 573; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 57; 15 Jur. 985. Affirmed 2 De G. M. & G. 241; 16 Jur. 979; 21 L. J., Ch., 908.

A bill for an account, by a principal against his agent, is not sustainable where the transaction to which it relates is a single transaction not tainted with fraud, and the plaintiff has a remedy at law. Ib.

12. A. having admitted B. to an interest in an adventure, B. makes remittances to the agent of the concern in London, which he directs to be carried to the account of A., and he also remits money to A., for A. to remit to the agent on his account; the agent kept the account with A. only:—Held, that B. could not sustain a bill for an account against the agent. Maxwell v. Greg, 6 L. J., Ch., 128.

13. A. had a title to some houses which, on going abroad, he committed to the care of his brother, who afterwards becoming a prisoner, defendant entered and enjoyed several years:—Decreed, he should account to A. Lister v. Lister, Ca. temp. Finch. 285.

14. It is no objection to a claim or bill filed for an account against a confidential agent that he has been also employed as a solicitor in respect of the same matter. Oddy v. Secker, 2 Sm. & G. 193.

1. The bare relation of principal and agent does not entitle the principal to come into equity for an account, if the matter can be fairly tried at law. Barry v. Stevens, 31 Beav. 258; 31 L. J., Ch., 785; 10 W. R. 822; 6 L. T., N. S., 568.

2. Where the relation between a principal and an agent partakes of a fiduciary character, the Court has jurisdiction, and will direct an account, though the receipts and payments are all on one side. Hemmings v. Pugh, 4 Giff. 456; 9 L. T., N. S., 283; 12 W. R. 44; 9 Jur., N. S., 1124.

Demurrer to a bill alleging that the defendant had received sums of money as agent for the plaintiff, the particulars and amount of which were unknown to the plaintiff, and praying for an account and full discovery of every sum of money received by the defendant for the plaintiff, allowed. Ib.

3. When a bill against an agent for an account alleges certain specific questions that have arisen as the ground for taking the account, and these questions are decided against the plaintiff, the bill will be dismissed. Great Western Insurance Company of New York v. Cunliffe, 9 L. R., Ch., 525; 43 L. J., Ch., 741; 31 L. T. 661.

4. When a defendant, who was agent for trustees of a trust estate, admitted that he was liable to account, and that he had in his possession securities belonging to the trust estate, the Court, on motion by the trustees, notice of which was given to the defendant, made an order directing him to account and to hand over the securities. Rumsey v. Reade, 1 L. R., Ch. D., 643; 45 L. J., Ch., 489; 33 L. T. 803; 24 W. R. 245.

5. Overseers of a parish appointed the defendant collector of the rates. The defendant entered into a bond with the overseers by name, the condition being, that he should duly account to the then overseers and their successors in office. The defendant, having accounted to the overseers who appointed him, retired from office. The plaintiffs came into office as overseers after the defendant's retirement. They filed a bill for an account, and for delivery up of the parish rate-books. The defendant refused to account to them, on the ground that he was not their agent, or liable to account to them, and also on the ground that he had already accounted to the persons who employed him. A decree was made for an account and delivery up of the books, but no accounts settled between the defendant and the late overseers to be opened. Sellar v. Griffin, 9 Jur., N. S., 612; 33 L. J., Ch., 6; 32 Beav. 542.

6. A principal cannot file a bill against an agent for an account, except in the case of complicated accounts, where there is an insufficient remedy at law. Blyth v. Whiffin, 27 L. T., N. S., 330.

7. The character of the defendant as agent, accompanying him in his situation as tenant, deprives him of the benefit of an objection that might be competent to another person; as the neglect of the plaintiff in not bringing forward the demand at an earlier period. Beaumont v. Boultbee, 5 Ves. 485; 7 Ves. 599.

Account opened, and general account decreed, against an agent who was also a tenant to his principal, in respect of fraud; and laches in landlord, under circumstances, not an objection. Ib.

8. A. placed moneys in the hands of her solicitor, who acted also for her as a money scrivener, undertaking to find securities for her. He placed the moneys out on insufficient securities, misrepresenting to her their character:—Held, that as against him, if living, it would have been, and as against his estate after his death it was not a matter for an action for negligence, but a matter of account between principal and agent, and the client had a right to reject the charges for disbursements on the insufficient securities. Smith v. Pococke, 2 Drew. 197; 18 Jur. 478; 23 L. J., Ch., 545.

9. The plaintiff, a solicitor, employed the defendant for some years as an occasional clerk and to collect rents, without having fixed the terms of his remuneration; and it appeared that there were mutual receipts and payments of money. Upon motion for injunction to restrain the defendant's action at law:—Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to an injunction. The mere fact of mutual receipts and payments cannot be said to give the right to an account in equity. The account must be not merely from the number of items, but from its own nature, so complicated that it could not be taken in a court of law. Fluker v. Taylor, 3 Drew. 183.

10. A principal is not estopped from obtaining relief in equity against his agent, on the ground that he has remedy at law. Williams v. Trye, 18 Jur. 442; 23 L. J., Ch., 860.

The illegality of a transaction between principal and agent is not necessarily a bar to a suit in equity seeking for an account of such transactions. Ib.

11. The plaintiffs were a company of shipowners, on whose behalf the defendant, as their broker, had effected policies. The Company had instituted proceedings in a competent court in Genoa against the defendant for an account, to which suit he had appeared. Before final decree in the foreign court, he commenced actions in England against the insurers upon one of the policies which had resulted in a loss:—Held, that it was competent for the company to file a bill to restrain the action, and to have a receiver of the policy moneys pending the foreign litigation. Transatlantic Co. v. Pietroni, 1 Johns. 604.

12. The nature of the employment of a confidential steward or agent imposes upon him the duty of keeping and rendering proper accounts of all his dealings and transactions with his employer; and where no regular settlement of accounts has taken place between the employer and such steward or agent, there is a right to have the accounts taken under a decree of the Court; but a bill by an administrator for such an account was dismissed, with costs, it appearing that the defendant had not undertaken the duty of keeping accounts, and that his education and capacity, as well as the course of dealing between him and his employer, were inconsistent with the notion of his keeping regular accounts. Tindall v. Powell, 4 Jur., N. S., 944; 6 W. R. 850.

13. An agent who is empowered to retain in his own hands his principal's money, for the purpose of investment, is a trustee for his principal, and cannot set up the Statute of Limitations as a bar to a suit for an account. Burdick v. Garrick, 39 L. J., Ch., 369; 5 L. R., Ch., 233.

A gentleman resident in America, by power of attorney authorized two people in England, one of whom was a solicitor, to get in and sell his property here and reinvest the proceeds, and generally deal with it for his benefit; he died intestate in 1859, whereupon the agents pay the moneys which they had then received under the power, and which had not been reinvested, into a bank to the account of the firm of which the solicitor was a member; in 1867 letters of administration were taken out to the intestate by his widow, who filed a bill against the agents for an account:—Held, that the agents were trustees for their principal, and could not set up the Statute of Limitations against his personal representative. Ib.

1. A government which de facto succeeds to any other government, whether by revolution or restoration, conquest or re-conquest, succeeds to all the public property of the displaced power, and it would have the right to call to account any fiscal or other agent who had been the agent of such displaced government. United States of America v. McRae, 20 L. T., N. S., 476; 8 L. R., Eq., 69; 38 L. J., Ch., 406; 17 W. R. 764.

But in a suit by a foreign government against such an agent for an account, it must be alleged and proved that such government has an equity, and not simply a legal right to the moneys or goods, which such agent is alleged to have had come into his hands in his character of agent for such displaced government. Ib.

2. As a general rule a bill for an account lies in equity by a principal against his agent, the fiduciary character of the relation between the parties being sufficient to support the bill. In such a case it is immaterial that there is no reciprocity of receipts and payments. Observations on Phillips v. Phillips (9 Hare 471). Makepeace v. Rogers, 11 Jur., N. S., 215; 34 L. J., Ch., 896; 13 W. R. 450, 566; 12 L. T., N. S., 12, 221; 4 De G. J. & S. 649; 5 N. R. 199.

A landowner may maintain a suit in equity against the agent and manager of his estates, if the object of such suit is either to obtain an account (and in that case allegations of fraud or special circumstances are necessary), or to obtain the delivery up by the agent of documents in his hands belonging to the landowner. Ib.

A bill by a landowner and principal against his receiver and agent alleged the receipt by the latter of rents, purchase moneys of real estates, and dividends on stock and shares, and charged possession of documents belonging to the principal. An account and delivery of the documents were prayed. Demurrer to the bill overruled, with costs. Ib.

The prayer for the delivery of documents would of itself have been sufficient to sustain the bill. Ib.

7. Period.

3. Interest and costs decreed against a steward upon fraud, wilful concealment, etc., and in such cases generally there is no limitation of time. Hardwicke (Earl) v. Vernon, 14 Ves. 504.

4. An account decreed against a land agent for twenty-seven years previous to the filing of the bill under the circumstances, but refused as to certain gratuities received from tenants by the agent with the knowledge of his principal, which were charged to be extortionate, but by the exorbitance of which the principal was not proved to have been a loser, except so far as they were taken as fines. Palmer v. Browne, Beat. 540.

5. Fraudulent accounts between a principal and factor opened from the beginning, the Court holding that the relief ought not, under such circumstances, to be limited to a right to surcharge and falsify. Clarke v. Tipping, 9 Beav. 282.

6. A. filed a bill against B., who had been his commercial traveller, charging misconduct and asking for an account during the term of service and payment by way of damages, and stating that in 1861 he had written to B., directing him to send him a special account. B., who denied the misconduct, stated that he had always given A. a general account:—Held, that A. was only entitled to an account since the date of the letter requiring B. to keep an account prospectively. Hunter v. Belcher, 12 W. R. 121; 9 L. T., N. S., 501; 10 Jur., N. S., 663.

Held, also, that even if any particular damage or misconduct had been proved, the Court had no jurisdiction over such a matter. Ib.

7. If a company does not discover, and has not the means of discovering, the correctness of entries in a succession of accounts rendered by their agent, they are not, after the decease of the agent, precluded by lapse of time, or by certain shareholders omitting, against opposition, to press for explanations previously asked, from showing that such entries are not only erroneous but fraudulent. Stainton v. Carron Co., 24 Beav. 346; 3 Jur., N. S., 1235; 27 L. J., Ch., 89.

Where the accounts of an agent acting for a company have been improperly kept, or mystified, and not duly rendered and explained when asked for, the Court will direct them to be taken through a period of twenty-five years, though accounts sent in had been acted on, and though shareholders who asked for further information and explanation on such accounts did not persevere to obtain them. Ib.

A large shareholder was the manager of the affairs of a company. He rendered accounts regularly from 1826 to his death in 1851. These accounts were not challenged in his life, but after his death items exceeding 2,000*l.* a year were questioned by the company, for which no vouchers could be produced and no satisfactory explanation given. The account was opened for the whole period of twenty-five years, and it was directed to be taken with special directions. Ib.

Distinction between the cases where the business of a company is conducted by a mere agent and where it is managed by a shareholder who is a quasi co-partner. Ib.

A decree was made in a suit for taking and adjusting a complicated series of accounts. The decree was limited to 1825, under the impression that all previous accounts were correct.

Upon discovery that errors existed in the earlier accounts, another suit was instituted, and after proceedings had been taken a compromise was made, under which a sum of 220,000*l.* was paid by the plaintiffs. On motion for an injunction to restrain proceedings in Scotland, a question was made, whether the order for compromise precluded the taking of accounts prior to 1825, or whether that order included all the accounts between the parties. Romilly, M. R., decided that the earlier accounts must be taken, and for that purpose he set aside the compromise. On appeal:—Held, that the compromise was binding from 1825, and the defendants electing to so consider it, the Court varied the order of Romilly, M. R., by directing the accounts prior to 1825 only to be taken. S. C. 7 Jur., N. S., 645; 30 L. J., Ch., 713; 4 L. T., N. S., 659; 6 Jur., N. S., 360; 29 L. J., Ch., 587.

1. An agent who is empowered to retain in his own hands his principal's money, for the purpose of investment, is a trustee for his principal, and cannot set up the Statute of Limitations as a bar to a suit for an account. Burdick v. Garrick, 5 L. R., Ch., 233; 39 L. J., Ch., 369.

2. When accounts are impeached and it is shown that they contain errors of considerable extent both in number and amount, whether caused by mistake or fraud, the Court will order such accounts, though extending over a long period of years, to be opened, and will not merely give liberty to surcharge and falsify; and supposing a fiduciary relation to exist between the parties, the Court will make a similar order if such accounts are shown to contain a less number of errors, or if they contain any fraudulent entries. Williamson v. Barbour, 9 L. R., Ch. D., 529; 37 L. T. 698; 50 L. J., Ch., 147.

Semble, in an action between principals and agents impeaching the agents' accounts, actual knowledge of antecedent fraud in the agents by one who subsequently became a member of the firm of the principals would not, if proved, be any bar to their claim. Ib.

8. Costs.

3. If an agent does not render his accounts within a reasonable time, he must bear the costs of a suit instituted to have the accounts taken, and it will not be any excuse for him that he offered to pay on account a gross sum, which it turns out would have covered all that was due from him. Collyer v. Dudley, T. & R. 421; 2 L. J., Ch., 15.

4. A collector of parish rates appointed by one set of overseers is accountable to their successors in office for moneys received prior to the appointment of the latter. Sellar v. Griffin, 32 Beav. 542; 9 Jur., N. S., 612; 33 L. J., Ch., 6.

An account was directed against the collector, not disturbing accounts settled with the predecessors, with liberty to surcharge, and the defendant, who resisted the account, was ordered to pay the costs to the hearing. Ib.

5. To a bill against an agent for an account and payment of balance due, the defendant answered, that he had paid over more than he had received, and claimed a balance due to him. It being proved that the balance was against him:—Held, that he must pay, in addition to the balance due from him, the costs of suit. Fry v. Fry, 10 Jur., N. S., 983.

The bill did not pray interest, but held, that the defendant was chargeable with interest at 5*l.* per cent. from the filing of the bill. Ib.

6. In an action against an agent for account the plaintiff alleged an open account, and in general terms falsification. The defendant pleaded settled accounts, and required specific statements of falsification. At the trial the judge held the accounts were settled, and gave the defendant costs of the trial, but allowed the plaintiff to amend within fourteen days by stating specific instances of falsification. Moxley v. Cowis, 47 L. J., Ch., 271; 38 L. T. 908; 26 W. R. 854.

VIII. PAYMENT TO AGENT.

1. Discharge of Debtor, 5946.
2. Rights of Principal against Agent, 5947.

1. Discharge of Debtor.

7. An agent having been employed to transact loans of money, and having lent money and taken a bond from the borrower, which he delivered to his principal, and having afterwards been repaid the money and misapplied it, but continuing to make good the interest, the obligor was held liable, although more than twenty years had elapsed without payment of interest by him, to pay the bond. If the agent had been permitted to hold the instrument, quære. Curtis v. Drought, 1 Moll. 487.

8. It is the rule of the court, that if the scrivener have the custody of the security, payment of the interest is good; if he delivers it up, being a bond, payment of the principal is good: but on payment of the principal, in case of a mortgage deed, the giving up the deed is not sufficient to restore the estate; there must be a re-conveyance. So payment of interest good, if mortgagee consents, or after his death his executor, either expressly or by implication, as if he accept the money afterwards of the scrivener, though the scrivener have not possession either of deed or bond. Whitlock v. Waltham, 1 Salk. 157; 1 Vern. 150.

9. Scrivener puts out money on bond, and receives the interest from time to time, and then receives part of the principal, the bond remains in the obligee's custody. No good payment. Roberts v. Matthews, 1 Vern. 150. See 1 Salk. 157.

10. S. having borrowed 100*l.* of A. on a bond, B., the scrivener, when the bond was sealed, delivered it to A. S. paid many years' interest, and 50*l.* of the principal to B., which he paid over to A.; but the remaining 50*l.* which S. paid to B. was not paid over to A. when B. failed. Per curiam, though B. received the interest so long, and 50*l.* of the principal, it did not imply he had any authority from A.; and as S. could not prove he had any such authority, he shall pay the last 50*l.* again. Wolstenholm v. Davies, 2 Freem. 289.

1. If one trusts his scrivener (who puts out money for him) with the custody of his bonds, and the scrivener receives the money, and delivers up the bond, the obligee is barred as against the obligor for ever. Secus, in case of a mortgage, because a legal estate is vested which cannot be devested without assignment. Martyn v. Kingsly, Pre. Ch. 209.

2. One of the assignees having the sole charge of paying the dividends pays the dividend of a creditor to a person who is not duly authorized to receive it. The two other assignees are equally responsible to the creditor for the amount of the dividend. Exp. Winnall, 3 Dea. & Ch. 22.

3. When a creditor addresses a written request to assignees, in general terms, to pay "the dividends made on the bankrupt's estate" to A. B., the assignees are justified in paying subsequent dividends to A. B., until they have notice from the creditor that he has revoked A. B.'s authority. Exp. Bright, 2 Dea. & Ch. 8.

4. Where the plaintiff employed an agent to sell an estate, which he accordingly sold to the defendant, and on the settlement of the purchase-money the defendant set off a debt due to him from the agent and paid over the balance :—Held, that the plaintiff was not precluded, by having executed the conveyance in ignorance of the arrangement by his agent, from recovering from the defendant the sum so set off. Young v. White, 7 Beav. 506 ; 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 419 ; 8 Jur. 654.

5. If a man authorizes his agent to receive money, intending that the agent should thereout pay himself his own debt, he thereby gives the agent authority to receive payment to the extent of his own debt, in any manner he may think fit; consequently, the amount of the agent's own debt may be written off in account between him and the debtor. Barker v. Greenwood, 2 Y. & C. 414 ; 1 Jur. 541 ; 6 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 54.

A debtor who pays the amount of his debt to the agent of his creditor, must pay it in cash unless he can show that the agent had authority to receive payment in any other way. Ib.

6. The defendant, through the agency of one Yates, granted to the plaintiff an annuity redeemable at six months' notice. In May 1830 notice was given to re-purchase in November, and in August 1830 the defendant entrusted Yates with the money for the re-purchase. In October Yates prevailed on the plaintiff to execute the deed of re-assignment, dated in November and indorsed on the annuity deed, without receiving the re-purchase money; but the plaintiff did not sign any receipt for the money. Yates afterwards produced the deed to the son of the defendant, to satisfy him of the payment, and it was handed back to Yates to be kept by him with the defendant's other documents. Yates acted in the transaction as agent of both parties. He retained the money, and to deceive both, continued the payment of the annuity, but afterwards died insolvent. The defendants subsequently obtained possession of the deed :—Held, under the circumstances, that the defendant was not discharged, but was bound to pay the plaintiff the re-purchase money with interest, from November 1830, the plaintiff accounting for the subsequent receipts of the annuity. Vandaleur v. Blagrave, 6 Beav. 565 ; 7 Jur. 1002. Affirmed 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 45 ; 11 Jur. 935.

7. The possession by a vendor's solicitor of an executed conveyance for purchase of lands, with the signed receipt for the consideration money indorsed, is not in itself an authority to the solicitor to receive the purchase money. Viney v. Chaplin, 27 L. J., Ch., 434.

8. A person owing money to an agent, knowing him to be an agent, must pay in such a manner as to facilitate the money reaching the principal's hands, and cannot pay by a settlement of accounts between himself and the agent. Pearson v. Scott, 38 L. T., N. S., 747 ; 26 W. R. 796 ; 9 L. R., Ch. D., 198 ; 47 L. J., Ch., 705.

The plaintiffs, as executors, instructed S., a solicitor, to have some stock and shares sold, and in effect authorized him to receive the proceeds as money. S. employed the defendant, a stock and share broker, with whom he had at the time a current account for differences upon private speculative transactions on the Stock Exchange. The defendant having sold the property paid a part of the proceeds to S., and by his directions placed the balance to the credit of S. in the current account. S. never paid the balance to the plaintiffs, but subsequently absconded and was declared bankrupt. The defendant had notice of the agency of S. :—Held, that he was liable for the balance. Ib.

A custom whereby a London stockbroker, who has notice that the person instructing him is an agent, is bound only to recognize the person actually employing and instructing him, and to obey the directions of that person only as to the mode of payment, and as to the application and disposal of the proceeds of sale, is unreasonable in the absence of knowledge in the principal. Ib.

Rights of Principal against Agent.

9. There is a remedy in equity as well as at law, by a principal against his broker or agent, to recover a sum of money paid to the broker on his untrue representation, that he had entered into a contract for his principal, which alleged contract had in fact no existence. Wilson v. Short, 6 Hare 366 ; 12 Jur. 301 ; 17 L. J., Ch., 289.

10. M. employed R. & Co., bankers in Edinburgh, to obtain for him payment of a bill drawn on a person resident at Calcutta. R. & Co. accepted the employment, and wrote promising to credit him with the money when received. R. & Co. transmitted the bill in the usual course of business to C. & Co. of London, and by them it was forwarded to India, where it was duly paid. R. & Co. wrote to M. announcing the fact of its payment, but never actually credited him in their books with the amount. The house in India failed :—Held, that R. & Co. were the agents of M. to obtain payment of the bill; that, payment having been actually made, they became ipso facto liable to him for the amount received; and that he could not be called on to suffer any loss occasioned by the conduct of their sub-agents, between whom and himself no privity existed. Mackersy v. Ramsays, 9 Cl. & F. 818.

IX. FRAUD AND MISREPRESENTATION.

1. Liability of Agent, 5948.
2. Liability of Principal, 5948.
3. Rights of Principal against Third Parties, 5949.
4. By Sub-agents, 5950.
5. Constructive Fraud. See FRAUD, II. v.

1. Liability of Agent.

1. An agent, charged with personal fraud, cannot, by disclaiming interest, avoid answering fully. Bulkeley v. Dunbar, 1 Anstr. 37.

2. The rule that an agent, who induces persons to deal with his principal by means of false representations, is personally liable to make good his representations, does not extend to an incorrect statement of a matter of law. Beattie v. Ebury (Lord), 27 L. T., N. S., 398; 20 W. R. 994; 7 L. R., Ch., 777; 41 L. J., Ch., 804. Affirmed 7 L. R., H. L., 102; 44 L. J., Ch., 20; 30 L. T. 581; 22 W. R. 897.

Three directors of a railway company, by a letter to the company's bankers, requested them to honour the cheques of the company signed by two of the directors, and countersigned by the secretary of the company. Cheques to a large amount were accordingly drawn, signed in this manner, and were paid by the bank:—Held, that this letter did not amount to more than a representation that the directors had the ordinary authority of railway directors to bind their company, and that it did not render the directors personally liable to the bank for the moneys paid in respect of such cheques. Ib.

3. All persons directly concerned in the commission of a fraud are to be treated as principals, and must not be permitted to excuse themselves on the ground that they acted as the agents or servants of others; for the contract of agency or of service cannot impose any obligation on the agent or servant to commit or assist in the committing of fraud. Cullen v. Thompson, 4 Macq. H. L. Ca. 441; 9 Jur., N. S., 85.

4. In the absence of fraud, an agent acting within the scope of his authority is not personally liable for a misrepresentation made by him on behalf of his principal. Eaglesfield v. Londonderry (Marquis), 26 W. R. 540; 38 L. T. 303. Affirming 4 L. R., Ch. D., 693; 25 W. R. 190; 38 L. T., N. S., 303.

5. Where two agents conspire to defraud their principal, the estates of both the agents will be liable in equity to the estate of the principal, in respect of the fraud so committed. Walsham v. Stainton, 12 W. R. 63.

In such a case an agent is considered as a trustee for his principal, and lapse of time is no bar. Ib.

6. As a general rule one agent is not responsible for the fraudulent acts of the other unless he does something which makes himself a principal in the fraud. Cargill v. Bower, 10 L. R., Ch. D., 502; 47 L. J., Ch., 649; 38 L. T. 779; 26 W. R. 716.

2. Liability of Principal.

7. A. usually employed B. as his agent to buy hops of the several planters in and about Canterbury, but having in a particular season omitted to give him any orders at the usual time, B. enters into a partnership with three others, for purchasing hops of that year for their mutual benefit. The hops are accordingly purchased, but A., having intelligence of this transaction before they were delivered, prevails upon B. to declare to the planters, that he bought them as A.'s agent, and by that means A. got the hops delivered to him:—Held, that this was a fraud upon the partners of B., and that A. should account for the value of the hops, according to the highest price for which he sold them. Hunter v. Sheppard, 4 Bro. P. C. 210.

8. A principal is answerable for the act of his agent in concealing or suppressing deeds, though not done with the knowledge of the principal. Bowles v. Stewart, 1 Sch. & Lef. 209.

9. The arrangements for a deed between A. and B. were negotiated on A.'s behalf by C. his solicitor. B. cannot maintain a bill to have the deed set aside, on the ground that C., knowing material circumstances, concealed the same from him, unless he shows that A., the principal, at the same time had the same knowledge. But the knowledge of the principal would be the knowledge of the agent. Solomon v. Honywood, 3 N. R. 605.

10. A master is answerable for every such wrong of his servant or of his agent as is committed in the course of the service and for the master's benefit, though no express command or privity of the master is proved; and there is no distinction between the case of fraud and the case of any other wrong. Mackay v. Commercial Bank of New Brunswick, 5 L. R., P. C., 394; 43 L. J., P. C., 31; 22 W. R. 473; 30 L. T., N. S., 180.

When one has suffered, and another has profited by, the fraudulent representation of an agent of the latter, made within the scope of his authority, the former is entitled to recover damages. Ib.

An action of deceit may be maintained against a company, whether it is incorporated or not incorporated, in respect to the fraud of its agent. Ib.

An officer of a banking corporation, whose duty it was to obtain the acceptance of bills of exchange in which the bank was interested, fraudulently, but without the knowledge of the president or directors of the bank, made a representation to A., which, by omitting a material fact, misled him, and induced him to accept a bill in which the bank was interested; and he was compelled to pay the bill:—Held, that he could recover from the bank the amount so paid. Ib.

In an action of deceit, whether against a person or against a company, the fraud of the agent may be treated, for the purposes of pleading, as that of the principal. Ib.

11. A corporation of itself cannot be guilty of fraud, but where it can only accomplish the object for which it was formed through the agency of individuals who act fraudulently, the corporation stands in the same situation with respect to the conduct of its agents as a private person would have stood, had his agent so misconducted himself. Ranger v. Great Western Railway Co., 5 H. L. Ca. 72.

1. S., who was agent of F., and practically carried on his business, sent to S. and Co., in the ordinary course of business, an account showing that certain advances had been made for goods on their account, and drew a bill on them for the amount, which was duly honoured. The advances had not been made, and S. had appropriated the amount to his own use. In an action brought by S. & Co. against F. to recover the amount of the bill:—Held, that S. & Co. were entitled to recover. Swire v. Francis, 37 L. T., N. S., 554.

2. Knowledge of a particular fact relating to the accounts, by one director of a banking company, is not notice to the company, where that director had no voice in the management of the accounts, and the money transactions of the company were conducted exclusively by a manager under three directors, of whom the director possessing the knowledge was not one. Re Carew, 31 Beav. 39.

When a director is about to commit a fraud, it is to be presumed that he will not disclose the circumstance to his colleagues. Ib.

A. fraudulently obtained possession of acceptances from C., and he got them discounted and carried to his account by a banking company, to which he was largely indebted, and of which he was a director and local manager:—Held, under the circumstances, that the bank had notice, and could not be considered bonâ fide owners. Ib.

3. The shares of a proprietor in a joint-stock company were sold out without his authority, and not in conformity with the provisions of the deed by which the company was constituted. On a bill filled by the shareholders, alleging that the sale was the fraudulent act of the secretary of the company, and sanctioned by the directors, but assuming the transaction to be valid, as against the transferee, and praying that the loss might be made good out of the assets of the company; demurrer for want of equity allowed, on the ground that the bill stated no case for making the company liable in damages. Duncan v. Luntley, 2 Macn. & G. 30; 2 H. & Tw. 78; 14 Jur. 318.

4. R. was induced by W., the secretary to a railway company, to advance money to the company upon the security of a Lloyd's bond, which he represented as being a valid and legal security, at a time when the company had in fact no borrowing power, and the bond was therefore invalid:—Held, that even assuming that W. was acting as the agent of the directors in making the representation, R. had no equity to make the directors, who authorised the issuing of the bond, recoup the money advanced by him. Rashdall v. Ford, 35 L. J., Ch., 796; 2 L. R., Eq., 750; 14 W. R. 950.

5. A principal agent is not responsible for the act of a sub-agent with respect to a representation made in favour of his principal; and therefore the directors of a company cannot be held personally liable for a fraudulent representation made by an agent of the company, unless they have induced or authorized him to make it. Bear v. Stevenson, 30 L. T. 177.

A company was in negotiation with S. for an advance upon the security of sheep and wool, the property of the company; an agent of the company wrote, in answer to a question of S., "The mortgage to N. is the only incumbrance on the sheep and wool": in fact, there were two other outstanding incumbrances, but at the time of writing the agent had them both in his possession on behalf of the company, under an agreement that they should be paid off out of the advance to be made by S., which was in fact done:—Held, that there was no evidence that the agent was guilty of making a false representation of the position of the company. Ib.

6. A secretary and financial agent of a company, having authority to get bills discounted, forged bills and got them discounted. He paid the proceeds into a bank to the account of a firm to which he belonged, and in his character of a member of that firm drew cheques on the account in favour of the company; and it was alleged, that, out of the amounts so drawn, he actually made payments for the benefit of the company. The bill discounter had not negotiated the bills. In the winding-up of the company, the discounter asked for an inquiry, what amount of proceeds of the bills had thus reached the company, and asking to claim for the amount when ascertained:—Held, that an inquiry must be directed what amount of the proceeds of the bills had been applied, directly or indirectly, for the benefit of the company, and that a claim for the amount when ascertained would be good. Exp. Shoolbred, Re Japanese Curtains and Patent Fabric Co., 28 W. R. 399.

3. Rights of Principal against Third Parties.

7. Bill for the delivery up of specific chattels deposited by the plaintiff with A., his agent, which A. fraudulently contracted to assign to B., and B. advertised to be sold; and for an injunction to restrain the sale by B., and to restrain A. and B. from parting with the goods, the goods being still in the possession of A., the agent. Demurrer by B. overruled. Wood v. Rowcliffe, 3 Hare 304; 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 293; 8 Jur. 771.

8. A person who receives, by way of security, from a defaulting agent, a deposit of money, which turns out to have been withdrawn from the funds of his principal, cannot, where circumstances are suspicious, be allowed to insist on his ignorance of the truth. Berwick (Mayor) v. Murray, 3 Jur., N. S., 1.

9. Servant taking by collusion more than belongs to his office, must account; so must a stranger upon a bargain with a servant, which is a fraud on the master. East India Co. v. Hensham, 1 Ves. J. 289.

10. Where an agent has made an agreement with a contractor which amounts to a fraud on his principal, the principal may rescind the contract with the contractor and receive back money paid under it. Panama and South Pacific Telegraph Co. v. India Rubber, Gutta Percha, and Telegraph Works Co., 10 L. R., Ch., 515; 45 L. J., Ch., 121; 32 L. T. 517; 23 W. R. 583.

A telegraph works company agreed with a telegraph cable company to lay a cable, the cable to be paid for by a sum payable when the cable was begun, and by twelve instalments payable on certificates by the cable company's engineer, who was named in the contract. Shortly afterwards the engineer, who was engaged to lay other cables for the works company, agreed with them to lay this cable also for a sum of money to be paid to him by instalments payable by the works company when they received the instalments from the cable company :—Held, that under the circumstances, the agreement between the engineer and the works company was a fraud, which entitled the cable company to have their contract rescinded, and to receive back the money which they had paid under that contract. Ib.

Any surreptitious dealing between one principal to a contract and the agent of the other principal is a fraud in equity, and entitles the first-named principal to have the contract rescinded, and to refuse to proceed with it in any shape. Per James, L.J. Ib.

As the works company had by their fraudulent conduct prevented the cable company from having the full benefit of the contract, the cable company was entitled to have the contract rescinded. Per Mellish, L.J. Ib.

1. When an agent for the sale of an estate colludes with a purchaser, and in consideration of a bribe or honorarium allows the purchaser to obtain the estate at less than its value, with a view to a sale at a higher price to a sub-purchaser, and the transaction is concealed from the vendor, both agent and purchaser will be held jointly and severally liable to pay to the vendor the increased amount obtained by the sub-sale. Morgan v. Elford, 4 L. R., Ch. D., 352.

On appeal, the Court, being of opinion on the evidence and correspondence that the bargain between the agent and the owner was that the agent should have whatever the estate fetched above a certain price, dismissed the bill without giving any opinion on the above points. Ib.

2. A husband, being about to leave England for a residence in India, executed an assignment by deed to his wife, who was to remain in England, of a leasehold dwelling-house, "to hold the same unto" the wife, "her executors, administrators, and assigns, as her separate estate." No trustees were appointed, the husband and wife being the only parties to the deed. The title deeds were allowed to remain in the possession of the wife :—Held, that the deed of assignment operated as a valid declaration of trust in favour of the wife. Fox v. Hawks, Hawks v. Fox, 13 L. R., Ch. D., 822 ; 49 L. J., Ch., 579 ; 42 L. T. 622 ; 28 W. R. 656.

The wife, having parted with possession of the deeds (all but the assignment) to an agent, in order to raise a sum of 200*l.* upon them for her use, and having asked for a return of the deeds without success, the agent, by forging the name of the husband to a mortgage deed and other instruments, raised a sum of 1,200*l.*, which he appropriated to his own use :—Held, that there was no negligence on the part of the wife so as to bar her title to relief against the mortgagees. Ib.

4. By Sub-agents.

3. A principal agent is not responsible for the act of a sub-agent with respect to a representation made in favour of his principal ; and therefore the directors of a company cannot be held personally liable for a fraudulent representation made by an agent of the company, unless they have induced or authorised him to make it. Bear v. Stevenson, 30 L. T., N. S., 177.

A company was in negotiation with S. for an advance upon the security of sheep and wool, the property of the company ; an agent of the company wrote, in answer to a question of S., "The mortgage to N. is the only incumbrance on the sheep and wool ;" in fact there were two other outstanding incumbrances, but at the time of writing the agent had them both in his possession on behalf of the company, under an agreement that they should be paid off out of the advance to be made by S., which was in fact done :—Held, that there was no evidence that the agent was guilty of making a false representation of the position of the company. Ib.

4. S. & Co. employed F. as their agent to make advances on goods. F. employed a sub-agent to make such advances, with power to draw on S. & Co. for the amount. The sub-agent fraudulently drew on S. & Co. for an amount not advanced :—Held, that such sub-agent was acting within his authority, and that F. was liable for the act of his sub-agent. Swire v. Francis, 47 L. J., P. C., 18 ; 3 L. R., App. Cas., 106.

5. As a general rule one agent is not responsible for the fraudulent acts of the other unless he does something which makes himself a principal in the fraud. Cargill v. Bower, 26 W. R. 716 ; 47 L. J., Ch., 649 ; 38 L. T., N. S., 779.

2. Right of Principal to Sue, 5950.
3. Parties. See PRACTICE (PARTIES).

1. Right of Agent to Sue.

6. Agents must sue in name of principal. Leigh v. Thomas, 2 Ves. 313.

7. A firm abroad drew bills on one of its own partners, trading on his account in England, payable to an agent of the foreign government. The bills were not paid, process of insolvency issued against the foreign firm, and a commission against the English partner :—Held, the agent may prove under the commission, but will be restrained from receiving dividends, unless he elect not to prove under the insolvency abroad. Exp. Mattos, Re Venzeller, 1 Mont. & A. 345. Affirming Exp. Cotesworth, 1 Dea. & Ch. 281 ; Mont. & Bli. 92 ; 2 L. J., N. S., Bky., 18.

8. An agent, who insures for another with his authority, may sue for the insurance money in his own name. Provincial Insurance Company of Canada v. Leduc, 6 L. R., P. C., 224 ; 43 L. J., P. C., 49 ; 31 L. T. 142 ; 22 W. R. 929.

2. Right of Principal to Sue.

9. The rule that an undisclosed principal may sue and be sued upon mercantile contracts made by an agent in his own name, subject to any defences or equities which without notice may exist against the agent, is applicable to policies of marine insurance under the Canadian as well as under the English law. Browning v. Provincial Insurance Company of Canada, 5 L. R., P. C., 263.

1. A. in France employs B. in England to sell wines by commission, as well as to purchase other wines on A.'s account in London, for which he furnished him with letters of credit. The wines were generally bought and sold by B. in his own name; part of the wines consigned by A. were in the dock warehouses, standing in B.'s name, and part formed one indiscriminate stock in B.'s cellar. A. closes the connection with B., and requires him to deliver up all the wines, but B. neglects to comply with this requisition, and shortly afterwards became bankrupt:—Held, that A. might sue the purchaser of the wines in the name of B. or his assignees, and that no order could be made for the payment to A. of any moneys, the produce of the wines, if mixed with the other moneys of B. at the time of his bankruptcy. Exp. Moldaut, 3 Dea. & Ch. 351.

2. It is settled law that an undisclosed principal can sue in respect of a contract entered into in his behalf between stockbrokers, though by the rules of the Stock Exchange the brokers, as between themselves, are personally responsible. Langton v. Waite, 37 L. J., Ch., 345; 18 L. T., N. S., 880; 16 W. R. 508; 6 L. R., Eq., 165.

3. A. desiring to become an underwriting member of Lloyd's, B. gave a guarantee to the committee of that body on behalf of A., in which he held himself responsible "for all his engagements in that capacity." When the guarantee was given, Lloyd's was a voluntary association, managed by a committee, to whom the guarantee was given. A few years after the members of this association were incorporated by a special Act of Parliament under the name of Lloyd's, and the rights of the committee were vested in the corporation:—Held, that the committee of Lloyd's, and the corporation of Lloyd's as their successors, were trustees of the benefit of the guarantee for all the persons, whether members or outsiders, with whom the son had contracted engagements as an underwriting member, and that the corporation could maintain an action to enforce the guarantee against the father's estate for the benefit of all those persons; on the ground, as to the outsiders, that the brokers, through whom the son's engagements with them were contracted, were trustees for their principals of the right which they themselves had to call on their own agents, Lloyd's, to enforce the guarantee for their benefit. Lloyd's v. Harper, 16 L. R., Ch. D., 290; 50 L. J., Ch., 140; 43 L. T. 481; 29 W. R. 452. Affirming 49 L. J., Ch., 217; 42 L. T. 218; 28 W. R. 419.

4. Merchants in London, upon the instruction of shipping agents at Havannah with respect to a cargo of tobacco to be consigned to the London merchants, and after receiving the shipping documents, effected policies of marine insurance in the ordinary form on behalf and for the benefit of all parties whom it might concern. The Havannah agents shipped and consigned the tobacco in their own names, but were in fact acting as commission agents for Havannah merchants to whom the tobacco belonged; and the London merchants before effecting the policies had notice that the Havannah agents had an unnamed principal. A total loss having occurred, the London merchants received the policy moneys, but before receipt had notice that the moneys were claimed by the Havannah principals:—Held, that an action lay by the Havannah principals against the London merchants for the policy moneys; that the London merchants were not entitled to a lien upon the moneys for the balance of their general account with the Havannah agents, and could not in that action set off their claim to that balance, or set off anything, except the premiums, stamps, and commission in respect of the insurance. Mildred v. Maspons, 8 L. R., App. Cas., 874; 32 W. R. 125. Affirming S. C. sub. nom. Hermano v. Mildred, 9 L. R., Q. B. D., 530; 51 L. J., Q. B., 604; 47 L. T. 318; 30 W. R. 862.

XI. BROKER.

1. In General, 5951.
2. Commission, 5952.
3. London Brokers, 5952.
4. Stock Broker. See STOCK EXCHANGE.

1. In General.

5. A. agrees with B.'s broker for 500*l.* stock; the broker, according to usage, made an entry of this agreement in his pocket-book; it being no otherwise reduced into writing, is within the Statute of Frauds. Mussell v. Cooke, Pre. Ch. 533.

6. Dividend warrants on which the bankrupts in their character of stockbrokers were intrusted to receive the dividends, and which they had pledged for their own debt, were ordered to be delivered up to trustees, who had employed the bankrupts as their brokers. Exp. Gregory, Re Wakefield, 2 M. D. & De G. 613.

7. Where a broker being authorised to effect an insurance by one of several partners afterwards received the insurance money; after which one of the others demanded his proportion, and commenced an action against the broker to recover it, the party directing having also demanded payment over to him:—Held, a proper case for the bill of interpleader. Stuart v. Welch, 4 Myl. & C. 305.

8. The bankrupt was employed as broker by petitioner, and sold goods for him nominally to A., as appeared by sold note, but really to A. and himself on a joint account, as appeared by bought note, and became bankrupt:—Held, a fraud, and sale void, and so much of the goods as then remained in his hands were ordered to be specifically delivered up to petitioner. Exp. Huth, Re Pemberton, Mont. & Ch. 667; 4 Dea. 294.

9. Quære. Whether an insurance broker is a trader. Exp. Stevens, 4 Madd. 256.

10. Brokers very often transfer stock without the principal being so much as mentioned, and yet he may maintain an action against the person to whom the stock was transferred. Linnett v. Reave, 2 Atk. 394.

1. A. and B., stockbrokers, borrowed on behalf of the plaintiff a sum of money for a term of three months, from the defendants, who were also stockbrokers, upon the security of certain railway stock, which was transferred by the plaintiff into the name of one of the defendants' firm. At the expiration of the term the loan was repaid with interest, and the defendants, who, pending the loan, had sold the plaintiff's stock, purchased other stock, and re-transferred a similar amount to the plaintiff. The plaintiff claimed to be entitled to the amount of profit which the defendants had realized:—Held, that he was entitled to sue as principal in the transaction; that the defendants were not justified, either by law or by the custom of the Stock Exchange, in parting with the security during the currency of the loan, but were bound to return the identical stock pledged; and that he was entitled to recover from the defendants the amount of profit realised by their dealings with the stock. Langton v. Waite, 6 L. R., Eq., 165; 37 L. J., Ch., 345; 18 L. T., N. S., 81; 16 W. R. 508.

2. A person who employs a broker to transact business for him in a market, with the usage of which the principal is unacquainted, gives him authority to contract upon the footing of such usages, provided they are only such as relate to the mode of performing the contract, and do not change his intrinsic character. Robinson v. Mollett, 7 L. R., H. L., 802; 44 L. J., C. P., 362; 33 L. T., N. S., 544.

R. employed M. to buy tallow for him in the London market. There is a custom in this market for brokers to contract in their own names, and, if their principals refuse to accept or deliver, to sell or buy against them, and charge them with the loss, if any. R. was ignorant of this custom, and, on becoming aware of it, refused to accept the tallow; M. sold it, and brought an action for the loss he sustained by so doing, tallow having fallen:—Held, that the effect of the custom being to change the character of M. from an agent to buy for his employer into a principal to sell to him, R. could not be held to have agreed to be bound by it merely by employing M., to whom it was known, to perform the ordinary duties of a broker, being himself ignorant of it. Ib.

3. L. instructed his brokers to apply for fifty shares at 1*l.* each in a company which he named. They by mistake applied for and obtained an allotment to L. in another company. L. repudiated the shares, but his name was placed on the register. The company had at that time a very large number of shares unallotted, and in the opinion of the Court the shares were unsaleable in the market. The company was soon afterwards wound up, and the name of L. was removed on his application from the list of contributories. The official liquidator then claimed 50*l.* from the brokers by way of damages for their misrepresentation of authority:—Held, that the general rule as to measure of damages for breach of warranty of authority was applicable; that the liquidator was entitled to recover from the brokers the amount which the company had lost by losing the contract with L.; and that as L. was solvent and the shares unsaleable in the market, that loss was represented by the whole sum of 50*l.* payable for the shares. Exp. Panmure, Re National Coffee Palace Co., 24 L. R., Ch. D., 367; 32 W. R. 236.

See also XIII. 6 post.

2. Commission.

4. Where brokers are directed by the order of the Court to take possession, for the purpose of selling property:—Held, that they were entitled to the ordinary remuneration, notwithstanding they happen to be mortgagees. Arnold v. Garner, 2 Ph. 231; 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 329; 11 Jur. 339.

5. The charge of 10*s.* per cent. for commission, besides the legal interest, on a loan of money, is not usurious, if it is referable to trouble and expense bonâ fide incurred by the lender, although he may not be a banker, or a person engaged in trade, or although the money lent is his own, and not that of other persons. Exp. Gwyn, 2 Dea. & Ch. 12; 1 L. J., N. S., Bky., 73.

6. A bill broker, in order to get a bill discounted at 4 per cent., takes upon himself the responsibility of indorser, and charges his principal 5 per cent. discount, which is the lowest sum at which he could have done the business, except for his indorsement:—Held, that although he also charged 10*s.* per cent. for his trouble, etc., it was not usury, and that he was entitled to do so for his del credere commission. Exp. Goss, 2 Dea. & Ch. 240.

3. London Brokers.

7. Brokers in the city of London being directed to purchase iron delivered to the buyer bought notes, purporting to be notes of the contract for the iron, not disclosing the name of the seller, the brokers guaranteeing the performance of the contract; and the buyer paid the brokers their commission, together with a deposit in part payment of the price of the iron. The buyer afterwards discovered that there was no principal seller of the iron other than one of the firm of brokers, who intended himself to perform the contract; and upon a bill filed by parties from whom the buyer of the iron had obtained money on the security of the contracts, the deposits were ordered to be repaid with interest. If in such a case the plaintiffs had, before the bill was filed, abandoned all interest in the contracts for the iron, they could not afterwards sue for the recovery of the deposits; that the cancellation of certain letters, which gave the plaintiffs an interest in the contract as against the brokers, the plaintiffs being at the time of such cancellation ignorant, and the brokers knowing the truth of the case, does not in equity protect the brokers from the claim of the plaintiffs for the recovery of the deposits. If the plaintiffs had known that the brokers were also the sellers of the iron, or if the plaintiffs were otherwise not deceived by their representations, they would not have been entitled to relief in equity. Knowledge by the buyer of the fact that there was not any seller of the iron other than the brokers, would not affect parties advancing money to the buyer on the faith of representations made to them by the brokers that the contract was regular and valid, nor deprive such parties of their right of rescinding the transaction, and recovering payments which had been made. Wilson v. Short, 6 Hare 366; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 289; 12 Jur. 301.

1. A broker of the city of London may maintain an action on a contract, or sustain a proof for a debt, arising out of transactions as a merchant, although such transactions are in contravention of the regulations under which he derives his office, and to the condition of the bond which he executes, and to the oath which he takes on his appointment: not, however, if the debt or contract arises out of a transaction in which he has acted both as broker and principal, that being void upon principles of common law. Exp. Dyster, 2 Rose 349; 1 Meriv. 155.

2. A broker in the city of London must answer a bill of discovery in aid of an action brought against him by his employer for misconduct, although the discovery will subject him to the penalty of a bond given by him to the corporation on his admission. Green v. Weaver, 1 Sim. 404; 6 L. J., Ch., 1.

3. A person who holds himself out as a broker of the city of London, and is employed by a person who believes him to be such, cannot, when sued by his principal for an account of his transactions as such broker on the principal's behalf, protect himself from discovery in a suit in equity, on the ground that it may render him liable to penalties for having acted as a broker without having been duly admitted as such, imposed by the 57 Geo. 3, c. 60. Robinson v. Kitchin, 2 Jur., N. S., 294; 25 L. J., Ch., 441. Affirming 21 Beav. 365; 2 Jur., N. S., 57; 25 L. J., Ch., 354.

Quære, whether it would make any difference that the principal, at the time of employing the broker, knew that he was not duly admitted. Ib.

4. A stock and sharebroker of the city of London gave a bond to the Corporation for due performance of his office. He appropriated to his own use large sums of money intrusted to him for investment. After his decease, upon a claim filed by a simple contract creditor:—Held, that the defrauded creditors had no priority by virtue of the bond, and that the amount due upon such bond was equitable assets for the benefit of all the creditors. Naish v. Bryant, 4 Jur., N. S., 550; 27 L. J., Ch., 748; 25 Beav. 533.

5. According to the usage of the London dry goods market, a broker who buys for an undisclosed principal is personally liable to the seller for the price of the goods. Imperial Bank v. London & St. Katherine's Dock Co., 46 L. J., Ch., 335; 5 L. R., Ch. D., 195; 36 L. T., N. S., 233.

D., a broker, bought of C., for undisclosed principals, a quantity of gum sandrac then lying at the St. Katherine's Dock, to be paid for on Saturday, March 18th, and obtained a delivery order from C., which he gave to his principals on the faith of their representation that the goods were wanted for immediate shipment. D.'s principals, however, pledged the delivery order with a bank, and on the evening of March 17th they stopped payment. On the morning of March 18th the bank sent the delivery order to the dock office in the city, with a request for a warrant, which they were told would be ready on Monday. Notice of the delivery order having been lodged was sent by the dock company in due course to their warrant office at the dock, where, through a mistake of the messenger, it did not arrive until 3 p.m.; and in the meantime a clerk of D., who had, in accordance with the usage of the trade, paid the price of the goods to C. that morning, applied at the warrant office in C.'s name for a warrant for the goods, which was made out and given to him, as the goods were clear in the cargo ledger. C. indorsed the warrant to D., and in consequence of what had happened, the dock company, on the Monday, refused to act on the bank's delivery order. In an action by the bank against the dock company, D., and C.:—Held, that D. was entitled to the goods, for the bank had never obtained either actual or constructive possession of the goods, and that D., having paid the price of the goods as surety for his principals, was, notwithstanding his prior application for the delivery order and indorsement thereof, entitled by virtue of s. 5 of the Mercantile Law Amendment Act, 19 & 20 Vict., c. 97, to the benefit of the unpaid vendor's lien subsisting in C. Ib.

XII. DEL CREDERE AGENT.

6. The plaintiff employed the defendant, who was a corn factor, to sell a cargo of corn, which he accordingly sold to C. on the 15th May. Information was afterwards received that before this sale the corn had already been sold on the 24th April, by the captain of the vessel chartered by the plaintiff. This was not known at the time to either of the parties. C. subsequently gave notice to the defendant that he repudiated the contract, on the ground that the cargo did not exist at the time of the sale to him. The plaintiff sought to recover the price of the cargo from the defendant, who was a factor, on a del credere commission:—Held, that the defendant was not liable for the amount, as it was the sale of a cargo which did not exist at the time. Couturier v. Hastie, 5 H. L. Ca. 673; 2 Jur., N. S., 1241; 25 L. J., Exch., 253; 8 Exch. 40.

7. Semble, a contract for a del credere agency is not a promise to answer for the debt of another within the 4th section of the Statute of Frauds, on the authority of Couturier v. Hastie (8 Exch. 40), and observations on that case. Wickham v. Wickham, 2 Kay. & J. 478.

8. In an action by the assignees of a bankrupt underwriter against a broker for premiums due to the bankrupt; semble, that the broker cannot set off a loss on a policy effected by him as agent, without a commission del credere, where there has been no adjustment, though the loss took place before the bankruptcy. Baker v. Langhorn, 2 Marsh. 215.

9. A factor has a personal remedy against his principal, as well as a lien on the goods for advances made by him on account of the goods, and this is not altered by his having a del credere commission; but in that case he must be charged with the price of all goods sold by him, whether he receives such price from the purchasers or not. Graham v. Ackroyd, 1 W. R. 197; 17 Jur. 657; 10 Hare 192; 22 L. J., Ch., 1046.

1. Where a mercantile firm in England borrows money of another firm, and both have a common agent abroad, if that agent credit the lending firm with sums received for the borrowing firm, in pursuance of an agreement between them, that credit is not a payment. If an agent, in anticipation of the receipt of the amount of sales for his principal, remit such amount, and the purchasers fail to pay, it is not the loss of the agent, but the loss of the principal; contrà if the agent sells on a del credere commission. The transfer from one account to another in the books of an agent is not payment as between the agent and the transferee of such account, and the entry is not an acknowledgment unless the transferee is informed of the fact. McLarty v. Middleton, 6 W. R. 379, 853.

XIII. FACTOR.

1. Authority, 5954.
2. Pledge by, 5954.
3. Lien, 5956.
4. Accounts, 5957.
5. Set-off, 5957.
6. Suits by and against, 5958.

1. Authority.

2. Mere advances made by a factor, whether at the time employed as such or subsequently, cannot have the effect of altering the revocable nature of an authority to sell, unless the advances are accompanied by an agreement that the authority shall not be revocable. De Comas v. Prost, 2 Moo. P. C., N. S., 158; 11 Jur., N. S., 417; 13 W. R. 595; 12 L. T., N. S., 682.

Whether such an agreement has been made, or may be properly inferred, is a question upon the evidence for the jury. Ib.

The judge directed the jury, that by the mere relationship of factor, the factor did not, by making advances, acquire any right in derogation of the rights of his principal to give directions as to the time and manner of sale, and that any such right on the part of the factor must be made out by an agreement, which might be inferred from the evidence, or might be implied by the proof of usage:—Held, that there was no misdirection. Ib.

2. Pledge by.

3. Under the Factors Act (5 & 6 Vict., c. 39), a contract with an agent for the pledge of goods will be valid as against the principal, though the person dealing with the agent knows him to be only an agent in respect of the goods pledged, provided that the person so dealing acts bonâ fide and without notice that the agent is acting malâ fide and beyond his authority. Navulshaw v. Brownrigg, 2 De G. M. & G. 441; 16 Jur. 979; 21 L. J., Ch., 908.

To deprive the pledgee of the protection of the Act, he must be fixed with knowledge that the agent is so acting as above stated, and no mere suspicion will amount to notice; nor will the knowledge that the agent has power to sell the goods constitute notice that he has not power to pledge them. Ib.

4. A merchant who has enabled his factor to raise money fraudulently can claim no redress against the party who has bonâ fide made the advance. Vickers v. Hertz, 2 L. R., H. L. (Sc.), 113.

The goods or symbols of property entrusted to the factor may be regarded by unsuspecting third parties as his own, and dealt with accordingly under the Factors Act, 5 & 6 Vict., c. 39. Ib.

5. M., a merchant and factor of London, employed by V., a merchant in Holland, to negotiate sales as a commission agent, obtained and transmitted to V. an offer from L. & F. to purchase a quantity of oil. V. accepted the offer, and subsequently shipped a quantity of oil in pursuance of the contract, and sent the bill of lading, specially indorsed to L. & F., to M. in order that it might be exchanged for L. & F.'s acceptance of V.'s draft. Before this, M., without any authority from V., agreed to cancel the contract with L. & F., and when the bill of lading arrived M. procured L. & F. to indorse it in blank and deliver it to him, by falsely representing that the special indorsement had been made by mistake. M. then caused the oil to be warehoused in his own name, and immediately pledged it to the plaintiff as security for an advance of 350*l.*:—Held, that the pledge was not protected by the Factors Acts (6 Geo. 4, c. 94, and 5 & 6 Vict., c. 39). Vaughan v. Moffat, 38 L. J., Ch., 144.

6. Where an agent entrusted with a document of title to goods pledges it malâ fide, or without authority, it is necessary, in order to deprive the transaction of the protection given by 5 & 6 Vict., c. 39, s. 1, and to bring it within the proviso of s. 3, that the jury should find categorically that the lender had notice of the agent's mala fides or want of authority. Gobind Chunder Sein v. Ryan, 8 Jur., N. S., 343; 10 W. R. 155; 5 L. T., N. S., 559; 9 Moo. Ind. App. 140.

7. A foreign owner of goods consigned them to a factor in London to whom he indorsed the bill of lading in blank, and transmitted it, with instructions to receive and sell the goods. The factor received the goods, paid the freight and charges thereon, and entered them in his own name at the Custom House; by reason of which, and without the privity or express assent of the owner, he obtained a dock warrant, which he pledged for advances beyond the amount, for which, as a factor, he had a lien on the goods:—Held, that, under these circumstances, he was not intrusted with the dock warrant within 6 Geo. 4, c. 94, s. 2. Hatfield v. Phillips, 12 Cl. & F. 343.

8. The 5 & 6 Vict., c. 39 (Factors Act), applies only to mercantile dealings, and does not give a lien for advances on goods and furniture used in a furnished house,—not in the way of trade,—of which the apparent owner was merely agent of the true owner. Such furniture:—Held, not to be "goods and merchandise," within the meaning of the 5 & 6 Vict., c. 39, nor the "agent" an agent within the statute, entitling him to make pledge of such goods for advances made. Wood v. Rowcliffe, 6 Hare 191; 11 Jur. 707, 915.

1. H., a speculator in cotton, in July 1864 requested W. to purchase for him, in W.'s name, 400 bales of Egyptian cotton, for delivery in the September following. W. assented, employing for the purpose (with the knowledge of H.), as his broker, C., who knew that W. was acting as agent, and W. became liable on a series of contracts, the first of which was due on the 9th September. The price of cotton falling, C. refused to take up the contracts unless he was secured from loss, and W. applied to H., who, on the 8th September, promised to give some security, and on the 26th September deposited with W., and W. deposited with C., with unconditional power of sale, a bill of lading of a cargo of Surat cotton; of which H. was the consignee from the plaintiffs, a firm at Bombay, as their factor, but H. was not known either to W. or to C. to be other than the true owner. On the same day, C. made a first payment on account of W.'s indebtedness under the contracts; and he continued to make other payments, W. not advancing anything. In October H. stopped payment, and the proceeds of the cargo of Surat cotton were now claimed by the plaintiffs:—Held, that the deposit of the bill of lading by H. was not made in respect of an antecedent debt of H. and W., within the meaning of the Factors Acts (4 Geo. 4, c. 83; 6 Geo. 4, c. 94; and 5 and 6 Vict., c. 39); and that having been made by H. in respect of an advance by C. on behalf of W., within the meaning of the same Acts, it was binding on the plaintiffs. Jewan v. Whitworth, 2 L. R., Eq., 692; 14 W. R. 1020; 36 L. J., Ch., 127.

2. A factor by pledging goods in his possession or under his control, as agent, for an amount which does not exhaust their value, has not thereby parted with his control over the goods, so as to preclude himself from making a further pledge for the balance of their value, which shall be valid as against the principal under the Factors Acts (6 Geo. 4, c. 94, and 5 & 6 Vict., c. 39). Portalis v. Tetley, 5 L. R., Eq., 140; 37 L. J., Ch., 139; 16 W. R. 503; 17 L. T., N. S., 344.

Cotton was consigned for sale by A. to B. B. deposited the bill of lading with C., a broker, and authorized him to receive and sell the cotton, and subsequently made a further pledge to D. of the balance of the net proceeds of the cotton by order in writing communicated to and assented to by C.:—Held, that the pledge to D. was valid as against A. under 5 & 6 Vict., c. 39. Ib.

3. The Factors Act (5 & 6 Vict., c. 39) does not apply to pledges for antecedent liabilities (whether they may or may not have ripened into debts), where no actual advance is made at the time of the pledge. Macnee v. Gorst, 4 L. R., Eq., 351; 15 W. R. 1197.

Therefore, where H., a factor, pledged goods of his principal to G.: first to secure the payment of an acceptance of H. in G.'s hands, not then due, which had been given to protect G.'s liability on a contract as H.'s broker, and, secondly, to repay to G. his loss on a resale of goods which G. had purchased for H. in his own name:—Held, that the transaction was not protected by 5 & 6 Vict., c. 39. James v. Whitworth (2 L. R., Eq., 692) explained. Ib.

4. Where there is a power by law to sell, a purchaser may obtain from the vendor, even as against the true owner, a good title, but that cannot extend by implication to a pledge. Barrow was a leather merchant in London. Bonnell was a tanner in Canada. Barrow agreed to pay Bonnell 1½*d.* per pound for every hide tanned by Bonnell in the mode of the country, and Bonnell was to procure freight, and send back the hides. Barrow sent out a large number of the hides; they were tanned, and freight was procured for them, but in the meantime Bonnell had obtained from the Toronto Bank advances, on his own account, on bills, and hypothecated the hides to the bankers as security for such advances, engaging to hand over to them the bills of lading if his bills of exchange were not duly honoured. They were not duly honoured, and the bankers (who had acted in entire ignorance of the transactions between Barrow and Bonnell) claimed to retain the bills of lading and the hides until their demands were satisfied:—Held, that, under the circumstances of the case, Bonnell could not, under any law, English or Canadian, claim to be a factor or agent of Barrow entitled to pledge Barrow's goods, and that consequently the bankers could not set up any title to the goods, as derived from him, against the real owners. City Bank v. Barrow, 5 L. R., App. Cas., 664; 43 L. T. 393.

5. A wool broker gave to a bank, to secure an advance, a letter of hypothecation on certain wools, promising to lodge warehouse warrants for them next day. The bank made repeated application for the warrants, but did not obtain them. After a few days, the broker having left his house, the bankers by pressure obtained the keys of his warehouse, where the wool was stored, and took possession. Part of the wool had belonged to a customer of the broker, but he was under advances and made no claim:—Held, that the bank acquired a valid charge on the wool under the provisions of the Factors Act, 6 & 7 Vict., c. 39. Exp. North-Western Bank, Re Slee, 15 L. R., Eq., 69; 42 L. J., Bky., 6; 27 L. T. 461; 21 W. R. 69.

In leaving his house the broker was, as it turned out, absconding:—Held, that the bank had no notice of this. Ib.

6. K., in Singapore, was in the habit of consigning goods to M. in London for sale. M. employed L. and P., London brokers, in the sale of these goods, and in other extensive sales and purchases, and died in May 1880, heavily indebted to them on the balance of his account. Shortly before M.'s death K. had consigned cargoes to M. by several different ships. M. put them in the hands of L. and P. for sale, and pledged to them the several bills of lading for separate advances made by them to him on the respective cargoes. As between K. and M. these pledges were unauthorized and improper; but L. and P. had no notice of any impropriety. One cargo had been sold before M.'s death, but not delivered nor paid for. The others remained unsold at his death, and were not sold until after the commencement of an action by K. to recover them. L. and P. claimed a general lien on the balances of the proceeds of all the cargoes after repayment of the specific advances, resting their claim on an alleged agreement with M. to that effect, and on mercantile usage:—Held, by the Court of Appeal, that neither such agreement nor such usage was established in evidence, and that if they had been, such a general lien could not be claimed under the Factors Act:—Held, that apart from the Factors Act, K., an undisclosed foreign principal, could not sue L. and P. for the proceeds of goods properly sold by them in M.'s lifetime, or, if he could, he could only sue as representing M., and subject to all rights of set-off available against M., and that therefore L. and P. were entitled to a lien on the balance of the proceeds of the sold cargo, although it was not delivered or paid for in M.'s lifetime: —But held, that as regards the goods unsold at M.'s death, K. was entitled to them subject only to the payment of the sums for which they were respectively specifically pledged. Kaltenbach v. Lewis, 24 L. R., Ch. D., 54; 52 L. J., Ch., 881; 48 L. T. 844; 31 W. R. 731. Varying 45 L. T. 666; 30 W. R. 356.

L. and P. bought goods for M., not disclosing the fact that they bought as agents, and were, therefore, as between them and the vendors, personally liable to pay. On the day before the day of payment, M. asked L. and P. to make him an advance, on the security of one of K.'s cargoes, to enable him to pay for those goods. L. and P. did so, and the goods were thus paid for through L. and P. They knew that the cargo pledged did not belong to M., but nothing further; and they did not know whether the goods bought by M. were bought on his own account or not:—Held, that as M. was not at the time of the advance indebted to L. and P. in respect of the goods bought, though they were sureties for the payment, the pledge was not a pledge to secure an antecedent debt within the meaning of 5 & 6 Vict., c. 39, s. 3, and was valid, there being nothing in the circumstances to give them notice that M. was violating his duty to his principal. Ib.

1. Semble, where in order to save trouble delivery orders were not signed, but an arrangement was made that delivery should be made to persons producing cash receipts from the cashiers of the holders of the bill of lading, such receipts cannot be considered as a document of title within s. 5 of the Factors Act 1877 (40 & 41 Vict., c. 39). Kemp v. Falk, 7 L. R., App. Cas., 585; 52 L. J., Ch., 173; 47 L. T. 457; 31 W. R. 128.

3. Lien.

Of Factor.] 2. A factor has a lien on his principal's goods for the general balance due to him. Godin v. London Assurance Co., 1 W. Black. 104.

3. Bills remitted to a factor or a banker, while unpaid, are in the nature of goods unsold, and, on failure of the factor, must be returned to the principal, subject to such lien as the factor may have thereon. Zinck v. Walker, 2 W. Black. 1154.

4. Factor gains a lien on goods consigned to him from his correspondent for the balance of his account, as well as for the duties, etc., and may retain for such balance; but if he parts with the possession of the goods to the owner, he loses the lien for the balance of accounts. Kruger v. Wilcox, Ambl. 252; Dick. 269.

5. Factor's lien both for his expenditure on the goods in his possession, and his general balance, lost by a special contract for a particular mode of payment. So in various trades. Cowell v. Simpson, 16 Ves. 280.

6. A. agreed to sell goods to B. to be accounted for in part of a debt to B.; C. with notice, agreeing to sell the goods as factor, not allowed to retain for a debt to him from A. Weymouth v. Boyer, 1 Ves. J. 416.

7. Under an agreement between a shipper of goods and a factor, through whom the goods were sold in a foreign country, the factor gave his acceptances to the shipper for a proportionate part of the value of the goods, for the payment of which acceptances, if not satisfied by the proceeds of the goods, the shipper was to provide:—Held, that on his failure to do so, and on the payment of the acceptances by the factor, the shipper of the goods became debtor in account to the factor for the amount paid by the latter; and that the remedy of the factor was not merely in damages. Graham v. Ackroyd, 10 Hare 192; 17 Jur. 657; 22 L. J., Ch., 1046; 1 W. R. 197.

Where a factor makes advances he has a personal remedy against the principal as well as a lien on the fund; and this is the same whether the factor has or has not a del credere commission, except that when the factor having a del credere commission has sold the goods, he cannot sue the principal for advances which are covered by the price of the goods, that price being warranted to the principal by the guarantee arising out of the commission. Ib.

Of Principal.] 8. A. employs B., as his factor, to sell; B. sells on credit, and, before the money is paid, dies indebted by specialty more than his assets will pay. This money shall be paid to A., and not to the administrator of B., as part of his assets, but thereout must be deducted what was due to B. for commission. A factor is in nature of a trustee only for his principal. Burdett v. Willett, 2 Vern. 638.

9. Where goods consigned to a factor continue in specie, and are found in his hands at the time of the bankruptcy, the principal is entitled to them and not the creditors at large. Exp. Dumas, 1 Atk. 234; 2 Ves. 582. Godfrey v. Furzo, 3 P. W. 186. Mace v. Cadell, Cowp. 233.

Also, if notes and not money be taken for the goods, they shall belong to the principal. Ib.

10. Merchant's goods in hand of factor are not liable to debts of a superior nature; otherwise of money. Whitecomb v. Jacob, 1 Salk. 160.

11. A factor makes an agreement with the master for the hire of a ship on his own account, for 48*l.* per month, and not on the part of the merchants, his principals; they are not liable, nor are their goods put on board, to satisfy the master's demand, but they are liable to pay the factor the freight for their cargo; and as he was bound by the charter-party, which gave the master a specific lien on the goods, the master has a right to be paid in the first place, before the assignees of a factor under a commission of bankruptcy, for the assignees only stand in the bankrupt's place. So, if a factor becomes bankrupt, and the merchant's goods are not mixed with his, the assignees shall not have them. Whoever lets a ship to hire, must take care that the hirer is substantial, for if he be not competent the master must pay for his neglect; yet a factor may retain goods to pay custom for salvage. Paul v. Birch, 2 Atk. 621.

1. The plaintiffs, who were cotton spinners, employed a commission agent to sell their goods, and the course of business was for the agent to obtain the assent of the plaintiffs to each sale. The agent transmitted to the plaintiffs the particulars of certain sales, which he represented as having been made to specified purchasers, and afterwards rendered accounts, debiting himself with the purchase moneys, but not paying the balance. He afterwards executed an assignment for the benefit of his creditors, when it appeared that his representations as to his disposal of the goods were untrue, and that he had in fact consigned the goods for sale as and with goods of his own to factors in India, and that the accounts had been settled between him and the factors on the footing of debiting each cargo only with the advances and charges made in respect of that cargo, but that on the whole account there was a balance coming from the factors:—Held, first, that the plaintiffs were entitled to have the proceeds marshalled, and the advances and charges thrown entirely on the agent's own goods. Broadbent v. Barlow, 3 De G. F. & J. 570; 30 L. J., Ch., 569.

Held, secondly, that this right was not excluded by the settlement of accounts between the plaintiffs and the agent, or by the former having had upon the agent's books the means of discovering the fraud before a meeting took place of his creditors, at which the plaintiffs attended, and at which the deeds of assignment were agreed to, but at which neither the fraud, nor the claim founded on it, was brought forward; the principle being, that means of knowledge to affect a person with constructive notice must be such as a prudent man might be expected to avail himself of. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that the right was not excluded by the mode in which the factors had rendered their accounts to the agent, nor by their not having themselves set up any claim to marshal the proceeds of the consignment. Ib.

Held, fourthly, that the enforcement of this right did not preclude the plaintiffs from proving under the deed of assignment for the deficiency. Ib.

4. Accounts.

2. Infant cannot be made to account as factor. Smally v. Smally, 1 Eq. Abr. 6.

3. A surviving factor must account both for himself and his co-factor, though admitted that the executrix of the deceased factor was compellable, and that among merchants the jus accrescendi has no place. Holtscomb v. Rivers, 1 Ch. Ca. 127.

4. If a merchant employs his apprentice as a factor beyond sea, and he dies, his administrator shall account. Lee v. Bowler, Rep. temp. Finch 125.

5. A. sends B. as a factor abroad, and commissions him to draw on a foreign merchant, which he does, and so states in the account furnished. A. gives credit for the bills drawn as cash; but the bills are not accepted, by the contrivance of A. B. shall not be concluded by that account, but be paid. Ward v. Praed, Coles's P. C. 57.

6. Amongst the most important duties of a factor are those which require him to give to his principal the free and unbiassed use of his own discretion and judgment, to keep and render just and true accounts, and to keep the property of his principal unmixed with his own or the property of others. A factor having violated all these and other duties:—Held, that no credit was due to his accounts, and that the principal was not bound by them. Clarke v. Tipping, 9 Beav. 284.

7. Plaintiff, a factor abroad, having exceeded the price limited for the purchase of hemp, the defendant, who objected to the contract, but afterwards re-shipped and disposed of some of it on a risk, was ordered to account for the cost price. Cornwall v. Wilson, 1 Ves. 509.

Factor exceeds orders on one part, saves on another, the principal to take the whole. Ib.

8. Factor or correspondent pretending to insure as directed, charged as if he had insured. But such equity does not extend to an agent employed by him (ignorant of such deception). Tickel v. Short, 2 Ves. 239.

9. If a factor evades the custom of goods due to a foreign prince, and thereby incurs the punishment of a felon, and the forfeiture of the whole freight, he shall have the benefit, for he ran the risk. Smith v. Oxenden, 1 Ch. Ca. 25. S. P. Knipe v. Jesson, 1 Ch. Ca. 76.

10. Secus, if the factor evades the custom due to the King of England, for that is a fraud. Borr or Borre v. Vandall or Vande, 1 Ch. Ca. 30; Nel. 87.

11. Bill brought by principal to discover what goods defendant bought of his agent; he demurred, for that he was not obliged to set out what gain he had made by retail; demurrer overruled. Lisset v. Reave, 2 Atk. 394.

5. Set-off.

12. It being within the ordinary scope of a factor's authority to sell his principal's goods in his own name, a purchaser who has no knowledge of the agency is entitled to set off against the price of the goods a debt due to him from the factor personally. Exp. Dixon, Re Henley, 46 L. J., Bky., 20; 4 L. R., Ch. D., 133; 35 L. T., N. S., 644; 25 W. R. 105.

A principal had stipulated with his factor that bills of exchange for the price of goods sold should be made payable in such a manner as to show the factor's connexion with the principal, and they were, in fact, stamped "Agent for W. Dixon (Lim.), Calder and Govan Ironworks, Glasgow," in pale blue ink, but so that the stamp was concealed or obscured by the agent's signature:—Held, that the purchase being from a factor, and not a mere agent, the stipulation was immaterial as regarded the purchaser, unless he was affected with notice, and that the stamping of the bills was not sufficient evidence of notice against the purchaser's uncontradicted oath that he was unaware of any agency. Ib.

13. A. employs B. as his factor to sell cloth; B. sells cloth on credit, and before the money is paid dies, indebted by specialty more than his assets will pay; this money shall be paid to A., and not to the administrator of B. as part of his assets, but thereout must be deducted what was due to B. for commission; a factor is in nature of a trustee only for his principal. Burdett v. Willett, 2 Vern. 638.

1. Administrator of a clothier brings an action against the factor for cloths sent by the clothier to the factor; the factor cannot in equity deduct, out of the value of the cloth, the money owing to him from the clothier. Chapman v. Derby, 2 Vern. 117.

2. A foreign merchant remitted bills to his factor in London for the purpose of being sold, with a view to enable the factor to meet bills which the foreign merchant had drawn or was about to draw upon him. The bills remitted were endorsed by the foreign merchant to the factor, and by the latter in his own name to the purchaser. Before the purchase money of the bills was paid the factor became bankrupt: —Held, that the proceeds of the bills belonged to the foreign merchant, and were not subject to a lien claimed by the purchaser in respect of a debt owing to him by the factor. Exp. Pauli, Re Trye, 3 Dea. 169 ; 2 Jur. 208.

3. Merchants in London, upon the instruction of shipping agents at Havannah, with respect to a cargo of tobacco to be consigned to the London merchants, and after receiving the shipping documents, effected policies of marine insurance in the ordinary form on behalf and for the benefit of all parties whom it might concern. The Havannah agents shipped and consigned the tobacco in their own names, but were in fact acting as commission agents for Havannah merchants to whom the tobacco belonged ; and the London merchants, before effecting the policies, had notice that the Havannah agents had an unnamed principal. A total loss having occurred, the London merchants received the policy moneys, but before receipt had notice that the moneys were claimed by the Havannah principals :—Held, that an action lay by the Havannah principals against the London merchants for the policy moneys ; that the London merchants were not entitled to a lien upon the moneys for the balance of their general account with the Havannah agents, and could not in that action set off their claim to that balance, or set off anything, except the premiums, stamps, and commission in respect of the insurance. Mildred v. Maspons, 8 L. R., App. Cas., 874 ; 53 L. J., Q. B., 33 ; 49 L. T. 685 ; 32 W. R. 125.

Held, also, by Lord Blackburn, that the case fell within the Factors Act (6 Geo. 4, c. 94), s. 1. Sed quære, by Lord Fitzgerald. Ib.

6. Suits by and against.

By Factor.] 4. A factor who sells goods for a principal may bring an action in the name of the principal against the vendee, and make himself a witness; or a vendor of goods to a factor for the use of his principal may maintain an action against the principal, and the factor may be a witness for the vendor. Snee v. Prescot, 1 Atk. 248.

Against Factor.] 5. Broker or factor not naming principal, may be examined on action in name of principal, but simply for benefit of trade ; if principal is declared, action must be against him. Dixon v. Parker, 2 Ves. 221.

But such broker or factor must act for another at the very time ; no subsequent consent or agreement will do. Ib.

6. Brokers and factors who act or agree for their principals are not liable in their own capacities. Johnson v. Ogilby, 3 P. Wms. 279.

XIV. ESTATE AGENTS.

7. When an owner of property employs an estate agent to procure a purchaser or tenant at a specified price, the agent has no implied authority to conclude a contract for sale ; his duty is simply to find a purchaser or tenant, and to communicate his offer to the owner. Wilde v. Watson, 1 Ir. L. R., Ch. D., 402.

8. An estate or a house agent, to whom instructions are given to procure a purchaser for property, has not, though the price is named in the instructions, authority to enter into a binding contract with a purchaser to sell such property. Hamer v. Sharp, 44 L. J., Ch., 53 ; 19 L. R., Eq., 108 ; 23 W. R. 158 ; 31 L. T. 643.

9. An agent to let lands is bound to let them to the best advantage ; but upon the mere ground of undervalue, a bonâ fide letting, which would be binding on the principal himself, will be equally binding on him when he acts through an agent, if the agent has acted fairly and honestly. Dyas v. Cruise, 2 J. & L. 460 ; 8 Ir. Eq. R. 407.

10. A power to a land agent to "manage and superintend estates" authorises him, on behalf of his principal, to enter into an agreement for the usual and customary leases, according to the nature and locality of the property. Peers v. Sneyd, 17 Beav. 151.

XV. GOVERNMENT AGENTS.

11. An agent who has received his instructions from a local subordinate government is not bound to recognise the authority of the supreme government, with respect to which his immediate principal is subordinate, in the subject matter of the agency. Spain (Queen of) v. Parr, 18 W. R. 110 ; 21 L. T., N. S., 555.

The London agent, who was also a member of a firm, who was commissioned to sell goods on behalf of the local government of a Spanish colony, was held to be justified in refusing to give them up to the Spanish consul-general in England till he had communicated, through his immediate principals, with the local government. S. C. 39 L. J., Ch., 73.

12. An act done by an agent of the government, though in excess of his authority, being ratified and adopted by the government, is equivalent to a previous authority. Secretary of State for India v. Kamachee Boye Sahaba, 7 Moo. Ind. App. 476 ; 13 Moo. P. C. 22.

Where a printer has been in the habit of printing and selling indiscriminately labels containing a copy, or colourable imitations, of the trade mark of the plaintiff, the celebrated manufacturer of eau de Cologne, and the plaintiff had filed his bill for an injunction to restrain such printing and selling, which was granted by the Vice-Chancellor, the Lord Chancellor dissolved the injunction on the ground that it appeared that there was a legitimate object for which these labels might be applied by retail dealers, viz., to replace soiled labels affixed to bottles containing the genuine eau de Cologne of the plaintiff. Farina v. Silverlock, 6 De G. VI. LUNACY APPEAL. See LUNATIC, XVI.
VII. JURISDICTION IN PATENT CASES. See PATENT.

I. JURISDICTION.

1. The Privy Council has no jurisdiction to direct the release of a party imprisoned for a contempt of the court below pending an appeal respecting the merits of the suit. Hughes v. Porrel, 4 Moo. P. C. 41.

2. Semble, a fine imposed by a court of record, for contempt of court, cannot be remitted by the Privy Council on appeal. Smith v. Sierre Leone (Justices), 3 Moo. P. C. 361.

3. The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council have no power under their general jurisdiction, as a court of error, to issue an order in the nature of a mandamus to the Court of Common Pleas to enter up judgment, though it was quite clear that judgment ought to have been entered up. Re Muir, 3 Moo. P. C. 150.

4. Semble, the Judicial Committe have no jurisdiction to determine matters litigated in an inferior court, but on appeal from the decision of that Court. Re Gould, 2 Moo. P. C. 188.

5. The Judicial Committee are bound to take notice of the law of the country from which the appeal comes, and to decide according to it, although it has not been noticed in the court below. When, therefore, a court below had decided upon the ground of evidence of which they had cognisance in another suit, but which was not legally before them in the suit in question, their decree was supported on the ground that the appellant, who was the plaintiff before them, had, according to the law of the country, no right to sue. Chowdry v. Dibeh, 3 Knapp 55.

6. The next of kin of an intestate filed their bill in equity, in the Supreme Court of Newfoundland, against A., the brother and deceased partner of the intestate, for an account of the estate of the father of A. and of the intestate, possessed by A., and an account of the partnership transactions, and the dealings of A. with the estate, since the death of the intestate. The bill was taken pro confesso against A., in the Colonial Court; and, on a reference, the Master reported that certain sums were due to the several next of kin on the account of the estate of the intestate's father possessed by A.; but that no account between A. and the intestate had been laid before him. The Supreme Court decreed that the sums, found by the Master to be due to the next of kin, and the costs, should be paid to them by A. The next of kin brought their actions in this country against A. upon the decree. A. then filed his bill in this court against the next of kin and personal representative of the intestate, stating that the intestate's estate was indebted to him on the partnership accounts and on private transactions, alleging various errors and irregularities in the proceedings in the Supreme Court, and that A. intended to appeal therefrom to the Privy Council; and praying that the estate of the intestate might be administered, the partnership accounts taken, the amount of the debt due to A. ascertained and paid, and the next of kin restrained by injunction from proceeding in their actions. Demurrer, for want of equity, allowed, on the ground that the whole of the matters were in question between the parties, and might properly have been the subject of adjudication in the suit before the Supreme Court of Newfoundland. That inasmuch as the Privy Council is the court of appeal from the Colonial Court, and has jurisdiction to stay the execution of the decree pending the appeal, the Court will not interfere by injunction on the ground of error or irregularity in the decree of the Colonial Court. Henderson v. Henderson, 3 Hare 100.

Whether, in a case of error, shown in the judgment of the Court of a foreign country, from which there was no appeal to any of Her Majesty's Courts, the decision would be the same, quære. Ib.

1. The British North America Act 1867, s. 91, in assigning to the Dominion Parliament the subjects of bankruptcy and insolvency, intended to confer, and did confer, on it legislative power to interfere with property, civil rights, and procedure within the provinces, so far as these latter might be affected by a general law relating to these subjects. Consequently the Dominion enactment, 40 Vict., c. 41, s. 28, amending the Canadian Insolvent Act, and providing, that the judgment of the Court of Appeal in matters of insolvency should be final, and not subject to the appeal as of right to Her Majesty in Council allowed by the Civil Procedure Code, Art. 1178, is within the competence of the Canadian Parliament, and does not infringe the exclusive powers given to the provincial legislatures by s. 92 of the Imperial statute. Neither does it infringe the Queen's prerogative, for it only limits the right of appeal as given by the code. Cushing v. Dupuy, 5 L. R., App. Cas., 409; 49 L. J., P. C., 63; 42 L. T. 445.

The section, according to the true construction of the word "final" therein, excludes appeals to Her Majesty; but contains no words which purport to derogate from the prerogative of the Queen to allow such appeals as an act of grace. It, therefore, does not interfere with the prerogative of the Crown: and, quære, what powers may be possessed by the Parliament of Canada so to do. Ib.

II. ORDERS IN COUNCIL. CONSTRUCTION.

2. As to construction of orders in Council, see Martyn v. Macullock, 1 Moo. P. C. 308.

3. An ordinance passed in pursuance of an order in Council, and not altered or disapproved by Her Majesty in Council, though seemingly more extensive than contemplated by the order, is not void for the excess, but will be considered as duly authorised by the order, and taken in conjunction with it. Inglis v. Barnard, 3 Moo. P. C. 425.

Effect of on Subordinate Tribunals.] 4. When a decision of the Judicial Committee has been reported to Her Majesty, and has been sanctioned, it becomes the decree or order of the final Court of Appeal; and it is the duty of every subordinate tribunal to whom the order is addressed to carry it into execution. Pitts v. La Fontaine, 6 L. R., App. Cas., 482; 50 L. J., P. C., 8; 43 L. T. 519.

III. APPEAL, RIGHT TO, AND SPECIAL LEAVE.

1. Right to, 5961.
2. Where no Intermediate Appeal, 5962.
3. Leave, when Granted, 5963.
4. Criminal Cases, 5966.
5. Contempts, 5967.
6. For Costs, 5967.
7. Appealable Value, 5968.
8. Petition for Special Leave, 5970.

1. Right to.

5. Semble, the Crown has no greater right than the subject to be let in to appeal in a general case in which its interests are concerned. Laing v. Ingham, 3 Moo. P. C. 26.

6. An appeal lies from a decree in the Isle of Man to the King in Court. Christian v. Corren, 1 P. W. 329.

7. Semble, that an appeal against the sentence of a colonial bishop, should now pray a reference to the Judicial Committee, and not to a commission of delegates. Bowerbank v. Jamaica (Bishop), 2 Moo. P. C. 449.

8. An appeal from decrees made in the plantations lies only to the King in Council. Fryer v. Bernard, 2 P. W. 262.

9. The right of appeal given by the charters of Bengal, Madras, and Bombay extends to interlocutory orders as well as to final decrees, but it does not extend to the finding of a jury upon an issue from the equity side of the court, no motion for a new trial having been made, nor exceptions taken to the Master's report founded on the verdict. Ramdass v. Madowdass, 3 Moo. P. C. 87.

10. A party is not bound to appeal from an interlocutory decree, though he might by so doing have raised the whole question at issue on the appeal from the definite sentence. Jones v. Gough, 3 Moo. P. C., N. S., 1.

11. An interlocutory order, referring matters of account to the sworn accountant of the Court of Civil Justice in Berbice, with instructions thereon, is not such a definite sentence as by the rules of the civil law requires a specific appeal, but may be questioned on a general appeal from the final sentence of the Court. Cameron v. Fraser, 4 Moo. P. C. 1.

12. No appeal lies from the Court of Common Pleas in Antigua except to the Court of Error in the island, from whose judgment an appeal lies to the Queen in Council; but the refusal of that Court to enter upon such appeal, under the mistaken notion that they were not properly constituted as a Court, was held not sufficient to let in an appeal to the Queen in Council. Re Manning (Assignees), 3 Moo. P. C. 154.

13. An appeal will lie to the Lords of the Committee of Council from a provisional order of the Royal Court of Jersey. Re Belson, 7 Moo. P. C. 114; 14 Jur. 631.

14. An order made by the judges of the Supreme Court of Madras, dismissing the Master of that court from his office for alleged official misconduct in the taxation of a bill of costs, reversed upon appeal by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. Re Minchin, 6 Moo. P. C. 43.

Such an order, being made by the Court a its own instance, is not an appealable griev ance within the Madras Charter of Justice of December 1800. Ib.

1. By an order in Council of the 30th June 1860, provision is made for appeals from the Supreme Court in the colony of Queensland to Her Majesty in Council. Australasia (Bank) v. Harris, 8 Jur., N. S., 181; 10 W. R. 383; 15 Moo. P. C. 97.

2. The Judicial Committee has no jurisdiction to take into consideration the propriety of the dismissal of a public servant by a governor-general of a colony from an office held during his pleasure, unless the matter is expressly referred to them by the Crown. Exp. Robertson, 11 Moo. P. C. 288.

3. Where a party had repudiated the succession before the sheriff, and an Act founded on that repudiation had been in his presence recorded in the Royal Court, he was not allowed to appeal against that Act, though he alleged that he never meant to repudiate the succession, but only to avoid his share in certain unnecessary expenses, and though it appeared the record contained error on the face of it, that being a matter for the Court below to set right if required. Le Feuvre v. Le Feuvre, 2 Moo. P. C. 70.

4. An appeal lies to the Privy Council as a court of error, if there is error on the face of the record, such as might be moved in arrest of judgment in the court below. Tronson v. Dent, 8 Moo. P. C. 420.

5. It is the settled prerogative of the Crown to receive appeals in all colonial causes. Re Natal (Bishop), 11 Jur., N. S., 353; 13 W. R. 549; 12 L. T., N. S., 188.

It is the undoubted prerogative of the Crown to receive appeals in all colonial causes; and by the 25 Hen. 8, c. 19 (by which the mode of appeal to the Crown in ecclesiastical causes was directed), it is by s. 4 enacted, that "for lack of justice at or in any of the courts of the archbishops of this realm, or in any of the King's dominions, it shall be lawful to the parties grieved to appeal to the King's Majesty in the King's Court of Chancery"—an enactment which gave rise to the commission of delegates, which was abolished by 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 92, and for which the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council is by 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 41, substituted. S. C. 3 Moo. P. C., N. S., 115.

In a dispute in a colony between two independent prelates, which, previously to the 25 Hen. 8, c. 29, would have been referred to the Pope, Her Majesty has appellate jurisdiction, and can exercise the same by referring the matter, under the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 41, for the advice of the Judicial Committee. Ib.

6. An information by way of bill of complaint was by consent amended by the introduction of the words, "That the rights, if any, of the several defendants may be ascertained and declared by decree of the Court, and that they may be ordered to pay each to the others and other of them their and his costs of this suit, and that the Court will give such further directions in the premises as shall be necessary." There was no stipulation that the right of appeal should be given up, and it appeared that the parties never contemplated that they were ceasing to keep the cause in curiâ, or that the judge was to hear it otherwise than as a judge, or that it was not to go on subject to all the incidents of a cause regularly heard in court:—Held, that the right to appeal had not being waived. Pisani v. Att.-Gen. (Gibraltar), 5 L. R., P. C., 516; 22 W. R. 900; 30 L. T., N. S., 729.

7. A party to a suit, having an interest in the subject matter in his own right, and also as trustee for other parties, became insolvent, and his interest was vested in a trustee appointed to his sequestered estate:—Held, that he might, as such trustee, prosecute an appeal from an order made in the suit, notwithstanding the insolvency and the vesting of his estate and interest in the trustee of the sequestered estate. Bute (Marchioness) v. Mason, Exp. Heard, 7 Moo. P. C. 1.

8. The rule of English law that an appeal does not lie unless given by express legislative enactment does not prevail in French or Canadian law. Montreal (Mayor, etc.) v. Brown, 35 L. T., N. S., 870; 2 L. R., App. Cas., 168.

By a colonial statute, commissioners were appointed to fix the compensation to be paid for property taken for public improvements who were to make a report to be confirmed by the Superior Court, from which there was no appeal. The Act contained a further provision, that if the commissioners did not fulfil their duties in a diligent manner, they might be removed on petition to the Superior Court:—Held, that the Court of Queen's Bench had jurisdiction to entertain an appeal from the Superior Court upon a petition under the Act. Ib.

Upon a question of procedure, the Judicial Committee will be unwilling to reverse the decision of a colonial Court. Ib.

9. Express words are necessary to limit the prerogative of the Crown to entertain appeals; but the jurisdiction of Courts in election petitions, delegated to them by colonial legislative bodies, is special in its character, and does not involve as one of its incidents any right of appeal to the Crown. Théberge v. Laudry, 46 L. J., P. C., 1; 2 L. R., App. Cas., 102; 35 L. T., N. S., 640; 24 W. R. 216.

10. By Supreme Court Act 1875 (38 Vict. c. 11), s. 47, the judgment of the Supreme Court shall in all cases be final and conclusive, and no appeal shall be brought from any judgment or order of the Supreme Court to any court of appeal established by the Parliament of Great Britain and Ireland, by which appeals or petitions to Her Majesty in Council may be ordered to be heard, saving any right which Her Majesty may be graciously pleased to exercise by virtue of her royal prerogative:—Held, that this section referred only to the hypothetical establishment in the future of a Court for hearing colonial appeals, not to any existing Court; and that in any case it left the Crown's prerogative entirely untouched. St. Andrew's Church, Montreal v. Johnston, 3 L. R., App. Cas., 159; 37 L. T., N. S., 556; 26 W. R. 359.

2. Where no Intermediate Appeal.

11. The Court, on special grounds, and upon terms, allowed an appeal, under 7 & 8 Vict., c. 69, direct from the Colonial Court, without bringing a previous writ of error in the Court of Error there. Re Barnett, 4 Moo. P. C. 453.

12. Where there are questions of law, raised by the proceedings in the inferior courts in the colonies, the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council will favour an application for leave to appeal direct to the Queen in Council, under the 7 & 8 Vict., c. 69, without resorting to the intermediate court of appeal in the colony. Harrison v. Scott, 5 Moo. P. C. 357; 10 Jur. 443.

1. Under the statute 7 & 8 Vict., c. 69, an appeal allowed direct from the Assize Court, at Kingston, in Jamaica, to the Queen in Council, without an intermediate appeal to the Court of Error in the island. Hitchins v. Hollingsworth, 7 Moo. P. C. 228.

2. An appeal does not lie direct from the Supreme Court of New Zealand. Re Bunny, 8 W. R. 248.

3. The 15 Vict., No 10, gives an appeal to Her Majesty in Council from every judgment of the Supreme Court of Victoria. The 19 Vict., No. 13, gives one judge power to sit alone in the Supreme Court in equity, and gives an appeal to the whole court in banc, saving the appeal from the judgment of the full court to the Queen in Council:—Held, that the judgment of the single judge in equity is a judgment of the Supreme Court from which an appeal will lie direct to Her Majesty, and that the intermediate appeal is only permissive. Garden Gully United Quartz Mining Co. v. M'Lister, 1 L. R., App. Cas., 39; 24 W. R. 744; 33 L. T. 408.

3. Leave, when Granted.

4. By a Charter of Justice to a colonial Court, power was given to any party to appeal to the King in Council, against any final judgment, decree, or sentence of the Court, or any rule or order having the effect of a final or definitive sentence, and which appeal should be subject to the regulations therein mentioned. In a subsequent part of the charter there was a reservation to the King in Council, upon the petition of any person aggrieved by any judgment or determination of the Court to appeal therefrom, upon such other terms, and subject to such other regulations and restrictions, as to His Majesty should seem fit:—Held, upon a petition for leave to appeal, that no appeal could be allowed, except from a final judgment, decree, or sentence, or rule, or order, having the effect of a definitive sentence. Re Mahon, 2 Knapp 66.

5. Semble, where a matter has been referred by Her Majesty to the Judicial Committee, which is not strictly an appealable grievance, their lordships may, under the reservations contained in the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 41, advise Her Majesty to grant the petitioner leave to appeal. Morgan v. Leech, 3 Moo. P. C. 368.

6. Appeals from two orders of the Supreme Court of British Guiana, suspending from practice, for six months, two counsel, on special petition, allowed, and, under the circumstances, such orders reversed. Re Downie, 3 Moo. P. C. 414.

7. Appeal allowed (without prejudice to any objection to be taken by the Royal Court of Jersey at the hearing), from a provisional order of that Court, directing the infant children of the parties to be left provisionally in the custody of the mother, pending a suit for separation. Belson v. Belson, 7 Moo. P. C. 30.

8. The Charter of Justice of the Mauritius being silent as to appeals in cases of sentence of divorce, the Court there has not power to grant an appeal; but on a special application, in a fit case, the committee will advise the Crown to allow it on terms. D'Orliac v. D'Orliac, 4 Moo. P. C. 374.

9. The Charter of Justice of New South Wales of the 13th October 1823 (made in pursuance of the powers conferred by the 4 Geo. 4, c. 96), gave a right of appeal from the Court of Appeals in the colony to the King in Council, where the subject at issue involved the sum of 2,000*l.* sterling. The 4 Geo. 4, c. 96 being about to expire, the 9 Geo. 4, c. 83 was passed, in which no provision was made for the continuance of the Court of Appeals; but power was given to His Majesty by charter, orders in Council, or letters patent, to make rules for allowing appeals from the Supreme Court of the colony. No new charter, order in Council, or letters patent issued under this Act. In such circumstances, the judges in New South Wales held that they had no jurisdiction to allow an appeal from the Supreme Court to Her Majesty in Council; the Judicial Committee upon special petition, under their general jurisdiction, advised Her Majesty to admit such appeal. Flint v. Walker, 5. Moo. P. C. 180; 12 Jur. 1.

10. Under the Charter of Justice in the Mauritius, although there is no right of appeal in matrimonial causes, the Court will recommend the Crown to grant leave to appeal on a special application; in such cases, where the appeal is incompetent, the respondent ought to move, in the first instance, to dismiss the appeal, and not wait until the hearing to object. Shire v. Shire, 5 Moo. P. C. 81.

11. Although no power is given by the Charter of Justice, or the Act of Parliament creating the Supreme Court at New South Wales, to allow an appeal to the Queen in Council from that Court, yet, to prevent a failure of justice, this Court will, upon a petition for that purpose, grant leave to appeal from a judgment of that Court. Australasia (Bank) v. Breillat, 6 Moo. P. C. 152; S. C. nom. Australasia (Bank) v. Anstralia (Bank), 12 Jur. 189.

12. An appeal having been allowed by the Court below, and referred by Her Majesty to the Judicial Committee for adjudication in the ordinary way, their lordships, though of opinion that there existed no charter right of appeal, thought it a fit case for the allowance of a special appeal; and having heard the case upon the merits, directed a petition for special leave to appeal to be presented to Her Majesty; which, on being referred to them, they recommended the allowance thereof, and that the appeal be placed in the same plight and condition as that originally referred to them. Re Minchin, 6 Moo. P. C. 43.

13. Upon petition leave was given to appeal from an order of the Supreme Court at New South Wales, although no provision for appeal to the Queen in Council was made by the charter of justice, or Act of Parliament, creating that Court. Bute (Marchioness) v. Mason, Exp. Heard, 7 Moo. P. C. 1.

14. Appeal from an order of the Supreme Court at Calcutta, suspending from office the master and accountant-general and examiner in equity of that court, upon special application, allowed. Re Grant, 7 Moo. P. C. 141.

1. Leave given to appeal, under circumstances, though the time limited by the Bombay charter had expired, and the decree of the Court below sanctioning the sale of real estate, the subject of the suit, had been partially acted on; the petitioner undertaking not to disturb the possession or title of the purchasers of any part of the property actually sold, to give security for costs, and to abide by any order which the Judicial Committee might think fit to make touching the matters in dispute. Re Musadee Mahomed Cazum Sherazee, 7 Moo. P. C. 391.

2. An Act of the Legislature of India, No. 18 of 1848, empowered the Governor in Council of Bombay to administer the private estate of the late Nawab of Surat, and it was by s. 2 enacted, "that no act of the Governor of Bombay in Council in respect of the administration to, and distribution of, such property, from the date of the death of the said Nawab, should be liable to be questioned in any court of law or equity." No provision was made for an appeal from the governor's decision. In pursuance of the power conferred by this Act, the Government agent at Surat, to whom the matter was referred, made an award, distributing the estate, in certain shares, among the heirs of the deceased, which award was confirmed by the Governor in Council. Upon application by a claimant dissatisfied with the award to the Judicial Committee, for leave to appeal from the Governor in Council's confirmation of the award:—Held, that the award was not such a judicial act as to come within the operation of s. 3 of 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 41, or the 7 & 8 Vict., c. 69, and could not be entertained by the Committee without a special reference to them by the Crown, under s. 4 of the 3 and 4 Will. 4, c. 41. Re Nawab of Surat, 9 Moo. P. C. 88.

3. Appeal allowed from a sentence of the lieutenant-governor of the island of Heligoland; the sentence having been passed without hearing the appellant's case. Siemens v. Bufe, 11 Moo. P. C. 62.

4. No provision by statute or charter being made for appeal to Her Majesty in Council from judgments of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oude, created on the annexation of that kingdom, in 1858, the Judicial Committee, to prevent a denial of justice, admitted an appeal under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 41. Salik Ram v. Azim Ali Reg, 14 Moo. P. C. 329.

5. Appeal to the Queen in Council allowed under 17 & 18 Vict., c. 117, s. 65, by the chief commissioner of the West Indian encumbered estates, upon prescribed terms. Fraser v. Burgess, 13 Moo. P. C. 314.

6. By an Order in Council, of the 10th of May 1860, provision is made for a direct appeal from judgments, decrees, or orders of the Supreme Court at New Zealand to the Queen. That Court refused to allow an appeal from an order made before the date of that Order in Council, on the ground that it was not retrospective in its operation. Upon petition, special leave to appeal was granted. Re Bunny, 15 Moo. P. C. 164; 8 W. R. 248.

7. The Crown, by letters patent of the 13th of May 1858, separated the district of Moreton Bay from New South Wales, and erected that district, under the name of Queensland, into a separate colony. The separation was proclaimed in New South Wales on the 1st of December 1859, and, on the 11th of that month in Moreton Bay, an appeal from the Supreme Court at Moreton Bay lay to the Supreme Court at New South Wales. On the 6th of December 1859 notice of an appeal was given from a judgment of the Court at Moreton Bay, and on the 22nd a special case was agreed on. The Supreme Court at New South Wales refused to entertain the appeal on the ground of want of jurisdiction. By an Order in Council on the 30th of June 1860, provision was made for appeals from the Supreme Court at Moreton Bay to the Queen in Council. Upon a special petition, leave was granted to appeal to the Queen in Council from the decision of the Supreme Court at Moreton Bay. Australasia (Bank) v. Harris, 15 Moo. P. C. 97.

8. By the Order in Council of the 30th of June 1860, provision is made for appeals from the Supreme Court at Queensland, formerly called Moreton Bay, direct to Her Majesty in Council. Ib.

9. Application for special leave to appeal from a judgment of the Court of Appeals for the Leeward Islands, on the grounds, first, that the Court being improperly constituted, no appeal could be legally asserted within the fourteen days from the judgment, the time limited for asserting an appeal; and, secondly, that the proceedings in the court below should have been at law and not in equity, refused, as the petitioner ought to have applied for leave to appeal within the time prescribed, which might have been done under protest; and that he was not entitled to the indulgence he asked for, his objection to the mode of proceeding being merely of a technical character and not affecting the merits. Exp. Kensington, 15 Moo. P. C. 209.

10. The Judicial Committee will not advise Her Majesty to grant leave to appeal to a party who resists a claim, not on the ground of the merits of his case, but on the ground of a mere formal defect in procedure on the part of the claimant. Exp. Kennington, 8 Jur., N. S., 1111; 10 W. R. 751.

On a petition for leave to appeal from a decision of a colonial court of appeal, on the ground that that court was not properly constituted at the time when the decision was given, it appeared that the petitioner was sued by a claimant in a court of equity in England, and was ordered by such Court to pay a sum of money to the claimant. The claimant proceeded to enforce this order by bill in the Equity Court of the Island of Antigua. The petitioner demurred, on the ground that the claim should have been enforced in a court of law in the colony, but judgment was given against the petitioner; whereupon he appealed to the Court of Appeal of the colony, which Court decided against him, on the ground that he had not served notice of appeal on the other side within the time required by a colonial statute. No application was made within fourteen days to the Court of Appeal, as required by the rules relating to appeals from the Leeward Islands, to grant leave to appeal, on the ground that the Court of Appeal was not properly constituted to entertain the application:—Held, that either under protest or perhaps without protest, the petitioner might have applied to the Court of Appeal of the colony without damaging his case, and leave to appeal was refused. Ib.

1. The Judicial Committee will not grant special leave to appeal except when it appears clearly upon a statement of facts, verified by affidavit, that there is a point of general law proper to be determined on appeal, and a substantial case upon the merits. Gour Monee Dossee v. Jogendro Narain Chowdury, 12 Jur., N. S., 477; 14 W. R. 904.

2. Application for special leave to appeal from an order of the Supreme Court of Jamaica, refusing to quash a fiat, or certificate of insolvency, made under a local Act, refused, as the question at issue, namely, the validity of the fiat of insolvency, was not an appealable grievance within the Order in Council. Re Abrahams, 2 Moo. P. C., N. S., 241.

3. Special leave to appeal allowed from an order of the High Court of Judicature for the North-Western Provinces of India, by which order an infant was taken from the custody of her mother, a Mahomedan, on the ground that the minor's deceased father had been a professed Christian, and her mother, who was, as the Court held, living in adultery, was inducing her daughter to adopt the faith and habits of a Mahomedan. Liberty given, pending the hearing of the appeal, to the petitioner to apply to the High Court to have access at suitable times to her daughter. Re Skinner, 3 L. R., P. C., 451; 7 Moo. P. C., N. S., 296.

4. Special leave to appeal granted on the ground that the question raised was one of public interest, involving the constitutional rights of a colonial legislative assembly. Speaker of the Legislative Assembly of Victoria v. Glass, 3 L. R., P. C., 560; 40 L. J., P. C., 17; 24 L. T. 37; 20 W. R. 42; 7 Moo. P. C., N. S., 449.

5. The Supreme Court of the Straits Settlement having refused to grant leave to appeal to the Queen in Council, on the ground that it did not possess power to grant such leave, the Judicial Committee granted leave to appeal against the original decree, and also against the order refusing leave to appeal. Neo v. Neo, 5 L. R., P. C., 89.

6. The power of appeal to Her Majesty, and the authority of the Supreme Court of the Straits Settlement to grant leave to do so, contained in the letters patent of the Queen of the 10th of August 1855, were not abrogated by ordinance No. 5 of 1868, establishing the existing Supreme Court. All the provisions of the repealed letters patent applicable to the old court were virtually re-enacted by the ordinance, and made applicable to the new court which was put in its place. Neo v. Neo, 6 L. R., P. C., 381.

7. A bank, carried on by an unlimited and unincorporated partnership in Jersey, stopped payment, and, after certain proceedings in voluntary liquidation, the judge commissaire, to whom the Royal Court referred the ascertainment of claims under the Jersey Act, reported that the Crédit Foncier was a creditor (if at all) to the amount of 53,606*l.*, and, after a further reference by the same Court relating to another creditor's claim, reported that the requisite amount of assents had been obtained, and thereupon the Royal Court registered and confirmed a composition between the partnership and its creditors. The company petitioned for special leave to appeal, first, against the order of the Royal Court referring the matter to the judge commissaire; secondly, against the further reference by the same Court; and, thirdly, against the order confirming and registering the composition; alleging that they were entitled to claim 55,160*l.*, and that the claim of B. (who also petitioned), having been admitted at 3,800*l.*, was not mentioned in the schedule, and by reason of this and another error of computation the requisite assents had not been obtained. The Privy Council granted leave to appeal against the order confirming and registering the composition, limited to two questions; first as to the claim for 3,800*l.*; secondly, as to the alleged error of computation. The Council refused leave to proceed by a doléance, considering that by an ordinary appeal the petitioners could obtain relief. Crédit Foncier v. Amy, Bailey v. Amy, 6 L. R., P. C., 146.

8. The Dominion Controverted Elections Act of 1874 (Canadian Statute, 37 Vict., c. 10) does not contravene s. 92, subs. 14, of the British North America Act 1867. Valin v. Langlois, 5 L. R., App. Cas., 115; 49 L. J., P. C., 37; 41 L. T. 662.

9. The said sub-section does not relate to election petitions, while s. 41 of the same Act reserved to the Parliament of Canada the power of creating a jurisdiction to determine them. Ib.

The Parliament of Canada has power to commit such jurisdiction to existing provincial courts. Ib.

Special leave refused to appeal from two concurrent judgments of the Courts in Canada affirming the competency and validity of the said Act of 1874; it appearing that there was no substantial question requiring to be determined, nor any doubt of the soundness of the decisions, nor any reason to apprehend difficulty or disturbance from leaving the decisions untouched. Ib.

10. It is not competent to the Court of Queen's Bench for Lower Canada to grant leave to appeal to HerMajesty in Council from an interlocutory order, unless specially authorised so to do by the code of civil procedure. Goldring v. La Banque d'Hochelaga, 5 L. R., App. Cas., 371; 49 L. J., P. C., 82.

A judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench affirming a judgment of the Superior Court, which rejected the appellant's petition that a certain writ of capias ad respondendum issued against him under arts. 798 and 801 of the code of civil procedure might be set aside, is not a final judgment within the meaning of art. 1178. Ib.

11. Their lordships will not advise Her Majesty to admit an appeal from the Supreme Court of the Dominion save where the case is of gravity, involving matter of public interest or some important question of law, or affecting property of considerable amount, or where the case is otherwise of some public importance or of a very substantial character. Petition for special leave to appeal refused, the case depending on a disputed matter of fact whether there had been a gift or sale of certain goods of the value of 1,000*l.* Prince v. Gagnon, 8 L. R., App. Cas., 103.

1. Special leave to appeal will be granted on the ground of the importance of the question at issue. Carter v. Molson, 8 L. R., App. Cas., 530.

2. Petition for special leave to appeal in a case involving only an issue of fact refused. Canada Central Railway Co. v. Murray, 8 L. R., App. Cas., 574.

3. An order of Court directing a defendant to plead to an information (or other analogous proceeding) for libel, and directing that having pleaded he should be tried without a jury, is not a definitive sentence within the meaning of the Order in Council of 13th May 1572. Special leave to appeal therefrom refused. Quære, as to granting special leave to appeal in criminal cases in Jersey, or where there has been no definitive sentence. Esnouf v. Jersey, (Att.-Gen.), 8 L. R., App. Cas., 304; 52 L. J., P. C., 26; 48 L. T. 321.

4. Criminal Cases.

4. The Bombay charter of the 8th December 1823 (granted in pursuance of the powers conferred on the Crown by 4 Geo. 4, c. 71), after providing, "That in all indictments, informations, and criminal suits and causes whatsoever, the said Supreme Court of Judicature at Bombay shall have the full and absolute power and authority to allow or deny the appeal of the party pretending to be aggrieved," proceeds thus, "And we do hereby also reserve to ourself, our heirs and successors, in our or their Privy Council, full power and authority, upon the humble petition of any person or persons aggrieved by a judgment or determination of the Supreme Court of Judicature at Bombay, to refuse to admit his, her, or their appeal thereupon, upon such terms, and under such limitations, restrictions, and regulations, as we or they shall think fit, and to reform, direct, or vary such judgment or determination as to us or them shall seem meet." Upon a petition praying for leave to appeal from a conviction for felony:—Held, by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, that there was no power reserved to the Crown by the charter to allow appeals in criminal cases, such appeal being confined to civil cases only:—Held, also, that the charter having been granted by the Crown by force of an Act of Parliament must be construed with reference to the powers conferred by the Act, even though the prerogative of the Crown were limited by such construction; and that the Supreme Court alone has full and absolute power to allow or deny permission to appeal in criminal cases. Semble, no appeal lies in cases of felony to the Queen in Council from any of the dominions of the Crown of Great Britain which are governed by the law of England. Reg. v. Eduljee Byramjee, 5 Moo. P. C. 276.

5. The Crown had authority, by virtue of its prerogative, to review the decisions of all colonial courts, whether the proceedings are of a civil or criminal character, unless it has parted with such authority; but the inconvenience and inexpediency of entertaining appeals in criminal cases are so great, and the consequences so entirely destructive of the administration of criminal justice in the colonies, that the Judicial Committee is very reluctant to admit an application for such an appeal. Falkland Island Co. v. Reg., 1 Moo., P. C. N. S., 299; 10 Jur., N. S., 807; 12 W. R. 220; 9 L. T., N. S., 103.

Where, however, the proceedings, though in form of a criminal, were in substance rather of a civil character, being an order in the nature of a summary conviction for penalties for killing animals feræ naturæ, and involved an important question of law and property, namely, the right of the Falkland Islands Company to hunt and take wild cattle upon grazing stations and the lands attached thereto, and the ordinance under which the conviction was made gave no appeal; the Judicial Committee, under the special circumstances of the case, and in analogy to the proceeding by certiorari in England, advised Her Majesty to admit an appeal from such order or conviction, on the understanding that the question of title and right would appear upon the face of the record, which was ordered to be brought up. Ib.

6. Appeal to the Queen in Council allowed from a judgment on a conviction of the Supreme Court of Calcutta in a case of murder. Nga Hoong v. Reg., 7 Moo. Ind. App. 72.

7. A person having been convicted of a misdemeanour, and being in prison under sentence in the island of Jamaica, obtained leave to appeal to Her Majesty in Council, but without prejudice to any objection which might be taken at the hearing on behalf of the Crown to the jurisdiction of Her Majesty in Council in the matter. When the appeal came on to be heard, it appeared that the appellant had been discharged from prison on his own memorial:—Held, that as he had, since leave to appeal was granted, obtained all the substantial, if not technical, benefits of a pardon, no good purpose would be answered by entertaining the appeal, and their lordships dismissed the appeal, but made no order as to costs. Levien v. Reg., 36 L. J., P. C., 62; 16 W. R. 159; 1 L. R., P. C., 536.

8. An indictment for libel was found at the assizes, held in the island of Jamaica. The prosecution was a private one. The indictment was afterwards removed by certiorari to the Supreme Court of the island, and tried on the civil side of that court, when a verdict of guilty was found. Upon motion for arrest of judgment, the Supreme Court suspended judgment, pending an application to the Queen in Council, upon certain grounds raised. Upon a petition for leave to appeal, the petition was dismissed, the Court declining to interfere, or give any opinion on the merits of the case. Re Levien, 10 Moo. P. C. 31.

Quære, whether upon a record so framed in the absence of a final judgment, an appeal will lie. Ib.

9. On a petition for leave to appeal from a conviction, judgment, and sentence of the Supreme Criminal Court of the Presidency of Bengal, on the ground of irregularities in the proceedings at the trial:—Held, first, that there exists, on behalf of the Crown, a prerogative right of appeal from all Her Majesty's dominions, even in matters of criminal jurisdiction. Joykissen Moorkerjee v. Reg., 9 Jur., N. S., 4; 1 Moo. P. C., N. S., 172; 10 W. R. 832.

Held, secondly, that by granting an appeal is meant an examination of the whole proceedings which have taken place, not simply the investigation of a question of law. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that it is inexpedient to grant leave to appeal in criminal cases; and admitting that the present was primâ facie a case of great grievance, and admitting the prerogative of the Crown to grant an appeal in criminal cases, the Privy Council refused to grant leave to appeal. Ib.

1. It is the inherent prerogative right, and on all proper occasions the duty, of the Queen in Council to exercise an appellate jurisdiction in all cases, criminal as well as civil, arising in the colonies, from which an appeal lies, and where, either by the terms of a charter or a statute, the power of the Crown has not been parted with, with a view not only to ensure, as far as may be, the due administration of justice in an individual case, but also to preserve generally the due course of procedure. Reg. v. Bertrand, 1 L. R., P. C., 520; 36 L. J., P. C., 51; 16 W. R. 9; 16 L. T., N. S., 752.

The exercise of this branch of the prerogative in criminal cases is to be cautiously admitted, and is regulated by a consideration of circumstances and consequences. Ib.

Leave to appeal will only be granted in special circumstances, such as where a case raises questions of great and general importance in the administration of justice, when it will be proper for the Judicial Committee to advise the allowance of such an appeal. Ib.

2. On a petition by the attorney-general of New South Wales for special leave to appeal from an order of the Supreme Court of that colony, it appeared that the respondent was charged, on a criminal information by the attorney-general of the colony, with murder; that he pleaded not guilty, and was tried and found guilty by the jury. The Supreme Court afterwards, on an application by the respondent, made an order that a venire de novo should issue, on the ground that the jury was allowed access to certain newspapers pending their verdict, special leave to appeal was granted. Reg. v. Murphy, 37 L. J., P. C., 21; 2 L. R., P. C., 35.

3. On a petition by the attorney-general of the province of Quebec, special leave to appeal was granted from a judgment of the Queen's Bench. Quebec, on a case reserved in a trial for felony. Reg. v. Coote, 4 L. R., P. C., 599; 42 L, J.' P. C., 45; 9 Moo. P. C., N. S., 463.

5. Contempts.

4. The Judicial Committee have no jurisdiction to entertain an appeal from orders by a court of record in the colonies inflicting fines upon a practitioner for contempts of court, such court being the sole judge of what constituted the contempts. Rainy v. Sierra Leone (Justices), 8 Moo. P. C. 47.

Upon a reference by the Colonial Office to the Judicial Committee, referring the whole matter of complaint against the judge, concerning the contempts and the infliction of the fines, for their advice and opinion, the Committee advised the Crown to remit part of the fines, which by an Order in Council was directed. Ib.

5. Leave to appeal given from an order of the Supreme Court of Civil Justice of British Guiana, committing the publisher of a local journal to prison for six months for an alleged contempt of court, in publishing in such journal comments on the administration of justice by that Court, with liberty to the judges of the Supreme Court to object to the competency of such appeal at the hearing. Re M'Dermott, 1 L. R., P. C., 260; 17 W. R. 352.

6. The Judicial Committee will not entertain an appeal from an order of a court of record inflicting punishment by fine or imprisonment for contempt, if it appears upon the face of the order that the party has committed a contempt, that he has been duly summoned, and that the punishment awarded was of an appropriate kind. M'Dermott v. British Guiana (Judges), 38 L. J., P. C., 1; 2 L. R., P. C., 341; 20 L. T., N. S., 47; 5 Moo. P. C., N. S., 466.

An order of a colonial court of record committing for contempt being discretionary, is not the subject of an appeal. Ib.

7. Reference by the Crown to the Judicial Committee, under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 41, s. 4, in the matter of a fine imposed for contempt by a colonial court. Re Pollard, 2 L. R., P. C., 106; 3 Moo. P. C., N. S., 111.

6. For Costs.

8. The Judicial Committee will not entertain an appeal solely on the ground of the refusal of the Court below to allow a defendant costs on the dismissal of a suit for subtraction of a church rate, if care and discretion have been bonâ fide exercised by the judge. Richards v. Birley, 2 Moo. P. C., N. S., 96.

9. Where costs are in the discretion of the Court below, an appeal will not lie in respect of costs alone, unless the Court below has proceeded upon a mistake or misapprehension. Attenborough v. Kemp, 14 Moo. P. C. 351; 7 Jur., N. S., 665; 9 W. R. 771; 5 L. T., N. S., 67.

Where there has been bonâ fide care exercised by the judge who refused costs, no appeal will be permitted which involves a question of costs only. Ib.

10. Although an appeal will not be allowed in respect of costs only, yet where there has been a mistake upon some matter of law which governs or affects the costs, the party prejudiced is entitled to have the benefit of correction by appeal. Yeo v. Tatem, The Orient, 3 L. R., P. C., 696; 40 L. J., Adm., 29; 24 L. T. 918; 20 W. R. 6.

11. Appeals merely for the sake of costs will not be allowed, even if the costs amount to the appealable value. Crédit Foncier of Mauritius v. Paturau, 35 L. T. 869.

12. An appeal from a decree of the Vice-Admiralty Court of Sierra Leone, restoring property seized for breach of the custom laws, but without damages or costs, the judge below being of opinion that there was probable cause for the seizure, was dismissed by the Judicial Committee with costs, on the grounds that as regarded one of the appellants, who proved not to be the owner of the goods, though so proceeded against, the appeal was for costs alone, and therefore could not be entertained; and that it appearing from the evidence that there was probable cause for the seizure, the judge of the Admiralty Court was justified in refusing to decree damages and costs to the other appellants, the owners of the goods seized. Wilson v. Reg., 1 L. R., P. C., 405.

7. Appealable Value.

1. Application for leave to appeal from an order of the Supreme Court of Van Diemen's Land, refusing a fourth new trial of an action of trover, the subject matter of which amounted to 970*l.*, refused, the Charter of Justice limiting the right of appeal to 1,000*l.*, and the Judicial Committee being of opinion, upon the merits, that it was a mere question for a jury, who had already found four times against the plaintiff. Re Sherwin, 4 Moo. P. C. 311.

2. Leave given to appeal, though the subject matter of the suit was below 200*l.*, the sum required by the Order in Council of 13th May 1823, and the appeal refused by the Royal Court. Jersey (Att.-Gen.) v. Capelain, 4 Moo. P. C. 37.

3. An Act of the Parliament of Great Britain declared that all laws passed by the legislature of a colony should be valid and binding within the colony, and directed that the Colonial Court of Appeal should be subjected to such appeal as it was previously to the passing of the Act, and also to such further and other provisions as might be made in that behalf by any Act of the colonial legislature: —Held, that an Act having been passed by the colonal legislature, limiting the right of appeal to causes where the sum in dispute was not less than 500*l.* sterling, a petition for leave to appeal, in a cause where the sum was of less amount, could not be reviewed by the King in Council, although there was a special saving in the colonial Act of the rights and prerogatives of the Crown. Cuvillier v. Aylwin, 2 Knapp 72.

4. Leave to appeal from a sentence of the Supreme Court of Jamaica, affirming a decision of the local magistrates, inflicting penalties for harbouring apprenticed labourers, refused, the penalties being under 200*l.*, the amount limited by the "Act in aid" as that under which no appeal should be allowed, and there being nothing in the case to make the appeal proper under the general jurisdiction. Re Harvey, 3 Moo. P. C. 148.

5. There is no appeal from the Supreme Court in Prince Edward Island except to the governor and Council; but where the sum in question was below the amount at which an appeal was allowed, by the royal instructions, to the governor and Council, and the case was one of hardship, the Committee advised Her Majesty to allow the appeal to the governor and Council. Re Cambridge, 3 Moo. P. C. 175.

6. An appeal to the King in Council, from Malta, being given only where the matter involved civil rights to the extent of 1,000*l.*; but, on leave to appeal, granted against decrees of the courts of the first and second instance, directing the removal of children from the guardianship of the mother. Camilleri v. Fleri, 5 Moo. P. C. 161.

7. The Order in Council of the 14th of April 1851 restricts the right of appeal to the Queen in Council, to matters where the property, or civil rights, amount to 300*l.* Re Abrahams, 2 Moo P. C., N. S., 241.

Application for special leave to appeal from an Order of the Supreme Court of Jamaica, refusing to quash a fiat, or certificate of insolvency, made under a Jamaica local Act, refused, as the question at issue, namely, the validity of the fiat of insolvency, was not an appealable grievance within the Order in Council. Ib.

8. Leave to appeal granted from an order of the Governor and Council at Sierra Leone, refusing a new trial, although the amount of the matter at issue was under 400*l.*, the appealable value limited by the Charter of Justice, that Court having refused to hear counsel in support of the rule on the merits of the case or the questions of law raised. Patnelli v. Heddle, 8 Moo. P. C. 41.

9. Although the subject in dispute was under the appealable value prescribed by the royal instructions, regulating appeals from Jamaica, yet the Judicial Committee, from the fact of the public importance of the question at issue, allowed an appeal. Lindo v. Barrett, 9 Moo. P. C. 456.

10. The Royal Instructions regulating appeals from Barbadoes to the Queen in Council, limit the right of appeal to cases in which the subject matter involved amounts to 3,000*l.* The Court at Barbadoes held, that certain accounts and documents sought to be recovered in an action of detinue, were of no value in themselves, and refused leave to appeal against a judgment of nonsuit in the action. Upon a petition for leave to appeal, founded upon an allegation that the value of the accounts and securities exceeded the appealable value, the Judicial Committee granted special leave to appeal. Wilson v. Callender, 9 Moo. P. C. 100.

When the appeal came on for hearing, it appeared that the allegation as to the value of the accounts and documents was unfounded in fact, and unsupported by evidence, upon which the Committee stopped the case, and dismissed the appeal with costs. Ib.

11. Under circumstances, special leave to appeal allowed, although the subject matter of the appeal was under the appealable value stipulated by the Order in Council, dated the 18th December 1834. Castrique v. Buttigieg, 10 Moo. P. C. 94.

12. In estimating the appealable value, restricted by the Order in Council of the 10th of April 1838, for regulating appeals from the Supreme and Sudder Dewanny Courts, in the East Indies, to 10,000 rupees as the amount in dispute, regard should be had to the whole matter involved in the suit, and not to the value of a fractional part of the property sought to be recovered. Musumat Ameena Khatoor v. Radhahenod Misser, 12 Moo. P. C. 470.

A suit was brought to recover a zemindary in the possession of different persons under deeds of sale in execution of a decree. The value of the property sued for was stated in the plaint to be 14,325 rupees. The Sudder Court upheld the sales, so far as related to the claims of some of the defendants. The other defendants applied for leave to appeal to England, which the Sudder Court refused, on the ground that, as the value of their portion was only 8,215 rupees, it was not within the appealable value prescribed by the Order in Council of the 10th of April 1838. Such construction overruled, and leave to appeal granted. Ib.

1. Under circumstances showing a question of importance, and the sum involved uncertain in value, leave was given to appeal from an Order of the Supreme Court of Jamaica refusing such appeal, although the amount of the verdict was under 300*l.*, the appealable value limited by the Order in Council of the 14th of April 1851. St. George, Jamaica (Churchwardens) v. May, 12 Moo. P. C. 282.

Security for respondent's costs directed to be lodged in the Council Office within three months from the date of the Order giving leave to appeal. Ib.

2. Where, in an action, the Court at Calcutta gave damages, the amount of which was under the appealable value prescribed by the Calcutta charter. As an important point of law was involved, special leave to appeal was, upon petition, granted. Rogers v. Rajendro Dutt, 13 Moo. P. C. 209.

3. By an Act of the Legislative Council of Lower Canada, passed in the 34 Geo. 3, c. 6, called "The Judicature Act," an appeal lies from the Court of Appeals in Canada to the Queen in Council, when the matter in dispute exceeds 500*l.*, and this provision was continued upon the substitution of the Court of Queen's Bench for the Court of Appeals, by an Act of the Legislative Council of Canada, subsequently passed. In an action for non-performance of a contract, a verdict was given for 600*l.* currency (under 500*l.* sterling), and the Court of Queen's Bench in Canada refused leave to appeal to England, on the ground that the sum was under the appealable value. Upon a special petition to Her Majesty in Council for leave to appeal, such leave was granted, first, because by the law of Canada interest ran with the judgment, which would bring the subject matter within the appealable value; and, secondly, because important questions of mercantile law were raised, and an action of a similar nature was pending, the transaction being a continuing contract. Boswell v. Kilborn, 12 Moo. P. C. 467.

4. Mode of estimating the appealable value. Interest given by decree to be added to the principal. Gooroopersad Khoond v. Juggutchunder, 13 Moo. P. C. 472.

Where interest subsequent to the date of the decree can be added is a question for the discretion of the Judicial Committee. Ib.

5. Special leave to appeal granted, notwithstanding that no application had been made for such leave to the Court below. Upon the allegation, that though the amount decreed was much under the appealable value, the original demand being necessarily limited by the jurisdiction of the Court in which the suit was originally instituted, yet the subject matter at issue exceeded in value the appealable amount. Mutusawmy Jagavera Yettapa Naiker v. Vencataswara Yettia, 1 L. R., P. C., 1; 35 L. J., P. C. C., 37.

6. By 34 Geo. 3, c. 6, s. 30 (Act of Lower Canada), the judgment of the Court of Appeals of that province shall be final in all cases where the matter in dispute shall not exceed the sum or value of 500*l.* sterling; but in cases exceeding that sum or value, as well as in all cases where the matter in question shall relate to matters or things where rights in future may be bound, an appeal shall lie to His Majesty in his Privy Council, though the immediate sum or value be less than 500*l.* sterling, provided security be first duly given by the appellant that he will effectually prosecute his appeal. On a petition for leave to appeal, the subject matter in dispute not being of the value of 500*l.*, on the ground that other actions were pending against the petitioner, to which, if the judgment appealed against were suffered to stand, he had no defence:—Held, that the subject matter of appeal did not fall within the words of the section, "matters or things where rights in future may be bound," but leave to appeal on the petitioner depositing with the registrar security for the costs of the respondent was granted. Re Marois, 8 Jur., N. S., 268; 10 W. R. 326.

7. By 34 Geo. 3, c. 6, s. 30 (Act of Lower Canada), the judgment of the Court of Appeals of that province shall be final in all cases where the matter in dispute shall not exceed the sum or value of 500*l.* sterling. An action was brought by A. in the Superior Court of Montreal against B., to recover the amount of certain promissory notes, with interest, amounting to a sum less than 500*l.* A., in his declaration, claimed a writ of saisie arrêt, or attachment against goods of B., of the value of 1,642*l.*, alleged to be in the possession of C. B. suffered judgment by default. A. obtained judgment on his writ of saisie arrêt, by which the goods in the hands of C. were declared liable to the claims of A. Leave to appeal was given to C. by the Court of Queen's Bench of Lower Canada. On a petition to rescind the leave to appeal so given:—Held, first, that Her Majesty in Council is not precluded from entertaining a petition to rescind leave to appeal, by the fact that leave to appeal was granted by a colonial Court under the authority of a colonial statute. Macfarlane v. Leclaire, 8 Jur., N. S., 267; 10 W. R. 324.

Held, secondly, in determining the question of the value of the matter in dispute, upon which the right of appeal depends, the correct course is to look at the judgment as it affects the interest of the party who is prejudiced by it, and who seeks to relieve himself from it by an appeal. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that the matter in dispute upon which this appeal was founded exceeded in value the sum of 500*l.* Ib.

8. Where the subject matter of an appeal was under the appealable value, and the questions raised for decision turning on the particular facts, and not one involving special circumstances, an application for leave to appeal was refused. Spearman v. East India Railway Co., 20 L. T., N. S., 501.

9. Special leave to appeal granted, although the subject matter of the suit was under the appealable value, as the decision was to govern other suits. Ko Khine v. Snadden, 2 L. R., P. C., 50; 5 Moo. P. C., N. S., 67; 37 L. J., P. C., 119.

10. Special leave to appeal (the sum involved being below the appealable amount) allowed, on the ground that the question involved the construction of a Colonial Act which affected the interests of a large class in the colony for which the Act was passed, and in granting the leave the Committee limited the appeal to the construction of the Colonial Act. Brown v. M'Laughan, 3 L. R., P. C., 458; 7 Moo. P. C., N. S., 306.

1. Under the Code of Civil Procedure for Lower Canada, the appealable amount is 500*l*., but an appeal is also permitted in cases of less value, if they are cases concerning titles to lands or tenements, annual rents, or other matters in which the rights in future of parties may be affected. An annual rent of $11·28c. had been sold for $456, payable in ten equal yearly instalments, and the land was hypothecated to secure the amount. In a suit to enforce payment of certain instalments, the Court of Queen's Bench in Lower Canada granted leave to appeal to Her Majesty in Council:—Held, that this case did not fall within the above description, and was not appealable. Sauvageau v. Gauthier, 5 L. R., P. C., 494; 22 W. R. 667; 30 L. T., N. S., 510.

2. It is too late for a respondent at the hearing to take an objection to the competency of the appeal, on the ground that the subject matter of the suit did not involve the prescribed appealable value; such objection not having been taken in his case. The proper course would have been for the respondent to move, in the first instance, to dismiss the appeal on that ground. Aldridge v. Cato, 4 L. R., P. C., 313; 20 W. R. 977.

3. Although Her Majesty's prerogative to allow an appeal is preserved by Canadian Act, 38 Vict., c. 11, s. 47, the Judicial Committee declined to advise its exercise in a case where the amount at issue was only $300, and where the issue between the parties related simply to the legal construction and effect of a particular contract, and where no general principle was involved, and no other cases were necessarily affected by the decision complained of. Johnston v. St. Andrew's Church (Ministers and Trustees), Montreal, 3 L. R., App. Cas., 159; 26 W. R. 359; 37 L. T., N. S., 556.

Consolidation of Appeals.] 4. Five suits involving the same question may be consolidated for the purpose of bringing the amount up to the minimum required for appeal. Exp. Gopal Lall Thakoor, 8 W. R. 224.

In such case, with consent of parties, the Privy Council will dispense with the transmission of the records in every case. Ib.

8. Petition for Special Leave.

Form and Contents.] 5. When the petition of special leave to appeal stated correctly two valid grounds for granting the same; but contained misstatements of fact which affected the third ground relied upon by the petitioner:—Held, that any such petition is liable at any time to be rescinded with costs if it contains any misstatement or any concealment of facts which ought to be disclosed. It appearing, however, that there was in this case no intention to mislead, the appeal was heard and allowed, but without costs. Ram Sabuk Bose v. Monomohini Dossee (2 L. R., Ind. App., 81) approved. Mussoorie Bank v. Raynor, 7 L. R., App. Cas., 321; 51 L. J., P. C., 72; 46 L. T. 633; 31 W. R. 17.

6. The petition for leave to appeal must state fully but succinctly the grounds upon which it is based; the record not being before their lordships until forwarded by the proper authorities. Canada Central Railway Co. v. Murray, 8 L. R., App. Cas., 574.

7. Upon a petition for leave to appeal, it is the duty of the petitioner to state in the fullest and frankest manner all the circumstances of the case. Lyall v. Jardine, 3 L. R., P. C., 318; 39 L. J., P. C., 43; 22 L. T. 882; 18 W. R. 1050.

8. An order granting leave to appeal, obtained upon an ex parte application, founded on an allegation that the interest added to the principal recovered in an action on a fire policy exceeded the appealable value, upon petition of the respondents, showing that the calculation as to value was erroneous, was discharged. Quebec Fire Assurance Co. v. Anderson, 13 Moo. P. C. 477.

9. Special leave to appeal having been given on an ex parte application, and upon an erroneous statement contained in the petition for leave: the order allowing such leave discharged with costs. Bulkeley v. Scutz, 3 L. R., P. C., 196; 6 Moo. P. C., N. S., 481.

Objections and Practice thereon.] 10. If leave to appeal is obtained ex parte, the respondent may, as a matter of course, present a counter petition to dismiss. Sibsurain Ghose v. Hullodhur Doss, 9 Moo. P. C. 354.

Where an appeal had been granted ex parte upon an allegation unfounded in fact, the Judicial Committee refused to hear the case, and dismissed the appeal with costs. Ib.

11. Special leave to appeal granted ex parte from an order of the Supreme Court at Jamaica issuing a peremptory mandamus, directing justices of the peace to restore a party to the office of surgeon, subject to the right of the respondent to move upon a counter petition to quash the leave given. Hill v. Reg., 8 Moo. P. C. 138.

12. Practice where an appeal is allowed after notice, and the respondent applies to rescind the leave given. Cremidi v. Parker, 11 Moo. P. C. 79.

13. Where there is a fatal objection to the right of appeal, the respondent ought to apply to quash the appeal, and not to wait till the hearing to urge such objection to its competency. Tronson v. Dent, 8 Moo. P. C. 420.

14. Her Majesty in Council is not precluded from entertaining a petition to rescind leave to appeal on the ground of want of jurisdiction, by the fact that leave to appeal was granted by a colonial court under the authority of a colonial statute, as the construction put by the colonial court upon the Act can be reviewed by the committee. Macfarlane v. Leclaire, 15 Moo. P. C. 181; 8 Jur., N. S., 267; 10 W. R. 324.

15. Order for leave to appeal granted upon the report of the committee without prejudice to the right of the respondent's showing cause against such order. Exp. Robertson, 11 Moo. P. C. 288.

Cause being shown upon a counter petition, such order rescinded. Ib.

16. Where it is alleged that the bringing an appeal is contrary to agreement, the objection ought to be made when leave to appeal is applied for, or to be taken by a petition to the Queen before the appeal comes on for hearing. Pisani v. Att.-Gen. (Gibraltar), 5 L. R., P. C., 517; 22 W. R. 900; 30 L. T., N. S., 729.

1. When leave to appeal has been unduly given, the proper course is to come to the Privy Council before any expense has been incurred, and to apply for the dismissal of the appeal. Sauvageau v. Gauthier, 5 L. R., P. C., 494; 22 W. R. 667; 30 L. T., N. S., 510.

Such an application, if delayed till the hearing, will only be granted without costs, and if there are special circumstances in favour of granting special leave to appeal, an application for such leave will be entertained; but if it is granted, fresh security for costs must be given. Ib.

2. It is too late for a respondent at the hearing to take an objection to the competency of the appeal, on the ground that the subject matter of the suit did not involve the prescribed appealable value; such objection not having been taken in his case. The proper course would have been for the respondent to move, in the first instance, to dismiss the appeal on that ground. Aldridge v. Cato, 4 L. R., P. C., 313; 20 W. R. 977.

3. A sentence of the Prerogative Court of York, in a testamentary case, was pronounced in August 1856; this sentence decreed probate of the will in question, costs being given out of the testator's estate to both parties. These costs were taxed and paid in November of that year, the proctor of the opposing party attending. In June 1857 application was made by the parties originally opposing the will for leave to appeal; such application refused, on the ground that the taxation and receipt of the costs was an acquiescence in the sentence and prompted the appeal. Brown v. Davenport, 11 Moo. P. C. 297.

1. Time and Extension thereof.

4. A petition to appeal need not be presented to the King in Council within a year after an appeal has been refused by the Colonial Court. Orphan Board (President) v. Van Reenen, 1 Knapp 83.

5. Application to dismiss an appeal, on the ground of delay in prosecution, and no certificate being filed pursuant to the 31st section of the Canada Judicature Act, refused, the rule allowing a year and a day for prosecuting an appeal, though usually adhered to, not being imperative upon the King in Council, and the respondents having no claim to complain of delay, after laying themselves eight months without making any application. St. Louis v. St. Louis, 1 Moo. P. C. 143. And see Wilson v. Arnold, id. 14 n.

6. The provisions of the 5 Geo. 4, c. 113, s. 29, are conclusive, and the Judicial Committee have no power to extend the time limited for appealing. Muter v. Chipohase, 1 Moo. P. C. 1.

7. After a delay of six years, the Judicial Committee refused leave to prosecute an appeal, though the delay arose from circumstances over which it was sworn the appellant had no control. Lindo v. Rex, 1 Moo. P. C. 3.

8. Leave to appeal against a decision pronounced in 1819, and in which no step had been taken for two years previous to the application, refused. Laing v. Ingham, 3 Moo. P. C. 26.

9. The 5 Geo. 4, c. 113, s. 29, enacts that no appeals shall be prosecuted from any sentence of any court of admiralty or vice-admiralty, with the exception of the Cape of Good Hope, and eastward thereof, unless an inhibition be applied for and decreed within twelve months from the time of the decree or sentence being pronounced. By the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 41, the appellate jurisdiction given by the previous statute to the High Court of Admiralty was vested in the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, but which court from its constitution had no jurisdiction over the appeal until the petition of appeal was referred to them by the Crown. The appellant presented on the 16th of July 1841 a petition of appeal from a decree of condemnation pronounced on the 12th August 1840, by the Vice-Admiralty Court of Sierra Leone, against a vessel engaged in the slave trade, contrary to the provisions of the 6 Geo. 4, c. 113. The appeal was not referred by Her Majesty to the Judicial Committee until the 11th August 1841, one day before the year expired, and notice of such reference was not given by the clerk in Council until the 13th of the same month, one day after the twelve months had expired, when the appellant applied for and obtained an inhibition. On protest against the appeal:—Held, that the 5 Geo. 4, c. 113 was incorporated in the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 113; 2nd, that the appellant, having failed to procure, in compliance with the 29th section of the 5 Geo. 4, c. 113, an inhibition to issue within twelve months from the sentence, was barred his appeal, the provisions of that section being imperative and leaving no discretion in the Court to relax the operation of the Act. Logan v. Burslem, 4 Moo. P. C. 204; 7 Jur. 1.

The 5 Geo. 4, c. 113 (The Slave Abolition Act), s. 29, enacts that no appeals shall be prosecuted from any sentence of any court of admiralty or vice-admiralty, except in any vice-admiralty court at the Cape of Good Hope, or to the eastward thereof, unless an inhibition be applied for and decreed within twelve months from the time of the decree or sentence being pronounced:—Held, to apply to foreigners as well as British subjects. S. C. 4 Moo. P. C. 300.

The British Parliament has no power to legislate for foreigners out of the dominions and beyond the jurisdiction of the Crown; yet it can by statute fix the time within which application must be made for redress to the tribunals of the empire. This being matter of procedure, becomes the law of the forum by which all mankind are bound. Ib.

The Act 6 & 7 Vict., c. 38, which was, in this case, for the first time brought into operation, is only applicable to matters of inferior importance. Ib.

1. Upon a petition stating that a party against whom a decree had been pronounced by the Supreme Court of Newfoundland was at the time resident in England, and had no representative within the island, or notice of proceedings against him; the Judicial Committee gave leave to appeal upon terms, notwithstanding that he had not asserted an appeal within fourteen days from the final decree, as required by the Charter of Justice of Newfoundland. Henderson v. Henderson, 4 Moo. P. C. 259.

2. Whether the rules of the Ecclesiastical Courts in Doctors' Commons relating to the doctrine of pre-emption of appeal, apply to an ecclesiastical cause in the Supreme Court at Calcutta, so as to deprive a party of the charter right to appeal within six months from the decree, etc., quære. Casement v. Fulton, 5 Moo. P. C. 130.

3. Where the petitioner, after a decision in his favour, that certain seizures for alleged breaches of the revenue laws by the attorney-general of Jersey were illegal, filed his petition and remonstrance in the Royal Court there, to recover damages suffered thereby; and the attorney-general alleging, that, having acted under the advice of the bailiff, jurats, lieutenant-governor, and treasurer of the island, they ought to have been made parties, and they were accordingly joined in the suit, whereupon the attorney pleaded, that the bailiff and jurats constituted the Royal Court, whereupon the Court declared itself incompetent to adjudicate in the cause: after two years the petitioner presented a doleance and petition to the Queen in Council, and obtained a summons for the attorney-general to appear:—Held, that the lapse of time, and the uniting a doleance with a petition of appeal, being the one a complaint against the judge, and the other a prosecution of a suit between the parties, and, lastly, the suit being between other parties, who were not included in the petition, were fatal objections, and the summons was dismissed. Re Whitfield, 5 Moo. P. C. 157.

4. Where the time for appealing from a Vice-Admiralty Court has expired, owing to a delay by counsel in advising on the success or failure of such appeal, such delay being caused by counsel's waiting for the decision of another appeal pending before the Privy Council, which decision it is reasonably possible may throw light on the appeal to be advised upon, such apology may, in the absence of circumstances to destroy its effect, induce the Judicial Committee to allow the prosecution of the appeal under 26 Vict., c. 24, s. 23. Cassanova v. Reg., 1 L. R., P. C., 115; 12 Jur., N. S., 127; 14 W. R. 617.

5. The Judicial Committee has no jurisdiction to entertain an application for extension of time to appeal until the petition of appeal is lodged. Gungadhur Seal v. Sreemutty Raddamoney Dossee, 9 Moo. P. C. 411.

Where it appeared that an inquiry was pending before the Master in the court below, arising out of the decree which was the subject of the appeal, the result of which might render the prosecution of the appeal unnecessary, the Judicial Committee enlarged the time prescribed by Rule 5 of the Order in Council of the 13th June 1853, for prosecution thereof, until further order. Ib.

6. The petitioners, being the respondents in a suit in the High Court of Bengal, against whom a divisional bench pronounced judgment, applied for a review of such judgments which was admitted for argument, but dismissed on the hearing. The petitioners applied for leave to appeal to Her Majesty in Council; but the High Court refused the application, on the ground that the time had expired within which such appeal could be granted. It appeared that the practice in respect of the time from which the limitation as to appeals ran had been changed pending the proceedings on review. Under these circumstances special leave to appeal was granted. Nogender Chunder Ghose v. Mahomed Ensuff, 37 L. J., P. C., 16.

2. Abatement and Revivor.

7. The executors of B., parties to the suit below, had not been served with the appeal; the Court, before giving judgment, directed the appeal to stand over for six months, with liberty for them to attend and be heard on the appeal. Gordon v. Horsfall, 5 Moo. P. C. 393; 11 Jur. 569.

8. Appeal abated by death of respondent, whose heirs renounced the succession; and a curator having been appointed by the Court below to the vacant succession, the appeal was revived against such curator. Ermatinger v. Gugy, 5 Moo. P. C. 1.

9. Appeal abated by the death of the Dean of Jersey, pending the appeal, revived in the name of his successor, though not prosecuted within the time required by the 57th canon. Jersey (Dean) v. —— (Rector of the Parish of), 3 Moo. P. C. 229.

10. Some of the plaintiffs to a suit had died pending an appeal, and the suit had not been revived against their representatives. In such circumstances the appeal was allowed to be prosecuted in the name of the surviving plaintiffs, as this Court is not disposed to give effect to technical rules in pleading, which would prevent justice being done. Bute (Marchioness) v. Mason, Exp. Heard, 7 Moo. P. C. 1.

A party to a suit, having an interest in the subject matter in his own right, and also as trustee for other parties, became insolvent, and his interest was vested in a trustee appointed to his sequestered estate:—Held, that he might, as such trustee, prosecute an appeal from an order made in the suit, notwithstanding the insolvency and the vesting of his estate and interest in the trustee of the sequestered estate. Ib.

11. After an appeal to England before any petition of appeal was lodged, the appeal abated by the death of the appellant; appeal revived by the appellant's special administratrix. Troup v. East India Co., 7 Moo. Ind. App. 104.

1. An appeal abated by the death of the respondent, revived by the appellant, by making the deceased's heir respondent in his stead. Ahier v. Westaway, 9 Moo. P. C. 395.

2. An appeal abated by the death of the respondent. Administration with the will annexed was granted to the administrator-general of Bengal. On the application of the appellant the appeal was revived against the administrator-general, as the personal representative of the respondent. Gobind Chunder Sein v. Ryan, 15 Moo. P. C. 230.

3. Dismissal for want of Prosecution.

3. The petitioner's summons to the attorney-general discharged for non-prosecution of his appeal in the limited time, and for other reasons. Re Whitfield, 5 Moo. P. C. 157. And see 2 Moo. P. C. 269, 273.

4. Appeal dismissed for want of prosecution. Semble, it is not necessary for the respondent to lodge a printed case and appendix before moving to dismiss the appeal for non-prosecution. Jackson v. Prothero, 3 Moo. P. C. 490.

5. Application to dismiss an appeal on the ground of delay in prosecution and no certificate, being pursuant to the 31st section of the Canada Judicature Act, refused, the rule allowing a year and a day for prosecuting an appeal, though usually adhered to, not being imperative upon the King in Council, and the respondents having no claim to complain of delay, after laying themselves eight months without making any application. St. Louis v. St. Louis, 1 Moo. P. C. 143. And see Wilson v. Arnold, id. 147. n.

6. After an appeal had been set down for hearing the appellant was adjudged an insolvent. The Court postponed the appeal for six months to enable the official assignee to intervene. No steps having been taken by the assignee, the Judicial Committee refused a further extension of time and dismissed the appeal for want of prosecution. Gooroochurn Sein v. Radanauth Sein, 11 Moo. P. C. 76.

7. An appeal was allowed by the Supreme Court in New South Wales in July 1855. No step was taken in England by the appellant to prosecute the appeal, either by entering an appearance or lodging a petition of appeal. The transcript was transmitted by the Colonial Court to the Council Office. Motion by respondent, in November 1856, to dismiss the appeal from prosecution. The Judicial Committee declined to make any order upon the motion. Walker v. Kirohner, 11 Moo. P. C. 21.

Quære, if the Judicial Committee has any jurisdiction over an appeal before the petition of appeal is lodged and referred to them. Ib.

4. Restoring.

8. Leave given to restore an appeal, dismissed for want of prosecution, the Court below having consolidated it with another appeal in the same cause, which was still pending. Chowdry v. Mullick, 1 Moo. P. C. 404.

9. Leave given to restore an appeal dismissed for want of prosecution by the appellants, the appellants' agent, who was instructed to prevent the dismissal of the appeal, not having received the transcript until after the expiration of a year and a day from the time of the allowance of the appeal, and the respondent having in consequence thereof obtained an order of dismissal. Dabee v. Roy, 3 Moo. P.C. 11.

10. Appeal restored after being dismissed for want of effectual prosecution within the time limited by the 5th rule of the Order in Council of the 13th of June 1853; the new rules having been only recently adopted by the Sudder Court at Calcutta, and the appellant, in ignorance of their existence, being engaged in taking steps to prosecute the appeal within the time and according to the practice previously existing. Tewarree v. Maree, 9 Moo. P. C. 86.

11. Circumstances under which the time limited for prosecuting an appeal before Her Majesty in Council, by the 5th order of the Orders in Council of June 1853, was extended, and a certificate dismissing the appeal set aside. Duthie v. Butler, 14 W. R. 617.

12. Appeal from the Sudder Court in India, which stood dismissed under Rule 5 of the Order in Council of the 13th June 1553, for want of effectual prosecution restored, as the appellant was in ignorance of the existence of the new rules, the Sudder Court having served the appellant (after the interposition of appeal) with notice that two years was allowed after the arrival of the transcript in England for prosecuting the appeal. Seto Luchmeechund v. Seto Zorawur Mull, 9 Moo. P. C. 351.

Where Government securities for the due prosecution of an appeal and costs were deposited in the registry of the Sudder Court, the Judicial Committee, in restoring the appeal, dispensed with the usual recognisance in England. Ib.

13. Restoration of an appeal allowed, upon condition of the appellant lodging in England security for costs of the appeal. Six months having elapsed without the appellant having lodged the required security, the respondent applied to dismiss the appeal by reason of the non-performance of that condition. As it appeared that the appellant's agent was in daily expectation of funds from India, the case was, upon the appellant paying the costs of the day, ordered to stand over for three months for the appellant to perform that condition; in failure thereof, the appeal to stand dismissed. Rance Hurrosoondree Dibiah v. Rajah Pran Kishen Sing, 11 Moo. P. C. 304.

14. Under circumstances, showing conflicting and opposite decisions by the Sudder Court upon the same question at issue between the same parties, an appeal treated under the 8 & 9 Vict., c. 30, s. 2, as abandoned for non-prosecution, was restored upon terms of payment of costs, and undertaking to lodge cases forthwith, and security or a bond in England to the amount of 500*l.* Debiah v. Sing, 11 Moo. P. C. 152.

Where an appeal has been treated as abandoned by the 8 & 9 Vict., c. 30, s. 2, the Judicial Committee has no power to grant leave to institute a new appeal; only a discretion to allow the original appeal to be restored. Ib.

1. Appeal dismissed for want of prosecution, under Rule V. of the Order in Council of the 13th June 1853, restored under circumstances showing that the interest of infants was materially affected, but upon condition that the appeal should be prosecuted within a given time. Rance Birjobuttee v. Pertaub Sing, 13 Moo. P. C. 465.

5. Transcript Record.

2. The prerogative of the Crown with regard to aliens must be determined by the laws of the particular colonies in which the questions arise, and not by the law of England, which is only to be looked at in order to determine who are, and who are not, aliens. The Droit d'Aubaine became the law of Lower Canada with regard to aliens, on the ancient French law being established there, by the 14 Geo. 3, c. 83. The Judicial Committee will not notice any alteration of rights that may have taken place between the parties in consequence of an Act of the provincial legislature, but which do not appear on the record. Donegani v. Donegani, 3 Knapp 63.

3. The letters of preference of escheated properties in a colony, not forming part of the transcript, the hearing of the appeal respecting it was postponed, and an order made for a certified copy to be transmitted by the clerk of the patents in Jamaica to the Privy Council office. Mason v. Jamaica (Att.-Gen.), 4 Moo. P. C. 228; 7 Jur. 1071.

4. Respondents appeared by counsel at the hearing to argue an appeal, without having lodged a printed case. The Council refused to hear the appeal until a printed case was lodged. Bengal Government v. Mussumat Shurrufutoonnissa, 8 Moo. Ind. App. 225.

5. Two of the judges in the court below dissented from the other judges, but did not express their reasons in court for disagreeing with the other judges. After an appeal was interposed to England, those judges prepared written judgments, which were transmitted to England, and first known at the hearing, as forming part of the printed record before the Judicial Committee. Such course observed upon and condemned, as the judges' opinions should have been stated publicly at the hearing in the court below, and not have been reserved to influence the decision of the Court of Appeal. Brown v. Gugy, 2 Moo. P. C., N. S., 341.

6. Reasons given by a judge of a court from which an appeal lies to the Privy Council ought to be stated publicly at the hearing, and communicated to the registrar of the Privy Council. Richer v. Voyer, 5 L. R., P. C., 461; 22 W. R. 849; 30 L. T., N. S., 506.

The Privy Council will not look at notes merely communicated to one of the parties. Ib.

7. An appellant had obtained leave to appeal, but took no steps to procure a transcript of the record to be sent and lodged at the Privy Council office for three years, or any other step. The appeal was dismissed, with costs. Smith v. Cresswell, 10 L. T., N. S., 672.

8. Two sets of defendants severed in defence (their interests involving an alternative as to which was responsible to the plaintiff), and the Court below fixed one set of the defendants with the liability. Upon an appeal, in which the plaintiff was made sole respondent, the other defendants were held entitled to appear, and to lodge a separate case. East India Co. v. Robertson, 12 Moo. P. C. 400.

9. The Courts in Canada examined witnesses and compared the handwriting of a promissory note sued upon, and which was alleged to be a forgery, with the handwriting of two other documents put in evidence, and admitted to be genuine. In such circumstances the Judicial Committee, upon petition for that purpose, ordered the Court in Canada to transmit the originals for the purpose of inspection and comparison at the hearing of the appeal from the judgment of the Court of Lower Canada. McCarthy v. Judah, 12 Moo. P. C. 47.

10. The Court can only look to the record of proceedings transmitted by the Court below. It will not receive shorthand writers' notes to impeach the accuracy of the judges' notes taken at the trial, to show that the evidence set forth in the transcript record was not exhibited, or that evidence had been given which had been omitted in the transcript. Stanford v. Brunette, 14 Moo. P. C. 60.

A petition by an appellant impugning the correctness of the transcript record transmitted by the registrar, under the seal of a colonial Court, praying for the transmission of the original documents adduced in evidence, the shorthand writers' notes of the evidence, judgments and observations of the judges, and for a fuller and more correct account of the oral evidence given at trial, before the hearing of the appeal, refused. Ib.

11. It is no part of the duty of the registrar of the Judicial Committee to give notice to the parties to an appeal of the arrival of the record of the proceedings in the court below. The parties must examine for themselves at the Council Office. Moyee v. Roy, 38 L. J., P. C., 21; 20 L. T., N. S., 333; 2 L. R., P. C., 274; 5 Moo. P. C., N. S., 373.

6. Pleadings.

12. Some of the plaintiffs had died in the course of the appeal, and the suit had not been revived against their representatives. In such circumstances, the appeal was allowed to be prosecuted in the name of the surviving plaintiffs, as this court is not disposed to give effect to technical rules in pleading, which would prevent justice being done. Bute (Marchioness) v. Mason, Exp. Head, 7 Moo. P. C. 1.

13. The Order in Council establishing the Judicial Committee, directs that the rules of procedure shall be so framed as to secure, as far as may be, that cases shall be decided on their merits, according to substantial justice, without excessive regard to technicalities of pleading. Black v. Ottoman Bank, 8 Jur., N. S., 801.

14. An objection to an agreement as being void by the Statute of Frauds, 29 Car. 2, c. 3, by reason of its not being in writing, should be pleaded by the answer, and cannot be entertained at the hearing of an appeal. Daniel v. Trotman, 1 Moo. P. C., N. S., 123.

1. The Privy Council, though not holding parties strictly to their pleadings, will not allow defences to be set up on appeal which have not been suggested in the pleadings, or called to the attention of the Courts below. Garden Gully Mining Co. v. McLister, 33 L. T., N. S., 408; 24 W. R. 744; 1 L. R., App. Cas., 39.

2. The Privy Council will exercise its discretion in deciding a case on its merits, without regarding strictly the precise terms of the pleadings. M'Lean v. M'Kay, 5 L. R., P. C., 327.

3. When the rules of pleading in a court in a foreign country having jurisdiction over British subjects, are by petition and answer, the several paragraphs of the answer can be read together, and not as in English pleadings treated as separate pleas. Hart v. Gumpach, 4 L. R., P. C., 439; 42 L. J., P. C., 25; 21 W. R. 365; 9 Moo. P. C., N. S., 241.

7. Admissibility of New Evidence.

4. A medical certificate of the competency of the party, in a suit impotentiæ causâ, not in evidence in the court below, refused to be admitted on appeal. Harrison v. Harrison, 4 Moo. P. C. 96; 6 Jur. 899.

5. Evidence not adduced in the court below, nor forming part of the transcript, admitted on motion to be used at the hearing of the appeal, subject to all just exceptions. Hughes v. Parral, 4 Moo. P. C. 41.

6. Quære, whether an appellant who wishes to avail himself of evidence not produced before the Court below, must not, either in his petition of appeal, or by a special petition for that purpose, pray that it may be received before the Judicial Committee. Jephson v. Riera, 3 Knapp 130.

7. Semble, on an appeal in a proceeding under the Church Discipline Act, the Court will not permit the examination vivâ voce of witnesses examined in the court below, on the ground of their having been tampered with previously to their examination there, unless upon direct proof of such tampering having taken place; nor under a general charge of adultery, etc., will it admit additional articles, bringing forward acts of adultery alleged to have occurred subsequently to the close of the case in the court below. Craig v. Farnall, 13 Jur. 217.

8. On a motion for leave to adduce fresh evidence before the hearing of an appeal, it appeared that the evidence might have been adduced at the hearing in the court below, if application had been made to postpone the hearing for that purpose, but that no such application was made. The Committee, therefore, refused to admit further evidence, and dismissed the motion, with costs. The Alicia Annie and Aminta v. The Scindia, 35 L. J., P. C. C., 53. S. C. nom. Kirby v. The Scindia, 12 Jur., N. S., 534.

9. A special libel of appeal, and an allegation by the appellants, and responsive allegation by the Crown, pleading new matters, admitted by the Court of Appeal, and fresh evidence taken thereon. Hocquard v. Reg., 11 Moo. P. C. C. 155.

10. The Royal Court of Jersey having refused to hear witnesses tendered by a defendant, in support of one of his pleas, and great delay having occurred from the course pursued, the Judicial Committee, under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 41, s. 7, appointed a special examiner to take further evidence in the island, confining his inquiry to certain facts, and directing him to report the same within a limited time; the appeal to stand over for the production of his report, and to be argued with reference only to the effect produced upon the entire case by such additional evidence. Falle v. Le Sueur, 12 Moo. P. C. 501.

8. Objections not taken in Court below.

11. Semble, objections cannot be made to a decree at the hearing before the Privy Council, that have not been made in the court below. Frankland v. M'Gusty, 1 Knapp 274.

12. The Lords of the Privy Council are less strict in matters of form than other Courts; and where, after a confirmation of a report made in the court below, a further inquiry as to the matter of the report had been directed by such Court, the Lords of the Privy Council refused to disturb such order, notwithstanding its manifest irregularity, and though it was admitted that if the objection had been taken in the court below, it would have been fatal. The party interested in opposing the report, which was re-opened, was not before the Court when it was confirmed. Lyons (Mayor) v. East India Co., 1 Moo. P. C. 175.

13. An objection not raised in the court below cannot be taken in the Appellate Court, unless it is patent upon the face of the proceedings, so that the Appellate Court can take a judicial notice of the objection. Devine v. Holloway, 14 Moo. P. C. C. 290.

14. An objection for want of parties to a bill ought to be made in the court below. A court of appeal will not treat the suit as defective when no such objection was taken in the Colonial Court. Bowes v. Toronto (City of), 11 Moo. P. C. 463.

15. Parties having separate and distinct interests were joined together as co-plaintiffs: —Held, that as no objection, for misjoinder or multifariousness, had been raised by the answer, or at the hearing in the court below, to the frame of the bill, it could not be taken upon appeal. Bute (Marchioness) v. Mason, Exp. Heard, 7 Moo. P. C. 1.

16. The Judicial Committee will not entertain technical objections not taken in the court below, when they are merely of form, and do not affect the substance of the matter in controversy. Orphans (Board of) v. Kraegelius, 9 Moo. P. C. 438.

17. The Court will not entertain a purely technical objection to a party's right of action which has not been made in the court below. Bengal (Bank of) v. Macleod, 7 Moo. P. C. 35; 13 Jur. 945. See also Bengal (Bank of) v. Fagan, 7 Moo. P. C. 61.

Upon the reversal of the judgment of the Supreme Court at Calcutta finding for the plaintiff, this Court, in the circumstances of the constitution of the Supreme Court, directed a verdict to be entered for the defendants, instead of awarding a venire de novo. Ib.

1. The Judicial Committee will not entertain an appeal upon facts which were known to the appellant at the time of hearing in the court below, but which were not brought to the notice of the court below. Lyall v. Jardine, 39 L. J., P. C., 43; 18 W. R. 1050; 22 L. T., N. S., 882; 3 L. R., P. C., 318.

2. The Judicial Committee is unwilling to send a case for re-trial, or to decide it, upon points which have been raised for the first time at their bar, and which possibly may have been treated as agreed upon, or too clear for argument in the court below. Mackay v. Commercial Bank of New Brunswick, 5 L. R., P. C., 394; 43 L. J., P. C., 31; 30 L. T. 180; 22 W. R. 473.

3. The Privy Council, though not holding parties strictly to their pleadings, will not allow defences to be set up on appeal which have not been suggested in the pleadings, or called to the attention of the Courts below. Garden Gully Mining Co. v. McLister, 1 L. R., App. Cas., 39; 33 L. T. 408; 24 W. R. 744.

4. In a case in which the government of a colony appeared in the name of the nominal defendant, and obtained judgment:—Held, that the right of the plaintiff to appeal against such judgment could not be prejudiced by the objection that the action had not been brought against the right party, such objection not having been taken in the court below. Webb v. Wright, 8 L. R., App. Cas., 318; 52 L. J., P. C., 40; 49 L. T. 145.

9. Judgment on Questions of Fact.

5. No appeal will lie from the judgment of a Court below, on the sole ground that it discredited the testimony of the witnesses improperly. Santacana v. Ardevol, 1 Knapp 269.

6. The objection to allow a witness to be re-examined, after a release of a prior interest going to his competency, is a purely technical one; and where there was no suspicion of previous cognisance, or lying by until the objection was discovered, the appeal was dismissed with costs, affirming the decision below. Clark v. Carter, 4 Moo. P. C. 207; 7 Jur. 161.

7. Where, on an objection taken at the hearing of the cause to the competency of a witness, the Court rejected his entire deposition, against which the appellant interposing an appeal, and withdrawing from the case, a sentence was given:—Held, that the hearing being a continuous act, the receiving or refusing evidence was not an appealable grievance; but after sentence, an appeal being competent, or to any part thereof, that such withdrawal was not a contempt of Court, nor to preclude the right of appeal. Handley v. Edwards, 4 Moo. P. C. 407; 8 Jur. 677.

8. Where books and papers were fairly presumable to be in the power of the plaintiff, the Judicial Committee, on appeal, in reviewing the items of an account, proceeded on the principle of acting on much less amount of evidence, in defect of proof occasioned by such absence of books, etc. Retemeyer v. Obermüller, 2 Moo. P. C. 93.

9. When the question is one of fact only, and has been tried by a jury in the court below, this Court will not reverse a judgment upon such finding, unless they are satisfied that the judgment is clearly wrong. Although there is not so much strictness required in pleadings in the courts in the Isle of Man as in England, yet where a declaration in an action for deceit contains specific averments of fraud, such averments must be established by proof, to entitle the plaintiff to recover. Moore v. Clucas, 7 Moo. P. C. 352.

10. The Judicial Committee will not reverse the finding of a jury or of a Court that sits as a jury upon a question of fact, unless perfectly satisfied that they were wrong, as, from their knowledge of the local circumstances and the character and appearance of the witnesses, they are better able to form a correct opinion than the appellate tribunal. Mullick v. Radakissen, 9 Moo. P. C. 46.

11. Semble, the Court will not disturb a judgment of a Court in India upon the question of the credibility of witnesses, unless it is manifestly clear, from the probabilities attached to certain circumstances in the case, that the Court below was wrong in the conclusion drawn from such evidence. Musadee Mahomed Cazum Sherazee v. Meerza Ally Mahomed Khan, 8 Moo. P. C. 90.

12. It is not the practice of the Committee to disturb the finding of the Court below upon mere issues of fact, unless clearly satisfied that there has been some miscarriage, either in the reception, or in the application of evidence. Re Ghoolam Moortoozah Khan Bahadoor, 9 Moo. Ind. App. 456.

13. On an issue involving a question of fact, tried by a jury, the Privy Council will not reverse the finding of the jury unless (1) anything material has been admitted as evidence which was not legal evidence, (2) anything material has been tendered as evidence and rejected which ought to have been received, or (3) misconduct on the part of the jury. Cowin v. Moore, 14 Moo. P. C. 354.

14. Where evidence is conflicting, the Appellate Court, in order to advise a reversal of the judgment appealed from, must not merely doubt whether the judgment appealed from is correct, but must be satisfied that it is wrong. North German Lloyd Steamship Co. v. Elder, 14 Moo. P. C. 241.

15. As a general rule, the Judicial Committee will not reverse the concurrent findings of two Courts on a question of fact. Hay v. Gordon, 4 L. R., P. C., 337; 21 W. R. 11.

Semble, that in cases where the decision of a Court below is only operative upon confirmation by a superior Court, they will not be considered as two separate judgments. Ib.

16. As a general rule the Appellate Court will not reverse a decision of the Court below on a mere question of fact; but where there is no conflict of testimony, and the only question of fact is as to the effect of the facts proved in raising further inferences of fact, that rule does not apply. Thurburn v. Steward, 3 L. R., P. C., 478; 40 L. J., P. C., 5; 19 W. R. 678.

17. The Committee will not recommend Her Majesty to reverse the judgment of an inferior court in a suit in which nominal damages alone are to be recovered. Giraud v. Paterson, 38 L. J., P. C., 65; 21 L. T., N. S., 200.

A suit having been brought in Her Majesty's Consular Court at Smyrna to recover damages, and not to try a right, and judgment having been given for the defendant:—Held, that if the plaintiff had a nominal interest which might be the subject of an action in one of the courts of common law, that species of nominal interest for the mere nominal claim for damages would be no ground before the Judicial Committee to recommend that the judgment of the Court below should be reversed. S. C. 18 W. R. 359.

1. In a question of fact the Judicial Committee is reluctant to reverse or disturb the decision of the Court below. The Alice and The Princess Alice, 2 L. R., P. C., 245; 38 L. J., Adm., 5; 19 L. T., N. S., 678; 5 Moo. P. C., N. S., 333.

2. The Judicial Committee will not, unless there is manifest error in a judgment under appeal, overrule decisions pronounced in a country in which the law of France prevails, must be known and continually acted upon by courts of law, and in which also the witnesses on both sides reside and may have been more or less known to and seen when under examination by the judges or some of them, who likewise are familiar with the usages and customs of the place in which all the circumstances which formed the subject of the evidence occurred. Scott v. Paquet, 36 L. J., P. C., 65; 4 Moo. P. C., N. S., 505.

3. Material mistakes in respect to certain facts in evidence occurred in the summing up of the judge. The Committee, though it sustained the decree appealed from, under the circumstances affirmed the judgment without costs. General Iron Screw Co. v. Moss, 15 Moo. P. C. 122.

The Court must be satisfied that the decree is founded on some substantial mistake, either in law or fact. Ib.

4. The Judicial Committee is always reluctant to interfere with a matter of discretion exercised by the Court in India, unless it can be shown that the Court has acted upon an erroneous principle. Hindustan, China, and Japan (Bank of) v. Eastern Financial Association, 2 L. R., P. C., 489; 20 L. T., N. S., 889; 17 W. R. 554; 6 Moo. P. C., N. S., 114.

10. New Trial, when Directed.

5. Where, at a trial in Bengal, the judge received certain documentary evidence, the Supreme Court, on an application for a new trial on the ground of such evidence being improperly received, should consider the importance of the evidence so received. East India Co. v. Paul, 14 Jur. 253; 7 Moo. P. C. 85.

6. At the trial, certain documents contained in the schedule to the answer of the defendants to a bill of discovery filed in equity were read as evidence for the plaintiff, but the Court refused to allow the defendants to read the answer to which the schedule was annexed:—Held, that as the Supreme Court at Calcutta, being jurymen as well as judges, had refused to allow the answer to be read, on the ground that such answer contained nothing material to the issue which could influence their verdict, a new trial on the ground of such refusal would not be granted. Ib.

7. Upon the reversal of the judgment of the Supreme Court at Calcutta, finding for the plaintiff, this Court, in the circumstances of the constitution of the Supreme Court, directed a verdict to be entered for the defendants, instead of awarding a venire de novo. Bengal (Bank of) v. Macleod, 7 Moo. P. C. 35; 13 Jur. 945. S. P. Bengal (Bank of) v. Fagan, 7 Moo. P. C. 61.

8. Where a judgment of the Queen's Bench in Lower Canada (affirming the judgment of a superior Court) was reversed by the Privy Council on the ground of misdirection on the part of the judge who tried the cause, the Committee, on the petition of the appellant, who was unable to enforce his decree, directed a venire de novo. Montreal Assurance Co. v. M'Gillivray, 13 Moo. P. C. 125; 9 W. R. 370.

9. In reversing the judgment of the Court below, liberty was given to amend the pleadings, and a new trial directed. Williams v. Byrnes, 1 Moo. P. C., N. S., 154.

10. The principles which govern the Appellate Court in granting a new trial when the verdict of the jury is against the opinion of the presiding judge, explained. Humphrey v. Nowland, 15 Moo. P. C. 343.

11. Although the Privy Council have the right, if they think fit, to order a new trial on any ground, that power will not be exercised merely where the verdict is not altogether satisfactory, but only where the evidence so strongly preponderates against it as to lead to the conclusion that the jury have either wilfully disregarded the evidence or failed to understand or appreciate it. Connecticut Mutual Life Insurance Co. of Hertford v. Moore, 6 L. R., App. Cas., 644.

12. When a defendant did not apply to the Colonial Court for a new trial in an action for a libel, but, upon special application for leave, the Judicial Committee, after hearing counsel on both sides, allowed the appeal on the ground of the judge's misdirection:—Held, that it was too late at the hearing to object, that the appellant ought to have applied to the Court below for a new trial. Stace v. Griffith, 2 L. R., P. C., 420; 6 Moo., P. C., N. S., 18; 20 L. T., N. S., 197.

13. By the ordinances constituting the Supreme Court at Hong Kong, it is enacted, that all matters relating to the practice and proceedings of that court are to be the same as the courts in England. The Supreme Court is composed of a single judge, and there is no court of error or appeal in the colony. An appeal to England lies against any final decree, judgment, or sentence, or against any rule or order made in a civil suit or action having the effect of a final and definitive sentence. In an action on promises, the jury found a verdict for the respondents. Before judgment was signed, the appellant applied to the Court for leave to appeal from such verdict to England, which the judge, in the circumstances of the constitution of the Court, granted:—Held, that as the English practice prevailed at Hong Kong, the allowance of such appeal was irregular, being in effect an appeal against the verdict of a jury, and that the proper course would have been to have moved the Court below for a new trial, and to have appealed against the judgment refusing such motion. Tronson v. Dent, 8 Moo. P. C. 420.

14. The appellants brought an action of ejectment in the Island of Ceylon, for lands then in the possession of the respondent, and for mesne profits. The respondent had filed a bill in the Court of Chancery, in England, to establish a contract of sale of the same lands. From the insufficiency of the pleadings in the action, at Ceylon, the real question between the parties, namely, whether an absolute contract had been executed according to the law of Ceylon, was not put in issue, or brought before that Court. This omission arose principally, if not entirely, from the conduct of the respondent. A decree was made by the district Court of Kandy in favour of the appellants; but upon application to the Supreme Court, by the respondent, stating the omission of the facts necessary to enable the Court to have decided the question at issue, and for leave to amend the pleadings, the Court set aside the decree of the district Court, and granted a new trial, with leave to amend the pleadings, and to enter into further evidence. Upon appeal from this order, the Judicial Committee considered that the conduct of the respondent had been such that a new trial ought not to have been granted, and that the same point ought not to be litigated in England and Ceylon; and, considering also the difficulty of the parties obtaining effectual relief in England, put the respondent upon terms of consenting to the dismissal of his bill in England, with costs, and to pay the costs incurred in the court below, when they would sustain the order appealed from; or, in the alternative, that their lordships would reverse the order granting the new trial, and put the appellants in the possession of the lands, leaving the Supreme Court in Ceylon to ascertain the amount of the mesne profits. Anstruther v. Arabin, 6 Moo. P. C. 286; 12 Jur. 883.

11. Remitting Cause.

1. A party having presented a doleance and petition against an order of the Royal Court of Jersey, made ex parte in a proceeding against him for breach of the revenue laws, their lordships, considering that such order might properly, according to the practice of the Court, be made ex parte, dismissed the petition and doleance; but considering the hardships of the case, and particularly that the petitioner had neglected to defend himself in ignorance of what the law allowed to be done against him in his absence, remitted the case to the Court below, with liberty to petition to defend himself. Re Whitfield, 2 Moo. P. C. 269.

2. Cause remitted to the Court below to calculate interest upon the debt according to the Dutch Roman law in force at the Cape of Good Hope. Maxwell v. Deare, 8 Moo. P. C. 364.

3. Petition to dismiss an appeal from the Sudder Court in India, and for an order directing that Court to carry into execution the terms of a deed of compromise upon which the withdrawal of the appeal was founded; refused. Ghosal v. Indoo, 7 Moo. P. C. 140.

All this Court will do in such circumstances is to make an order of dismissal, reserving to the parties leave to apply to the Court in India to take further proceedings, in pursuance of such agreement. Ib.

12. Re-hearing Appeal.

4. Petition for a re-hearing of an appeal, on the ground that the judgment of the Judicial Committee had been formed upon documents, which were improperly included by the clerk of the appeals in Lower Canada in the transcript of documents, having been excluded from the pleadings by an act of the Court below, refused, as it appeared that the petitioner had not objected to the documents forming part of the transcript, and had sought to take advantage of such documents as evidence at the hearing of the appeal. Motz v. Moreau, 13 Moo. P. C. 376; 9 W. R. 421.

5. The re-hearing of an appeal heard ex parte, on which an Order in Council has been made, refused, the default in not appearing and contesting the appeal being occasioned by the agents of the respondent, who sought to have the appeal re-heard. Exp. Kisto Nauth Roy, 2 L. R., P. C., 274; 38 L. J., P. C., 21; 20 L. T., N. S., 333; 17 W. R. 521; 5 Moo. P. C., N. S., 373.

A re-hearing will not be allowed except under very special circumstances. Ib.

6. A petition having been presented for a re-hearing of the appeal, before the report of the Judicial Committee had been confirmed by Her Majesty in Council, which stated that evidence had been received at the hearing of the appeal which was not called for or produced in the court below, and which the petitioner alleged contradicted the case made by the pleadings on both sides, was dismissed, the Judicial Committee, without deciding that they were not competent to grant a rehearing, being of opinion that the grounds relied on in the petition did not bring the case within any principle on which such an application could be supported. The Singapore and The Hebe, 1 L. R., P. C., 378; 4 Moo. P. C., N. S., 271.

13. Stay of Proceedings.

7. A mandamus of penal interdict ought not to be granted to restrain the execution of a sentence upon grounds that might have been brought forward at the hearing of the cause. In an appeal against the execution of a sentence, the appellant cannot enter into its merits. By such an appeal, the justice of the original sentence is admitted. Nieuwerkerk v. Reynolds, 1 Knapp 151.

8. Appeal allowed from a sentence of the Lieutenant-Governor of the island of Heligoland; the sentence having been passed without hearing the appellant's case. Siemens v. Bufe, 11 Moo. P. C. 62.

Execution of sentence, ordering a distribution of the property in dispute, ordered to be stayed pending the appeal.

9. On petition to stay the trial of the issues of fact pending an appeal to the Judicial Committee from the Supreme Court:—Held, that a petition for a stay of proceedings will only be granted when an irreparable injury will result to the party applying, unless delay is granted, and when the party applies promptly. Ally Khan v. Ajoadhyaram Khan, 1 L. R., P. C., 8; 12 Jur., N. S., 59; 35 L. J., P. C., 21; 14 W. R. 250.

14. Appeal in Formâ Pauperis.

1. Appeal in formâ pauperis allowed, the appellant, by his petition and affidavit, alleging that he was not worth 5*l.* besides wearing apparel, etc. Brouard v. Dumaresque, 3 Moo. P. C. 457.

2. Leave to appeal in formâ pauperis allowed, and sureties for prosecuting appeal dispensed with. Brouard v. Dumaresq, 6 Moo. P. C. 412.

3. Before a party can be admitted to appeal in formâ pauperis to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council from the courts in Doctors' Commons, he must have a certificate of an advocate of the bar of those courts that he has a just and probable cause of appeal. Upon such certificate, and taking the usual oath as a pauper, the surrogate may admit an appeal in formâ pauperis. Lait v. Bailey, 7 Moo. P. C. 436.

4. An appellant who had not sued as a pauper in the court below admitted by the Judicial Committee to appeal in formâ pauperis, upon the usual certificate, without giving security for the costs already incurred, and in which she had been condemned by the decree of the Court below. Watts v. Beaman, 9 Moo. P. C. 81.

5. An appellant admitted to appeal in formâ pauperis. Re Lempriere, 11 Moo. P. C. 398.

6. In consequence of the poverty of a plaintiff, the Supreme Court of New Zealand allowed an appeal to the Queen in Council without requiring security for costs. Bunny v. Hart, 11 Moo. P. C. 189.

7. Permission is given to appeal in formâ pauperis in a case in which the appellant was not heard in the Court below, and refused leave to appeal to Her Majesty in Council, the decision being in fact ex parte. George v. Reg., 1 L. R., P. C., 389; 4 Moo. P. C., N. S., 287.

15. Security for Damages and Costs.

8. The Court below at the Mauritius is the sole judge of the sufficiency of the security to be given for the due prosecution of an appeal. Where that Court has refused to allow an appeal on account of the insufficiency of the security tendered, the Privy Council will not allow one to be instituted. Cambernon v. Egroignard, 1 Knapp 251.

9. Appeal allowed, though the security for prosecuting the same had not been perfected in due time, such omission being occasioned by the suspension and removal of the judges in the colony, and the imperfect constitution of the Court in consequence thereof. Inglis v. De Barnard, 3 Moo. P. C. 425.

10. The Supreme Court at the Mauritius refused to allow an appeal to the Queen in Council from a definitive sentence in a suit for a divorce à vinculo, except upon terms of giving security in the aggregate sum of 1,200*l.* sterling for performance of the Order in Council to be made on appeal, and the costs incurred thereby. On petition the Judicial Committee allowed the appeal, fixing the security at 300*l.* Hulm v. Hulm, 4 Moo. P. C. 262.

11. An Order of Council having been made altering the mode of appealing from the colony, and having been directed by a proclamation of the governor, dated the 14th of May, to take effect from the 18th:—Held, that an appeal which had been noted on the 2nd of that month, from a judgment made on the 1st, and on which the petition to appeal had been presented on the 15th, ought to be prosecuted according to the previous practice, and not according to the order. Semble, the Privy Council will not direct a greater security to be entered into by an appellant on granting him leave to appeal, than it had been the practice to require in the colony, although the instructions to the governor empowered him to require greater. Craig v. Shand, 1 Knapp 253.

12. The "proper security" used in the Canada Act, 34 Geo. 3, c. 2, s. 35, as to the security to be given by an appellant party, means security with proper sureties; but an objection in respect thereof, not having been taken by the respondent in the court below, and an order reviving the appeal having been obtained by the representative of the appellant, was overruled as too late. Powell v. Washburn, 2 Moo. P. C. 199.

13. Decree of Court below carried into effect pending an appeal, upon the respondent's giving security to abide the event of the appeal. Gore v. Bethel, 12 Moo. P. C. 189.

14. The terms of the Order in Council are prohibitory, and give the Court no discretion to admit an appeal, unless the security be completed within three months from the date of the petition; but under circumstances, the Court advised the Crown to admit it on petition. Retemeyer v. Obermüller, 2 Moo. P. C. 93. S. P. Starkey v. Lapslie, 2 Moo. P. C. 96. n.

15. Leave to appeal on an ex parte application was, under special circumstances, granted upon terms of the appellant prosecuting the appeal, and giving security for 500*l.* No step was, however, taken by the appellant to perfect the security or prosecute the appeal. The respondents, on being served with the order admitting the appeal, filed a counter petition, to revoke the leave granted to appeal. The Judicial Committee, under the circumstances, there having been great delay, made an order putting the appellant upon terms of lodging his petition of appeal within six weeks, or the appeal to stand dismissed, and enlarged the amount of the recognisance to 1,000*l.*, to cover the expenses occasioned by the proceedings in the Master's office, reserving the costs of the application to revoke the leave to appeal to the hearing. M'Kellar v. Wallace, 8 Moo. P. C. 378; 5 Moo. Ind. App. 372.

16. Recognisance entered into to abide the determination of an appeal vacated upon petition of the appellant upon the abandonment of the appeal. Reed v. Dabee, 11 Moo. P. C. 151.

17. Security ordered to be given in the island of Heligoland by the petitioner for the respondent's costs, and also in the Privy Council Office for costs of copying transcript and printing appendix to the appellant's case. Siemens v. Bufe, 11 Moo. P. C. 62.

18. Where the Judicial Committee grants leave to appeal under the general jurisdiction of the Queen in Council, it will impose such terms upon the party applying as the special circumstances of the case require. Re Sibnarain Ghose, 8 Moo. P. C. 276.

Appeal admitted from an order confirming the report of commissioners in a partition suit, although the appealable value was under 1,000 rupees, the amount prescribed by the Order in Council of the 10th of April 1838. The petitioner (the plaintiff) had offered to compensate the defendant if the report of the commissioners was varied. The Judicial Committee, in granting leave to appeal, put the petitioner upon terms of lodging in the Council Office, within four months, a certificate of recognisance to the Queen, and the sum of 1,500*l.* for such compensation and costs as might be awarded. Ib.

1. In granting special leave to appeal from a judgment in an action in which damages were awarded, the Judicial Committee imposed terms on the petitioner, in addition to giving security for costs, to find security for the amount of the damages awarded by the jury, and upon the compliance of such terms ordered execution of the judgment of the Colonial Court to be stayed. Stace v. Griffith, 2 L. R., P. C., 420; 6 Moo. P. C., N. S., 18; 20 L. T., N. S., 197.

2. Decree of the Vice-Admiralty Court of Sierra Leone in a proceeding in rem for breach of the revenue laws of the colony, condemning the goods seized, and the owners in penalties, reversed by the Judicial Committee, so far as the penalties were concerned, with costs, it appearing that though the claim of the owner of the goods was rightly rejected, because he failed to comply with the rule of the Vice-Admiralty Court requiring security for costs, yet that such rule did not apply, so far as regarded the penalties, against which he was entitled to be heard in the court below without giving any such security. George v. Reg., 1 L. R., P. C., 389; 4 Moo. P. C., N. S., 287.

3. Where, in a proceeding in rem, a bail-bond given in the court below only covered the costs in that court, the appellants, who were foreigners, were called upon to give security for the costs of the appeal. The Court of Appeal will not, however, entertain any question as to uncovered costs in the court below. The Hélène, 35 L. J., Adm., 1.

4. Appeal allowed by a Government officer, the nominal defendant under a local colonial Act, without giving security for costs of appeal. Robertson v. Dumaresq, 2 Moo. P. C., N. S., 66.

5. By an order of the Supreme Court of Victoria, leave to appeal to Her Majesty in Council, pursuant to a colonial Act, was allowed on condition of the appellant giving security within three months for costs of appeal. The appellant at first offered to deposit money to the amount of the security required, but afterwards a security bond was approved by the Master of the Court, and, without objections by the defendant, filed as a record; but in consequence of objections afterwards taken by the defendant's solicitors to the competency of the proposed sureties, the bond was not filed within three months. Upon a motion by the defendant to set aside the leave to appeal upon that ground, the Supreme Court made an order revoking the leave given. The Privy Council upon petition gave special leave to appeal, on security being given for costs in England, with liberty for the petitioners to apply to the Court at Victoria to cancel the security bond. Webster v. Power, 1 L. R., P. C., 150.

6. The attorney-general of the Isle of Man, as the chief law officer of the Crown there, bringing an appeal, is not required to enter into a recognisance to answer the costs of appeal. Man, Isle of (Att.-Gen.) v. Cowley, 12 Moo. P. C. 27; 7 W. R. 713.

7. A sum ordered to be deposited for security of respondent's costs, on allowance of an appeal, granted ex parte upon petition of the respondent, increased, on account of the length of the transcript of the proceedings. Boswell v. Kilborn, 13 Moo. P. C. 476.

8. The security entered into in the Sudder Court for the costs of appeal to England is vacated by the dismissal consequent upon non-prosecution of the appeal within the prescribed time. Ranee Birjobutteo v. Pertaub Sing, 13 Moo. P. C. 465.

When an appeal is restored, fresh security will be required to be deposited in England. Ib.

16. Costs of Appeal.

9. Although the general rule in the Privy Council is not to condemn the appellant to pay the respondent's costs, where the judgment of the Court below is altered on appeal, yet where the appellant might have obtained the alteration in the Court below without appeal, which was made on appeal, and the general principle of the judgment was affirmed, he was ordered to pay the respondent's costs. Bertram v. Godfray, 1 Knapp 381.

10. Costs given to appellants from the judgment of a colonial court of error, confirming, upon a bill of exceptions, the judgments of a court of common law, on the ground that the points of law involved in the appeal had previously been determined, in two previous appeals against the same respondents, and that they, by not consenting to an amicable compromise, had put the appellants to unnecessary expense. Needham v. Simpson, 2 Knapp 1.

11. Decree affirmed with costs, though varied in minor points improperly made the subject of appeal, and which might have been set right by the Court below, if applied to. Stratton v. Symon, 2 Moo. P. C. 125.

12. Appeal from the High Court of Admiralty not prosecuted; cause remitted with costs. Brownlow v. Garson, 4 Moo. P. C. 272.

13. Where the Court below had pronounced in favour of a will, impeached as obtained by conspiracy and want of testamentary capacity, and condemned the opposing party in costs, the Judicial Committee affirmed the judgment below as to the will; but there being circumstances to require and justify the inquiry, the costs below ordered to come out of the estate, and no order as to costs of appeal. Armstrong v. Huddleston, 1 Moo. P. C. 478.

14. In reversing the judgment of the Court below, liberty was given to amend the pleadings, and a new trial directed. Costs of the amendment of the pleadings directed to abide the event of the new trial. Williams v. Byrnes, 1 Moo. P. C., N. S., 154.

15. When an appeal is dismissed, a verbal modification of the decree of the Court below, such modification being consistent with the intention of that Court, ought not to relieve the appellant from paying the costs of the appeal. Van Breda v. Silverbauer, 3 L. R., P. C., 84; 39 L. J., P. C., 8; 22 L. T. 667; 18 W. R. 553; 6 Moo. P. C., N. S., 319.

1. On reversal of an order of the Court below no costs were given, as special leave to appeal was only allowed to decide an abstract question of constitutional law. Speaker of the Legislative Assembly of Victoria v. Glass, 3 L. R., P. C., 560; 40 L. J., P. C., 17; 24 L. T. 37; 20 W. R. 42; 7 Moo. P. C., N. S., 499.

2. When a printed case has been lodged by a respondent, but he does not appear on the hearing, he will, if successful, be allowed his costs down to the lodging of the case, inclusively. O'Shanassy v. Joachim, 34 L. T., N. S., 265; 1 L. R., App. Cas., 82.

3. Upon a remit to the Court below, the Judicial Committee directed that the costs of the appeal should abide the ultimate result of the proceedings consequent upon the remit. Jones v. M'Kenzie, 13 Moo. P. C. 1.

4. Where an appeal was affirmed upon wholly different grounds from those relied upon by the Court below, the dismissal was ordered to be without costs. Fischer v. Kamala Naicker, 8 Moo. Ind. App. 170.

5. In reversing a judgment, the Judicial Committee, under the circumstances, gave the appellant the costs incurred in the Court below, but not of appeal. Smith v. Deighton, 8 Moo. P. C. 179.

6. The defendant did not appeal from the interlocutory decree, but proceeded in the Master's office in respect of the matters included in the accounts; but before the general report was made by the Master, he appealed from such interlocutory decree to England. In reversing such a decree, the Judicial Committee ordered him to pay the costs of the proceedings in the Master's office, and remitted the cause to the Court below, with directions that the costs payable to the defendant upon the dismissal of the bill, and the costs payable by him consequent upon his proceedings in the Master's office, should be set off, the one against the other, and the balance paid to the party entitled to the same. M'Kellar v. Wallace, 8 Moo. P. C. 378.

7. Rule 1 of the Order in Council of the 13th of June 1853, allowing an appellant costs upon a successful appeal, is discretionary with the Court, and only to be allowed in special circumstances. Lindo v. Barrett, 9 Moo. P. C. 456.

Upon a reversal, the Order in Council contained no direction as to costs. Upon petition by the appellant for a supplemental order allowing costs, the Judicial Committee refused to interfere. Ib.

To entitle an appellant to costs, application ought to be made at the hearing. Ib.

8. Costs of appeal, including those incurred before the Commissioners of the West Indian Encumbered Estates, allowed to a successful appellant, and directed to be added to the amount of his claim for principal and interest. Fraser v. Burgess, 13 Moo. P. C. 314.

9. The practice in the House of Lords and in the Exchequer Chamber is never to give a successful appellant his costs. In the Privy Council the rule is the opposite way. In appeals from sessions the costs are given, because in such small matters, unless the successful appellant could get his costs, his right of appeal would practically be taken away. The principle, however, upon which costs are not awarded, is that a suitor ought not to pay for the errors of a judge. Denny v. Hancock, 40 L. J., Ch., 193, 194.

17. Other Matters.

10. When the Privy Council has sent a reference to a Court below for them to certify, as to a point of their practice, their certificate cannot be disputed, unless a petition praying for a fresh reference is presented, and supported by affidavits disputing the accuracy of the certificate. Le Quesne v. Nicolle, 1 Knapp 257.

11. Order of reference to take accounts, etc., was made pursuant to the powers contained in the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 41, s. 17, notwithstanding the dissent of the respondent's counsel to the Court referring the same. Hutchinson v. Gillespie, 2 Moo. P. C. 243.

12. Parties to an appeal agreed to compromise the same, and that the appellant should have paid over to him a certain sum of money, the amount for compensation in respect to slaves attached to an estate, the subject of the appeal. Upon petition to dismiss the appeal, an order of dismissal made, containing also an order for the accountant-general of the Court of Chancery to pay the appellant the compensation money in question. M'Turk v. Douglas, 6 Moo. P. C. 500.

13. On a petition praying that a receiver might be appointed of certain estates pending an appeal, it appeared that a district Court decreed in favour of the petitioner, but that the High Court of Bengal reversed the decree. It also appeared that the property was of great extent, paying a large revenue to the Government. The Privy Council refused to appoint a receiver. Burmono v. Thakoor, 37 L. J., P. C., 7.

14. Two orders of the Supreme Court at New Zealand, the first suspending and the second striking an attorney off the Rolls of that Court, sustained. Bunny v. New Zealand (Judges), 15 Moo. P. C. 164.

15. An Order of Council having been made altering the mode of appealing from the colony, and having been directed by a proclamation of the governor, dated the 14th of May, to take effect from the 18th:—Held, that an appeal which had been noted on the 2nd of that month, from a judgment made on the 1st, and on which the petition to appeal had been presented on the 15th, ought to be prosecuted according to the previous practice, and not according to the order. Craig v. Shand, 1 Knapp 253.

Allowance of Interest.] 16. By an Order in Council, the judgment of the Supreme Court at Hong Kong, in an action, was reversed and a nonsuit directed to be entered. On the receipt of this order in the colony, the successful appellant, to carry the order into execution, applied to the Supreme Court for an order for repayment of the amount of the judgment, with interest upon the whole sum paid by way of principal and interest by the appellant. The Supreme Court was of opinion, that as there were no express directions in the Order in Council for payment of interest on the judgment, it had no power to allow interest, and refused to make any order thereon:—Held, that although by the terms of the Order in Council the judgment of the Supreme Court was only reversed, and a non-suit directed to be entered, yet, (1) that interest upon the judgment was to be implied under the general words there used; and (2) that inasmuch as under the general regulations of 1845, applicable to appeals from Hong Kong to the Queen in Council, the Supreme Court is to execute and carry into effect the judgments and orders of the Queen in Council, that Court had power, without more, to have ordered payment of interest; as otherwise the successful appellant would not be restored to all he had lost by reason of the judgment being reversed. Rodger v. Comptoir D'Escompte de Paris, 3 L. R., P. C., 465; 24 L. T., N. S., 111; 40 L. J., P. C., 1; 19 W. R. 449; 7 Moo. P. C., N. S., 314.

1. As to jurisdiction to give subsequent interest upon a judgment debt established on appeal. Australasia (Bank) v. Breillat, 6 Moo. P. C. 152. S. C. nom. Australasia (Bank) v. Australia (Bank), 12 Jur. 189.

Hearing of Counsel.] 2. Practice as to number of counsel entitled to be heard where there are two distinct appeals against the same respondent, whose defence to each appeal is in substance the same. Re Downie, 3 Moo. P. C. 414.

3. A reply on the hearing of the appeal allowed, though not allowed by the practice of the Court below on the original hearing of the Act on petition. Henfrey v. Henfrey, 4 Moo. P. C. 29; 6 Jur. 355.

4. The appearance of counsel, who had been previously engaged at the hearing of a cause, on the cause coming on again upon the reserved question of costs, the proctor who originally instructed him being present, and not objecting to his taking part in the proceedings, and the opposite party being thereby led to suppose he was properly instructed to agree to a final decree:—Held, binding on the party for whom he originally appeared, so as to perempt an appeal previously lodged against the former decree. Kelly v. Bushby, 3 Knapp 375.

V. ECCLESIASTICAL AND PROBATE.

5. No appeal from a sentence of the delegates to the lords in Parliament. Kennedy v. Cassilis (Earl), 2 Swan. 326.

6. The sentence of the Ecclesiastical Court cannot be reversed in a summary way, but by appeal only to proper judges; nor can a prohibition to that Court be granted upon a petition; but by motion and proper suggestion it may. Hill v. Turner, 1 Atk. 516.

7. A person aggrieved by, or interested in, a sentence in the Ecclesiastical Court, may have a commission of delegates, though he was no party to the original suit. Jones v. Bougett, 1 Atk. 298.

8. Semble, that the Privy Council will not adjudicate upon a will, not established in a court of probate, though registered in the colony, and not questioned in the court below. Moss v. Leatham, 2 Moo. P. C. 73.

9. On reversing the decision of the Prerogative Court, rejecting an allegation pleading circumstances to entitle a paper to probate, the Judicial Committee retained the cause, and ultimately granted probate of the instrument. Bateman v. Pennington, 3 Moo. P. C. 223.

10. A party in contempt for not obeying a monition, whose contempt has been signified under 53 Geo. 3, c. 127, and a writ de contumace capiendo extracted against him, is not precluded from appealing from the principal sentence, though pronounced in pœnam: protest against permission to appeal under such circumstances overruled. Harrison v. Harrison, 4 Moo. P. C. 96; 6 Jur. 899.

11. A., being a stipendiary curate within a diocese, the bishop, after due notice and inquiry, revoked his licence. He appealed to the archbishop of the province under 1 & 2 Vict., c. 106, s. 98, and the archbishop confirmed the revocation:—Held, that neither the 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 92, and 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 41, nor the 1 & 2 Vict., c. 106, authorise the Privy Council to receive appeals, except in the cases mentioned in 1 & 2 Vict., c. 106, s. 6, from the decisions given by the archbishops under 1 & 2 Vict., c. 106. Poole v. London (Bishop), 7 Jur., N. S., 347; 14 Moo. P. C. C. 262; 9 W. R. 485; 4 L. T., N. S., 224.

12. No appeal is given by 3 & 4 Vict., c. 86, either to the Arches Court, or thence to Her Majesty in Council, from the decision of the commissioners, on the regularity or irregularity of the proceedings before them. Simpson v. Flamank, 1 L. R., P. C., 463; 4 Moo. P. C., N. S., 385; 16 W. R. 8; 16 L. T., N. S., 724.

13. The Court will not allow an appeal from its decision as to the admission of articles, unless some important principle of law is involved in such decision. Martin v. Mackonochie, 36 L. J., Ecc. Cas., 25.

14. Although the judgment in the court below may be on all points reversed, a bishop, as respondent, will not be condemned in the costs of the proceedings either in the Court of Arches or in the Court of Appeal, if in instituting them he has acted simply in accordance with his duty to the public. Berney v. Norwich (Bishop), 36 L. J., Ecc., 10.

15. No appeal was interposed from an interlocutory judgment of the Arches Court admitting articles of charge against a clergyman proceeded against under 3 & 4 Vict., c. 86:—Held, that the appellant was not concluded by the admission of the articles, and that it was competent to him upon appeal from the final sentence to open the finding of the interlocutory judgment upon the articles. Williams v. Salisbury (Bishop), 2 Moo. P. C., N. S., 375.

Secus, with respect to the respondent who had adhered to the appeal. Ib.

PRIZE AND PRIZE MONEY.

16. The question of prize or no prize, or by whom taken, cannot be tried at common law, but must be decided by the judge of the Court of Admiralty; and the jurisdiction depends not upon the locality, or upon the parties, but upon the nature of the question, which is such as cannot be tried by any rules of common law, but by the general law of nations, which is there administered by forms best adapted to the subject of its jurisdiction, and the interests of the parties. Mitchell v. Rodney, 2 Bro. P. C. 423.

1. The prize courts and courts of Lords Commissioners of Appeals have the sole and exclusive jurisdiction over the question of prize or no prize, and who are the captors, notwithstanding any of the prize Acts; and if they pronounce a sentence of condemnation, adjudging also who are the captors, the courts of common law cannot examine the justice or propriety of it. Camden (Lord) v. Home, 6 Bro. P. C. 243; 2 H. Bl. 533; 4 T. R. 382.

2. Whether the Court of Chancery has jurisdiction to determine whether a ship of war was or was not at the time of the capture one of the squadron under the command of a particular officer, quære. Parker v. Toulmin, 1 Cox 265.

3. Prohibition to enjoin judge of Prize Court from proceeding in a question of prize or no prize, refused. Exp. Lynch, 1 Madd. 15.

4. A court of equity has jurisdiction upon a bill by officers of the army and the East India Company, on behalf of themselves and all others, etc., for an account of prize money received beyond the due proportion, and for a distribution according to the King's grant and usage, considering the defendants as trustees; but upon the construction of the grant, as not creating a trust, a demurrer was allowed. Brown v. Harris, 13 Ves. 552.

5. The Court of Chancery has admiralty jurisdiction. Letters of marque and reprisal may be repealed in Chancery after a peace, though there is a clause in the letters patent that no treaty of peace shall prejudice them. Rex v. Carew, 1 Vern. 54; 3 Swan. 669.

6. Where privateer had taken a prize without having letters of marque, and the Court of Admiralty had sentenced her as a droit to the Crown, the Court of Chancery refused, with costs, to restrain the parties from receiving, or the register of the Admiralty from paying, the proceeds under a treasury warrant. Nicol v. Goodall, 10 Ves. 155.

Privateer sailing and taking prize without letters of marque, the prize belongs to the King as a droit of the Crown. Ib.

7. Bill by one of the officers and crew of a privateer against the owner, for an account of captures according to the articles. Leave given to amend, by stating that the bill was on behalf of the plaintiff and all others; upon that amendment the account was decreed. Good v. Blewitt, 13 Ves. 397.

8. Two captains of ships of war enter into an agreement that all prizes taken by either of them, whether in the ships they then had, or in any other ship which they might thereafter command, should be equally divided between them. One of them changed his ship, which, meeting with an accident, was ordered to be laid up, and it was some time before he got another. The other captain continued cruising all the time, but objected to account for the prizes which he took during the interval of his partner's being unemployed:—Held, that he was accountable for all the prizes taken from the date of the agreement. Ogle v. Sansom, 1 Bro. P. C. 149.

9. Bill for an account and share of prize-money dismissed, the sum being certain, and the remedy at law against the prize agents. Ogle v. Haddock (Representatives of Admiral), 1 Ves. 161.

10. If any doubt exists as to the character of a ship claimed to be the property of a neutral, being still enemy's property, the rule of the Prize Court is, that the claimant shall be put to strict proof of ownership, and any circumstance of fraud, or contrivance, or attempt at imposition on the Court, in making out his title, is fatal to the claimant; condemnation of the ship as enemy's property necessarily follows. Batten v. Reg, 11 Moo., P. C., 271.

11. Military prize, when captured, is capable of being effectually assigned by the captor, before any interest in it has been vested in him by a grant from the Crown. A warrant of the Crown, conveying military prize to trustees upon trust, to collect, recover, and receive the same, and directing the trustees, as soon as the case would permit, to prepare a scheme for the distribution thereof, conformably to certain principles therein stated, and to submit such scheme to the Lords of the Treasury, for the signification of the royal pleasure thereon, is not an absolute or final grant: it creates no vested interest in any particular individuals, as objects of the bounty; nor can persons claiming to be cestuis que trustent compel a distribution under it by a suit in equity against the trustees. Semble, the Crown may at any time before distribution alter or revoke a grant of military prize. Alexander v. Wellington (Duke), 2 Russ. & M. 35; 9 L. J., Ch., 36.

12. The Crown, by royal warrant, "granted to the Secretary of State for India in Council for the time being" certain booty taken in war "in trust for the use of" certain persons, who had been adjudged entitled to it upon a reference to the Court of Admiralty, to be distributed among them, with a further provision that in case any doubts should arise in the course of the distribution the decision of the Secretary of State should be final, unless the Crown should otherwise order:—Held, (1) That the Secretary of State for India in Council could only sue or be sued as a corporation under 21 & 22 Vict., c. 106, s. 65, in proceedings which might have been taken by or against the late East India Company; (2) That the royal warrant constituted the Secretary of State for India in Council an agent of the Crown for the purpose of the distribution of the fund under the control of the Crown, but did not constitute him a trustee for the persons interested subject to the control of a court of equity. Alexander v. Wellington (Duke) (2 Russ. & M. 35) discussed. Brown v. Harris (13 Ves. 552) distinguished. Kinloch v. Secretary of State for India in Council, 7 L. R., App. Cas., 619; 51 L. J., Ch., 885; 47 L. T. 133; 30 W. R. 845. Affirming 15 L. R., Ch. D., 1; 49 L. J., Ch., 571; 42 L. T. 667; 28 W. R. 619.

13. Assignment of sailor's share of prize money at great undervalue, set aside for fraud, but still to stand as security for what really advanced. The same equity as to an under-assignment. How v. Weldon, 2 Ves. 516.

14. Sale of a seaman's prize money, and subsequent agreement in confirmation, set aside. Taylour v. Rochfort, 2 Ves. 281.

1. The property in a prize of war may pass to the captors without the prize being taken into a port belonging to the country of the captors, or being condemned by a prize court. The Gauntlet, 25 L. T., N. S., 69. Reversed sub nom., Reg. or Dyke v. Elliott, 4 L. R., P. C., 184; 41 L. J., Adm., 65; 26 L. T. 45; 20 W. R. 45.

A prize of war (a merchantman) with a prize crew on board is not a ship of war. Ib.

2. A British ship was taken by the Americans, and afterwards retaken by one of the British crew, brought into port, and condemned. A writ of prohibition to enjoin the judge of the Prize Court from proceeding after the termination of the war, at the suit of the American owners, to try the question of the recapture, was refused; it being a case clearly within the jurisdiction of a court of prize, and such jurisdiction not being determined by the cessation of the hostilities. Harmony (Case of the ship), Coop. 325. And see Exp. Lynch, 1 Madd. 15.

3. Charter-party of affreightment between the owners of the ship M. and the commissioners of transports for and on behalf of his Majesty; during its continuance in the transport service the ship makes a capture, which is condemned, and upon petition to the treasury, two-thirds of a moiety of the proceeds arising from the capture, were ordered by warrant from the Crown to be paid to the owners. These proceeds are entirely at the discretion of the Crown; and upon motion for payment into court of a sum, admitted by the commissioners of transports to be due for freight under the charter-party, which motion was resisted on the ground that the commissioners were entitled to set off the amount of the proceeds received by the owners under the warrant, payment was ordered accordingly, without prejudice to the question of ownership. Thurgar v. Morley, 2 Meriv. 20.

4. No interest complete vested in prizes before condemnation; but upon condemnation it is considered the property of the captor from the time of the capture. The Crown in prize grants puts what is strictly bounty upon the footing of right, considering the claim as transmissible to the legal representatives of the claimant, deceased before the grant, subject to his will, etc., as his other property. Stevens v. Bagwell, 15 Ves. 139.

5. Where satisfaction is made to shipowners under a royal proclamation, for a distribution of prizes, such of the underwriters as have paid are entitled to a restitution of the insurance money; but those who have compounded and renounced salvage are not; and the underwriters who are foreigners are entitled to the benefit of the proclamation equally with British subjects. Blauwpot v. Da Costa, 1 Eden 130.

1. Lands are acquired in two ways, by descent or by purchase. The first is by right of blood and act of law; the second is by one's own act, and in its most comprehensive signification the word "purchase" includes every other mode of coming to an estate but that by inheritance. In its more confined, it means such acquisitions as are made by bargain and sale for valuable consideration. The word, in its comprehensive signification, includes these five methods of acquiring estates, viz., Escheat, Occupancy, Prescription, Forfeiture, and Alienation, and these only. As to acquisition by execution, which Lord Coke considers under the head of elegit, it is not considered by any writer as an acquisition by purchase. The acquiring profits out of real assets is not an acquisition by purchase; it is only a right to be paid by the heir out of the assets in his hands. Aylmer v. Bellew, Vern. & Scriv. 23.

2. A. covenants that a specific sum should be paid to B., if B. survived; A. having aliened part of it, on a bill by B., A. decreed to give security that it should be forthcoming. Flight v. Cook, 2 Ves. 619.

3. The statutes providing for the relief of subject, accountants who have equities against the Crown, held not to be confined to cases where the subject be actually sued or impleaded, but he may proceed by bill in equity in the first instance, and as it were quia timet, and that during the passing his accounts before the commissioners of audit. Colebrooke v. Att.-Gen., 7 Price 146.

4. A. is bound for B., and has a counter-bond; equity will compel B. to pay the debt, though A. is not sued. Ranelaugh v. Hayes, 1 Vern. 190.

5. A trustee held shares in a company on trust for an adult cestui que trust. He had applied for them at the request of the cestui que trust, who paid the money due to the company on the application and allotment. The trustee executed a transfer of the shares to the cestui que trust, and the latter sent it to the company for registration, but the directors refused to register it, and when an order was made to wind up the company the name of the trustee remained on the company's register as the holder of the shares. The trustee brought an action against the cestui que trust, claiming an indemnity against liability on the shares. There was no evidence to show whether calls were likely to be made in the winding-up:—Held, that the action was a mere quia timet one, and that it was premature and could not be maintained. Ranelaugh (Lord) v. Hayes (1 Vern. 189) not followed. Hughes-Hallett v. Indian Mammoth Gold Mines Co., 22 L. R., Ch. D., 561; 52 L. J., Ch., 418; 48 L. T. 107; 31 W. R. 285.

6. Colonel of a regiment having taken a bond of indemnity from his agents, with another as surety, in respect of all charges, etc., to which he may become liable by their default, the agent shaving afterwards become bankrupt, and Government having given notice to the representatives of the colonel (deceased) of a demand upon the colonel's estate, by virtue of an unliquidated account, a bill by the representatives of the colonel, against the representatives of the surety, to pay the balance due to Government, and also to set aside a sufficient sum out of their testator's estate to answer future contingent demands, though attempted to be supported upon the principle of a bill quia timet, dismissed with costs. Antrobus v. Davidson, 3 Meriv. 569.

7. Where the object of a bill quia timet is to prevent the assignees of a bankrupt, purchaser of estate, from bringing an action to recover back part of consideration money remaining due to vendor, which had been paid to him subsequent to act of bankruptcy, on the ground of his having waived his equitable lien, by taking a bond for the purchase money, if the bill charge, as a fact, that the bond was given as a further additional or collateral security, the question of law cannot be raised on a general demurrer. Braband v. Hoskins, 3 Price 31.

8. A party who had granted an annuity to a trustee for his wife, filed a bill against the trustee, his wife, and an assignee of the annuity, from her stating that such assignee had filed a bill against him and his wife, and that the trustee threatened to distrain, and praying to be at liberty to pay the arrears of the annuity into court, and to be indemnified against the costs of the assignee's suit:—Held, that the suit was not sustainable as an interpleader or quia timet, because, on account of the trustee not being a party to the assignee's suit, no decree could be made in it against the plaintiff. Palmer v. Fraser, 3 Y. & Coll. 491; 3 Jur. 890.

9. The Court will not interfere, quia timet, in a case of alleged nuisance, but the actual existence of the nuisance must be proved. Att.-Gen. v. Kingston-upon-Thames (Mayor), 11 Jur., N. S., 596; 13 W. R. 888; 12 L. T., N. S., 665.

Therefore, where an information was filed to restrain the pollution of a navigable river by an increased discharge of sewage into it, but the evidence failed to show that a nuisance had actually arisen, the Court dismissed the information, without prejudice to any further proceedings being taken, if a nuisance should ultimately be occasioned. Ib.

10. Principles on which courts of equity proceed, in ordering the delivery up of instruments on which actions may be brought. Cooper v Joel, 27 Beav. 313; 1 De G. F. & J. 240.

A written guarantee was given for moneys payable by instalments; though invalid, there was no invalidity on the face of it. In an action for the first instalment the plaintiff was non-prossed:—Held, that, although there was a legal defence, the instrument ought to be cancelled, on the ground that future actions were contemplated, and that the future defence might fail from the loss of evidence. Ib.

1. Quit rents, being incidents of tenure, are proper subjects of compensation. Esdaile v. Stephenson, 1 Sim. & S. 122.

2. Quit rent shall not be apportioned as between the tenant for life and remainderman, the stat. 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, s. 4, having no application in this case. Sutton v. Chaplin, 10 Ves. 66.

3. Bill does not lie against several tenants of a manor for quit rents, the plaintiff's remedy being at law, and the suit also multifarious as to the different tenants. Bouverie v. Prentice, 1 Bro. C. C. 200.

4. Though a bill in equity lies to recover a small quit rent, yet it ought to appear that plaintiff has no remedy for the same at law. Holder v. Chambury, 3 P. W. 256.

5. Bill by the lord against his tenant for a quit rent; the bill alleged, that the land out of which it issued, by reason of the unity of possession of the lands out of which the rent was supposed to issue, with other lands, was not known. Defendant answered as to discovery but demurred as to relief. Sed quære, whether a demurrer to all relief be good. North v. Strafford (Earl), 3 P. W. 149.

6. An owner of a quit rent shall pay taxes only in proportion to what the land pays; but if the matter has been examined by the commissioners of the land tax, the Court will not re-examine it. Brockman v. Honeywood, 1 P. W. 328.

7. Bill in equity lies for recovering ancient quit rents, though very small, as 2*s.* or 3*s.* per annum; and if proved to be constantly paid, the Court will decree payment, or will direct an issue to try whether any and what rent is issuing out of all or any of the lands in the bill. Cooks v. Fbley, 1 Vern. 359.

8. Where by great length of time it is become impossible to know out of what particular lands ancient quit rents are issuable, courts of equity have exercised a jurisdiction, and have constantly, on proof of payment within a reasonable time, decreed a satisfaction for all arrears of such rents, and payment of same in future. Bridgewater (Duke) v. Edwards, 6 Bro. P. C. 368.

9. The receipt granted by the collector of quit rent is evidence of the apportionment of rent. Bowles v. Waller, Hayes 439.

10. The Court of Judicature for re-building houses burnt down by the great fire of London, having settled the rent which the tenant was to pay for a house at 5*l.* per annum, and there being an ancient rent of 25*s.* per annum issuing out of the same house to a charitable use, now twenty years in arrear, a question arose, whether the landlord or tenant should pay this rent? Upon reading the Act of Parliament, Lord Keeper was satisfied the tenant was in no case to be charged with more than the rent of 5*l.* per annum in the whole, and directed plaintiff to bring Lady D., who had the reversion expectant on the lease, before the Court, and ordered the tenant not to pay any more of his rent in the meantime, and declared that the growing payments, and the arrears of the 25*s.* per annum, should be deducted out of the rent. Grice v. Banke, 1 Vern. 309.

11. A. seised in fee of premises subject to a quit rent, agreed with B. (his attorney and tenant of part of the premises), to sell him the reversion of that part, B. covenanting to pay the whole quit rent. A. accordingly conveyed the reversion, and B. covenanted to pay the whole quit rent, and to indemnify A., his heirs, and assigns, and their real and personal estate. A. sold the residue of the premises discharged of quit rent to C., which devolving on the plaintiff he was obliged to pay the entire quit rent, and filed his bill against D. (the heir, devisee, and administrator of B.), praying that the sums he paid for quit rent might be declared a charge on D.'s portion, or that they might be paid out of B.'s real and personal estate come to E., or that the quit rent might be apportioned, and D. decreed to pay his portion of it:—Held, on demurrer:—First, that the plaintiff was entitled to the benefit of the agreement of B. charging the premises. Second, that D. was answerable to the extent of the real and personal estate of B. Third, that the suit was maintainable for the apportionment of the quit rent. Hatton v. Haddy, 2 Jones 541.

12. By the Charter of Justice of the 23rd December 1823, establishing the Supreme Court at Bombay, that Court was prohibited (in like manner as the Supreme Court at Calcutta, under the 21 Geo. 3, c. 70, s. 8) from entertaining any jurisdiction in any matter concerning the revenue, under the management of the Governor and Council, or any act done in the collection thereof. Spooner v. Juddow, 4 Moo. Ind. App. 353; 6 Moo. P. C. 257.

In an action of trespass brought against the collector of revenue at Bombay, for distraining for arrears of Government "quit-rent," the defendant pleaded "not guilty" only. The Supreme Court at Bombay held, that the "quit rent" was not "revenue" within the meaning of the charter, and that the act complained of was not warranted by the usage of the country and the company's regulations, and that the Court had jurisdiction to entertain the action, and found for the plaintiffs:—Held, reversing such finding and judgment, first, that the "quit-rent" was part of the "revenue" of the East India Company at Bombay; and, secondly, that it being a matter concerning the revenue and the collection thereof, the Supreme Court had no jurisdiction; and that, the Court being excluded by the charter from any matter concerning the revenue, the plea of "not guilty" was sufficient; and that the judge ought, at the trial, to have directed a nonsuit, or a verdict to be entered for the defendants. Ib.

A plea in abatement to the jurisdiction of the Court must point out another Court before which the matter is cognizable. A plea in bar, if well founded, is sufficient, without pointing out the court in which the suit ought to have been brought. Ib.

1. Quit-rents and crown-rents are charges and incumbrances on lands. Massy v. O'Dell, 9 Ir. Ch. R. 441.

2. By letters patent of 31 Car. 2, the lands of H. were granted to Sir G. A. in tail male, and a rent of 3*d.* per acre, the amount of quit-rent prescribed by the Act of Settlement, was reserved. In 1681 Sir G. A. conveyed the lands to S. and his heirs, saving the estate and right of the Crown. In 1776 the estate tail determined by failure of issue male of Sir G. A. The representatives of S. remained in possession of the lands down to the filing of the bill in 1841, and dealt with the estate as an absolute estate in fee. The rent reserved by the letters patent was regularly paid to the proper officer, and the usual receipt given for it as quit-rent:—Held, that the right of the Crown to the land on the determination of the estate tail, was barred and transferred to the vendor by the 48 Geo. 3, c. 47, the case not coming within any of the exceptions in the first section of that Act, and the exception of the purchaser to the title was overruled. Tuthill v. Rogers, 6 Ir. Eq. R. 429; 1 J. & L. 36.

3. A bill for a chief rent is sustainable in this court, where, in consequence of the acts of the party liable to pay such chief rent, all the difficulty in the way of plaintiff's proceeding at law has been occasioned. Dublin (Archbishop) v. Trimleston (Lord), 2 Dr. & War. 535.

4. Land on which an improved chief rent, which was purchased by the plaintiff's testator in 1853, had been reserved by a former vendor of the land, was ordered to be sold to pay the arrears of the chief rent which had accrued due since that date. Horton v. Hall, 17 L. R., Eq., 437; 22 W. R. 391.

1. Of Part of Undertaking.

1. Where a railway company has undertaken to complete a line, or any series of lines, it is bound to complete the whole line or series of lines, and is not, without parliamentary authority, at liberty to abandon any portion of its undertaking. Graham v. Birkenhead, Lancashire, & Cheshire Junction Railway Co., 12 Beav. 460.

But on an application by an individual shareholder, on behalf of himself and the other shareholders, for an injunction to restrain the construction of part only of the line, the Court refused to interfere, on the ground of the acquiescence of the plaintiff, and also that the other shareholders, had for eighteen months previously to filing the bill known, or had the means of knowing, the acts complained of. S. C. 2 Macn. & G. 147; 2 H. & Tw. 450; 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 445; 14 Jur. 494. Reversing on this point 12 Beav. 460.

Existing contracts for making part of the line are no answer to an application to prevent a railway company from making a portion of the line with an intention of completing less than the whole. S. C. 12 Beav. 460.

On an application for an injunction to prevent a railway company from making a portion only of its line, abandoning the rest, the Court would not be disposed to act in a severe and strict manner, if by a small expenditure a great benefit might result to the shareholders, and a considerable advantage to the public. Ib.

Observations as to the discretion of the Court in such a case. Ib.

2. A railway company authorized to make a line of fifty-six miles, resolved on making only four miles of it, and to abandon the rest:—Held, that such a resolution was illegal, both as against the landowners on the line and the shareholders in the company. Cohen v. Wilkinson, 12 Beav. 125; 5 Rail. Ca. 741; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 378; 13 Jur. 641. Affirmed 1 Macn. & G. 481; 1 H. & Tw. 554; 5 Rail. Ca. 758; 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 477; 14 Jur. 535.

The powers contained in railway Acts are given only in contemplation of the supposed public good by completion of the whole work, and the Court will interfere when it sees that the whole undertaking cannot be completed. Ib.

A railway is not like a partnership for general trading purposes, in which one portion of the business may be abandoned, but it is a partnership for a public purpose for effecting a work which it is a duty to complete. The obligation to complete the work is co-extensive with the authority to make it. Ib.

3. A bill was filed by a shareholder on behalf, etc., to prevent the directors making a part only of the railway, abandoning the rest, and for an indemnity. There were several classes of shareholders:—Held, that it was not necessary that the several classes should be severally and separately represented on the record. Dunvile v. Birkenhead, Lancashire, & Cheshire Junction Railway Co., 12 Beav. 444.

4. A shareholder in a line of railway projected by A., filed a bill on behalf of himself, etc., against the members of the provisional committee, alleging that they had abandoned the line in favour of one projected by B., and alleging misconduct, etc., and praying an account, a receiver, and an injunction. Demurrer for want of equity and for want of parties, overruled without prejudice, and costs, with consent of all, reserved. Wilson v. Stanhope, 4 Rail. Ca. 251.

5. Where a railway company has formed a portion of the line, but is unable to complete the whole, the Court exercises a discretion in granting an injunction, the effect of which will be to prevent that portion being made effective and beneficial to the public and profitable to the shareholders. Hodgson v. Powis (Earl), 12 Beav. 529; 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 356; 14 Jur. 906.

Quære, whether railways, forming a cluster, differ from a continuous line with respect to the propriety of granting an injunction against the construction of part only of an undertaking authorized by the Legislature. Ib.

A series of Acts had in the same year been obtained by the same parties for the construction of three different railways, all forming part of one system, but not joining each other at any point, and with different amounts of capital stock specifically allotted to each undertaking. Two years afterwards the whole of the undertakings were leased to another company, under an Act of Parliament, the management being intrusted to a joint committee. Only one of the three lines was completed, the others being abandoned:—Held, overruling the decison of the Rolls, that no injunction ought to be granted on an interlocutory application to restrain the amalgamated companies from making calls, or extending the works which they had already completed, and an injunction which had been granted was dissolved. S. C. 1 De G. M. & G. 6; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 17; 15 Jur. 1022. Reversing 12 Beav. 392, 529; 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 356, 418; 14 Jur. 906, 965.

6. It appeared very probable that at the time of filing the bill, a company, which were authorized to make 150 miles of railway, intended to complete 23 miles only, and then abandon the rest. Upon a motion to restrain them, it appeared that the company had since abandoned the whole. The Court was of opinion that if the case had remained as it was at the time of the filing of the bill, the plaintiff would have been entitled to the injunction; but refused it, on the ground of the alteration in the existing circumstances, and gave no costs. Logan v. Courtown (Earl), 3 Beav. 22; 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 347.

2. Deviation and Plans.

1. A vertical deviation of the level of a railway not exceeding five feet, calculated with reference to the datum line shown on the plans and sections deposited in pursuance of the Standing Orders of the Houses of Parliament, is within the powers of deviation conferred by the Railway Clauses Consolidation Act for Scotland (8 & 9 Vict., c. 33, s. 11), although the deviation may exceed five feet, calculated with reference to the surface line shown on the said plans and sections. North British Railway Co. v. Tod, 12 Cl. & F. 722; 4 Rail. Ca. 449; 10 Jur. 975.

In putting a construction upon a railway company's Act, no regard will be paid to the plans and sections deposited, in pursuance of the Standing Orders of the Houses of Parliament, previous to the application for that Act, unless they are incorporated therewith. Ib.

2. Held, following North British Railway Co. v. Tod (12 Cl. & F. 722), that the plans and sections of an intended railway company, deposited in pursuance of the Standing Orders of the Houses of Parliament, cannot be referred to for the purpose of construing the special Act, except so far as they may have been incorporated within its provisions. Beardmer v. London & North Western Railway Co., 1 Macn. & G. 112; 1 H. & Tw. 161; 5 Rail. Ca. 728; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 432; 13 Jur. 327.

The fourteenth section of the Railway Clauses Consolidation Act (8 & 9 Vict., c. 20) is to be construed as referable to the line of railway alone, whereas s. 16 comprehends all collateral works, therein called accommodation works, which may become necessary in consequence of the formation of the railway itself. Ib.

3. Time for making deviations from the adopted line being extended for another two years from the 4th July 1838, an injunction was refused. Dublin Navigation Co. v. North Midland Railway Co., 2 Jur. 1076.

4. No proprietor, through whose lands a railway is to pass, is entitled to object that the line prescribed by the Act of Parliament has been deviated from, before it has reached his land, unless he can show that the deviation is prejudical to himself, or is likely to defeat the objects of the Act; and in a case where there had been a deviation by the undertakers of the Aire and Calder navigation, and an injunction had been obtained, on that and upon other grounds, to restrain them from prosecuting their works, that injunction was dissolved. Lee v. Milner, 2 Y. & Coll. 611.

5. There is no jurisdiction in equity to order a legal instrument to be delivered up, on the ground of illegality, which appears upon the face of the instrument itself. During the progress of a railroad bill through Parliament, the promoters of the bill agree, with an owner of land on the intended line, that if the bill shall pass they will endeavour in the next session to obtain the sanction of Parliament to a deviation of the line. Quære, whether such an agreement is legal. Simpson v. Howden (Lord), 3 Myl. & C. 97; 1 Rail. Ca. 326. And see 3 Rail. Ca. 294.

6. A railway company having entered on land which they had purchased, and having proceeded to make their line in a manner exceeding their powers of vertical deviation, on a motion for an injunction, the Lord Chancellor, varying the order of the Vice-Chancellor, directed an action to be brought immediately, and the motion to stand over. Holyoake v. Shrewsbury & Birmingham Railway Co., 5 Rail. Ca. 421.

The plaintiff must satisfy the Court that he has sustained substantial damage from the violation of a legal right to entitle him to an injunction. Ib.

7. A railway company was building an embankment more than five feet above the level, according to ss. 11 and 12 of the Railway Clauses Consolidation Act. It had not given the notice required by s. 12, but had obtained the consent required by s. 11. The Court put it on terms to take the opinion of the Board of Trade, submitting to such order as this Court should thereafter make, otherwise an injunction would go to restrain the company from proceeding with the embankment. Pearce v. Wycombe Railway Co., 1 Drew. 244.

Where a railway was constructed on a deviation beyond the authorized limits, but it had been decided that such deviation was proper, having regard to the interests of P., a landowner:—Held, that P. was not entitled to the costs of moving for an injunction to restrain the railway company from so constructing the railway. S. C. 17 Jur. 660.

8. The lines and works of a railway are sufficiently shown on the plans deposited by a black line, with dotted lines on each side, to mark the limits of deviation. Weld v. London & South Western Railway Co., 9 Jur., N. S., 510; 11 W. R. 448; 8 L. T., N. S., 13.

9. Where the deposited plans and sections specify the span and height of a bridge by which a railway is to be carried over a turnpike road, the company will not, in the construction of the bridge, be allowed to deviate from the plans and sections. Att.-Gen. v. Tewkesbury & Great Malvern Railway Co., 9 Jur., N. S., 951; 8 L. T., N. S., 682.

10. There is a presumption of intention that the plans and sections referred to in an Act conferring powers over the property of individuals should be adhered to. Ware v. Regent's Canal Co., 3 De G. & J. 212; 5 Jur., N. S., 25; 28 L. J., Ch., 153.

A canal company, being desirous to enlarge one of their reservoirs, in order to obtain an Act of Parliament for that purpose, gave the usual parliamentary notices, and deposited with the clerk of the peace certain plans and sections. The plans showed the lines, and where the enlargement was to take place, and also the proposed limits of lateral deviation, and the sections referring to the plans showed the levels. The company completed the reservoir, but deviated from the deposited plans and sections. On a bill filed by W., alleging that his lands were flooded in consequence of such deviation, to restrain the company from using the reservoir as constructed:—Held, that the sections and plans deposited with the clerk of the peace were incorporated in and formed part of the Act of Parliament of the company, and, therefore, if any actual damage had resulted to W., he would have been entitled to an injunction. Ib.

11. Where a company has a project extending into two adjacent counties, a landholder in one county is not bound to examine the plans or works of the company to be executed out of the county, or any plans or sections except those deposited with the clerk of the peace of his own county. Bentinck v. Norfolk Estuary Co., 3 Jur., N. S., 204.

1. Where a special railway Act provided that the line should be made according to the levels shown on the deposited plans, and that it should be lawful for the company to carry the line across a specified street on the level of the street:—Held, that the latter provision was not obligatory, and did not prevent the company from carrying its line across the street according to the provisions of the general Act. Dover (Harbour Wardens) v. London, Chatham, & Dover Railway Co., 3 De G. F. & J. 559.

2. Where a railway company, keeping within its powers of deviation, deviates from the deposited plans in such a way as to arouse an apprehension, which was not aroused by the deposited plans, that great inconvenience and risk will be caused to the public, yet it will not be restrained by injunction if the information or bill against them does not charge them with capriciously using its powers of deviation, and if no evidence is given to show that, granting the deviation, the line could be constructed in such a way as to allow the aroused apprehension. Att.-Gen. v. Great Western Railway Co., 14 W. R. 726.

As to taking Lands within Limits of Deviation.] See LANDS CLAUSES ACT, V. II. AND III.

3. Gauge.

3. A railway Act enacted that the railway should be constructed in all respects to the satisfaction of the engineer of the Great Western (a broad gauge railway), and that it should be formed of such gauge, and according to such mode of construction, as to admit of its being worked continuously with the Great Western. The Court was of opinion that the railway might be constructed on the narrow gauge, as well as the broad. Beaman v. Rufford, 1 Sim., N. S., 550; 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 537; 15 Jur. 914.

4. The Act of Parliament, constituting a railway company, directed that the railway, branch railways, and works should be completed to the satisfaction of the engineer of a broad gauge railway company, and should be of such gauge and construction as would admit of the railway to be constructed being worked continuously with the broad gauge railway; and after reciting that the railway to be constructed was intended to be connected with two narrow gauge railways at specified junctions, the Act directed, that, along the portions of the railway north of the specified point on their line, additional rails should be laid down, so as to adapt the line as well to the narrow as to the broad gauge there. The company proceeded to form a line on the narrow gauge for the whole length on the north of the specified point on its line, as also on a part of the line south of that point, with earth-work and timber-work so as to admit of the broad gauge rails being added, and of the railway being a mixed gauge line throughout, with double rails to the north of the specified point. The broad gauge company was entitled to shares in the mixed gauge railway company. And in a suit by the broad gauge company, suing on behalf of themselves and the other shareholders, against the directors of the mixed gauge company, it asked for an injunction to restrain the construction of the railway otherwise than upon the broad gauge throughout its entire length, or otherwise to restrain the laying down the narrow gauge at all south of the specified point; also to restrain the laying down the narrow gauge north of the specified point, until the rails on the broad gauge had been laid down throughout the line; and also to restrain the opening the railway on any part till the rails on the broad gauge had been laid down on the whole line. But held, that the Court could not grant an injunction for any such objects. Great Western Railway Co. v. Oxford, Worcester, & Wolverhampton Railway Co., 5 De G. & Sm. 437; 16 Jur. 443.

A broad gauge railway company were shareholders in a mixed gauge railway company, who, by its Act, were bound to construct their line throughout on the broad gauge, and as to part on the narrow gauge also. In March 1852 it filed a bill, stating that the mixed gauge railway company were about to construct the line throughout on the narrow gauge, although its funds were insufficient to enable them to do so, and also to comply with their Act as to laying down the broad gauge. The bill sought an injunction to restrain the opening of any part of the narrow gauge line, and the further construction upon that gauge until the broad gauge was complete. In April 1852 the injunction was refused. From that time contests were carried on in Parliament between the two companies, ending in the rejection of certain bills solicited by the mixed gauge company. From August 1852 to January 1853 correspondence was carried on between them as to traffic arrangements. In January 1853 the broad gauge company filed a new bill, and sought an injunction to restrain the opening by the mixed gauge railway of any portion of the line upon the narrow gauge before the broad gauge was completed. In the same month they moved for an injunction in the new suit, and also appealed from the refusal of the injunction in April 1852:—Held, that both motions were too late. Principles on which the Court acts in refusing applications, either original or by way of appeal, on the ground of laches. Effect of objection in excluding laches. S. C. 3 De G. M. & G. 341.

5. A railway company, in accordance with the provisions of an Act of Parliament, altered the gauge of its line, "on the terms of being paid an equitable portion of the expense thereof, such expense and proportions to be borne by the companies whose interest would be advanced by such alteration": and it was enacted that the plaintiffs should pay to the defendants such proportion of the expense as should be agreed upon between the parties; or, in case of their differing, as might be determined by the award of the railway commissioners. The several companies not being able to agree, the question was referred to the commissioners, and an inquiry was by them instituted, at which no person on behalf of the plaintiffs attended, and at which it appeared from the evidence that no notice was formally given them to attend, but at which expenses of the alteration were divided and apportioned among the companies. Notice of the award by the commissioners was sent to the plaintiffs, and their portion of the expenses demanded, but not being paid, an action was commenced. The plaintiffs impugned the fairness of the award inasmuch as the sum demanded was the proportion of the expense for seventy-one miles, instead of for four only. On a bill by the plaintiffs to set aside the award and to restrain the action:—Held, that the authority of the commissioners to make the award having been conferred upon them by Act of Parliament the Court had no jurisdiction by way of appeal to set it aside; and as the plaintiffs had subsequently had recourse to, and had memorialised, the commissioners, the bill must be dismissed, with costs. Newry & Enniskillen Railway Co. v. Ulster Railway Co., 2 Jur., N. S., 60. Affirmed 2 Jur., N. S., 936.

4. Private Branch Lines.

1. The plaintiff was a lessee for a term of twenty-one years of prebendal lands, there being reserved to the lessors the woods, underwoods, mines, quarries, seams of clay, with full and free authority and power to enter and cut down, and to dig, win, work, get, and carry away the same, with free ingress, egress, wayleave, and passage to and from the same, or to or from any other mines, quarries, and seams of clay, on foot and on horseback, and with carts and all manner of carriages, and also all necessary and convenient ways, passages, conveniences, privileges, and powers whatsoever for the purposes aforesaid, and particularly of laying, making, and granting waggon-ways in and over the demised premises, paying reasonable damages. The Vice-Chancellor, inclining to the opinion that the reservation did not enable the lessors to grant to a public company a licence to make a railway for the purpose of conveying passengers and general merchandise, but was only intended to enable the lessors or their grantees to convey mineral produce and wood from the demised lands to and from adjacent lands, granted an injunction restraining the lessors and their licencees from proceeding to make a railway for the former purpose, previous to the precise extent of the reservation being ascertained by the decision of a court of law. Farrow v. Vansittart, 1 Rail. Ca. 602.

2. Where, by a clause in an Act of Parliament, it was enacted, "that nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent any owner or occupier of any ground through which the said railway may pass, from carrying at his or their own expense any railway or other road, or any cut or canal which such owner or occupier is authorized to make in his or her lands or grounds across the said main railway within the respective lands or grounds of such owner or occupier":—Held, that the right given by this clause was not confined to the state of the land at the time the Act passed, but was intended for the convenience of the occupiers from time to time of the land partly on one side and partly on the other of the principal railway, and that without reference to the title under which it was held. Monkland & Kirkintilloch Railway Co., 3 Rail. Ca. 273.

Semble, no interdict will be granted to prevent a party having the right to cross a railway from prolonging and extending it for the use of any persons with whom he might make an agreement for that purpose. Ib.

3. A neighbouring landowner proposed to construct a railway on his own land, and to carry it under the company's railway, and to use it as a public railway for general traffic:—Held, that he was entitled so to do, and that the clause in the Act did not restrict the use of the cross railway to purposes connected with the more convenient enjoyment of the neighbouring lands. Hughes v. Chester & Holyhead Railway Co., 3 De G. F. & J. 352; 8 Jur., N. S., 221; 31 L. J., Ch., 97; 10 W. R. 219; 7 L. T., N. S., 197. Reversing 1 Dr. & Sm. 524; 9 W. R. 760.

By a clause in a railway Act, after reciting to the effect that the proposed line skirted the sea, and would obstruct the traffic between the sea and the lands on its shore, and so deprive the lands of their natural advantages of position as respected the sea, and that the lands abounded with minerals, which in some cases belonged to persons not owners of the surface, and were well situated for manufactories and other purposes of commerce, and that it was desirable to give facilities of access between the lands and the sea, and from the sea and the lands on the seaward side of the line to parts inland: it was enacted to the effect that owners or occupiers of any lands, manufactories, or mines, lying near or adjoining the railway, and at parts adjacent, might at any time make any railways across the railway (not crossing it on a level), and use them "for the benefit of themselves and of all and every other person and persons to whom they or any of them may from time to time give leave, and in such way and for such purposes as they or any of them may require; and the company should not be entitled to demand tonnage or compensation for making such railway, or for passing goods, persons, horses, carts, etc., along such railway. Ib.

4. A canal Act, passed in 1789, empowered the proprietors of lands and their lessees to make railways or roads across lands of other persons to convey their coal and ironstone to the canal. Fifty-four years after the Act the lessees of some coal mines gave a notice to an adjoining landowner of their intention to avail themselves of the powers of the Act, to enable them to make a road over his land. This resulted in an agreement, which authorized the lessees to make the road, paying annually 5*l.* 15*s.* This sum was paid irregularly. At intervals the ownership of the lands was changed, and the lessees afterwards abandoned the tramroad, and apparently without any consent, except that of the tenant, made a railroad across the estate in a different direction. They also erected an engine-house, partly on the old tramroad and partly on adjoining land, and for this they subsequently agreed to pay an additional 1*l.* 15*s.* The agreement contained no limit for the continuance of the road, but six months' notice of its discontinuance was to be given by the lessees, who were to restore it to agricultural purposes. Upon the defendant becoming owner of the lands, he complained of the carriage of goods not mentioned in the Act, and gave the lessees notice that he should require an annual payment of 35*l.*, and, upon their refusing to pay that sum, he gave them notice to cease the use of the railway, and subsequently he took up the rails. Upon a bill by the lessees:—Held, that the landowner was bound by the agreement of his predecessor; that the abandonment of one way for another had not affected the agreement; that the alteration as well as the erection of the engine-house had been acquiesced in by the landowners; that the payment was fixed for the railway, but not for the engine-house; that the defendant was not justified in taking up the rails, and that he must answer in damages for the loss sustained by the lessees; that they might restore the rails, and that the defendant must be restrained from interfering with them or with their use and enjoyment of the railway for all purposes. Mold v. Wheatcroft, 29 L. J., Ch., 11.

1. By a clause in an Act (similar to s. 76 of the Railway Clauses Act), owners or occupiers of land adjoining or near the railway might lay down or extend on their own lands or on lands on the sides thereof, belonging to the company, any collateral or continuous branch from such lands to communicate with the railway for bringing carriages upon or across the same; but all the openings and communications for that purpose were to be made at such places as might, so far as practicable, be most convenient to all the parties interested, and so as not to endanger the safety of persons travelling on the railway, and in case of difference as to the proper places for the openings, they were to be determined by two justices of the peace; provided always, that the company should not be bound to make any such opening where they should have erected any building, station, or yard:—Held, that the assent of the company to an opening being made at a station was not in the nature of a licence, and could not be revoked. Bell v. Midland Railway Co., 3 De G. & J. 673.

2. An iron company, owners of a private railway, being desirous of connecting its line with other railways by means of a branch line, applied to various landowners, and to O. and his mortgagees, for way leaves through their lands, and an offer in writing was made to them in March 1843 by O. and his mortgagees of a way leave through their lands, by a lease for sixty years, by the payment of triple damages yearly. There was no express acceptance by the company of the offer. The iron company assigned all its interest to a railway company, which was to construct the line. In October 1843 the proposed line was staked out over the lands of O., and in July 1844 (all the other landholders being settled with) the works were commenced; and in 1845 the line was opened for traffic. In June 1844 the mortgagees of O., under their power of sale, sold and conveyed the property, including the land on which part of the line was formed, to B., who sold to S. From 1844 to 1847 unsuccessful negotiations had been pending between the parties for settling the quantum of the yearly rent; and in 1847 S. brought ejectment against the company. The company then filed a bill to stay proceedings at law, and for specific performance, alleging acceptance of the offer of March 1843 by the acts of the company, in staking out and making its line in accordance with the offer, and praying that the Court would determine the quantum of rent to be paid:—Held, that the acts of the company did not amount to an acceptance of the offer so as to make it a contract binding the land, and the bill was dismissed. Moynell v. Surtees, 1 Jur., N. S., 737; 25 L. J., Ch., 257; 3 W. R. 535. Affirming 1 Jur., N. S., 80; 3 W. R. 36; 3 Sm. & G. 301.

After a suit was instituted by a railway company for specific performance, the company obtained legislative powers to retain possession of the land in question:—Held, that the cause must be decided as if the Act had not passed. Ib.

An offer to sell land, to be binding upon the person making it, must be accepted within a reasonable time. Ib.

If the person making the offer die, become bankrupt, or sell, before acceptance of the offer, the land is not bound. Ib.

Semble, an agreement to grant a way leave for the purpose of a mineral railway simply will not justify the construction of a railway for the purposes of general traffic. Ib.

The scope of the bill being for specific performance of an alleged contract:—Held, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to relief on the principle of quieting possession. Ib.

3. Where an incorporated company stands by and permits expensive works to be executed at the spot where its premises are situated and its operations carried on, the effect, for all purposes of knowledge and acquiescence, will be the same as in the case of an individual. Laird v. Birkenhead Railway Co., 1 Johns. 500; 6 Jur., N. S., 140; 29 L. J., Ch., 218.

4. The plaintiff in 1855 submitted to the directors of a railway company a project for a private branch line, to be constructed at his cost and for his accommodation, to which the directors expressed their assent and agreement generally, but the terms and details were left for future arrangement. In 1856 he, at considerable cost, constructed the branch, and the company prohibited the user until a definite understanding should be come to. Semble, that at this time the company was bound to assent to reasonable terms, and the Court, if possible, would have decreed specific performance. Ib.

After some discussion, terms as to tolls and other matters were proposed by the plaintiff, and the traffic was continued on the basis of the plaintiff's memorandum of terms, and payment made by the plaintiff for the carriage of goods during two-and-a-half years; but no agreement was ever signed by two directors. The directors ultimately insisted on terms originally suggested by them before the user commenced, and then objected to by the plaintiff, and at variance with the terms on which the user had been enjoyed; on the plaintiff declining to make an agreement the company proceeded to obstruct the traffic:—Held, that there was an indefinite agreement in 1855 for a user on reasonable terms; that the actual user had removed all difficulty about what terms were reasonable, and that the plaintiff was entitled to specific performance, on the basis of the unsigned memorandum, on the terms of which the user had been permitted. Ib.

1. The defendants agreed with the plaintiffs to undertake to execute a branch railway according to the terms of a specification to be prepared by the plaintiff's engineer for the time being, and to give a bond to secure the performance of their contract. The plaintiffs had at the date of the agreement a bill pending to enable them to make the branch, and holding them to complete within a specified time, on pain of a suspension of dividends on the capital of their entire line. The specification was prepared by the company's engineer, but prices having risen, the defendants repudiated their agreement. The plaintiffs then filed their bill for a specific performance of the agreement according to the terms of the specification, and to have the bond executed, charging that they would have withdrawn the bill before parliament, by reason of the liabilities incurred on the passing thereof, had not the defendants (to whom, as owners of a large estate adjacent to the proposed branch, it was of great importance that the plaintiffs should be bound to make the branch) assented to the terms of the agreement, and the plaintiffs believed that they would bonâ fide carry out the same; that the defendants, by their agreement, induced the plaintiffs to come under the obligation to make and complete the lines, and the Act was passed upon the faith of the agreement; and charging that the not carrying out the agreement was a fraud on the plaintiffs, there having been a part performance on their part. On demurrer, it was held (assuming the agreement to be valid within the Statute of Frauds, and in other respects one upon which the plaintiffs could recover), first, that the agreement could not be enforced as regards the construction of the railway, because from the nature of the works, the subject of the agreement, it was an agreement the execution of which the Court could not superintend consistently with public convenience, inasmuch as the motions would be incessant for committal or otherwise for non-performance of orders with regard to the making of particular works, besides the difficulty, on the ground of reciprocity, in enforcing that part of the agreement by which the plaintiffs were to provide the land, and because the plaintiffs having by their act power to acquire the land, could make the railway for themselves; and having so ascertained the expense the defendants had put them to, would have an adequate and the better remedy in damages, and that the circumstances of fraud alleged in the bill did not prevent the application of the foregoing reasons. Secondly, that as the Court could not superintend the general execution of the whole works or enable the defendants to earn the whole of the money to which they would be entitled for the works when made, the execution of the bond would be a piecemeal performance of the agreement, which the Court would not direct, and the demurrer was allowed. South Wales Railway Co. v. Wythes, 1 Kay & J. 186; 24 L. J., Ch., 1; 3 W. R. 3; 3 Eq. Rep. 70. Affirmed 24 L. J., Ch., 87; 3 W. R. 133; 3 Eq. Rep. 153.

5 Bridges.

2. A company was empowered to do all works necessary and convenient for constructing a railway, and among others to cross canals and make embankments in the line; and in particular to cross a canal of which the defendants were the proprietors, and to make an embankment over a valley near the same place. Subsequent clauses in the Act restricted the company from doing anything which should obstruct the navigation of the canal, or any part thereof, and specified the height and dimensions of any bridge to be made and maintained for carrying the railway over the canal. The company, for the purpose of transporting earth from the higher lands on the south to the lower land on the north side of the canal for constructing an embankment, erected a temporary bridge over the canal, supported partly on piles driven into the bed of the canal:—Held, that the clause empowering the railway company to cross canals in the progress of their works was not restricted by the subsequent clauses which applied to permanent bridges. London & Birmingham Railway Co. v. Grand Junction Canal Co., 1 Rail. Ca. 224.

Although a railway company is not to act capriciously in regard to carrying out the powers of an Act of Parliament, the Act constitutes it the judge of the most convenient mode of conducting the works. Ib.

3. A railway company, in exercise of the powers conferred on it by an Act of Parliament, which gave compensation to persons whose property might sustain damage from their operation, was proceeding to erect an arch over a mill race, for the purpose of sustaining an embankment, on which the railway was to be constructed; and it appeared that injury would be done to the mill if the arch were of the proposed dimensions, but that the injury would be avoided if the arch were of certain larger dimensions; an injunction was granted to restrain the company from making over the mill race an arch of less than certain specified dimensions. Coates v. Clarence Railway Co., 1 Russ. & M. 181; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch, 72.

4. Sections 70 and 71 of a railway Act provide for the crossing by the railway of roads, not being turnpike roads. Section 72 provides that a turnpike road which shall be crossed by the railway, shall be raised or sunk so as to pass over or under the tramway. The railway being proposed to cross the Northam Bridge Road in the mode provided for by ss. 70 and 71, the plaintiffs, the proprietors of the road, filed their bill, insisting that the road was a turnpike road, and praying to restrain the railway company from crossing over or using the same, until it should have complied with s. 72. On a motion for an injunction, the Vice-Chancellor, being of opinion that the road was not a turnpike road, and therefore not within s. 72, refused the motion, but gave leave to the plaintiffs to take the opinion of a court of law upon the question, as being one of legal construction. A case was accordingly made for the opinion of the Court of Exchequer, and a certificate returned by the judges of that Court, stating that the Northam Bridge Road was a turnpike road. The Vice-Chancellor, on an application by the railway company, refused to send the legal question for the opinion of another court of law. Upon a motion for the injunction, as consequent upon the above certificate:—Held, that, as the object of the plaintiffs must be to procure for the public using the road a compliance with s. 72 of the Act, upon the railway company entering into an undertaking to proceed with and complete a bridge over the road with all possible dispatch, an injunction ought not to be granted during the time which must necessarily elapse in building the bridge. Northam Bridge & Roads (Proprietors of) v. Southampton Railway Co., 1 Rail. Ca. 653; 9 L. J., N. S., Ch., 277. And see S. C. at law, 6 M. & W. 428.

1. A railway company, in the progress of its works, proposed to cross a mill-stream, by a bridge to be supported in the centre of the mill-stream by two piles, placed sixteen feet apart. The bridge was to be six feet in height above the level of the water. The plaintiff, the owner of the mill, asserted that that height was insufficient to allow barges to pass under; and also, that placing piles in the stream would impede the flow of the water, and thereby stop the working of the mill. The company adduced affidavits of engineers to show that the level of the railway, and the nature of the ground upon which the embankments were founded, prevented them from making the bridge of a greater height: and they also showed, that, over a public navigable river which was connected with the mill-stream, there were some bridges only six feet high; and moreover, that, at the time of the passing of their Act, there was over this mill-stream a bridge of that height, though such bridge had since been pulled down by the plaintiff and re-erected of a greater height; and that the flow of water would be in no way impeded by the piles. The plaintiff adduced affidavits of engineers to show, that, although some of the bridges over the navigable river were of the height of six feet only, yet that the water under them could be lowered by waste gates; and that, to obtain a perfect level on the line of the railway, the embankments, and consequently the bridge over the mill-stream, ought to be raised two feet:—Held, by the Vice-Chancellor, that the Act authorising the company to conduct their works, doing as little damage as possible, the plaintiff, under the circumstances stated, was not entitled to require the company to build the bridge at the height of more than six feet:—Held, by the Lord Chancellor, that nothing but necessity could justify the company in carrying on their works in such a manner, or on such a level, as would cause serious damage to the owner of the land. In a case where the affidavits on engineering points are conflicting, the Court will seek for the professional assistance of some impartial engineer, to form a decision upon them. Manser v. Northern & Eastern Counties Railway Co., 2 Rail. Ca. 380; 5 Jur. 988.

2. Where, in consequence of a company raising the level of its railway within the limits of vertical deviation, it became necessary to raise the height of a bridge over which a road was to be carried:—Held, that there was no restriction as to the powers of the company to alter the levels of the approaches to the bridge, provided the land to be affected was included in the plans and sections deposited, or mentioned in the books of reference, and that full satisfaction was made to all parties interested for the damage sustained. Beardmer v. London & North Western Railway Co., 1 Macn. & G. 112; 1 H. & Tw. 161; 5 Rail. Ca. 728; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 432; 13 Jur. 327.

3. An information was filed, at the relation of one of the commissioners appointed under 12 Geo. 3, and 57 Geo. 3, against the Eastern Counties Railway Company and the Northern and Eastern Railway Company, for the purpose of restraining it by injunction from constructing or making any covering or building over certain streets and courts within the jurisdiction of the said Acts. The defendants were desirous of building a station, and for that purpose proceeded under the powers of its Act to arch over certain streets within the jurisdiction of the said paving commissioners:—Held, by the Lord Chancellor on appeal, that an injunction should issue to restrain the defendants from constructing or making any covering or building over the streets in question, further or otherwise than might be necessary for the purpose of constructing the railway; but at the same time directed a case for the opinion of the Barons of the Court of Exchequer, as to the right of the company to cover in or build over such streets for the purposes of a station. Their lordships having certified that they were of opinion that the defendants were entitled (if it was necessary or reasonably convenient for the construction of a station and proper warehouses) to construct such coverings or buildings, by arches or otherwise, over the streets within the jurisdiction of the paving commissioners:—Held, that the injunction should be dissolved, the fact of the commencement of the works by the defendants being sufficient proof of the necessity for and the convenience of such buildings. Att.-Gen. v. Eastern Counties Railway Co. & Northern & Eastern Counties Railway Co., 2 Rail. Ca. 823.

4. The Act of Parliament authorized the railway company to carry its railway over any road by means of an arch sixteen feet above the surface of the road. This was done by the company, who, at the same time, lowered the road to meet the required height, and thereby the road became flooded. Before the Act was passed, the consent of the trustees of the road was obtained, on condition that the road should not be prejudiced; but no special proviso was inserted in the Act:—Held, that the trustees of the road were precluded from obtaining relief, there being no express clause restricting the usual powers given to railway companies. Aldred v. North Midland Railway Co., 1 Rail. Ca. 404; 3 Jur. 244.

5. Section 9 of the London and Southampton Railway Act empowered the company to make in, upon, across, under, or over any land, streets, hills, valleys, and roads, such inclined planes, tunnels, embankments, bridges, arches, and piers as the company should think proper, according to the provisions, and subject to the restrictions of the Act. Section 74 provided, that where any bridge should be erected by the company for the purpose of carrying the railway over or across any turnpike road, or other public highway, the span of the arch thereof should be of such width as to leave a clear and open space under every such arch of not less than fifteen feet. Section 77 provided, that where any part of any carriage or horse-road should be found necessary to be cut through, diverted, sunk, etc., the company should previously thereto cause a sufficient road to be made instead thereof, as convenient for passengers and carriages as the road to be cut through. The company erected a bridge over a turnpike road at a place where the width of the then existing road was forty feet, but the bridge crossing obliquely, and the piers being built on the road, the passage under the arch was only twenty-four feet for the length of one hundred and sixty feet:—Held, that the restrictions of s. 77 applied only to a case where a road might be either temporarily or permanently diverted, and that under s. 9, the company might build any piers or necessary buildings for a bridge, provided they left a width under such bridge of fifteen feet, as provided by s. 74. Att.-Gen. v. London & Southampton Railway Co., 1 Rail. Ca. 302; 9 Sim. 78; 7 L. J., N. S., Ch., 15.

1. The Manchester and Leeds Railway Act enables the company to make the railway in a prescribed course. Section 34 reciting that the railway is to be carried across the Aire and Calder navigation, at three specified places, requires the company to erect bridges at such three crossings, and prescribes the dimensions of such bridges. Section 38 provides that the company shall, during the progress of construction of such bridges, leave an open uninterrupted navigable water-way, of a specified height and extent, and imposes penalties on non-compliance with its provisions. Sections 42 and 44 provide, that the railway company shall not make any bridge over the navigation, and generally shall not interfere therewith, otherwise than as provided by the Act. Section 94 empowers the company, subject to the restrictions imposed by the Act, to make and maintain the railway, and to construct in, under, upon, across, or over, any hills, valleys, roads, rivers, canals, brooks, or streams, or other waters, such embankments, bridges, aqueducts, and conduits, either temporary or permanent; and to erect and construct such buildings, engines, machinery, apparatus, and other works and conveniences for the purposes of the Act, as the company shall think proper. By an agreement made between the navigation and railway companies, and afterwards embodied in an Act of Parliament, the line of the railway was changed, by which change the navigation was crossed only once by the railway, and only one bridge required. The railway company had introduced into the above agreement a clause enabling them to erect temporary bridges across the navigation, but which was struck out by the navigation company. The railway company having commenced the building of the permanent bridge, erected a temporary bridge, adjoining to the permanent bridge, which was used partly for building that bridge, and partly for conveying earth and materials across the river. On the application of the navigation company, an injunction was granted ex parte, restraining the erecting of a temporary bridge across the navigation, or of anything impeding the navigation in a manner not authorized by the Act. Affidavits were filed on both sides; and upon motion to dissolve the injunction:—Held, by Alderson, B., that, subject to the restrictions of the Act, s. 94 ought to be literally carried into effect. That the railway company had the power of erecting such a temporary bridge, the power being exercised reasonably and bonâ fide. That, in construing such power with a view to its reasonable and bonâ fide exercise, regard must be had to the peculiar purpose for which the permanent bridge was designed. That the temporary bridge being of the dimensions specified in s. 34, and a navigable water-way being left as required by s. 38, the same was lawfully erected under s. 94, for the bonâ fide purpose of building the permanent bridge. That the temporary bridge being erected and used for a lawful purpose might also be used for other purposes, for which alone it could not have been erected. That, subject to the restrictions of the Act, the company acting bonâ fide, was constituted the judge of the mode of executing its works. Circumstances upon which the Court was of opinion, that the temporary bridge was reasonably and bonâ fide erected, and was unaffected by any circumstances connected with the above-mentioned agreement. As between the two companies no costs were given, although an ex parte injunction was dissolved. Priestly v. Manchester & Leeds Railway Co., 2 Rail. Ca. 134; 4 Y. & Coll. 62. See also 1 Rail. Ca. 576.

Acts of Parliament, giving railway companies power to build bridges, must be expounded with reference to the peculiar mode of construction of bridges in railways. Ib.

2. A railway company bought land from the plaintiff, and in the purchase deed covenanted with him not to erect any building upon it to a greater height than eighteen feet within the distance of eighty feet from certain other property of his. At the time of the conveyance the railway had been carried through the purchased land with two lines of rails on a viaduct thirty-three feet high, part of which was within eighty feet from the protected property. The company afterwards determined to widen its railway, so as to have four lines of rails, and commenced building on the purchased land, for the purpose of widening the viaduct, piers more than eighteen feet high, and standing within eighty feet of the protected property, and between it and the old viaduct:—Held, that the company ought to be restrained from so doing. Lloyd v. London, Chatham, & Dover Railway Co., 2 De G. J. & S. 568.

3. A railway company had power by its Act to cross a river, the property of certain persons, by the erection of a viaduct. By a clause to protect the proprietors of the river, it was enacted that between certain points the works incident to the construction of the railway should be made under the direction of the proprietors, and according to plans to be submitted and approved by their engineer before commencement of the work. The company required the viaduct to be built on piles driven into the river; the proprietors objected that it should be done by a viaduct of one span or arch:—Held, that the company was not restricted to that mode of construction, but might carry the viaduct according to the terms of its Act, without doing any permanent damage to the proprietors of the river. Birmingham Waterworks Co. v. London & North Western Railway Co., 4 L. T., N. S., 398.

4. In a contract between a railway company and a proprietor of land to be crossed by the line of railway, the Railways Clauses Act (8 & 9 Vict., c. 20) should be expressly referred to, if the company intends to claim the benefit of its provision. Clarke v. Manchester, Sheffield, & Lincolnshire Railway Co., 1 John & H. 631.

Therefore, where a company contracted "to provide and erect a suitable bridge over a street (marked in a plan referred to in the deed) as then planned and intended"; and the plan showed that the street was intended to be forty-two feet wide:—Held, in the absence of any reference in the deed to the Act, that the company was not at liberty to narrow the street to the dimensions specified in s. 49 (twenty-five feet), but must make a bridge with an arch of the full width of the street (forty-two feet). Ib.

1. By the plans and sections deposited by a company, it appeared that they intended to carry the railway across a public road by means of a skew bridge. Instead of doing so, the company diverted the road for some distance, and afterwards restored it to its former course by a bridge which crossed the railway at right angles, thus causing two abrupt and dangerous curves. A dispute having arisen between the trustees of the road and the company, the Court granted an injunction until further order, restraining the company from proceeding with the works, and directed that in the meanwhile, a competent person should inquire and report whether any deviation was necessary, and if so, how it could most conveniently be effected. Att.-Gen. v, Dorset Railway Co., 9 W. R. 189; 3 L. T., N. S., 608.

2. A railway company having formed its line, obtained an Act for an extension for three years of their compulsory powers to take land, the preamable stating that it was for the convenience and safety of the public. The company was owner of the soil on both sides of a lane crossed by a bridge, and therefore, like any other owner, owner of the soil of the land, but by a subsequent Act the soil of all roads was vested in the district board of works in whose district such roads were situate. After the expiration of the three years the company found it necessary to widen the bridge over the lane, and claimed power to do so notwithstanding that the board of works for the district denied such power, and proceeded to widen the bridge, but only in the same line of abutment, the road itself not being narrowed, but the soil necessarily disturbed to form such addition. The board moved for an injunction to restrain such widening:—Held, that the soil of the road was only vested in the board to promote the public convenience and prevent the incursion of strangers. That the public convenience required the widening of the bridge, and as the only obstruction would occur whilst the works were in progress, and the road would not be ultimately narrowed, it was not a case for the extraordinary interference of the court. Wandsworth Board of Works v. London & South Western Railway Co., 8 Jur., N. S., 691; 10 W. R. 814.

3. A railway company, with whose Act the Railways Clauses Act 1845 was incorporated, by its deposited plans and sections proposed to build over a turnpike road an arch, of a span of forty-five feet. The company afterwards proposed to the trustees of the road to vary its plans, and to build a bridge of a span of thirty-five feet; but the proposal was rejected. Subsequently the company's agents commenced the erection of a bridge of the lesser span; and thereupon one of the trustees filed an information for an injunction:—Held, that the word "accordingly," in s. 13 of the Railways Clauses Act 1845, meant, according to the deposited plans and sections; and that the company was bound to erect the bridge according to the plans which had been deposited. Att.-Gen. v. Tewkesbury & Malvern Railway Co., 9 Jur., N. S., 618; 8 L. T., N. S., 196; 4 Giff. 333. Affirmed 9 Jur., N. S., 951; 32 L. J., Ch., 482; 8 L. T., N. S., 682; 1 De G. J. & S. 423.

A bridge, forming part of the line of railway itself, is an engineering work within s. 14, and the company is by that section debarred from making it otherwise than according to the description in the plan. Ib.

4. A railway company obtained a conveyance, for the purposes of the railway, of land from C.; and in the conveyance the company bound itself to erect and maintain a bridge over the road leading to C.'s property, which was to be, according to the plans, thirty-five feet wide, and leaving a road under it of fifteen feet wide. Afterwards this bridge was made, but the company, some years later, amalgamated with the H. company, and the latter company's Act authorized a junction with the former railway, at a point near this bridge. The two companies then agreed as to the mode of effecting the junction; and part of the plan was to widen the arch or bridge over C.'s road, so as to extend the bridge from thirty-five feet to fifty-five feet wide, thereby darkening the road beneath. C. applied for an injunction to restrain the companies from carrying out this plan:—Held, that the first company having, in the first instance, obtained the conveyance from C., on certain conditions as to the width of the bridge, was bound not to depart from those conditions; and the H. company was equally bound, as claiming under the first company; for it was part of the consideration to maintain the bridge of the height and width originally fixed. Edinburgh & Glasgow Railway Co. v. Campbell, 9 L. T., N. S., 157.

5. By its special Act, passed in 1872, a railway company whose line was made in 1857, was authorized to divert a road crossing its line on the level, and to carry it under the line by a bridge, and the soil of the diverted road was to belong to the company. The new road and bridge were to be in accordance with the deposited plans and sections, which showed a total height from the road to the rails on the bridge of sixteen feet three inches, but did not mention the height of headway. The special Act incorporated the Lands Clauses Act 1845, and the Railways Clauses Act 1845 (s. 49 of which provides that all bridges shall have a headway of fifteen feet), and it provided that nothing in the special Act should exempt the company from the provisions of the general Acts. It also gave the company power to deviate from the deposited sections to the extent of five feet. The company, without altering the levels of the line (no such alteration being shown on the deposited plans), made the bridge of the prescribed height of sixteen feet three inches, but with a headway of only fourteen feet, and that partly gained by carrying the road below the level of the adjoining land, so that at times it was flooded from an open ditch near the line, and became impassable. If the surface of the road was raised one or two feet, all serious inconvenience from flooding would be removed, and a headway of twelve or thirteen feet would be sufficient for the traffic of the district. On an information at the relation of the road surveyors:—Held, that the attorney-general was entitled to an injunction, restraining the company from making or maintaining the bridge with less headway than fifteen feet, or any bridge which, by reason of the road thereunder being of too low a level, might cause the road to be flooded. Att.-Gen. v. Furness Railway Co., 47 L. J., Ch., 776; 38 L. T., N. S., 555; 26 W. R. 650.

1. A local board of health withdrew its opposition to a railway bill upon the insertion in the Act of a clause providing that no bridge carrying a road over the railway within their district should have an approach with a slope of more than one in thirty. The making a slope of one in thirty required an encroachment on the land of a person who obtained an injunction to prevent such encroachment, and the company thereupon made a bridge with a slope of one in twenty:—Held, that the company must not have a bridge with a slope of more than one in thirty, and that it was no answer to say that this requisition could not be complied with without stopping the railway. Att.-Gen. v. Mid-Kent Railway Co. & South Eastern Railway Co., 3 L. R., Ch., 100; 16 W. R. 258.

6. Level Crossings.

2. Damages are not recoverable for stoppages and other mere inconveniences incident to the crossing of a public road by a railway on the level, under the sanction of Parliament. Caledonian Railway Co. v. Ogilvy, 2 Macq. H. L. Ca. 229.

A level crossing in such a case is a grievance to be endured without complaint by private persons, from a consideration of the benefit gained by the public. Ib.

Hence where a railway passed within some few yards of a gentleman's lodge, across a public road, forming the chief access to his residence; although he was liable to constant stoppages by the closing of the gates on the level crossing; although the passing of trains frightened his horses and terrified his visitors, "particularly ladies":— Held, that these annoyances did not ground a claim of damages against the company. Ib.

Held, also, that the inconvenience felt in such a case is one to which all the Queen's subjects are exposed, and for which no particular or individual remedy exists. Ib.

3. By a railway Act it was provided that it should be lawful for the company, in constructing its railway, to carry the same on a level across a road at a particular point, provided the company should erect and maintain a good and sufficient public foot bridge, for the use of foot passengers over such road at or near the point of level crossing:—Held, that such a provision was permissive, and not mandatory. Dover (Harbour Wardens) v. London, Chatham, & Dover Railway Co., 7 Jur., N. S., 453; 30 L. J., Ch., 474; 9 W. R. 523; 4 L. T., N. S., 387.

4. Where a person has made a special agreement as to crossings on a line of railway running through his land, if, from particular circumstances, that agreement is not carried into effect, he cannot, on the ground of any general rights, under the railway Acts, claim to have any other crossings made according to the discretion of the Court, for that would be to get the Court to substitute a new agreement, and not to enforce the performance of the original. Darnley (Earl) v. London, Chatham, & Dover Railway Co., 2 L. R., H. L., 43; 36 L. J., Ch., 404; 15 W. R. 817; 16 L. T., N. S., 217.

A railway company which was promoting a bill for a new line agreed with a landowner that if the Act passed it would pay him a fixed sum for so much of his land as it should want, and would make for the convenience of his estate such crossings as his surveyor should, within a month from their taking possession of the land, notify to it or its engineer:—Held, that this could not be construed as an agreement to make the necessary and proper crossings, with a superadded direction as to the mode of ascertaining them, so as to enable the Court to ascertain them, if not ascertained in that particular mode; but that no notification having been made within the time, there was no contract which the Court could enforce. S. C. 1 De G. J. & S. 24; 11 Jur., N. S., 520; 13 W. R. 824; 12 L. T., N. S., 593.

A landowner agreed to sell land to a railway company, and the company agreed to make such crossings as the landowner's surveyor should, within one month after the company took possession, direct in writing. No award was made by the surveyor until about two months after possession had been taken. The company having refused to make some crossings directed by the award the landowner filed a bill, alleging conduct on the part of the company amounting to a waiver of the limitation of the time for making the award, insisting on the direction of the surveyor as binding, and praying that the company might be decreed to make the works directed by it, but not distinctly putting forward any case for specific performance of the agreement independently of the award. The Court being of opinion that the award was not binding upon the company, and that the title to relief independently of the award was not put forward with sufficient distinctness to make it right to give relief on that footing, gave the landowner leave to withdraw replication and amend his bill by putting in issue any claim founded on the original agreement. S. C. 1 De G. J. & S. 204.

In June 1858 an agreement was entered into between D. and a railway company, by which the company should make and maintain for the convenience of D.'s estate, as many crossings, and of such kinds, as his agent, C., should, within one month after obtaining possession of the land, direct and notify in writing to the company. The company obtained possession of the land in December 1858, but C. did not send in his notification till the 5th of March 1859. It was alleged that by agreement the time for making the notification had been extended. The company, however, alleged that it had been sent too late, and that it was not bound to perform the works required by C. :—Held, that, although time was originally made of the essence of the contract, the stipulation in regard to it had been waived by the conduct of the agents of the company. S. C. 9 Jur., N. S., 148; 7 L. T., N. S., 590. Affirmed 33 L. J., Ch., 9; 11 W. R. 388; 8 L. T., N. S., 94.

1. A railway company was empowered for the purposes of its undertaking to take marsh lands at Harwich belonging to the Crown, and which had been acquired by the Crown for the purposes of defence, but it was required by its Act to construct and maintain across, over, or under its railway such communications as the Commissioners of Woods and Forests should adjudge to be necessary for the convenient use and occupation of the Crown lands. Accordingly the company took lands which lay between the railway and an estuary, and agreed with the Commissioners to make four level crossings over its line as communications with these lands. At this time the land was used for grazing purposes only. Subsequently it was purchased by a land company and laid out for building. Thereupon the railway company disputed the right of the owners or occupiers of houses on the land to use the level crossings, on the ground that the right of way was restricted to the purposes for which communication with the several lands was necessary at the time the railway was made :—Held, that the grant of the right of way was not so restricted, but gave the landowners a right of way over the level crossings for all purposes which would not interfere with the proper working of the railway. United Land Co. v. Great Eastern Railway Co., 33 L. T., N. S., 292; 44 L. J., Ch., 685; 10 L. R., Ch., 586; 23 W. R. 896. Affirming 17 L. R., Eq., 158; 22 W. R. 126; 29 L. T., N. S., 498; 43 L. J., Ch., 363.

A right of way acquired by prescription is restricted to the purposes for which it was acquired. But where such a right is acquired by grant, the limit to the right of user is a question depending on the construction of the instrument of grant. Ib.

A right of way over, under, or across a railway is primâ facie general, and not restricted to purposes to which the land was applicable at the time the right arose. Ib.

The authorities, establishing the principles that a right of way cannot be increased by imposing an additional burden on the servient tenement, do not apply to lands taken by a railway company. Ib.

2. A private railway Act contained a recital that it was expedient that certain footways which were crossed by the railway on the level should be dealt with as by the Act provided, namely, "that as regards five of such footways the rights of way in respect thereof should be extinguished, and the other footway should be carried by a bridge over the railway." One of the five footways to be extinguished was the subject of a previous agreement between the owners and the company, under which the owners, their heirs, tenants, and assigns were to have a free way of passage with horses, carts, waggons, and carriages over the said footway. The Act provided no compensation for the extinguishment. The company erected a fence across the level crossing without any notice to the owners, who brought their action to restrain the company from so doing :—Held, that their private rights were not taken away by the Act, which only dealt with public rights of way. Wells v. London, Tilbury, & Southend Railway Co., 37 L. T., N. S., 302; 25 W. R. 325; 5 L. R., Ch. D., 126.

3. The provisions of the Highways Act (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 71), as amended by 2 & 3 Vict., c. 45, s. 1, and 5 & 6 Vict., c. 55 (for the better regulation of railways), s. 9, by which the proprietors of a railroad which crosses a highway at a level crossing are compelled to put up gates at such crossing, do not apply to a private line of railway, on private property used by the proprietors exclusively for their private purposes. Matson v. Baird, 39 L. T., N. S., 304; 26 W. R. 835; 3 L. R., App. Cas. (Sc.), 1082.

A horse escaped from a field without any negligence on the part of its owner, and strayed for two miles along a public highway to a point where the road was crossed on a level by a private railway. The horse then strayed along the railway for about half a mile further till it reached the place of junction between the private line and the line of the North British Railway Company, where it was killed by a passing train. The private railway was not constructed under parliamentary powers, nor used for the conveyance of passengers, and there were no gates either at the level crossing or at the junction :—Held, that the owners of the private railway were under no obligation to erect gates at the level crossing, and were not liable at the suit of the owner of the horse. Ib.

7. Roads and Streets, Interference with.

4. An agreement was entered into between a landowner and a railway company, that the former should not oppose a projected railway, on condition that there should be a reference to arbitration, for, among other purposes, defining the line of approach to his premises from a turnpike road which it was proposed to divert. After the award indicating such approach had been made, it became expedient for the company further to divert the turnpike road, but within the limits of deviation, and consequently necessary to alter the line of the approach to the landowner's premises :—Held, that the company were not precluded from making such alteration. Wood v. North Staffordshire Railway Co., 1 Macn. & G. 278; 1 H. & Tw. 611. Reversing 13 Jur 466.

5. In the month of February 1847 P. entered into a contract with a railway company to sell certain land to the company; and the agreement contained certain stipulations as to the construction, by the company, of two bridges, and also the following words, "and a road upon the level as at present where the said P. now passes to and fro from his brick-kilns." In May 1847 P. conveyed the land to the company, but in the conveyance no mention was made of the bridges or road. P. died, leaving the plaintiff his heir-at-law who entered into possession of the land. The company having lately commenced their works on the lands in question, and making the road several feet lower than the original level, the plaintiff applied for an injunction to restrain the company from proceeding to construct the road at a lower level than the road referred to in the agreement, and from stopping up the present road, except for the purpose of carrying a new road across the land at what was the level at the date of the agreement:—Held, that although the conveyance was silent as to the bridges and road, the plaintiff was entitled to his injunction; and that, it being a case of specific performance of an agreement, the Court would not compel the plaintiff to try his rights in an action. Foster v. Birmingham, Wolverhampton, & Dudley Railway Co., and Birmingham & Oxford Junction Railway Co., 2 W. R. 378.

1. Motion for an injunction to restrain a railway company from stopping up a road, until it should have made another, as convenient as the old road, according to the Act of Parliament:—Held, that it did not appear to be the intention of the defendants to break up the old road, until a new one (about to be formed) was completed. The injunction could not be granted, but the motion should stand over, till it was ascertained whether the company would, after making the new road, proceed in an illegal course; and whether the new road was really as inconvenient, and contrary to the clauses of the Act, as the plaintiff alleged. Kemp v. London & Brighton Railway Co., 1 Rail. Ca. 495; 3 Jur. 403.

2. By an Act by which a railway company was incorporated, the usual power was given to it, to construct, according to the provisions and restrictions of the Act, the said railway upon, across, or over any roads, etc., doing as little damage as might be. By a subsequent section it was enacted, "that where the railway should cross any turnpike road, or other public highway, by means of an arch," such arch should be "of such width as to leave a clear and open space under such arch of not less than fifteen feet":—Held, that, under these clauses, the company was empowered to diminish the width of any turnpike road which was crossed by the railway, provided it left an open space of fifteen feet; and an application by the trustees of a turnpike road for an injunction to restrain a railway company from constructing a bridge over the road of less than the usual width of that road, on the ground that an inconvenience to the public would be thereby occasioned, was refused; but leave was given to the trustees to proceed against the company in a court of law. Att.-Gen. v. London & Southampton Railway Co., 9 Sim. 78; 1 Rail. Ca. 283; 7 L. J., N. S., Ch., 15.

3. By s. 59 of the London and Brighton Railway Act, after reciting that it is intended to carry the railway across certain public roads or highways in the parish of C., and to alter the levels or present surface of such roads, it is enacted, that all alterations, whether temporary, permanent, of, in, or to any of the said public roads or highways, and all works connected therewith of any kind or description whatsoever, and all bridges to be erected by the company, and all future repairs of such altered roads, or any temporary roads, and the quality of the materials to be used and applied in or to such altered or temporary roads, and all future damage to such altered or temporary roads, shall be made, formed, completed, and finished under the superintendence, from time to time, and to the entire satisfaction of the board of surveyors of roads from the parish of C. By s. 60 it is enacted, that if the company shall in the doing, making, forming, completing, and finishing of all, or any, or either of such alterations or works, in, to, or belonging to the said public roads or highways in the parish of C., do or cause any injury or damage to any or either of the said road or roads, or to any part thereof, and shall not forthwith proceed to repair and make good such injury or damage to the satisfaction of the board of surveyors of the parish of C.; or if the roads so to be altered shall not be properly made and completed, and kept in repair, it shall be lawful for the said board of surveyors to cause such repairs to be done. The company made a diverted temporary road, leading from one of the said roads; which diverted temporary road was crossed by the railway. The railway did not cross the old road, neither did the company alter the level or surface of the old road. The company also made and tendered to the surveyors a permanent diverted road, which the surveyors refused to approve of or accept; the company having, in the execution of its works, crossed the temporary diverted road with locomotive engines, the surveyors put up fences on either side, so as to obstruct the passage across it:—Held, that, even if the surveyors had, under ss. 59 and 60, a jurisdiction to determine in what manner the diverted permanent road should be made, they were not justified in putting up the fences across the temporary road, but ought to have applied to this court for an injunction, or to a court of law for a mandamus; that the right of the surveyors was a private right; and that they were in no way interested in the question of public safety. London & Brighton Railway Co. v. Blake, 2 Rail. Ca. 322.

Quære, whether, upon the true construction of the Act, such diverted temporary road was an alteration of a road, within the meaning of ss. 59 and 60. Ib.

4. The preamble of the London and Brighton Act, after reciting that a railway between London and Brighton would be of great public advantage, by s. 3 enacts that it shall be lawful for the company to make and maintain a main line of railway and branches, with all proper warehouses, wharves, and all other suitable and proper works, communications, etc. By s. 12 the usual powers are conferred on the company for making and maintaining the railway, and, among others, to make and construct upon, across, or over, any roads, etc., such roads, ways, cuttings, etc., as the company shall think proper. The company having purchased a private wharf, separated from one of their terminus stations by a turnpike-road, laid down on the road stone blocks, so as to form two runs or stoneways level with the road, for the purpose of facilitating the passage of goods from the wharf across the road to the station:—Held, that the company was not authorized by its Act to interfere with the road in such a manner. An injunction, which had been granted to restrain the trustees of the road from removing the stone blocks, was dissolved, although, in the opinion of the Court, no damage could result from the stone blocks either to the road or the passengers upon it. London & Brighton Railway Co. v. Cooper, 2 Rail. Ca. 312.

1. By the Railway Clauses Consolidation Act, if a railway crosses any turnpike road, then, except where otherwise provided for by the special Act, the road is to be carried over the railway or the railway over the road. By its special Act a company was authorized to make the railway "in the line and upon the lands delineated in the plans deposited"; and it was authorized to pass a certain turnpike road on a level, and the deposited plans so represented. The plaintiff agreed to sell to the company a portion of his land adjoining the road, and the agreement recited that it was purchased for the purpose of constructing a railway "according to a certain plan and section thereof deposited," etc.:—Held, that the company, under the Acts, had power to make the turnpike road pass under the railway instead of on a level, and that this right had not been destroyed by the agreement with the plaintiff. Whether a public company can contract itself out of powers given it by the legislature for the public protection, quære. Semble, not. Breynton v. London & North Western Railway Co., 10 Beav. 238; 4 Rail. Ca. 553; 2 Coop. C. C. 198; 11 Jur. 28.

2. A railway company having begun to divert a turnpike road, by a crossing on a bridge over its railway, with a sharp curve, an information at the relation of two of the trustees of the road was filed, praying for an injunction to restrain the company from interfering with the road, until it should have provided another as convenient as the former, or as near thereto as circumstances allowed, as required by the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act 1845, s. 56. The Court, holding that the company were not doing as little damage as could be, granted the injunction; but without prejudice to any application either party might make to the Board of Trade, under s. 66 of the above Act. In granting such an injunction, the Court cannot point out to the company what it ought to do, except by stating the reasons which induce the Court to come to its conclusion, or the manner in which it appears to the Court that that which seems an evil can be remedied. Att.-Gen. v. London & South Western Railway Co., 3 De G. & Sm. 439; 13 Jur. 467.

3. In 1850 a meeting of landowners was held for the construction of a private road from A. to join a turnpike road at point C. In 1854 the road was constructed as far as D., which was within 250 yards of the proposed point of junction, when the works were suspended. The proprietors of the new road, however, entered upon the remaining land, cut down the trees, and marked out the proposed line of road. In 1853 a railway company was projected and the plans deposited, showing that at the proposed point of junction of the new road with the turnpike road the turnpike road would be raised several feet. The new road was not referred to in the deposited plans, and in 1854 the Act passed without making any provision in respect of it. The new road was afterwards completed throughout, and opened for traffic in 1855. From point D. to the point of junction with the turnpike road the gradient of the new road was very steep; and assuming the company to have constructed its line by raising the turnpike road, according to the deposited plans, the junction at point D. would have been impracticable. The company subsequently constructed its line, but, instead of raising the turnpike road according to its deposited plans, it turned it, and interposed the railway between the turnpike road and the new road. Upon a bill filed by the proprietors of the new road:—Held, that the fact of the new road being projected and completed to within 250 yards of the proposed point of junction before the railway was authorized or planned did not establish in the proprietors of the new road the right to join the turnpike road in the same way as they would have been entitled to if the company's Act had not passed; and that the proprietors of the new road were not entitled to have an archway formed under the railway, or to have the road united on either side, at the expense of the company. Ganthern v. Stockport, Disley, & Whaley Bridge Railway Co., 3 Jur., N. S., 573.
